19. The next piece of corroborative evidence which has been relied upon by the prosecution is the recovery of the iron bar from the house of accused Nos. 1 and 2 on a search of that house, which iron bar has been found, on chemical analysis, to be stained with human blood. I have no hesitation in rejecting Mr. Jethmalani's contention that if the iron bar was struck on the nape of the neck, there would be no blood on it, in view of my finding on the evidence that the actual impact was at a place slightly higher than the nape of the neck, and in view of the fact that the base of the skull of Madhav Buwa had been found to be fractured. The blood that is found on the iron bar is human blood, and, therefore, though the iron bar may be regarded as an agricultural implement which the accused could be expected to possess for innocent use, the finding of human blood on it changes the entire complexion and lends considerable corroborative value to the evidence in support of prosecution case. It is true that discovery evidence, by itself, is subsidiary and cannot sustain a conviction, but that is not the position in the present case in which there is plenty of other evidence to sustain the prosecution case. Both the panchas to the recovery of the iron bar have turned hostile, but it appears to be fairly clear that they have been won over by the defence, and I hold that the iron bar was recovered in the manner alleged by the prosecution.

20. A further piece of corroborative evidence that is relied upon by the prosecution is the statement alleged to have been made by accused No. 1, and the production by him of an axe from a dung-pit near the house of accused Nos. 1 and 2 which was found to be stained with blood, though it could not be ascertained whether that blood was human blood. The fact that the blood on the axe was not shown to be human blood, coupled with the fact that the axe was, even according to the prosecution, not used by accused No. 1, deprive this evidence of the probative value it might otherwise have had. The statement which the accused is alleged to have made (Exhibit 28) contains a portion which was clearly inadmissible in evidence under Section 27 of the Evidence Act, the admissible portion being only, "I produce that axe which is buried in dung-pit near my house". That statement does not even say that it was accused No. 1 who had buried the axe at the place from where it was recovered. The admissible portion of the statement is therefore, of very little probative value. The panchas to the making of that statement and the recovery of the axe who were the same as in regard to the recovery of the iron bar have both turned hostile, but even if the admissible portion of the statement (Exhibit 28) is taken to have been made by the first accused, for the reasons stated above, neither the said statement nor the recovery of the axe is of any appreciable value as evidence corroborative of the prosecution case. The only other corroborative evidence on which the prosecution has relied is the evidence in regard to motive. The prosecution relies, in that connection, on Exhibits 42 and 43 which are applications made by the deceased Housabai for Police protection at the time when she had undertaken sowing operations on this very land. In those applications she had expressed apprehension of trouble from her brother-in-law and had mentioned there is having been given to her by them Mr. Jethmalani has contended that the said two documents are inadmissible in evidence as they do not fall either under Section 32 (1) of the Evidence Act, or under Section 8 of that Act. Reference may be made in that connection to a decision of a Division

Bench of this Court in the case of Allijan Munshi v. The State, 61 Bom LR 1620 = (AIR 1960 Bom 290). In that case also, what was sought to be admitted in evidence was a complaint in writing made by the deceased nearly two months prior to her death expressing apprehension of death at the hands of the accused. The view expressed by the Division Bench in the said case was (at pp. 1623-1624) (of Bom LR) = (at p. 291 of AIR) that, whilst the said complaint "may be admissible" under Section 32 (1) of the Evidence Act, the same was in any event admissible under Section 8 of that Act as constituting a motive or preparation for the fact in issue, and as being explanatory of the conduct of the deceased. It was however, further held by the Court in the said case (at pp. 1624-1625) (of Bom LR) = (at pp. 291-92 of AIR) that by the mere production of the document the truth of its contents could not be regarded as established and that the document in question, whilst admissible for the purpose of proving the fact that Rashida had made a complaint against the appellant which may have constituted a motive for the appellant to commit the offence charged, was not admissible for proving the truth of the contents of that complaint. The position in the present case is that as Mr. Jethmalani has contended, it is not the prosecution case that the murder of Housabai was committed because she had made the complaint to the police (Exhibits 42 and 43). The making of the complaint, therefore, does not itself constitute "motive" within the terms of Section 8 of the Evidence Act. In my opinion, however, these two documents (Exhibits 42 and 43) do fall within the terms of Section 32 (1) of the Evidence Act and are admissible thereunder. In any event, there is oral evidence on record to show that there was litigation between Housabai and accused Nos. 1 and 2 which Housabai had launched for the purpose of ascertaining her right to her husband's share in the family property. The evidence with regard to that is to be found in the testimony both of witness Macchindra as well as of witness Madan Goral who was the head of the Math in which the deceased Housabai had been residing. She had succeeded in obtaining a decree as a result of that litigation and had actually enforced the same by obtaining possession of the land. Having regard to these facts which are on record even apart from Exhibits 42 and 43, it would be a reasonable inference for the Court to draw that relations between Housabai and accused Nos. 1 and 2 had been strained as a result of that previous litigation. There is therefore, evidence in the present case with regard to the motive of accused Nos. 1 and 2 to commit the crime in question. No question of the adequacy of motive arises, for it is a] matter of common experience that very heinous crimes have sometimes been committed out of very slight motive. Motive, however, is of particular importance only in cases of purely circumstantial evidence for, in such cases, motive itself would be a circumstance which the Court would have to consider. In cases in which there is an eye-witness or eye-witnesses, motive, however, plays a very subsidiary role. Absence of motive should, in such cases, only make the Court circumspect in the matter of assessment of the evidence of the eye-witness. On the other hand, motive, if proved, merely adds to the weight and value of the evidence of the eye-witnesses. The fact that Housabai had made a will and that she intended to change the same, on which Mr. Jethmalani has relied, cannot possibly lead to the inference that she had created potential enemies, who might have committed her murder. It must once again be noted that in cases of direct evidence as opposed to circumstantial evidence, the fact that there might be other persons interested in killing the deceased is of little value, if the eye-witness or eye-witnesses are believed by the Court.

21. That leaves for consideration only the additional bit of evidence as against accused No. 2 viz., that he was absconding for a week after the incident. The date of the offence was the 19th of December 1968, and accused No. 2 was arrested only on the 28th of December 1968. In order that the Court can legitimately draw the inference that the subsequent conduct of an accused was that of a guilty person and not of an innocent man, there must be proper material placed before the Court. All that the prosecution has placed before the Court in the present case are two bald statements, both made by Police Sub-Inspector Borkar: (1) that the second accused was not in the village on the day soon after the incident when the police went there; and (2) that Police Sub-Inspector Borkar had sent about four constables in search of accused No. 2 to some villages. That evidence is, in my opinion, wholly insufficient to lead to the inference that the second accused was absconding since the date of the incident. In order to lead to that inference, the investigating police officer must lay before the Court further evidence to show that continuous watch was kept at the house of the accused concerned, and that a watch was also kept by him at the places which the accused frequented, including his place of work, but the accused did not turn up at all at any of those places during a certain period of time. In the absence of such evidence, I am afraid, no inference can be drawn that accused No. 2 was absconding and his subsequent conduct was that of a guilty person. It may, at this stage, be mentioned that accused No. 2 has, in his statement, raised a plea of alibi and has contended that since the 18th of December 1968 he had gone to a cattle fair at the village of Pusegaon and had returned to Nandgaon only on the evening of the 27th of December 1968. That statement may not be sufficient to sustain a plea of alibi, the onus of proving which is clearly on the accused, AIR 1956 SC 460 para. 5 at p. 562. Even so, if the prosecution evidence falls short of proving that the accused was absconding ever since the time of the incident for a week, as the prosecution itself alleges no question as to whether the statement of the accused concerned is true or not, arises at all. I, therefore, hold that the prosecution has not proved this circumstance against accused No. 2.

22. It was lastly contended by Mr. Jethmalani that there was considerable scope for mistaken identity on the part of Macchindra on the facts of the present case. He has contended that Macchindra's mind was already conditioned into believing that accused Nos. 1 and 2 whose relations with Housabai had been strained had assaulted Housabai, and there was admittedly darkness at the time and place of the incident which, according to Mr. Jethmalani would make it impossible for Macchindra to identify the assailants with any degree of certainty. It is true that there must have been some darkness at the time of the incident. I have already expressed the opinion that the incident must have occurred some time between 6-30 p. m. or 7 p. m. that day, sunset being at 5-54 p. m. The incident, therefore, occurred just as twilight was about to end, and it could certainly not have been pitch dark at that time, as I have already stated above. For the reasons stated by me, I have also come to the conclusion that in any event since accused Nos. 1 and 2 were persons whose faces had been seen by Macchindra every day for a continuous period of 15 days and were not strange faces, even making all allowance for darkness, it would be possible for Macchindra to identify them as the assailants. As far as accused No. 2 was concerned, there was the further fact that Macchindra had actually seen him following closely behind Housabai and talking to her very shortly before the incident itself. The incident disclosed concerted action by the two assailants and Macchindra's evidence that it was accused No. 1 who darted out from the canal and inflicted a blow with the iron bar on Madhav Buwa is in accord with the probabilities of the case, in so far as the facts show that accused No. 1 had been seen leaving the field with the iron bar shortly before the incident. Moreover, accused Nos. 1 and 2 were not only brothers who were living together, but had common motive or ill-will against Housabai. Whilst these facts would be of no direct assistance as far as the question of mistaken identity which I am now considering is concerned, they do show that Macchindra's evidence is in accord with the probabilities of the situation. In the result, I reject the plea of mistaken identity, either with regard to accused No. 1 or accused No. 2.

23. I hold that both the accused have been rightly convicted of the murder of Madhav Buwa as well as of Housabai under Section 302 read with Section 34 of the Indian Penal Code. Once the conviction of the accused under Section 302 read with Section 34 of the Indian Penal Code in respect of the said two murders is confirmed, it must, on the same evidence follow that accused No. 2 has also been rightly convicted of the offence under Sections 323 and 506 (Part II) of the Indian Penal Code in respect of having voluntarily caused hurt as well as criminal intimidation to witness Macchindra.

24. As far as sentence is concerned, Mr. Kadam on behalf of the accused has submitted that the sentence passed on accused No. 2 by the learned Sessions Judge should be commuted to the lesser sentence of life imprisonment. In my opinion, however, there is no extenuating circumstance whatsoever as far as accused No. 2 is concerned. The conduct of both the accused persons appears to have been to create a false sense of confidence and security in Housabai, a helpless woman who had come to work on her own field, and thereafter to trap her unawares in the manner in which they have done. I, therefore, hold that the maximum penalty of the law has rightly been inflicted upon accused No. 2. Accused No. 1 is fortunate in having the lesser punishment imposed upon him by the trial Court, for, reasons stated in paragraph 45 of its judgment which, in my opinion, are not proper reasons for inflicting the same. As far as Madhav Buwa was concerned, his only "sin" was to have accompanied Housabai and helped her in harvesting the crop. Since, however, accused No. 1 has played a somewhat less cruel part in the actual incident as compared to the part played by accused No. 2, it may be possible to take the view that the sentences imposed on the two accused should not be the same. I hold that the convictions as well as the sentences passed on both the accused persons must be confirmed and the appeal filed by them dismissed.

NATHWANI, J.:— 25. I agree

PER CURIAM— 26. Appeal dismissed.
Convictions and sentences confirmed.
Appeal dismissed.

END

January 1, 1957 in the hands of the then Manager, there is no evidence, according to the trial Court, that it came in the hands of the defendant No. 1 or he misappropriated it and we also agree that the resolution writing off the amount was not legal or authorised. In the context of the death of the said Manager in the meantime, we are not in a position to impute any mala fides or misconduct to the defendant No. 1 in writing off a debt due from a dead person by a resolution of the said committee.

26. It appears that there are further allegations of misappropriation of the funds of the Imambarah by the defendant. There is no firm finding in respect thereof by the trial Court except some tentative findings. It appears that an Account Commissioner was appointed but his work was suspended by order of the Court. We are in full agreement with the trial Court that there should be a thorough examination of the account of the Imambarah during the period from January 1957 till August 29, 1957 when the Receiver Official Trustee took over the charge of the estate, to determine if the defendant No. 1 misappropriated any amounts from the Imambarah funds which he would be liable to refund. If the examination of accounts discloses any act of misappropriation of the fund of the Imambarah by the defendant No. 1 it will be open to persons interested to take such steps as they may be advised in the circumstances.

27. Upon the materials on record we are in agreement with the trial Court that the defendant took up the office of being almost the in-charge of the Imambarah which Section 11 of the Act XX of 1863 expressly prohibits. In the contingency created by the illness and death of the then Manager and in absence of a suitable Manager being available and in the background of the unfortunate disputes between the remaining members of the original committee and in the circumstance then prevailing we are not in a position to hold the Defendant No. 1 guilty of such misconduct or unfitness as to remove him from the membership of the committee for acting as Supervisor of the Imambarah and receiving emoluments for his service in bona fide belief that he was entitled to the same being sanctioned by the erstwhile committee or for non-payment of electric charges which claim was disputed by him. We are, however, in agreement with the trial Court that the defendant No. 1 must refund to the Imambarah all emoluments he had received from the funds of Imambarah together with the sum of Rupees 144.74 P. due on account of electric charges.

28. In the circumstances the appeal is allowed in part and the judgment and decree under appeal is affirmed subject only to the modification of the order removing the defendant No. 1 from the member of the committee which is hereby set aside. As the vacancies, in view of our findings, are yet to be filled up and as there has been a further vacancy caused by the death of the plaintiff No. 1, we direct that the Receiver Official Trustee shall continue to be in possession of the Imambarah till the vacancies in the committee of Management are filled up and the said committee takes charge from the Receiver Official Trustee.

S. K. CHAKRAVARTI, J.:— 29. I agree.
Appeal allowed.

AIR 1970 CALCUTTA 513 (V 57 C 103)

B. C. MITRA AND S. K. MUKHERJEA, JJ.

Life Insurance Corporation of India, Appellant v. United Bank of India Ltd. and another, Respondents.

A. F. O. D. No. 62 of 1967, Suit No. 1705 of 1961, D/- 13-3-1970.

(A) Insurance Act (1938), S. 2 (11) — Life insurance — Definition — Proposal to effect life insurance — Terms of policy providing for payment of single premium and for payment of secured sum on fixed date — Insurance is not life insurance.

A person of advanced age proposed the insurer to effect life insurance. A policy for Rs. 33,000 was taken out on payment of single premium of Rs. 15,000/-. Under the terms of the policy only one single premium was payable and the moneys payable under the policy were payable not on the death of the assured but at a fixed date.

Held, according to the terms and conditions of the policy, the policy did not effect a contract of insurance upon human life because neither the payment of the sum secured nor the payment of premium depended on the duration of any kind of human life. The insurance, therefore, was not life insurance within the meaning of Section 2 (11).

(Para 7)

(B) Insurance Act (1938), Section 39 — Nomination of policy — Policy must be of life insurance — Insured purporting to nominate policy other than life insurance — Legal consequences of nomination under Section 39 do not attach to such nomination.

(Para 8)

(C) Insurance Act (1938), Section 39 — Nominee — Status of — Proceeds of policy though payable to nominee do not vest in him — He cannot assign policy — AIR 1962 All 355, Dissented from.

Sub-clauses (1) to (5) of Section 39 make it clear that the proceeds of the policy do not vest in the nominee though they are payable to the nominee in the event of the death of the holder of the policy. They do not, by virtue of nomination under Sec. 39 alone, become a part of the nominee's estate before or after the policy matures. The right of the nominee to receive money is a personal and not a heritable right. The nominee has no title to the policy money and therefore, he can neither surrender the policy nor can he transfer by assignment any right, title or interest in the moneys payable under the policy. AIR 1962 All 855, Diss. from.; Case law discussed.

(Pars 12, 13, 19 and 24)

(D) Married Women's Property Act (1874), S. 6 — Section applies only to life insurance policies and not to policies of any other description. (Para 20)

S. K. MUKHERJEE, J.: The question which has to be decided in this appeal is whether a nominee under a life insurance policy can validly assign the claim in respect of the policy after the holder of the policy dies but before the policy matures. It also raises a larger question namely whether a nominee can assign the claim under the policy or surrender the policy at all.

2. One Narayan Chandra Ghosh, a person considerably advanced in age, took out a policy of insurance on January 24, 1947, by payment of a single premium of Rupees 15,000/-. Under the policy a sum of Rs 33,000/- was payable on January 17, 1978 to the assured or his nominees, executors, administrators or other representatives-in-interest as the case might be. It is not without significance that the moneys payable under the policy were payable not on the death of the assured but at a fixed date. Moreover, as only one single premium was payable there was no question of premiums ceasing to be payable on the death of the assured. The policy contained the following clause:

"1. Surrender value. After one year from the within mentioned date of commencement of Assurance this policy will acquire a cash surrender value payable on the surrender of the policy provided there be no legal impediment. The amount of such surrender value will vary with the duration of the policy but will be not less than 80 per cent of the within mentioned single premium."

3. The assured nominated one Nitish Chandra Ghosh, his younger son as his nominee, under Section 39 of the Insurance Act. Soon thereafter, the assured died intestate on August 25, 1952, leaving his widow and two sons, as his heirs and legal representatives.

4. As the policy did not mature on the death of the assured the nominee did not prefer any claim under it. In 1957 the nominee, in order to obtain a loan from the United Bank of India Ltd. by pledging the policy made enquiries of the Life Insurance Corporation of India as to what surrender value the policy had acquired. By a letter dated December 23, 1957 the Life Insurance Corporation of India hereinafter referred to as the insurer, intimated to the United Bank of India Ltd. that the surrender value of the policy was Rs. 12012/-. Immediately thereafter the nominee assigned the policy to the Bank by way of pledge and secured a loan of Rupees 10,000/- on interest. By a letter dated November 5, 1958 the Bank notified to the insurer that the policy had been assigned to the Bank for valuable consideration and the Bank was the beneficiary of the policy. By a letter dated November 26, 1958 the insurer intimated to the Bank that the assignment had been duly registered. Thereafter by another letter dated December 2, 1958 the insurer made it clear that in registering the notice of the assignment it had not accepted any responsibility for the validity of the assignment and that the policy is payable only on the expiry of the period, i.e. on 17th January, 1978. By another letter dated April 5, 1960 the insurer pointed out that the legal validity of the assignment in favour of the Bank "is not free from doubt" and the matter was, therefore, being referred for legal opinion. By a letter dated December 17, 1960 the insurer, presumably on the basis of legal opinion it had received, wrote:

"Sri Nitish Chandra Ghosh is the nominee under Section 39 of the Insurance Act and nothing more. A nomination of the policy under Section 39 of the Insurance Act gives the right to collect the money only; policy money does not vest in the nominee by mere nomination. We are afraid, therefore, that the assignment made by the nominee is not legally valid and your right to surrender the policy on the basis of assignment is doubtful. Please note in this connection that we simply registered the assignment without expressing any opinion as to the legal validity."

5. It appears from an endorsement on the policy that on December 28, 1957 the nominee purported to assign his right, title and interest in the policy to the United

Bank of India Ltd. On the failure of the nominee to repay the loan with interest the Bank brought an action against the nominee Nitish Chandra Ghosh, the defendant No. 1 for Rs. 10,741/- and against the Life Insurance Corporation of India, the defendant No. 2, as the assignee of the policy for Rs. 12,012/- i.e. the surrender value of the policy. The defendant No. 1 did not contest the suit. He gave evidence and submitted to an instalment decree. The suit was, therefore, contested only by the defendant No. 2. On July 5, 1966 the learned Judge passed a decree against the defendant No. 1 for a sum of Rs. 10,741/- with interest, payable in certain instalments. The decree also provided that in the event of the decretal dues not being paid by the defendant No. 1 in terms of the decree the plaintiff would be entitled to realise from the defendant No. 2 the balance of the decretal sum. It was further provided by the decree that the sum paid to the plaintiff by the defendant No. 2 under the decree should be treated as a loan to be deducted with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the moneys payable under the policy on the stipulated date i.e. 17th January, 1978.

6. From this decree the defendant No. 2, the Life Insurance Corporation of India, has come up in appeal.

The issues on which the parties went to trial were:

(i) Did the defendant No. 1 have any right, title or interest to assign or pledge the policy forming the subject-matter of the suit in favour of the plaintiff?

(ii) If so, has the plaintiff any right to surrender the insurance policy? Strictly speaking, neither of these issues arises on the pleadings read in the context of the insurance policy.

7. Although it appears, from the policy that the assured proposed to the insurer to effect an assurance on his life, it is abundantly clear from the terms and conditions of the policy that the policy did not effect a contract of insurance upon human life. It did not, because neither the payment of the sum secured on the policy nor the payment of premiums depended on the duration of any kind of human life. The insurance is not, therefore a life insurance within the meaning of sub-section (11) of Section 2 of the Insurance Act 1938.

8. The holder of the policy purported to nominate a nominee under Section 39 of the Insurance Act. Under that section only the holder of a policy of life insurance can nominate a person or persons to whom the money secured by the policy shall be paid in the event of his death. As the policy is not a life insurance policy the purported nomination is not a nomination under Section 39 and the nominee is not a nominee under the statute. The legal consequences of nomination under Section 39 do not, therefore, arise in the present case.

9. It was said in course of argument that the parties treated the policy as a life insurance policy at the trial and therefore in the appeal we ought not to treat it as anything else. When the court is invited to give effect to a statutory provision which applies only to life insurance and the case to which it is sought to be applied is patently not a case of life insurance, I do not think there is any principle of law under which the court is obliged to shut its eyes and misapply the statute. The parties cannot by their failure to raise an objection to the applicability of a statutory provision compel the court to apply the provision to a case to which it is not applicable.

10. There is also no averment in the plaint that the policy was surrendered or sought to be surrendered nor is there any evidence in that behalf. It is one thing to enquire what the surrender value of a policy is and quite a different thing to surrender it. In the absence of any pleading or evidence of surrender, the question as to whether the assignee of the nominee had any right to surrender the policy assumes a purely academic character.

11. The case could have been disposed of on either of these points. That was not done because the parties tacitly assumed that the policy was a life insurance policy; they also assumed that the policy was surrendered or sought to be surrendered by the plaintiff that is to say, the assignee from the nominee. It must be conceded that a nominee can validly surrender or assign a policy only if he has a title to the moneys payable under it, or in other words, only if he is a beneficiary of the policy. If the right of the nominee is merely a right to collect the moneys from the insurer, such a right cannot confer any title. It is, therefore, necessary to examine the precise nature of the interest of a nominee in the contemplation of Section 39 of the Insurance Act.

tion may at any time before the policy matures for payment be cancelled by an endorsement or a will. The sub-section therefore clearly indicates that the nominee does not acquire any title to the money by virtue of the nomination because if he did, he could not have been divested of his right, title or interest by any unilateral act on the part of the holder of the policy who nominated him. Sub-section (4) of Section 39 provides that a transfer or assignment of a policy shall automatically cancel a nomination. It goes without saying that if the nominee had acquired any title by nomination, the policy-holder could not have assigned the policy without his concurrence, far less could the nomination have stood cancelled automatically by reason of assignment or transfer. Sub-section (5) provides that where the policy matures for payment during the lifetime of the person whose life is insured or where the nominee, or if there are more nominees than one, all the nominees die before the policy matures for payment, the amount secured by the policy shall be payable to the policy-holder or his heirs or legal representatives or the holder of a succession certificate as the case may be. Here again, there is clear indication that the nominee does not acquire any title to the money, because if he did, his heirs and not the heirs of the deceased policy-holder should have been entitled to the money when the policy matures. An interesting but speculative argument was addressed to us by Mr. Somenath Chatterjee. He argued that although the sub-section says that the money shall be payable to the heirs and legal representatives of the deceased policy-holder if the nominee dies before the policy matures, it does not say that the money will be payable to the heirs of the policy-holder if the nominee dies after the policy matures. It is, therefore, implied that in a situation where the nominee dies after the policy matures the money will be payable not to the heirs and legal representatives of the policy-holder but to the heirs and legal representatives of the nominee or in other words the money will go to the nominee's estate. He contended that although in the scheme of Section 39 the nominee does not acquire any title to the money before the policy matures, he does so after the policy matures on the death of the policy-holder. In my opinion, the argument is untenable. There is good reason for thinking that sub-section (5) was introduced ex abundanti cautela. The first limb of the sub-section prescribed that if the policy matures during the lifetime of the policy-holder the money shall be payable to him. This provision is clearly redundant because sub-section (1) of Section 39 has already provided that the money will be payable to the nominee only in the event of the policy holder's death. The other limb of the sub-section which enjoins payment to the heirs and legal representatives of the policy-holder if the nominee dies before the policy matures may very well be also treated as superfluous. In my opinion, the legal position should have remained the same even if sub-section (5) were not in the statute. Sub-section (6) of Section 39 confirms that the nominee does not acquire any title to the money when the policy matures on the death of the policy-holder. It provides that where the nominee or, if there are more nominees than one, a nominee or nominees survive the person whose life is insured, the amount secured by the policy shall be payable to such survivor or survivors. The sub-section contemplates that the money will not be payable jointly to the surviving nominee and the heirs and legal representatives of the deceased nominee but to the surviving nominee alone. If the money had vested in the nominees, the estate of the deceased nominee should have shared in the proceeds of the policy. On a consideration of sub-sections (1), (2), (4), (5) and (6) of Section 39 the proposition clearly emerges that the proceeds of the policy do not vest in the nominee though they are payable to the nominee in the event of the death of the holder of the policy. They do not, by virtue of nomination under Section 39 alone, become a part of the nominee's estate before or after the policy matures.

doubt transferable but it is transferable only by the person who has a title to the property in respect of which the claim lies. The position is the same in English Law. Nemo dat quod non habet, no one gives what he does not possess. If the nominee has no title to the policy money he can neither surrender the policy nor can he transfer by assignment any right, title or interest in the moneys payable under the policy. In the contemplation of the statute, the right of a nominee is a mere right to collect the proceeds of the policy and the right has been given only to obviate the inconvenience of obtaining representation to the estate of the deceased policy-holder or a succession certificate.

14. Judicial precedents also do not support the contention that the nominee has any title to the moneys payable under the policy or that they become a part of his estate. In Krishna Lal v. Pramila Bala Dasi, AIR 1928 Cal 518, a case decided before the Insurance Act came into force, the insurer was to pay to the wife of the insured, as his nominee, a certain sum payable under the policy. Negating the claim of the wife that she was beneficially, entitled to the money, the Bench which was presided over by Rankin, C. J. held that the money was a part of the estate of the deceased policy-holder and, therefore, the creditors of the policy-holder's heirs could proceed against the policy money in execution of the decree passed against them. C. C. Ghose, J. who delivered the leading judgment in that case strongly relied on the decision in Cleaver v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, (1892) 1 QBD 147 where under the policy the money was payable to the insurer's wife, if living, otherwise, to his legal representative. In that case, Lord Esher, M. R. observed:

"The husband might have altered the destination of the money at any time and might have dealt with it by will or settlement. I think that apart from any statute, no interest would have passed to the wife by reason merely of being named in the policy."

This case has a peculiar relevance to the facts of this appeal because here, the policy not being a life insurance policy, Section 39 under which the nomination was made, has no application. The nomination must, therefore, be treated as one de hors Section 39 of the Insurance Act as in AIR 1928 Cal 518. Later decisions of this Court and other courts agree that the rights of a nominee under Section 39 are no larger.

15. In Ramballav v. Gangadhar, AIR 1956 Cal 275, P. B. Mukharji, J. held that a nominee who is nominated under Section 39 of the Insurance Act does not become the owner of the money payable to him under the policy and the nomination only indicates the person who should receive the money should the owner die. All that subsection (6) of Section 39 of the Insurance Act does is to confer on the nominee the right to receive the insurance money as between the insurance company and such nominee but it does not provide for the title or ownership of that money in general. The decision of P. B. Mukharji, J. was relied on in a Bench decision of the Madras High Court in D. M. Mudaliar v. Indian Insurance and Banking Corporation Ltd., AIR 1957 Mad 115. The court held that nominee as payee is nothing more than an agent to receive the money, which money remains the property of the assured and at his disposal during his lifetime and on his death forms part of his estate. The result is that the nominee takes no beneficial interest in it. Ramaswami, J. in course of his judgment said:

"There are thus important differences between a nomination and an assignment which can be summed up as follows: An assignment of life policy passes to the assignee the right to the insurance money, even though the assignor's interest in the life has ceased before the date of assignment. The life policy forms part of the estate of the assured and may be dealt with at his absolute discretion, sold, charged, settled, etc. Once an assignment is made it cannot be cancelled at the option of the assignor.

It creates a vested right in the assignee who no doubt takes it subject to the equities in the case of assignor, because the assignee cannot have a better title than his assignor. On the other hand, a nomination unless there is a special clause inserted to make it irrevocable, does not deprive the policy-holder of his rights, privileges, options and benefits under the policy including the right to alter the beneficiary."

16. Elsewhere he says:

"A nominee is entitled to receive policy moneys only. There is no statutory trust created by Section 39 in favour of the nominee, nor is he conferred as the nominee under Section 5 of the Provident Funds Act 1925, with the right to receive the moneys absolutely.

"The nominee being only given the right to receive money after the death of the assured, he can neither surrender the policy nor have it converted to be paid up."

17. Similar views were expressed on the nature of the rights of a nominee nominated under Section 39 of the Insurance Act in M. Brahmamma v. K. Venkataramana Rao, AIR 1957 Andh Pra 757 where Chandra Reddy, J. observed:

"A reading of the relevant provisions of the section can only lead to the conclusion that the holder of a policy continues to have interest in the policy notwithstanding the nomination effected in regard to the policy. It does not divest him of the rights in the policy and he retains disposing power over it. Under sub-sections (2) and

(4) it is competent for the holder of the policy to bequeath to somebody or make an assignment of it and this automatically cancels the nomination which implies that a nominee has no vested right in the document.

In fact, under sub-section (5), if the policy-holder survives the nominee, the money is payable to the holder himself and not to the heirs or the legal representatives of the nominee which would not be the case if the nominee had acquired any vested interest in the policy. Therefore, the title does not pass to the nominee by reason of the nomination."

18. In Shanti Devi v. Shri Ram Lal, AIR 1958 All 569 the holder of a decree against the assured put his decree into execution after the assured died and attached the money due under his insurance policy. The widow of the assured made an application for the release of the insurance money which had been attached upon the ground that she had been nominated under Section 39 of the Insurance Act to receive the money. The executing court held inter alia that mere nomination did not create any interest in favour of the nominee and the money still continued to be the property of the assured and was, therefore, liable to attachment as a part of the estate of the deceased. In that view of the matter her objection was dismissed. The widow preferred an appeal. The Appellate Court held that merely because the appellant was nominated to receive the money from the insurance company she did not become the owner of the money; the nomination only dispensed with the necessity of obtaining a succession certificate. The appeal was, therefore, dismissed. The appellant preferred a second appeal to the High Court which was also dismissed. In course of his judgment the learned Judge who spoke for the Court observed at page 572 of the Report:

"If the nomination is made only under Section 39 it is not an assignment but merely gives the right to the nominee to receive the assured amount without creating any interest in the nominee."

19. Mr. Chatterjee relied on a Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court in Kesari Devi v. Dharma Devi, AIR 1962 All 355. There the insurance money was payable to the assured, his nominees, executors, administrators, assigns or other representatives as the case may be. The assured nominated his brother Mannul under Section 39 of the Insurance Act as his nominee. Shortly thereafter the assured died leaving his widow Sm. Kesari Devi as his heir and legal representative. Before he could collect the insurance moneys, the nominee died leaving his widow Sm. Dharma Devi as his heir and legal representative. She applied for a succession certificate in respect of insurance moneys. Her application was contested by Sm. Kesari Devi, who claimed that she was entitled to the succession certificate as the heir of the assured. The learned District Judge granted the succession certificate to the nominee's widow, Kesari Devi as the heir and the legal representative of the assured appealed to the High Court. The appeal was dismissed. In course of his judgment Desai, C. J. said:—

"Under the insurance policy the money became payable to Mannul; this means that the company was bound to pay to him. Since he died before it could be paid to him it must be paid to his heir or representative, i.e. to the respondent. It must be paid in such a manner as to amount to payment to him. It is only if it is paid into his estate that it can be said to be paid to him, and the respondent is the person who indisputably represents it. If it had been paid to him as it ought to have been on his death it would have gone to the respondent as part of his estate and the respondent must be placed in the position in which she would then have been."

I am unable to agree with the learned Chief Justice. The nominee's right is the right to receive the money only. Section 39 does not confer on him any title to the money. The right to receive is a personal and not a heritable right. The right is not in the nature of any title to the money and, therefore, the money when receivable or received by the nominee does not become a part of his estate. No doubt, if the nominee had been alive he could have validly laid claim to payment of the money, but on his death his heirs and legal representatives should not have successfully claimed the money as part of the nominee's estate. The learned Chief Justice said that 'the company must pay the money to him, that is to say, to the nominee'. I agree. But when he says 'if he has died in the meanwhile it is payable to his estate, I respectfully disagree. The money is payable to the nominee as receiver of the money but it does not become part of his estate. In so far as the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court held in that case that insurance moneys payable to a nominee under Section 39 of the Insurance Act becomes a part of the nominee's estate, I am unable to agree. In my opinion, in the facts of that case, on the death of the nominee the insurance money became payable to the heirs or legal representatives of the assured and, therefore, to the appellant Sm. Kesari Devi. The ratio of the Allahabad decision, runs counter to the ratio of the decisions of the Calcutta High Court, Madras High Court, Andhra Pradesh High Court and of the Allahabad High Court itself to which reference has already been made.

20. Mr. Chatterjee in course of his argument contended that the nominee who is a son of the deceased policy-holder is a beneficiary within the meaning of Section 6 of the Married Women's Property Act 1874 and as such he has an absolute and indefeasible title to the money. He was, therefore, legally competent to assign the policy. This is a case neither made in the plaint nor argued at the trial. No mention of it is to be found in the grounds of appeal. The policy is embodied in a printed form. Some of the printed clauses are patently inapplicable to the contract of insurance evidenced by the policy. No doubt, the words "children's endowment" appear at the top of the policy in print. Be that as it may, nowhere is there any indication that the policy is taken out for the benefit of any son of the policy-holder nor is the name of any beneficiary indicated in the policy. All that the assured has done is to have nominated Nitish Chandra Ghosh, under Section 39 of the Insurance Act as his nominee to whom the money is payable. In the plaint it is expressly stated that the nominee assigned his right, title and interest as nominee and not as a beneficiary. In any event, Section 6 of the Married Women's Property Act 1874 applies only to life insurance policies and not to policies of any other description. As the policy in the present case is not a life insurance policy the section can have no application.

21. In the view we have taken we must hold neither the defendant No. 1 nor the plaintiff as his assignee was or entitled to surrender the policy and the surrender, if any, of which there is no evidence, is invalid. If a nominee cannot validly surrender the policy, his assignee cannot do so either. The assignment by the nominee of his right, title and interest in the policy in favour of the plaintiff is also invalid. He has assigned nothing. We are not only unable to uphold the judgment of the learned trial Judge on merits but we are also of opinion that the learned Judge was not justified in passing a decree directing the defendant No. 2 to pay certain sums of money to the plaintiff and treat the payments as loans. It is nobody's case that any application was made for any loan or that the appellant Life Insurance Corporation is obliged to grant any loan in the facts and circumstances of this case. The learned Judge has passed a decree on the basis that the policy has been validly surrendered and the claim under it validly assigned by the nominee to the defendant Bank and yet at the same time has treated the policy as subsisting and the insurance moneys payable when the policy matures. It is only on that basis that the direction to treat the moneys recoverable from the appellant under the decree as a loan can be explained. It seems to us that there is no warrant for such an order either in the contract of insurance or in the statute.

22. It only remains for us to pronounce the order. The appeal succeeds. The decree of the learned Judge against the appellant, the Life Insurance Corporation of India is set aside and the suit is dismissed as against the said Life Insurance Corporation of India. The respondent No. 1 the United Bank of India, will pay the appellant's costs of the appeal and of the trial.

B. C. MITRA, J.: 23. I agree with the judgment and order made by my learned brother but would like to add a few words of my own. The respondent No. 2 is the nominee of an Endowment insurance policy which was taken out by his father who died on August 25, 1952. The appointment of the nominee was made under Section 39 of the Insurance Act, 1938, (hereinafter referred to as the Act.) The policy was single premium policy, the premium being Rupees 15,015. The sum assured was Rs. 33,000 payable on January 17, 1978, on expiry of the endowment period of 31 years.

24. The nominee purported to assign the policy in favour of the respondent No. 1 who filed the suit for recovery of a loan. The question is if the respondent No. 2 as the nominee of the policy had the right to assign the claim under the policy, to the respondent No. 1 so as to enable the latter to obtain a decree against the appellant for recovery of the money due on the policy. On a plain reading of sub-sections (5) and (6) of section 39 of the Act it is clear to me that the only right which a nominee of an insurance policy has is the right to collect and receive the money, if he is alive at the date of maturity and if the policy-holder is dead at that time. If the policy-holder is alive when the policy matures, the nominee has no right whatsoever and the amount secured by the policy is payable to the policy-holder, and if he is dead and the nominee is also dead to his heirs or legal representatives or the holder of a succession certificate. Under sub-section (6) of Section 39 of the Act if there are more than one nominee, and one or more of such nominees survive the assured, the amount secured by the policy would be payable to the survivor or survivors of the nominees. This position makes it amply clear that a nominee has no proprietary interest in the money payable under the policy. He does not by any means become the owner or proprietor of the sum assured. If he did, the sum assured would have become payable, in a case where there are more than one nominees one of whom survives the other, to the surviving nominee and the heirs and legal representatives of the deceased. But that is not what the statute prescribes. Under the statute, upon the death of a nominee where there are more than one the sum assured becomes payable to the survivor or survivors of the nominees. This provision makes it clear that the only right which a nominee has is a right to receive and to collect the money, and if he dies this right passes not to his heirs and legal representatives but to the survivor or survivors of the nominees, where there are more than one. The right which a nominee has is not a heritable interest so as to enable the heirs and legal representatives of a deceased nominee to claim and enforce such a right.

25. This position has been clearly stated by P. B. Mukharji J. in AIR 1956 Cal 275 which was followed by the Division Bench of the Madras High Court in AIR 1957 Mad 115. I respectfully agree with the views expressed in these two decisions and I do not agree with the contrary views expressed in the Bench Division of the Allahabad High Court reported in AIR 1962 All 355. In my opinion a nominee under Section 39 of the Act takes no beneficial interest in the sum assured, and he had no right to assign the policy so as to enable the assignee to recover the money due under the policy and appropriate the same.

26. Assignment under Section 38 and nomination under S. 39 of the Act are two entirely different concepts altogether. The assignment of the policy confers upon the assignee the benefits under the policy, and by virtue of the assignment he is the only person who is entitled to such benefit. But a nominee under Section 39 of the Act is not entitled to any benefit under the policy at all. As I said earlier his only right is to receive and collect the money upon maturity of the policy, provided that the policy-holder is dead at the time of such maturity. While a nominee has no right whatsoever by virtue of nomination, if the policy-holder is alive at the time when the policy matures for payment, the assignee under Section 38 is the only person entitled to the benefit of the policy even though the assured is alive at the maturity of the policy. To hold that a nominee is entitled to assign and transfer his rights by virtue of the nomination, would be equating his position to that of an assignee and this in my view will be entirely contrary to the provisions in the statute.

27. The next question is if the policy could be surrendered by the respondent No. 2 as the nominee or by the respondent No. 1 as the assignee of the nominee. In my view the respondent No. 2 as the nominee had no right to surrender the policy, and the respondent No. 1 could have no better or higher right than the respondent No. 1 had. But quite apart from the question of the right of the respondent to surrender the policy, there is nothing on record to show that the policy was ever surrendered. By a letter December 23, 1957 the appellant had informed the respondent No. 1 of the surrender value of the policy, no doubt on inquiry made in that behalf. But there is no evidence that the policy was ever surrendered or that intimation of such surrender was given by either of the respondents to the appellant. There is no averment in the plaint that the policy was ever surrendered by either of the respondents and no evidence was tendered on behalf of the respondent No. 1 that there was a surrender of the policy. Even assuming that the assignment of the policy by the respondent No. 2 to the respondent No. 1 is a valid and lawful assignment, which in our view, it is not, the respondent No. 1 would have no cause of action against the appellant until surrender of the policy. And in this case such a surrender has neither been pleaded nor proved. Counsel for the respondent No. 1 contended that the parties proceeded on the basis of a surrender. I cannot accept this contention. In order to succeed in this suit the respondent No. 1 is bound not only to establish a valid and lawful assignment of the policy in his favour but must also prove a surrender of the policy, and in my view it has failed to prove either.

28. For these reasons this appeal must succeed and I concur in the order made by my learned brother.

Appeal allowed.

AIR 1970 CALCUTTA 520 (V 57 C 104)

D. BASU, J.

Matter No. 223 of 1964, D/- 28-5-1970.

(A) Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Petition, under — Omission to state in petition about existence or prosecution of alternative remedy — Effect.

A petition under Article 226 which is not frivolous cannot be dismissed in limine on ground of existence of an alternative remedy without going into the question of merits. The fact of suppression or omission to state in the petition about existence of an alternative remedy or the petitioner having pursued an alternative course cannot be taken to be such a suppression as will disentitle the petitioner to any consideration under Article 226 on ground of fraudulent or reprehensible conduct. Court should determine whether the Court which issued the rule was deceived. No question of deception arises if notwithstanding a disclosure of such facts the Court might have been inclined to issue the Rule. Case law discussed.

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Petition under Article 226 — Challenge to unconstitutionality of Act — Locus standi of petitioner to maintain petition.

A petition under Article 226 challenging unconstitutionality of an Act may be maintained by a person if the Act be such that mere coming into force of the Act itself is likely to abridge the fundamental rights of a person coming within its ambit. In such a case the aggrieved person may at once come to Court without waiting for the State to take some overt action threatening to infringe his fundamental rights. Thus a trader in edibles is entitled to urge that the provisions of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act contravene Article 14 or 19 (1) (g) of Constitution because there is ground for immediate apprehension of the Act being applied against him. Fact that at the stage of hearing of the petition there are no criminal proceedings pending against the petitioner is not material. AIR 1959 SC 725, Rel. on. (Para 4)

(C) Constitution of India, Art. 14 — Prevention of Food Adulteration Act (1954), Pre. Ss. 12, 19 — Act does not violate Article 14.

Act is not violative of Article 14 for the following reasons:

(1) Under Section 12 read with relevant rules it is open to persons other than the purchasers also to have an analysis of their articles made by the public analyst on payment of fees. (Para 7)

(2) The word "vendor" in Section 19 should be given wider connotation because it is relative to concept of sale. The defence in proviso to Section 19 (2) will also be available to a person who may have in his possession as a commission agent, goods which may be offered for sale even by any other person, namely his principal. (Para 8)

(D) Constitution of India, Articles 19 (1) (g), 226 — Statute prohibiting trade in dangerous commodity or activity — Challenge to constitutionality of — Grounds.

Though a person may not claim a fundamental right to carry on trade in an inherently dangerous commodity or activity when it is so prohibited by the Legislature it will not prevent him from challenging the constitutionality of the Statute itself on the ground that it offends against the fundamental right guaranteed by Article 19 (1) (g) by showing that the restrictions imposed by the statute are unreasonable either because the restrictions go in excess of the right or because activities which are not pernicious are included within the sweep of the statute or because the procedure laid down in the statute for curbing such activities is unreasonable or unjust or arbitrary. Case law discussed. (Paras 9, 10)

(E) Constitution of India, Article 19 (1) (g) — Prevention of Food Adulteration Act (1954), Pre., Section 2 (i) (f) — Act or Section 2 (i) (f) in particular is not violative of Article 19 (1) (g) on ground of vagueness.

In determining whether a statute should be condemned on the ground of vagueness it should be read as a whole and if upon such reading a reasonably certain meaning can be imputed to a provision no complaint of vagueness can be imputed to the statute. (Para 11)

The vice of the particular article will be governed not only by the definition of adulteration in Section 2 (i) (f) but by standards of purity which have been prescribed by the rules made under the Act. So the definition of adulteration in Section 2 (i) (f) must be read together with the rules. The word "otherwise" suggests that all the adjectives refer to the quality of the article being unfit for human consumption. Thus the vagueness of the adjectives standing by themselves is eliminated. (Amendment to delete the word "disgusting" from the definition of adulteration in Section 2 (i) (f) suggested).

The absence of laying down the precise method is not itself a ground for striking down the statute as unreasonable. The presumption is in favour of constitutionality and all circumstances which might uphold the validity of the statute are to be presumed by the Court and must be shown as non-existent by person who wants to challenge it. AIR 1951 SC 41 & AIR 1953 SC 394, Relied on. (Suggestion made to expedite, to include in the rules, the precise method of analysis for various articles.) (Para 13)

 Chakravarti, for Respondent.

ORDER.—The petitioner in this case, who is a trader in edibles such as spices, has challenged the validity of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954 on the ground, inter alia, that the Act contravenes the provisions of Articles 14, 19 (1) (f) and 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution of India and asks for a declaration of such invalidity of the Act and the rules made thereunder and also for an appropriate writ to restrain the respondents from enforcing the Act and the rules against the petitioner. The petition was filed on the 4th June 1964 and was subsequently amended to add paragraphs 11(a) and 11(b), which seek to explain the cause of action to support the petition.

2. The grounds of the alleged invalidity of the said Act are eventually confined to two only inasmuch as the ground under Article 19 (1) (f) has not been pressed. Before I enter into the merits of the said allegations as to unconstitutionality, the preliminary objections in Bar raised by Mr. Nani Kumar Chakraborty on behalf of the respondent must be disposed of. The first preliminary objection raised by Mr. Chakraborty is that the petition should be dismissed in limine and the Rule discharged on the ground that the petitioner obtained the Rule after suppressing a material fact, namely, that there had been two convictions of the petitioner under the Act on 16-1-62 and 17-6-64 and that from the second conviction as aforesaid the petitioner had preferred an appeal to this Court on 20-3-62 and such appeal was pending at the time when the petitioner moved the present petition for the Rule Nisi. It is also argued by Mr. Chakraborty that during the pendency of this Rule the appeal has been disposed of (on 4-12-69) and that since the petitioner has already availed of an alternative remedy he is not entitled to maintain a petition under Article 226 of the Constitution which is a discretionary remedy particularly because the question of unconstitutionality of the statute could have been raised in defence or as a plea in appeal in the criminal proceedings. It has, however, been laid down in various cases by the Supreme Court that the existence of an alternative remedy is not an absolute bar to relief under Article 226 where there has been a contravention of fundamental rights (Himmatlal v. State of Madhya Pra., 1954 S. C. R. 1122 = (AIR 1954 SC 403); Bengal Immunity Co. v. State of Bihar, (1955) 2 S. C. R. 603 (620, 627) = (AIR 1955 SC 681 at pp. 669, 672); Zila Parishad v. Kundan Sugar Mills, Amroha, AIR 1968 SC 93 (100); Collector of Customs v. Bawa, AIR 1968 SC 13 (15); State of Rajasthan v. Karamchand, AIR 1965 SC 913 (916)). It follows therefore that where there are allegations of infringement of a fundamental right in the petition which are not frivolous enough, a petition under Article 226 cannot be dismissed in limine on the ground of existence of an alternative remedy without going into the question of merits. It further follows, if the above proposition be correct, that the fact of suppression or omission to state in the petition anything about the existence of an alternative remedy or the petitioner having pursued an alternative course may not be taken to be such a suppression as would disentitle the petitioner to any consideration under Article 226 of the Constitution on the ground of fraudulent or reprehensible conduct as has been explained by the Court of Appeal in England in the case reported in (1917) 1 KB 486 (The King v. General Commrs. for the Purposes of the Income-tax Acts for the District of Kensington). The point which is to be determined by the Court where such an allegation is made is whether the Court which issued the Rule can be said to have been deceived. No question of deception arises if notwithstanding a disclosure of such facts the Court might have been inclined to issue the Rule.

3. As to the petitioner having already availed of an alternative remedy it might be pointed out that the judgment of the Court of Appeal in the criminal case (Criminal Appeals Nos. 179 and 204 of 1964) D/- 4-12-1969 (Cal.) shows that the appeal was disposed of on the simple question as to whether the ingredients of the offence were proved and no question of unconstitutionality was raised. If that is so, I don't think that this Court can avoid going into the question of unconstitutionality as has been raised by the petitioner in this case.

4. There is also another preliminary question to be disposed of, namely, whether the petitioner has got locus standi to maintain this petition to challenge the unconstitutionality of a statute. Curiously, in the original petition the petitioner did not specifically show as to how he was aggrieved but by the subsequent amendment it has been stated that samples are from time to time taken from the petitioner's firm of the commodities in which he is dealing and they are being examined by Food Inspectors under the impugned statute and that if the statute remains on the statute book the petitioner is likely to be proceeded against for offences under the Act, which, according to the petitioner, is unconstitutional and void. It is true that prosecutions on two occasions have already been disposed of and at this stage there are no criminal proceedings pending against the petitioner, but, as has been laid down by the Supreme Court in the case of Kochunni v. State of Madras, AIR 1959 SC 725 (731), a petition under Article 226 of the Constitution may be maintained by a person if the Act be such that the mere coming into force of the Act itself is likely to abridge the fundamental rights of a person coming within its ambit and that in such a case the aggrieved person may at once come to the Court without waiting for the State to take some overt action threatening to infringe his fundamental rights. In the instant case, the penal provision is contained in Section 7 read with Section 16 of the Act. Once the food, which is defined in Section 2(v) of the Act in wide terms, is found to be adulterated as defined in Section 2 (i), the vendor or a person who stores or distributes such adulterated food is liable to be punished under Section 16 with imprisonment or fine or both; and provision is made in Section 8 onwards of getting samples of such articles of food as come within the purview of the Act from dealers of such articles of food and to launch prosecution under Section 11 of the Act. The petitioner is therefore entitled to urge that the provisions of the Act contravene Articles 14 or 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution because there is ground for immediate apprehension by the Act being applied against him at any moment if any sample taken from his shop is found to be adulterated, in the opinion of the authorities specified in the Act.

5. On the merits, however, the petitioner starts with an initial handicap inasmuch as the Supreme Court has already discussed the validity of this Act from various points of view in two cases — the first one being State of Uttar Pradesh v. Kartar Singh, AIR 1964 SC 1135 and the other one being an unreported decision — Andhra Pradesh Grains & Seeds Merchants Association v. Union of India, Writ Petns. Nos. 468 to 469 and 489 to 490 of 1969, disposed of on 31-3-1970 (SC), a Blue Print of which was produced before this Court.

6. Taking up the question of Article 14, it was held in the earlier case of 1964 that the Act could not be struck down as contravening Article 14, in the absence of proper pleading which only could show that the standards which were to be adopted by the statutory authorities in the matter of analysing the food samples were arbitrary or discriminatory. It was contended by the learned Advocate on behalf of the petitioner before me that in the instant case there are such allegations in the petition. The challenge under Article 14 was also made in the second case of 1969. In this case, the Supreme Court held that there was nothing in the provisions of the Act from which it could be held that the standards prescribed were arbitrary or that arbitrary power had been vested in the authorities who were to administer the Act. The Court analysed the provisions of the Act and held that the standards were to be formulated by a committee of experts and representatives of the Central Government and the State Governments, with the Director-General of Health Services as its Chairman and that the standards fixed in the rules by such an authority could not be held to be arbitrary, unless that was clearly demonstrated.

7. On behalf of the petitioner the allegation of discrimination as a ground of challenge under Article 14 has been directed against two points. It has been urged that while, under Section 12 of the Act, a purchaser was entitled to have an article of food analysed by the Public Analyst on payment of prescribed fees, a trader was not so entitled, so that while the purchaser might avoid distress by anticipatory examination of the article of food which he was going to purchase perhaps for re-sale, the vendor or the manufacturer at the first stage had no such opportunity of averting danger by voluntarily offering the sample of the goods produced, to learn from the Government experts if such articles could be held to be adulterated or not. As against such contention it has been urged by the learned Advocate on behalf of the respondent that though Section 12 speaks of the 'purchaser' sending the article for analysis by the public analyst, the relevant rules made under the Act enable any person to do the same on payment of fees. In the instant case, we need not go to verify whether this interpretation of the Rule is correct and it would suffice to record this statement made on behalf of the respondents who are the only possible authorities to administer the Act, that it is open to persons other than the purchasers also to have such an analysis made by the public analyst on payment of fees, particularly, because it appears that though the petitioner approached the various authorities by correspondence to have some samples examined he did not eventually turn to the public analyst when somebody pointed out to him that the public analyst was the competent authority. As I have already stated, the statements made on behalf of the respondent in Court that other persons are also entitled would give the petitioner and other traders similarly situated ample protection in future.

8. The second ground on which discrimination is alleged on behalf of the petitioner is with reference to sub-section (1) of S. 19 which says that "it shall be no defence in a prosecution for an offence pertaining to the sale of any adulterated or misbranded article of food to allege merely that the vendor was ignorant of the nature, substance or quality of the food sold by him or that the purchaser having purchased any article for analysis was not prejudiced by the sale". This sub-section expresses in a negative form the general proposition that in a charge for sale of adulterated articles of food, ignorance of the vendor that the article was so adulterated would be no defence. But there is an exception to this general proposition with which we are concerned in this case, viz., proviso (1) which says:—

"Provided that such a defence shall be open to the vendor only if he had submitted to the food inspector or the local authority a copy of the warranty with a written notice stating that he intends to rely on it and specifying the name and address of the person from whom he received it, and has also sent a like notice of his intention to that person."

Speaking in brief, a vendor of an article of food may, notwithstanding the general proposition stated earlier, plead in defence that he was ignorant of the adulterated nature of the article of food if he can produce a copy of a written warranty given by the person from whom he had received the article. It is argued on behalf of the petitioner that this defence in the first proviso is available only to a vendor but not to a commission agent or any person other than the vendor who may be storing or distributing an article of food inasmuch as Section 7 of the Act is levelled not merely against the vendor of an adulterated article but also against a person who stores or distributes any such article. The vendor in the usual sense of the term would not, of course, include a commission agent because after all what he does is not on his own behalf but only as agent of the principal. But it has been pointed out on behalf of the respondent that the definition of 'sale' in Section 2 (xiii) is an artificial definition which is wider than the ordinary concept of the word 'sale' as it is understood under the Sale of Goods Act or otherwise, because it includes the act of "exposing for sale or having in his possession for sale of any such article and even includes also an attempt to sell of such article". Prima facie, if this be the definition of the word 'sale', the term 'vendor' in Section 19 may also be given a wider connotation because it is relative to the concept of sale. If that be so the defence in the proviso to Section 19 (2) would also be available to a person who may have in his possession as a commission agent, goods which may be offered for sale even by any other person, namely, his principal. Here also, the stand taken by the respondent in this Court might be of aid to the petitioner and like traders inasmuch as the defence in question would be open in view of this concession on behalf of the State to commission agents and like persons who might be hauled up in future. As to the standards being arbitrary, I would propose to deal with that under Article 19 (1) (g).

9. As to Article 19 (1) (g); this again has been dealt with by both the decisions of the Supreme Court referred to earlier. In the earlier case of 1964, of course, the question was not dealt with elaborately but only a passing observation was made that "the respondent cannot assert any fundamental rights under Article 19 (1) to carry on business in adulterated food stuffs". Curiously, however, notwithstanding such broad proposition having been asserted in the earlier case, in the subsequent decision in 1969 the question of unreasonableness of the restrictions imposed by the Act on the fundamental rights under Article 19(1)(g) was gone into in details. It had been asserted in some decisions of the Supreme Court since the case of State of Bombay v. Chamaraungwalla, (1957) SCR 874 = (AIR 1957 SC 699) that there were certain articles of trade which were res extra commercium. In other words, they involved activities which were so inherently pernicious or dangerous to the community that nobody could claim any right to trade in such commodities or activities. It is not possible to say whether this stand of the Supreme Court has been maintained subsequently in relation to Article 19, but Article 19 (1) (g) does not exclude prima facie any trade or business. It says — "all citizens shall have the right to practise any profession or to carry on any occupation, trade or business assuming that all trades or businesses might come under Article 19 (1) (g)". Clause (6) of that Article empowers the State for imposing reasonable restrictions on the exercise of the right conferred in the interest of the general public. The power, thus, is reserved in the State to impose reasonable restrictions on the exercise of the right to carry on any trade or business in the public and certainly it would be in the public interest to suppress a dangerous trade or business and it has, in fact, been held that the expression "reasonable restrictions" also includes total prohibition in the case of business or trade which is inherently dangerous (Cooverjee v. Excise Commr., (1954) SCR 873 = (AIR 1954 SC 220); Narendra Kumar v. Union of India, (1960) 2 SCR 375 = (AIR 1960 SC 430); Krishnachandra v. State of M. P., AIR 1965 SC 307 (308)). If that is so, it is not necessary to resort to any doctrine of res extra commercium for the conclusion of any particular trade or business from the ambit of Article 19 (1) (g) inasmuch as the legislature can impose an absolute prohibition upon carrying on any particular trade or business as soon as it comes to hold that such trade or business is altogether pernicious or inherently dangerous to the community.

10. It is thus evident that though a person may not claim a fundamental right to carry on trade in an inherently dangerous commodity or activity when it is so prohibited by the Legislature it would not prevent him from challenging the constitutionality of the statute itself on the ground that it offends against the fundamental right guaranteed by Article 19 (1) (g) by showing that the restrictions imposed by the statute are unreasonable, either because the restrictions go in excess of the object or because activities which are not pernicious are included within the sweep of the statute or because the procedure laid down in the statute for curbing such activities is unreasonable or unjust or arbitrary. We have, therefore, to enter into the core of the statute crossing the preliminary objections in Bar.

11. In the decision of 1969 (the Andhra Pradesh case) the Supreme Court has discussed the question of reasonableness of the impugned statute from various standpoints and so far as the question of absence of mens rea is concerned it has been dealt with fully so that this point may be said to be concluded. There are also some other observations which dispose of other points taken in the present petition. I would, therefore, confine myself only to those points on which there is no direct decision in the Supreme Court case of 1969. The first point which I might mention is the contention advanced on behalf of the petitioner that the definition of adulteration in Section 2 (i) is vague and uncertain. There is no doubt that a penal statute may be held to be unconstitutional if it is so uncertain and vague that it gives no guidance either to the public or to the Court or to the persons who are to administer the statute, as has been held both in England and in India. Of course in England, the conviction is quashed but the Courts have got no power to strike down the statute itself; but in India, in such a contingency the Court may not only quash the conviction but annul the statute itself as was done by the Supreme Court in the case of State of Madhya Pra. v. Baldeo Prasad, AIR 1961 SC 293. But in determining whether a statute should be condemned on the ground of vagueness it should be read as a whole and if upon such reading a reasonably certain meaning can be imputed to a provision no complaint of vagueness can be imputed to the statute. The only provision to which my attention was drawn on behalf of the petitioner in this behalf is sub-clause (f) of Section 2(i) of the Act which says "An article of food shall be deemed to be adulterated if the article consists wholly or in part of any filthy, putrid, disgusting, rotten, decomposed or diseased animal or vegetable substance or is insect-infested or is otherwise unfit for human consumption". It was argued that it is difficult, if not impossible, to avoid the mischief of this definition because there may hardly be found any sample of certain food articles like cereals or other crops which is absolutely free from insects. The conditions of such products also vary under different climates or different parts of the country. The expression "filthy, putrid, disgusting, rotten etc." also does not give any definite standard for adjudging the quality of the thing. There are, however, two answers to such a contention, namely, that the vice of the particular article will be governed not only by the definition but by the standards of purity which have been prescribed by the rules made under the Act, under Section 23. So the definition must be read together with the rules. Secondly, the adjectives which precede in the said definition must be read with the concluding words "or is otherwise unfit for human consumption". The word "otherwise" suggests that all the adjectives refer to the quality of the article being unfit for human consumption, which condition may be due either because the article is filthy or infested or rotten and the like. If that is so, the vagueness of the adjectives standing by themselves is eliminated. On these grounds, therefore, I do not think that the statute or the definition in particular is liable to be condemned as constituting an unreasonable restriction upon the fundamental right guaranteed by Article 19 (1) (g). Whether the standards as laid down are vague is another question to which I shall advert presently.

12. But before disposing of the question relating to the definition I would observe that I am not very happy with the use of the word "disgusting" because that word refers to a subjective condition and what is disgusting to one person who may perhaps be called 'neurotic' by medical people may not be disgusting to many others. In fact, the objectivity of the test of "being unfit for human consumption" is apparently incompatible with the subjective condition of being "disgusting". Even without the word "disgusting" the object of the legislator would be served by the residuary clause "or is otherwise unfit for human consumption." I would, therefore, draw the attention of the authorities in charge of the administration of this Act to consider the question of deleting the word "disgusting" on the occasion of any future amendment that might be undertaken in respect of the statute, specially as it has been pointed out to me that various amendments have already been made in various provisions of this Act and that some of them have taken place during the pendency of the instant Rule.

13. Coming now to the reasonableness of the standard laid down in the rules, various complaints have been made in the petition a reference to which may be nearly impossible within the course of this judgment inasmuch as this Court should not pose as an expert in the matter of judging the propriety or reasonableness of the standard relating to chemical analysis of different food articles. But, subject to certain observations which I am going to make at once it is enough to point out that though the standards might be improved by furnishing further details it has not been established that while using the standards the Public Analyst or the Central Food Laboratory uses different processes or methods or holds the tests under different conditions in different cases. Whatever be the method used by them, it must be presumed unless the contrary is shown that the same standard and the same process is being followed by them in the case of every person who is brought before them. It was argued that different standards than those which have been prescribed under the instant impugned Act are to be found in other statutes, such as Agricultural Produce (Grading and Marking) Act, 1937. But this contention cannot be accepted inasmuch as the object of these other statutes is not identical. The object of the Agricultural Produce Act 1937, for instance, is to classify and properly describe different articles having regard to their nature and quality, from the standpoint of marketing and not from the standpoint of assuring the purity of such articles. The object of grading according to quality under the Agricultural Produce Act 1937 is to make it clear to the purchaser what was the quality or standard of the article he was going to purchase and at what price. It would also facilitate the trade from the standpoint of traders because things of different quality would not fetch the same price. A more stringent standard must, on the other hand, be adopted in the legislation where the object is to prevent adulteration of food articles in order to protect the health and safety of the citizens, particularly in a democratic country and it is with that object in view that very drastic measures and stringent standards have been provided for in the instant legislation as well as in comparable legislation in all civilized countries, including the United Kingdom. It is in this connection fit and proper to refer that even an absolute liability, negating the plea of absence of mens rea, has been imposed by such statutes both in the U. K. and in India and this aspect has been fully discussed by the Supreme Court in the 1969 decision. It is therefore of no avail to say that a more relaxed standard has been prescribed under other statutes which have been referred to on behalf of the petitioner at the hearing. But even though I don't accept the contention raised in this behalf on the present point, I would point out to the respondents two features which have struck me as removable by further amendments either in the Act or in the rules, for a better administration of the statute. While it is absolutely justifiable in a democratic country that pernicious activities should be suppressed with the maximum of strength at the command of the State, at the same time it is also essential that an innocent citizen of a country which professes equality before the law should not be punished unless the law is not only certain but is also precise and exhaustive so as to prevent miscarriage of justice in so far as that can be humanely eliminated. Oftentimes it is complained on behalf of the public that laws are amended too frequently. No doubt, if the amendment simply adds to confusion and bewilderment it is unwelcome, but if the amendment seeks to improve the law and is conducive to the interest of the members of the public hardly any complaint can reasonably be raised. With this end in view I should point out to the respondents the statement in para 6 (g) of the counter-affidavit filed by Dr. A. P. Roy, Deputy Director-General of Health Services, who must be vitally concerned with the administration of this Act because it has been stated that it is the Director-General of Health Services who is the Chairman of the Central Committee for Food Standards as referred to in Section 3 of the Act. This gentleman in his affidavit has stated that "the incorporation of method of analysis for various articles of food for the Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules 1955 is in contemplation" and one of the grievances made on behalf of the petitioner is that precise method of analysis not being mentioned in the rules different results as to the quality of the sample might be arrived at by different experts. If the precise method, for example, whether it is to be the 'dry process method' or 'wet method', were prescribed in the rules the chances of coming to different conclusions would be obviated. The absence of laying down the precise method, as I have already said, may not be itself a ground for striking down the statute as unreasonable because the fact that a statute is capable of improvement and that the legislator has not been able to make it fool-proof is no ground for invalidating it. On the other hand the presumption is in favour of constitutionality, and all circumstances which might uphold the validity of the statute are to be presumed by the court and must be shown as non-existent by the person who wants to challenge it [Charanjit Lal v. Union of India, 1950 SCR 869 (879) = (AIR 1951 SC 41 at p. 45); Shiv Bahadur v. State of Vindhya Pradesh, (1953) SCR 1183 (1202) = (AIR 1953 SC 391 at p. 399).] But at the same time, as I have stated earlier, it must be an object of the persons empowered to amend the statute or rules to improve it by supplementing it by proper materials or by deleting faulty expressions if possible. Since the Deputy Director-General in his affidavit has stated that an attempt is already afoot to incorporate in the rules the precise method of analysis for the various articles I think it proper on my part to draw the attention of the respondent, namely, the Government of India, in the Ministries of Commerce and Industries, Food and Agriculture and the Ministry of Health, that the process of 'consideration' of this question should be expedited so that it can be completed before many more persons are not hauled up as accused under the Act.

14. The other matter to which I would like to draw the attention of the respondents is that stated in paragraph 9 of the affidavit sworn by Dr. Sudhir Chandra Neogy who is specialist in this branch of Applied Chemistry and has got sufficiently advanced academic proficiency in the subject. He has said that the conditions of test should be made more precise under the different heads relating to various articles inasmuch as the result of analysis might not be the same if the analysis is held under different conditions. He has referred to the case of Fenu-greek (Methi) which is item No. A.05.13 of the Rules. Clause (a) of this item says that this article must not contain more than 10 per cent of moisture. The Doctor of Science has rightly observed that the question of the quantum of moisture will vary with the condition of temperature under which the analysis is held. There is no doubt that if the trader or vendor himself wants to have his article tested he cannot have it done unless the temperature under which the test is to be held is specified in the Rule. It may be that the public analyst or the Central Laboratory hold their examination in a particular condition in the laboratory pertaining to their establishment so that the chances of variation may be reduced but for the members of the public who want to avoid the mischief of the Act, better guide should be offered by the laboratory test or the conditions of analysis as are applied under the different items of the Act.

15. The other ground which was taken on behalf of the petitioner was in relation to the conclusiveness of the certificate of the public analyst contained in the proviso to Section 13 (5) of the Act which says "provided that any document purporting to be a certificate signed by the Director of the Central Food Laboratory shall be final and conclusive evidence of the facts stated therein". This aspect of the matter has, as a matter of fact, been dealt with by the Supreme Court in another case — Corporation of Calcutta v. Calcutta Tramways Co. Ltd., AIR 1964 SC 1279 (1281), where it was held that the provision in S. 437 (1) (6) of the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1951 constitutes unreasonable restriction upon the citizens' right guaranteed by Article 19 (1) (g) inasmuch as it makes the opinion of the Municipal authorities as conclusive and non-justiciable that the premises in question were being used for a purpose which was dangerous to life, health or property and was likely to create a nuisance. It was held by the Supreme Court that the subjective opinion of a municipal body which has the effect of imposing restrictions on carrying on trade cannot be said to be a reasonable restriction within the meaning of Article 19 (6) because it would put the citizen residing within the limits of the municipal Corporation entirely "at its mercy, if it chooses to exercise that power capriciously, arbitrarily or unreasonably, though not mala fide". The circumstances under the instant Act however are not of the same nature. The opinion under Section 13 (5) is not that of a municipal authority but that of experts who have the business of analysing the sample of food taken under the Act. This drastic provision has been adopted in this Act because of the nature of the mischief which the Act arrived at and this feature has been elaborately dealt with by the Supreme Court in the second case.

16. Having given my anxious consideration on all the points raised by the petitioner, I am of the opinion that this Rule must fail and it is accordingly discharged subject, however, to the observations which I have made in the judgment to draw the attention of the respondent.

17. I make no order as to costs.

Rule discharged.

- Kar, for Appellants.

D. BASU, J.:— This appeal is against the judgment of T. K. Basu, J. dated 3-2-69, by which he quashed the order of penalty passed on 17-8-62 by the Additional Collector of Customs (pp. 111-120 of the Paper Book) and the orders dated 13/15-12-63 and 21-9-64, passed by the Central Board of India and the Government of India, rejecting the appeal and revision preferred by the Petitioner Company under Article 226 of the Constitution, — the Respondent before us. The Additional Collector and the Government have preferred the present appeal.

2. The charge upon which the impugned order (p. 119 of the Paper Book) was made by the Appellant was that 1000 bales of B. Twills which the Respondent sought to export to Kenya per SS Ispinge "have been misdeclared in the relevant Shipping Bills in respect of the F. O. B. value thereof", and the Appellant (Addl. Collector) held that by such misdeclaration, the Respondent had contravened Section 167 (8) of the Sea Customs Act, read with Section 23A of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act as well as Section 167 (37) of the Sea Customs Act. He, therefore, confiscated the goods in respect of which Shipping Bills had been presented at the Customs House, but gave an option to the Respondent to redeem the goods on payment of a fine of Rs. 2 lakhs, and also imposed a personal penalty of Rs. 35,000. After paying the sum of Rs. 235,000 as aforesaid, under protest, the Respondent got the goods released and thereupon challenged the impugned order by statutory appeal and revision, as stated at the outset. The Government of India having dismissed the application for revision on 21-9-64, the Respondent brought his application under Article 226 of the Constitution on 14-5-65 (pp. 4-16 of the Paper-book), to quash the impugned orders, asking for a refund of the sum of Rs. 2,35,000 which the Respondent had paid under protest, as fine in lieu of confiscation and personal penalty. From a reading of the impugned order at pp. 119-20, it is evident that the Addl. Collector relied upon both Section 167 (8) and (37) in imposing the order of confiscation and penalty.

3. The judgment of the Court below was a short one. In the main, the Court relied upon the majority judgment of the Supreme Court in the case of Union of India v. Shree-ram, which is set out at pp. 208 et seq. of the Paper-book (since reported as (1969) 1 SCC 91 = (reported in AIR 1970 SC 1597)) in holding that the only obligation of an exporter under the provision in Sec. 12 (1) of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947 was to furnish "a declaration... that the amount representing the full export value of the goods has been, or will within the prescribed period, be, paid in the prescribed manner" and that no offence under S. 167(8) of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, read with Section 12 (1) of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, was committed where a declaration as aforesaid had been furnished by an exporter, however, false the contents of the declaration might have been. The Customs Authorities might have other remedies for such misdeclaration but not one under Section 167 (8) of the Sea Customs Act, to confiscate the goods sought to be exported and to impose penalty upon the exporter. Upon this view, he held that the impugned order was vitiated by an error apparent on its face. He, therefore, quashed the impugned order and also issued a writ of mandamus directing the Appellants "to refund to the Petitioner the sum of Rs. 2,35,000 realised by way of fine in lieu of confiscation and personal penalty". At the same time he gave liberty to the Appellants to proceed according to law.

4. Mr. Kar, appearing on behalf of the Appellants, has taken a number of points which should be dealt with separately.

5. I. The first point is that the majority decision in Sreeram's case, (1969) 1 SCC 91 = (AIR 1970 SC 1597) has no application to the facts of the instant case.

6. Before going into the merits of this contention, it should be pointed out that the majority decision in Sreeram's case, (1969) 1 SCC 91 = (reported in AIR 1970 SC 1597), has since been affirmed by unanimous Bench of the Supreme Court in McLeod & Co. v. Collector of Customs, C. A. No. 1173 of 1967, D/- 12-9-1969 (SC) and Backer Gray & Co. v. Union of India, C. A.

No. 1178 of 1967, D/- 23-1-1970 reported in (1970) 1 SCWR 303. In Backer Gray's case (1970) 1 SCWR 303, the Court reiterated the majority judgment in Sreeram's case, (1969) 1 SCC 91 = (AIR 1970 SC 1597), in these words —

"It is true that the declarations required to be made under the Rules in Form GRI contained incorrect information, but that incorrect information related to points on which Section 12 (1) does not require a declaration. A declaration, which is in contravention of the Rules or the Forms prescribed under the Rules, may be penalised under Section 23 of the Act, but such contravention will not attract the provisions of the Sea Customs Act.

Under Section 23-A of the Act, only a breach of restrictions imposed under Section 12 (1) of the Act is to be deemed to be a contravention of the restrictions imposed by Section 19 of the Sea Customs Act. An incorrect declaration in contravention of the Rules made under S. 27 of the Act is not to be deemed a contravention of the restriction imposed by Section 19 of the Sea Customs Act. It is therefore quite clear that in these cases the imposition of the penalties under Section 167 (8) of the Sea Customs Act was totally unjustified."

7. The above observations of the Supreme Court answer the arguments advanced by Mr. Kar that—

(a) Since the prescribed Form requires the exporter to state the real value of the goods exported, a misstatement under that column would constitute an offence under the Sea Customs Act, read with Sec. 12 (1) of the Foreign Exchange Act; and that

(b) Since Section 12 (1) required the exporter to declare the 'full export value of the goods', it cannot be interpreted to mean that the exporter would be exonerated from his statutory liability by declaring an incorrect value

8. The law, as laid down by the Supreme Court in the foregoing cases, is that for making an incorrect or false declaration, the authorities may proceed against the exporter under other provisions of the law, but not under Section 167 (8) of the Sea Customs Act. Hence, the impugned order of confiscation and penalty imposed under S. 167 (8) of the Sea Customs Act cannot be upheld, so far as the present point goes.

9. Learning that the Government of India had amended the law in order to plug the loophole created by the Supreme Court judgment in Sreeram's case, (1969) 1 SCC 91 = (AIR 1970 SC 1597) we directed a further hearing of these appeals before us. At that hearing the materials relating to the amendment have been produced before us. It appears that by promulgating the Foreign Exchange Regulation (Amendment) Ordinance, 1969, on 13-11-69, Section 12 (1) of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act has been amended by requiring that the declaration must be "true in all material particulars" as to the amount representing 'the full export value' or 'if the export value of the goods is not ascertainable at the time of export, the value which the exporter, having regard to the prevailing market conditions, expects to receive on the sale of the goods in the course of international trade...." In exercise of the power conferred by this amendment, the Government has issued a fresh notification on 14-11-69 (GSR 2611), superseding its previous notification under Section 12 (1), requiring the exporter to make a declaration 'true in all material particulars' in terms of the amended section.

10. It is clear from a plain reading of the provisions of the Ordinance that the effect of the change, whatever it might be, is not retrospective and would not affect any declaration which was made under S. 12 (1) prior to the making of the Ordinance and the issue of the new notification. It was, of course, vehemently argued by Mr. Kar that since the object of the Amendment Ordinance was to protect the public from fiscal loss by roping in a fraudulent exporter, the amendment must be construed, by implication, to be retrospective in operation. In support of this contention, Mr. Kar relied upon the observations in Craies on Statute Law, 6th Edn., at p. 395, where the learned Author refers to the decision in R. v. Vine, (1875) 10 QB 195. In that case, the majority of the Court applied the provisions of Section 14 of the Wine and Beerhouse Amendment Act, 1870 which enacted that "every person convicted of felony shall be for ever disqualified from selling spirits by retail" to a person who had been convicted before the Act came into force but was still holding a licence to sell spirits, on the ground that it would advance the object of the statute, which was to protect the public against the abuse of inns being kept by persons of bad character. There are, however, various reasons why the aforesaid decision cannot be applied to the case before us.

(a) In Vine's case, (1875) 10 QB 195 the ground of disqualification had already been incurred by conviction. But in the instant case, if retrospective operation is to be given to the Ordinance, the Respondent would be penalised for not doing something which the law then existing, as interpreted by the Supreme Court, did not require him to do. It is only, in the declarations furnished after the 11th November, 1969 that the duty to furnish true material particulars attaches and a man may be penalised only for violation of that duty.

(b) The primary rule of construction of a fiscal statute that imposes a burden upon a citizen is that it must be strictly construed upon the language used within the four corners of the statute. [Fernandez v. State of Kerala, AIR 1957 SC 637 (681)]. It follows, therefore, that the Court will not readily infer a retrospective operation so as to impose or enhance the liability of the citizen, ex post facto, and this rule applies even where a statute is expressly retrospective. In such a case no greater retrospective effect will be given by the Court than what has been granted expressly by the statute [Income Tax Officer v. Habibullah, (1962) 44 ITR 809 = (AIR 1962 SC 918 (921.))] This principle of construction operates with greater force where a transaction has been completed prior to the amendment of the statute, as in the case before us [ibid]; Prashar v. Vasanten, AIR 1963 SC 1356 (1367); Gadgil v. Lal and Co., AIR 1965 SC 171 (177); George v. Controller of Estate Duty, Mysore, AIR 1967 SC 849 (852).

(c) Further, the law which is sought to be amended, in the case before us, is penal in nature and will make that a statutory offence which was not an offence when the act, namely, the submission of the disputed declaration, was done. It is to be noted that even in Vine's case, (1875) 10 QB 195 the dissenting Judge Lush, J. observed—

"This is ..... a highly penal enactment. The sound and well-established canon of construction is that such an enactment is to be read as prospective, unless a contrary intention be clearly established from the language used".

The majority Judges, Cockburn, C. J. and Mellor, J., overcame this objection only by holding that the object of the legislation in that case was not to punish, but to impose 'restraints upon the persons who should be qualified to hold licenses': (1875) 10 QB 195 (199-201). The only sanction, in Vine's case, (1875) 10 QB 195 was that the convicted man was to be disqualified for holding a licence.

11. In the case before us, not only will the exporter lose his goods but he would be subjected to pay pecuniary penalty, for non-payment of which he may be sent to jail (S. 193 of the Sea Customs Act, read with Section 33 of the Criminal Procedure Code). Even on suspicion that he has committed an offence under Section 167, he may be arrested (S. 173 of the Sea Customs Act). No doubt, the bar under Article 20 (1) of the Constitution extends only to 'conviction' by a Court of law, but the question before us is not one of a constitutional bar against conviction under an ex post facto law, but that of construction of a change in a penal statute, which is wider than the immunity conferred by Article 20 (1). It is an age-old proposition that a penal statute or amendment thereof should not be construed to be retrospective, in the absence of express words to that effect because "it manifestly shocks one's sense of justice that an Act, legal at the time of doing it, should be made unlawful by some new enactment." [Midland Ry v. Pye, (1861) 142 ER 419 (424); R. v.

Griffiths, (1891) 2 QB 145 (148); Moon v. Durden, (1848) 2 Ex 22; Butchers, Hide Co. v. Seacombe, (1913) 2 KB 401.]

12. We have already said that in Vine's case, (1875) 10 QB 195 the law imposed only a disqualification and not a penalty. The distinction between the two has also been pointed out in the recent English case of Re A Solicitor's Clerk, (1957) 3 All ER 617 (619), in these words:—

"It enables an order to be made disqualifying a person from acting as a solicitor's clerk in the future and what happened in the past is the cause or reason for the making of the order; but the order has no retrospective effect. It would be retrospective if the Act provided that anything done before the Act came into force..... was made void or voidable or if a penalty were inflicted for having acted in this or any other capacity before the Act was made...."

13. The same distinction has been observed by our Supreme Court in the case of State of Bombay v. Vishnu, AIR 1961 SC 307.

14. The other case relied upon by Mr. Kar, namely Jogodanund v. Amrita Lal Sarkar, (1895) ILR 22 Cal 767 (FB) also does not help him, because the observations at pp. 777 and 780 of the Report show that the implication of retrospective operation was made in that case on the footing that the statutory provision involved (i. e., S. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act) was a remedial provision. The court made it clear that no such implication would be made where the statutory provision created a 'new obligation' as in the case before us.

15. From whatever standpoint, thus, the matter is looked at, the Amending Ordinance in question before us cannot be given retrospective effect to render an act or omission an offence which was not an offence before the Amending Ordinance was promulgated; and where a statute cannot be construed as retrospective, no subordinate legislation issued under such statute can be given retrospective effect [Income Tax Officer v. Ponnosc, (1967) 64 ITR 117 = (AIR 1966 Ker 5); Strawboard Mfg. Co. Ltd. v. Gutta Mill Workers' Union, (1953) SCR 439 (448) = (AIR 1953 SC 95 at p. 98); Dayalbagh Co-operative Society v. Sultan Singh, Civil Appeal No. 654 of 1965, D/- 6-1-1966 (SC) unreported].

16. We, therefore, conclude that the Amendment Ordinance of 1969 cannot be given retrospective effect so as to affect the Respondent and that the law which is applicable to the instant case is Section 12 (1) as it stood prior to the amendment and as interpreted in Sreeram's case, (1969) 1 SCC 91 = (AIR 1970 SC 1597) and (1970) 1 SCWR 303. If that law be applicable, the judgment of the Court below cannot be assailed with respect to Section 167 (8).

17. II. Mr. Kar, therefore, advanced his second contention that Sreeram's case, (1969)

1 SCC 91 = (AIR 1970 SC 1597) has no application in the instant case inasmuch as though the Additional Collector in his order at pp. 119-120 of the Paper Book referred to both Sections 167 (8) and 167 (37) of the Customs Act, the appellate authority, i. e., the Central Board had observed (p. 140) that the Respondent had committed a separate offence under Section 167 (37), which is independent of Section 167 (8) and that the

(8) If any goods, the importation of which is for the time being prohibited or restricted by or under Chap. IV of this Act, be imported into or exported from India contrary to such prohibition or restriction .....

(37) If it be found, when any goods are entered at, or brought to be passed through, a custom-house, either for importation or exportation, that .....

(b) the contents thereof have been wrongly described in such bill or application as regards the denominations, characters or conditions according to which such goods are chargeable with duty, are being imported or exported :

(c) the contents of such packages have been misstated in regard to sort, quality, quantity or value....."

19. In connection with Section 167 (37), it is necessary to read Section 137, which imposes the substantive liability upon the exporter to state the required particulars in the prescribed form, as follows:

"137. No goods ..... shall be shipped .... for exportation until—

(a) the owner has delivered to the Customs Collector, or other proper officer, a shipping bill of such goods....., in such form and containing such particulars in addition to those specified in Section 29 as may from time to time be prescribed by the Chief Customs Officer;

(b) such owner has paid the duties (if any) payable on such goods; and

(c) such bill has been passed by the Customs collector .....

The question is whether the offence under Section 167 (37), read with S. 137 of the Sea Customs Act has been committed in the instant case. As has been held in Girdharilal v. Union of India, AIR 1964 SC 1519 (1522), in the absence of any procedural irregularity, the findings arrived at by the Customs Authorities cannot be disturbed by the High Court, sitting under Art. 226 of the Constitution.

20. In the case before us, a complaint as to violation of natural justice was raised at some stage, but it has been established beyond doubt that it was at the instance of the Respondent Company that the formalities Revisional authority simply rejected the revision application (p. 136).

18. In order to appreciate this argument, it is necessary to refer to the provisions in Section 167 (8) and (37).

"S. 167. The offences mentioned in the first column of the following Schedule shall be punishable to the extent mentioned in the third column of the same with reference to such offences respectively:

such goods shall be liable to confiscation; any person concerned in any such offence shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding three times the value of the goods or not exceeding one thousand rupees.

Section of this Act to which offence has reference: 86 & 137 such packages...shall be liable to confiscation, and every person concerned in any such offence shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding one thousand rupees.

for adjudication by issuing notice etc. were dispensed with. The impugned orders were, however, made after hearing the Respondent.

21. The findings arrived at by the Appellants cannot, therefore, be reopened by this Court. Those findings, as appear from the order of the Board of Revenue (pp. 139-140), are—

(i) the contract disclosed by the Respondent did not relate to the disputed goods and that the Respondent has not disclosed the relevant contract, as required by the relevant Forms etc.;

(ii) the value of the goods declared in the Form prescribed was not correct.

22. If these two findings stand, an offence under Section 167 (37), read with Section 137, is established. It was, however, contended on behalf of the Respondent that misstatement cannot be an offence under Section 167 (37) (a), unless there is a substantive provision requiring the exporter to make a correct statement. But though that requirement cannot be found in Section 137 itself, Clause (a) of that section refers to Section 29, namely, that the Bill must contain 'such particulars in addition to those specified in Section 29 as may ..... be prescribed'. The requirement to state the correct value in the Bill has therefore to be drawn from Section 29, and 'real value', for this purpose, is defined in Section 30. The relevant portions of the provisions in these two sections are:

"29. Owner to declare real value, etc. of goods in bill of entry or shipping bill. — On the importation into, or exportation from, any customs-port of any goods, whether liable to duty or not, the owner of such goods shall, in his bill of entry or shipping bill, as the case may be, state the real value, quantity and description of such goods to the best of his knowledge and belief, and shall subscribe a declaration of the truth of such statement at the foot of such bill.

Power to require production of invoice, etc. — In case of doubt, the Customs Collector may require any such owner or any other person in possession of any invoice, broker's note, policy of insurance or other document, whereby the real value, quantity or description of any such goods can be ascertained, to produce the same, and to furnish any information relating to such value, quantity or description which it is in his power to furnish. And thereupon such person shall produce such document and furnish such information:

30. For the purposes of this Act the real value shall be deemed to be— (a) the wholesale cash price, less trade discount, for which goods of the like kind and quality are sold, or are capable of being sold, at the time and place of importation or exportation, as the case may be, without any abatement or deduction whatever, except (in the case of goods imported) of the amount of the duties payable on the importation thereof: or

(b) Where such price is not ascertainable the cost at which goods of the like kind and quality could be delivered at such place, without any abatement or reduction except as aforesaid."

23. It was, therefore, contended on behalf of the Respondent that the charge was not that the Respondent had failed to state the 'real value' within the meaning of Section 29 of the Sea Customs Act but that his declaration under Section 12 (1) of the Foreign Exchange Act was wrong. This, however, is not correct. From the Respondent's own pleading in the petition under Article 226, it is clear that, for the sake of expedition, he had agreed to dispense with a formal charge in writing but that the charges were explained to him verbally and on the footing of that he had filed his explanation or statement (paras. 18-19), and that the adjudication proceeded on that foundation. That 'statement' of the Petitioner is to be found at pp. 171-2 of the Paper Book. What charges were communicated to the Respondent are stated at (i) and (ii) of p. 173. It is true that the first charge was that "the FOB value declared by us on the Shipping Bills and on the GRI Forms do not represent the full export value of the goods as defined in Section 12 (1) of the Foreign Exchange Act and the notifications issued thereunder", but the second charge was that—

"We have also been told that the declaration of a lower value as a full value on the Shipping Bill is a misdeclaration of value attracting penal action under Sec. 167 (37) of the Sea Customs Act."

24. It is quite evident that though Section 29 or 137 of the Sea Customs Act was not specifically mentioned, the Respondent was told that by understating the value, he had also committed an offence under Section 167 (37), which must be read with Sections 29 and 137 of the Sea Customs Act and that his defence as well as the proceeding for adjudication proceeded on this twofold basis. It is, therefore, not correct to say that the petitioner was charged only with a violation of Section 12 (1) of the Foreign Exchange Act, and this contention of the Respondent is rejected.

25. III. We are not to deduce the conclusions from the findings so far arrived at, in order to determine the relief, if any, which the Respondent could get in his petition under Article 226.

26. The order at pp. 119-120 clearly shows that —

(a) The order of confiscation was made both under Section 167 (8) and 167 (37);

(b) The option to redeem the goods on payment of a fine was offered under Section 183 which is relatable to both Section 167 (8) and (37);

(c) The penalty of Rs. 35,000 was purported to be imposed under both S. 167 (8) and (37).

27. (a) We have held that the order, in so far as it was founded on Section 167 (8) was without jurisdiction, on the footing of the decision in Sreeram's case, (1969) 1 SCC 91 = (AIR 1970 SC 1597) but that it was intra vires so far as it was founded on Section 167 (37).

28. Since the order of confiscation was founded both on items (8) and (37) of Section 167, the order of confiscation cannot be struck down even though the charge of violation of Section 12 (1) of the Foreign Exchange Act fails. The bearing of the impugned order to Section 167 (37) was not considered by the Court below (p. 187). Hence, the order of the Court below quashing the confiscation, as well as the direction to refund the fine of Rs. 20,00,000 which the Respondent had paid in order to redeem the confiscated goods cannot be upheld.

29. (b) As regards the personal penalty of Rs. 35,000, however, it must be pointed out that though the additional Collector relied upon both items (8) and (37) of Section 167, a sum as big as 35,000 could not prima facie be imposed under that item which specifies the maximum of Rs. 1,000/-. The impugned order of penalty must, therefore, be regarded as one under item (8) of Section 167 and its validity must be determined with reference to that item.

30. As has been held by the Supreme Court in Ranchhoddas v. Union of India, AIR 1961 SC 935, though that item mentions two alternatives in Col. 3, it is competent for the Customs Authority to exceed the lower alternative of Rs. 1,000/- and impose a penalty up to three times the value of the goods concerned, where that amount exceeds Rs. 1,000/-. In the instant case, the penalty of Rs. 35,000 was, therefore, within the alternative maximum prescribed in Section 167 (8), but since we have held that in the case before us, the appellants had no jurisdiction to proceed under Section 167 (8), the order imposing the penalty of Rs. 35,000 must be quashed.

31. Subject to the preliminary objections raised by Mr. Kar, to be taken up just now, the Respondent has a case for refund to the extent of Rs 35,000, following from the order imposing the personal penalty being quashed, according to our decision.

32. IV. When all is said, Mr. Kar contended, the Court below was not justified in directing the Appellants to refund any amount realised from the Respondent, in a proceeding under Art. 226 of the Constitution.

33. The claim for refund arises out of the finding of this Court that the imposition and recovery of the penalty in question was without jurisdiction since there was no violation of Section 12 (1) of the Foreign Exchange Act out of which the offence under Section 167 (8) of the Sea Customs Act arose. Since the jurisdiction of the Appellants to do so was statutory, a duty to refund arises as soon as it is held that the impugned order was ultra vires. Such a claim in a proceeding for mandamus has been allowed in England in R. v. Income-tax Special Purposes Commrs., (1888) 21 QBD 313 and in numerous cases in India e.g., Sales Tax Officer v. Kanhaiyalal, AIR 1959 SC 135; State of Orissa v. Chaloobhai, AIR 1961 SC 231 (maintainability not questioned); State of Kerala v. Aluminium Industries Ltd., (1965) 16 STC 659 (692) (SC). On this point, the observations of the Supreme Court in the case of Union of India v. Narasimhalu, (1969) 2 SCC 655 (662), though obiter, are illuminating. In this case, the claim had been made by suit, but a suit was barred by Section 40 of the Sea Customs Act. It was on this ground that the suit was dismissed, but at the same time, the Supreme Court observed—

"If the plaintiffs had moved the High Court in exercise of its jurisdiction under Article 226 the Union had practically no defence. The Union could without loss of face acceded to the request of the plaintiff to refund the amount collected. . . . This was essentially a case in which when notice was served the Central Government should instead of relying upon technicalities have refunded the amount collected . . . ."

34. Mr. Kar, however, relies upon the observations of the Court in Suganmal v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1965 SC 1740. But this decision, when closely read, does not establish the proposition that an order of refund cannot, under any circumstances, be made in a petition under Article 226, but only that refund cannot be made the sole relief in a petition under Article 226. In that case, there was no judicial decision invalidating the imposition or collection, but the assessment had been quashed by an administrative appellate authority. Founding his claim upon that administrative decision, the Petitioner brought his mandamus petition with the sole prayer that the Taxing Authority be directed to refund the amount illegally collected. The Court rejected this prayer on the ground inter alia,—

"We therefore hold that normally petitions solely praying for the refund of the State by a writ of mandamus are not to be entertained" (para 9, p 1742, ibid).

35. On the other hand, that the Court, in a proceeding for mandamus, has the jurisdiction to direct refund, as an ancillary relief, is clearly laid down by the Court in Bhailal's case AIR 1964 SC 1006 (1011), para 10 thus—

"we are clearly of opinion that the High Courts have power for the purpose of enforcement of fundamental rights and statutory rights to give consequential relief by ordering the payment of money realised by the Government without the authority of law".

36. In Baeker Gray's case, (1970) 1 SCWR 303 (305), refund has been ordered by the Supreme Court, as ancillary relief, in an appeal by special leave (under Article 136 of the Constitution) against an order of the Central Board of Excise and Customs.

37. Needless to say, the collection of customs duty on exports or imports is a restriction upon the fundamental right of a citizen guaranteed by Article 19 (1) (g), and such restriction, therefore, can only be justified under authority of a law, under clause (6) of Article 19. Where the imposition or collection is ultra vires, the fundamental right of the citizen under Article 19 (1) (g) is infringed. Mohammad Yasin v. Town Area Committee, (1952) SCR 572 = (AIR 1952 SC 115). Ganapati v. State of Ameer, (1957) 1 SCR 1095 = (AIR 1955 SC 188). The claim for refund, again is not the only relief claimed in the proceeding before us; hence, the contention of Mr. Kar, in this behalf must be rejected.

38. V Mr. Kar finally contended that though the Addl Collector had founded his order upon both items (8) and (37) of Section 167, the appellate authority, — the Board — had relied upon item (37) only so that the Respondent could not get any relief on the footing that the impugned order was made also under item (8). This is not factually true since the appellate authority dismissed the appeal in toto (p 141) and merely stated that the offence under Section 167 (37) was an offence 'independent' of Section 167 (8). That the Board, too, relied upon both items 8 and 37 of Section 167, is apparent from the following words in para 6 of the Board's order (p. 140) —

"In this regard, the Board observed that since the facts disclosed two separate offences, there was nothing to bar actions being taken under the provisions of both Sections 167 (8) and 167 (37) of the Sea Customs Act".

39. But, as we have just held, the personal penalty amounting to Rs. 35,000 could not be imposed under Section 167(37) at all, it must be held to be founded under S. 167 (8) and, therefore, must be quashed as being without jurisdiction, in the facts of the case before us.

40. In the result, this appeal is allowed in part and the order of the Court below is modified as follows:

41. There will be a writ in the nature of certiorari quashing only that part of the impugned order of the Additional Collector which imposed a personal penalty of Rupees 35,000 upon the Respondent and a writ in the nature of Mandamus directing the Appellants to refund to the Respondent the sum of Rs. 35,000/-, within a period of two months from this date. In view of the divided success, we make no order as to costs.

42. In view of the above decision the amount of Rs. 2,00,000 out of Rs. 2,35,000 which is lying deposited with the Registrar, Original Side, in pursuance of the Court's order at the time of interim injunction dated 31-3-1969 and 1-4-69 be now refunded to the appellants on their making a proper application in that behalf.

AJAY K. BASU, J.:— 43. I agree.
Order accordingly.

R. N. DUTT AND SARMA SARKAR, JJ.

(A) Criminal P. C. (1898). Section 548 — Right of accused to copies of any part of record of trial — Right available even during committal proceedings.

An accused person even during course of committal proceedings, can exercise right to obtain copies of order sheets, deposition of witnesses and all documents marked exhibits in the proceeding. Even apart from Section 548 an accused has an inherent right to copies of any part of the record of the trial. Rule 308 of the Criminal Rules and Orders framed by the High Court under Article 227 of the Constitution also entitles the parties to a criminal proceeding to copies, certified

(B) Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 548 — Right of accused to copies of any part of record of trial is controlled by order under Section 14 of Official Secrets Act (1923).

An order under Section 14 of Official Secrets Act excluding the public from hearing the trial controls the right of accused under Section 548 to get copies of any part of the record of the trial. (Para 4)

In respect of each individual copy prayed for the Magistrate has to consider and apply his mind to come to a finding whether the grant of the copy would affect his own order under Section 14. If there is conflict, then copies cannot be and should not be granted. (Para 13)

Even where the copies are not granted, there must be a reasonable opportunity given to the accused persons to prepare for the defence and particularly to contradict the witnesses with reference to previous statements under Section 145 of Evidence Act. The accused or their lawyers should have access to the public record of the Court and they may inspect the same and take short notes. (Para 14)

Balai Chandra Roy, for Petitioner; J. N. Bose (for No. 12) and Jagadish Krishna Banerjee (for No. 16), for Opposite Parties.

R. N. DUTT, J.:— An enquiry under Chapter XVIII of the Code of Criminal Procedure is pending against the opposite parties before a Presidency Magistrate under various sections of the Official Secrets Act. On an application on behalf of the prosecution under Section 14 of the Official Secrets Act the learned Magistrate made an order on April 28, 1969, excluding the public during the trial.

2. On November 19, 1969, opposite party No. 12 filed an application before the Magistrate for "copies of deposition of the witnesses" and opposite party No. 16 filed an application for "copies and for permission to inspect the records and take necessary notes". The learned Magistrate considered these applications and passed an order on November 22, 1969, allowing them under Section 548 of the Code "to take copies of depositions and other documents on payment of proper fees". The State has thereafter obtained this Rule against this order of the learned Magistrate.

3. Mr. Roy appearing on behalf of the State first contends that the commitment enquiry has just started and only a few witnesses have been examined or, in other words, no trial has yet commenced and no "judgment" has as yet been "passed" by the learned Magistrate and so, Section 548 of the Code is not attracted at this stage.

4. Section 548 of the Code reads as follows:

"If any person affected by a judgment or order passed by a Criminal Court desires to have a copy of the Judge's charge to the jury or of any order or deposition or other part of the record, he shall on applying for such copy, be furnished therewith."

Mr. Roy submits that Section 548 of the Code is attracted only after the trial is over and a "judgment" has been passed by the trial Court. We have quoted the Section and it will be seen that a person has been given the right to get copies only when he has been affected by a "judgment passed by a Criminal Court." There is no doubt that an accused may be affected by a judgment passed by a Criminal Court. But the words used are "passed by a Criminal Court" and not "passed or to be passed by a criminal court"; nor can it be said that the word "passed" here was intended to mean not only passed but also to be passed by a criminal court. If that was the intention of the legislature, the legislature would have made it clear. We cannot for the purpose of interpretation of a statute add words to the statute to find out its real meaning. On the face of it, therefore, it seems that Section 548 of the Code is attracted only after a trial is over and a judgment had been passed. But Section 548 of the Code speaks of not only judgment but "order passed by a criminal court". True, there is no judgment as yet in this case, but there is no doubt that during the course of the proceeding several "orders" have been passed by the learned Magistrate and it cannot be denied that an accused is affected by an order passed by a Magistrate in the course of the commitment proceeding. "Order" here does not mean the final order or the order which finally disposes of the case because that would be "judgment" within the meaning of Section 366 of the Code. Since Section 548 of the Code uses both the words "judgment or order", "order" must be interpreted to mean something different from the final order or judgment and since several orders have been passed by the learned Magistrate in the course of the proceeding before him and since these orders must have affected the accused persons, Section 548 of the Code would be attracted even during the course of this committal proceeding. Furthermore, an accused has the constitutional right to defend himself and to defend himself properly. It may just be necessary for his proper defence that he should get copies of the order-sheet, depositions of witnesses and all documents marked exhibits in the proceeding. Unless the accused gets these copies, which are all part of the record of the case, the accused may be prejudiced in his trial. Thus, even apart from Sec. 548 of the Code, an accused has an inherent right to obtain copies of the order-sheet, copies of the depositions and copies of documents marked exhibits or, in short, copies of any part of the record of the trial. Rule 308 of the Criminal Rules and Orders framed by the High Court under Article 227 of the Constitution also entitles the parties to a criminal proceeding to obtain copies, certified or uncertified, of any portion of the record of trial or enquiry. Mr. Roy ultimately concedes this but submits that in view of the learned Magistrate's order under Section 14 of the Official Secrets Act to the effect that the public shall be excluded during the hearing, the accused can no longer get the copies. Section 14 of the Act states that "If, in the course of proceedings before a Court against any person for an offence under this Act, or in the course of a trial under this Act, an application is made by the prosecution on the ground that the publication of any evidence to be given or of any statement to be made in the course of the proceedings would be prejudicial to the safety of the State, that all or any portion of the public shall be excluded during any part of the hearing, the Court may make an order to that effect." Here, the prosecution made an application that the publication of any evidence to be given or of any statement to be made in the course of the enquiry would be prejudicial to the safety of the State and the learned Magistrate accepted this contention and excluded the public during the enquiry. Mr. Roy contends that, if an accused is permitted to obtain copies of depositions or of documents marked exhibits in the case, the purpose of the exclusion of the public from the enquiry would be frustrated and the publication of the evidence to be given in the trial would be prejudicial to the safety of the State. The application of both opposite party No. 12 and opposite party No. 16 is vague inasmuch as it is not clear copy of the deposition of which witness is required or copy of which document is required. The order made by the learned Magistrate is also vague inasmuch as he only permits the accused "to take copies of the depositions and other documents on payment of proper fees". He does not specify the deposition of which witness or copy of which document. Since the enquiry is being held under Section 14 of the Official Secrets Act and since publication of any evidence that may be given in the course of the enquiry would be prejudicial to the safety of the State, which contention the learned Magistrate has accepted, the accused persons cannot be given the right to obtain copies of the depositions of all witnesses or copies of all documents marked as exhibits. Clearly enough, if such depositions or such documents contain matters publication of which would be prejudicial to the safety of the State, grant of copies of such depositions or documents may end in their publication. True, but for the order under Section 14 of the Official Secrets Act in the instant enquity the accused persons would have been entitled to get copies of order-sheet, deposition of all witnesses and all documents marked as exhibits. But the order made by the learned Magistrate under Section 14 of the Act controls this right of the accused; otherwise, the purpose of excluding the public from the enquiry for the safety of the State will be frustrated. We hold, therefore, that in view of the order made by the learned Magistrate under Section 14 of the Act the accused in the instant enquiry cannot get copies of the depositions or of documents publication of which would be prejudicial to the safety of the State. We do not hold that, merely because there is an order under Section 14 of the Act, the accused would not get copies of any deposition or of any document but we hold that the accused will not be entitled to get copies of depositions or documents publication of which would be prejudicial to the safety of the State. Both Mr. Bose and Mr. Banerjee have argued that in that case the accused would be prejudiced in their defence. So, even though the accused may not get copies of such depositions or documents publication of which would be prejudicial to the safety of the State, the accused should be given all facilities so that the accused may be properly defended. We find that the learned Magistrate had permitted the lawyers of the accused persons to inspect the record of the case. We hold that the lawyers of the accused persons have the right to inspect the record of the case, obviously after obtaining orders from the Magistrate and in presence of the Court officers or particular police officers as may be directed by the learned Magistrate. Mr. Banerjee submits that he was prevented from taking notes from the record. He will seek specific orders of the Magistrate in this respect but he can do no more than take pencil notes of dates or figures but no copies of what is contained in the record.

5. In the result, the Rule is made absolute. The order of the learned Magistrate is set aside but we direct that the learned Magistrate will permit the accused to obtain copies of the order-sheet, and of such depositions and documents marked exhibits or such other part of the record publication of which would not be, in his opinion, prejudicial to the safety of the State. The accused will not be entitled to get copies of other depositions, documents or other part of the record. We should make it clear that we have, in connection with this proceeding previously held that the accused persons are not entitled to get copies of statements (either) under S. 161 of the Code (or) under S. 173 (4) of the Code. The accused will not also get copies of such statements under Section 548 of the Code — such statements not being part of the record. The lawyers of the accused will have the right to make inspection of the record as and when necessary for their proper defence. The learned Magistrate will consider prayers for copies of specific matters or for permission for inspection and pass appropriate orders as and when necessary in the light of the directions and observations made above.

SARMA SARKAR, J.:— 6. I respectfully agree with the order passed by my Lord but I may be permitted to add a few words.

7. In a proceeding under Section 208 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (hereinafter referred to as the Code) on charges under Secs. 3, 9 and 10 of the Official Secrets Act, 1923, (hereafter referred to as the Act) the learned Magistrate has passed an order under Section 14 of the Act that “all or any portion of the public shall be excluded during any part of the hearing” on the ground that the publication of any evidence to be given or of any statement to be made in the course of the proceeding would be prejudicial to the safety of the State. This order is different from an order under proviso to S. 352 of the Code which empowers the Magistrate to pass an order “that the public generally, or any particular person, shall not have access to, or be or remain in, the room or building used by the Court”. When an order is passed under Section 352 of the Code, the exclusion of the public is from the room in the interest of the trial but, when an order is passed under Section 14 of the Act, the exclusion of the public is from the proceeding and from the hearing. Opposite Parties Nos. 12 and 16 filed applications for “copies of depositions of the witnesses” and also for “copies and for permission to inspect the records” and the learned Magistrate passed an order under Section 548 of the Code “to take copies of depositions and other documents on payment of proper fees.”

8. It was urged on behalf of the State that the purpose of Section 14 of the Act would be frustrated and safety of the State will suffer if the copies, as prayed for, are granted to the accused persons without any restriction. It was further urged that Section 548 of the Code has no application to the statements and documents collected by the police during investigation. The learned Advocates appearing on behalf of the opposite parties Nos. 12 and 16, on the other hand, contend that the defence would be seriously prejudiced in the preparation of the defence and in cross-examination of the witnesses if such copies are not supplied to them. They relied not only on Rule 308 of the Criminal Rules and Orders made by the High Court but also on the provisions of Sections 74 and 76 of the Indian Evidence Act. It is, therefore, necessary to consider the case in some details both from the standpoint of abstract legal right of the accused to get copies and also from the standpoint of convenience and necessity for proper defence. In coming to our conclusion, we have to consider separately the question of grant of copies with regard to the various items prayed for by the accused. I shall deal generally first with regard to the statements and documents referred to in Section 173 (4) of the Code and then I shall take up the question of granting copies from the records of the Court.

9. As regards the statements and documents referred to in Section 173 (4) of the Code, an extreme view was taken by a Judge of this Court sitting singly in the case of Supdt. and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, West Bengal v. Vimla Dassi, reported in AIR 1968 Cal 540, that even when cognizance was taken on the basis of a complaint under Section 190 of the Code in a case wherein no report under Section 173 of the Code was filed, the accused was entitled to the benefit of Sec. 173 (4) of the Code. This view was expressly overruled by an unreported Division Bench decision of this Court in Criminal Appeal No. 358/63 decided on May 7, 1969, and it was held that in a case like the present one where the complaint procedure is followed, the accused are not entitled to free copies under Section 173 (4) of the Code. But the question still remains whether the accused persons are entitled to copies outside the provisions of Sections 173 (4) and 548 of the Code. This matter was not directly raised nor decided in this case and it is not necessary to pronounce an opinion on this point. But in this connection I may refer to the provisos to Section 102 of the Code prior to the amendment in 1955 which run as follows:

"Provided that, when any witness is called for the prosecution in such enquiry or trial whose statement has been reduced into writing as aforesaid, the Court shall on the request of the accused, refer to such writing and direct that the accused be furnished with a copy thereof, in order that any part of such statement, if duly proved, may be used to contradict such witness in the manner provided by Section 145 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872

Provided, further that, if the Court is of opinion that any part of any such statement is not relevant to the subject-matter of the enquiry or trial or that its disclosure to the accused is not essential in the interests of justice and is inexpedient in the public interests, it shall record such opinion (but not the reasons therefor) and shall exclude such part from the copy of the statement furnished to the accused."

10. These provisions with some modifications have been incorporated as Section 173 (4) and (5) of the Code after the amendment of 1955. But since the amendment of 1955 there is no provision for getting such copy outside Section 173 (4) or Section 173 (5) of the Code. It may, therefore, be necessary to consider whether, even though a party to a proceeding may not be entitled to get such free copies as of right, a party to such proceeding will be entitled to copies or, at any rate, access to such police papers for the purpose of preparing defence and more particularly, to contradict witnesses with reference to the previous statements under the provisions of Section 145 of the Indian Evidence Act. On these points therefore, no final decision is made in this case and the order proposed does not cover this aspect of the case as the matter was not raised in the Court below and has not been disposed of by the committing Magistrate.

11. I now take up the question of grant of copies from the record of the Court. With regard to such documents there is provision in Section 548 of the Code for granting copies. It is not very necessary, so far as this case is concerned, to interpret the exact scope and effect of Section 548 of the Code. As I find, there is a specific provision in Rule 308 of the Criminal Rules and Orders framed by the High Court under the provisions of Article 227 of the Constitution. Rule 308 runs thus:

"Parties to a criminal proceeding are entitled to obtain copies, certified or uncertified, of any portion of the record of trial or enquiry including such police papers as may be made use of as evidence at the trial or enquiry and final reports submitted by police under Section 173 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Note — Police reports on which proceedings are instituted under Chapters VIII, X, XI and XII form a portion of the record of trial or enquiry."

Copies are granted in respect of these documents under Rule 310 of the Criminal Rules and Orders. It will be seen that there is some difference in the provisions of Section 548 of the Code and Rule 308 of the Criminal Rules and Orders. Section 548 of the Code is wider and may apply not only to the parties but also to outsiders, but Rule 308 of the Criminal Rules and Orders is confined to the parties in a criminal proceeding. It will be seen that, so far as Rule 308 is concerned, the question whether the parties are affected or not by a particular order is not made a condition precedent to the grant of copies. Parties to a criminal proceeding, therefore, are entitled to copies of the documents mentioned in Rule 308 as a matter of right and as a matter of course subject to any extraneous considerations which may arise apart from Rule 308 of the Criminal Rules and Orders. In my view the opposite parties are entitled to copies covered by Rule 308 as a matter of right subject to any extraneous considerations.

12. The order of the learned Magistrate granting copies of documents from public record may be supported, if not under Section 548 of the Code, at least under Rule 308 of the Criminal Rules and Orders and normally, the opposite parties will be entitled to those copies as a matter of right subject to other considerations, if any.

13. In the present case, as already observed, an order has already been passed under Section 14 of the Act which not only excludes the public from the Court room but also excludes the public from the proceeding or hearing in the Court room. If that be so, it has to be considered whether the granting of such copies will be in conflict with the order under Section 14 of the Act. The learned Magistrate passed a general and vague order granting copies as a matter of course in respect of documents as may be found in his order. But, in my view, such general order of granting or refusing will not be proper in the instant case. The general rule will be that the opposite parties are entitled to such copies but in respect of each individual copy prayed for, the Magistrate has to consider and apply his mind to come to a finding whether the grant of the copy would affect his own order under Section 14 of the Act. If there is no conflict, then the copies may be granted; but, if there is conflict, then the copies cannot be and should not be granted.

14. Even where the copies are not granted, there must be a reasonable opportunity given to the accused persons to prepare for the defence and particularly, to contradict the witnesses with reference to the previous statements under Section 145 of the Evidence Act. For this purpose the opposite parties or their lawyers should have access to the public record of the Court and they may inspect the same and take short notes as restricted by my Lord in his Order.

15. Subject to the reservations and observations made above, I respectfully agree with the proposed order.

Order accordingly.

AIR 1970 CALCUTTA 539 (V 57 C 107)
P. N. MOOKERJEE AND AMIYA KUMAR MOOKERJI, JJ.

Gowardhandas Rathi, Appellant v. Corporation of Calcutta and another. Respondents.

A. F. O. D. No. 160 of 1964, D/- 25-6-1970.

(A) Municipalities — Calcutta Municipal Act (33 of 1951), Section 586(1), (4) — Notice — Suit for declaration and permanent injunction against Corporation not to enforce invalid order for demolition of structures — Permanent injunction though claimed as additional relief suit held, in essence one for permanent injunction — Absence of notice not fatal to suit — Specific Relief Act (1877), Section 54.

Where in a suit against the Corporation for declaration and injunction the relief for permanent injunction restraining the Commissioner from giving effect to his invalid order for demolition of structure is claimed only as an additional relief, the suit is, nevertheless, a suit for permanent injunction within the meaning of Section 54 of the Specific Relief Act. Consequently, such suit would be protected under Section 586(4) and notice under Section 586(1) would not be necessary for the institution of the suit. In such suit, the relief for declaration has to be regarded as ancillary to the relief of perpetual or permanent injunction.

Under Section 54 of the Specific Relief Act every suit for perpetual injunction must involve a declaration or determination as to the existence of a right in the plaintiff and its threatened violation or the threatened commission of an act to injure that right of the plaintiff, or in other words, such a declaration would necessarily be implied in such suit. Consequently, in law, such a declaration would not alter the character of the suit as a suit for permanent injunction.

(B) Civil P. C. (1908), Sections 80, 2(17) (h) — Notice under Section 80 — Commissioner of Corporation of Calcutta is not government servant — Notice to him is not necessary.

As the State Government do not exercise any control over the discharge of duties by the Commissioner of Corporation of Calcutta as such Commissioner, nor he is in the pay of the Government, the Commissioner cannot be said to be a government servant in spite of the control the government has over his appointment and his removal and his functions outside the office of the Commissioner, and hence, no notice to him under Section 80 is necessary. K. C. Deo Bhanj v. Raghunath Misra 19 Satyendra Prosad Sen, for Appellant; Dwijendra Narain Ghose, for Respondents.

P. N. MOOKERJEE, J.:— This appeal is by the plaintiff. It is directed against a decree of the learned trial Judge, dismissing the plaintiff's suit on a preliminary issue. That issue was in these terms:

"Where notices under Section 586 of the Calcutta Municipal Act and under Section 80 Civil Procedure Code necessary before filing this suit? If so, should the suit fail for want of the said notice?"

This issue was answered by the learned trial Judge in the affirmative in both its parts, that is, against the plaintiff and, as a result thereof, the plaintiff's suit was dismissed.

2. Another issue was also discussed and decided by the learned trial Judge, namely, the issue of limitation, which was in the following terms:

"Is the suit barred by limitation?"

The issue, however, was found in favour of the plaintiff but, as, on the other issue, the suit had to be dismissed according to the learned trial Judge, his ultimate decree was a decree of dismissal. Against this decree, the present appeal has been filed by the plaintiff.

3. The point before us arises in the following manner:

4. The instant suit was a suit, in substance, for a permanent injunction against the defendants, the Corporation of Calcutta and Sri S. B. Roy, Commissioner, Calcutta Corporation, to restrain them, "their men, officers and agents from giving effect to an illegal order, dated May 12, 1960, and/or in any way interfering with the plaintiff's right of property in respect of the disputed structures, namely, the C. I. sheds at Premises No. 33/2B, Wellesley Street, now known as No. 33/2B, Rafi Ahmed Kidwai Road, Calcutta.

5. The order, referred to above, namely, the order, dated May 12, 1960, was an order for demolition of the disputed structures. That order was challenged in the plaint as illegal, invalid and an abuse of the statutory powers, vested in the Commissioner, and, as such, unenforceable in law.

6. In the suit, there was a prayer for a declaration to the above effect, which was prayer No. 1 in the plaint, the prayer for permanent injunction, as noted above, being prayer No. 2.

7. In the suit, the two objections, which had been considered by the learned trial Judge, namely, of a preliminary nature, related to the question of service of notice under Section 586 of the Calcutta Municipal Act and Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure and the question of limitation.

8. The suit was dismissed by the learned trial Judge on the ground of want of the above notices, even though the question of limitation was decided by him in favour of the plaintiff. The learned trial Judge did not go into the merits of the suit but dismissed it on the above preliminary ground. The propriety of the said decision has been challenged before us on behalf of the appellant and Mr. Sen, arguing this appeal on behalf of his client, the appellant, has contended before us that the learned trial Judge was wrong on the question of both the above notices and his submission was that neither of the above two notices was necessary or a pre-requisite in law in the instant case.

9. It is an admitted fact that none of the above notices was served by the plaintiff. If, therefore, the learned trial Judge's view that the said two notices were necessary for maintaining the present suit or if even one of them be necessary for the said purpose, his decree of dismissal would have to be affirmed. If, however, it be held that neither of the above two notices was necessary in the instant case, the learned trial Judge's decree of dismissal would have to be set aside, his finding on the other preliminary question of limitation being, as already stated, in favour of the plaintiff, and the case will have to be sent back for further consideration in accordance with law.

10. We have, therefore, to address ourselves to the alleged requirement of the above notices or either of them in the instant case.

11. So far as Section 586 of the Calcutta Municipal Act is concerned, it is clear that the said Section would prima facie apply as the Corporation as also the Commissioner would come within the scope or purview of the same, so far as sub-section (1) of the said Section is concerned. Mr. Sen, however, relies for his protection on sub-section (4) of the said Section. If the instant suit is one, contemplated under the said sub-section, it would be outside the mischief of the earlier provisions. The question, therefore, is whether the instant suit can be held to be a suit, instituted under Section 54 of the Specific Relief Act (1877), which was in force at the date of institution of this suit. That Section, which corresponds to S. 38 of the new Specific Relief Act, to quote its relevant part, reads as follows:

"54. Perpetual injunctions when granted.—Subject to the other provisions, contained in, or, referred to by, this Chapter, a perpetual injunction may be granted to prevent the breach of an obligation, existing in favour of the applicant, whether expressly or by implication."

12. The above section is preceded by Section 53 of the old Act, corresponding to Section 37 of the new Act, which, in its relevant part, is in these terms:

A perpetual injunction can only be granted by the decree made at the hearing and upon the merits of the suit; the defendant is thereby perpetually enjoined from the assertion of a right, or from the commission of an act, which would be contrary to the rights of the plaintiff."

13. Reading the two sections together, it is clear that a suit for perpetual injunction, which is contemplated under the above two statutory provisions, or, more accurately, by the first-quoted provision, is a suit for the said relief, to be obtainable in the decree, made at the hearing and upon the merits of the suit. The merits of the suit would, obviously, involve determination of the plaintiff's alleged right or alleged commission of act by the defendant, which would be contrary to or violative of the rights of the plaintiff.

14. Clearly, also, for the grant of a perpetual or permanent injunction, the above requisites, namely, the existence of a right in the plaintiff and its threatened violation or the threatened commission of an act to injure the plaintiff's right would have to be found.

15. Every suit, therefore, for a perpetual injunction must involve a determination or a declaration to the above effect, or, in other words, such a declaration would be necessarily involved or implied in the case of every decree for perpetual injunction.

16. In the instant case, the invasion of the plaintiff's right or the commission of the act, contemplated above, would, presumably be the passing of the impugned order, which is challenged in the plaint as invalid, illegal and mala fide, and a finding, determination or declaration to that effect would, whether expressly or impliedly, be necessary for the grant of perpetual injunction to the plaintiff. Indeed, in the instant case, there is an express prayer for such a declaration. That however, in our opinion, would not alter the substantive position. That prayer may well be regarded as ancillary to the main relief of perpetual or permanent injunction, — if not unnecessary as a prayer in the prayer portion of the plaint. The necessary allegation in the body of the plaint to enable the Court to come to a determination of the above basic question would be enough for the purpose of supporting the ultimate decree of perpetual injunction. In law, a declaration by implication or in express terms would not make any difference in substance and, regarded from that point of view, it will not affect or alter the nature of the suit and, accordingly, the instant suit may well be regarded, as, in substance, it is, as a suit for perpetual or permanent injunction. In this view, we would hold that the instant suit would satisfy the test of a suit, instituted under Section 54 of the old Specific Relief Act, corresponding to Section 38 of the new Act. In that view, the instant case would be covered by the protective provision of sub-section (4) of Section 586 of the Calcutta Municipal Act and, accordingly, would be outside the mischief of sub-section (1) of the said section. The absence or want of a notice under the said statutory provision cannot, therefore, be fatal to the instant suit and the learned trial Judge's view to the contrary is not correct and must be set aside.

17. So far as the question under Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure is concerned, it is clear that, for the application of that section and the requirement of notice under the same, it is necessary that the defendant must be a Public Officer. So far as the present case is concerned, this defence is limited to the case of defendant No. 2, as, obviously, the Corporation of Calcutta would not fulfil the description or definition of a Public Officer. As regards the said defendant No. 2, however, the matter, when judged under the relative statutory provision in Section 2 (17) of the Code of Civil Procedure, which defines a "public officer" for purposes of the Code, the same can be attracted, if at all, under clause (h) of the said section. That clause reads as follows:

"(h) every officer in the service or pay of the Government, or remunerated by fees or commission for the performance of any public duty."

The latter part of this clause would not, obviously, apply in the instant case as the Commissioner of the Corporation of Calcutta is not remunerated by fees or commissions. The question then shortens itself to this: "Is he an officer in the service or pay of the Government?" For this purpose, it is necessary to consider the effect and implication of some of the provisions of the Calcutta Municipal Act. The Commissioner under the said statute, is appointed by the State Government on the recommendation of the State Public Service Commission and upon such terms and conditions as the State Government may determine and he shall not be a member of the Corporation. This is provided in Section 19 (1) of the said Act, sub-section (3) of the said section provides that "Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (2) [which fixes the normal tenure of the Commissioner to a term of five years subject to renewal in appropriate cases to another term of the same period], the State Government may, at any time, remove the Commissioner from office and shall do so if, at a special meeting of the Corporation, called for purpose, resolution for the removal of the Commissioner, in favour of which more than one-half of the total number of members of the Corporation give their votes, is carried." Power of appointment and removal therefore, so far as the Commissioner is concerned, undoubtedly, rests with the State Government. Sub-section (4) of the above section, again, provides that "The Commissioner shall not undertake any work unconnected with his office without the sanction of the State Government and of the Corporation."

18. The above statutory provisions indicate some kind of the State's control over the Commissioner but this is limited to his appointment, to the terms and conditions of the same, to his removal and to his functions outside the office of the Commissioner. They do not, in any manner, control or affect the discharge of his duties under his appointment as Commissioner and leaves him free in the matter and free from any interference or control of the State Government. In this state of things, it is difficult to maintain that the Commissioner of the Corporation is in the service of the State.

19. Indeed, this aspect would be clear, if we bear in mind the distinction between "serving under the Government" and "in the service of the Government", as explained by the Supreme Court in the case, reported in Raja Bahadur K. C. Doo Bhanj v. Raghunath Misra, (1959) 2 SCA 163 = (AIR 1951 SC 599), where, for being in the service of the Government, two essentials of the relationship of the master and servant were held to be necessary. The servant must be under the duty of rendering personal service to the master or to others in his behalf and the master must have a right to control the servant's work, either personally or by another servant or agent. Neither of these two elements would be present in the instant case — in any event, the element of control, envisaged therein, would not be present — the Commissioner qua Commissioner cannot be held to be in the service of the Government. The Commissioner also cannot be said to be in the pay of the Government because as provided in Section 20 of the Calcutta Municipal Act, his salary is to be paid out of the Municipal Fund, which under Section 115 of the said Act, is made up of monies realised or realisable under the said Act (other than the fines levied by Magistrates) and all monies otherwise received by the Corporation. This fund is certainly not any part of the Government or State Exchequer and cannot be said to be belonging to the State.

20. In the premises, the Commissioner would not satisfy either of the requisite tests of a Public Officer under the relevant Cl (b) or Section 2 (17) of the Code of Civil Procedure, namely, of being in the service of the Government or in its pay.

21. Mr Ghose, appearing for the Corporation of Calcutta, also drew our attention to Section 23 of the Calcutta Municipal Act for his contention that in the instant case, the Commissioner, Sri S. B. Roy, was in the service of the Government when he was appointed the Commissioner, or, in other words, that his services, as Government Officer, as aforesaid, were lent to the Corporation for the post of the Commissioner and that, accordingly he continued to be in the service of the Government. The basic assumption for this submission would be that Sri S. B. Roy was in the service of the Government at the time of his appointment as Commissioner and that his services under the Government were lent to the Corporation for filling up the post of the Commissioner. In support of that assumption, however, there are no materials on the present record and no such contention appears to have been raised in the court below, either in the pleading or in the argument there. In the circumstances, we are unable to proceed upon this assumption and accordingly, without expressing any opinion on the merits of the above contention, we would reject this submission of Mr Ghose for upholding the learned trial Judge's order in the instant case.

22. The above view would be in consonance with the opinion, expressed in Messrs Metro General Traders v Commr., The Corporation of Calcutta 60 Cal WN 554 at pp 587-588 = (AIR 1965 Cal 412 at pp. 413-444), differing or disagreeing, though tentatively at that stage, with the decision of this Court, reported in Shivadhar Sukla v. Corporation of Calcutta, (1960) 61 Cal WN 60, and the earlier unreported decision, referred to therein. The decision of the Supreme Court however, which has been referred above, appears sufficiently to indicate that the view expressed on the point in the above two decisions, would not be supportable. We have therefore, no hesitation in expressing our respectful disagreement with the same and taking the view, we have indicated above.

23. In the premises, we will allow this appeal set aside the impugned decree of dismissal of the learned trial Judge and send back the case to him for further consideration in accordance with law and in the light of the observations, made in this judgment.

24. There will be no order for costs in this appeal. Let the records go down as quickly as possible.

AMITYA KUMAR MOOKERJI, J.: 25. I agree,

Appeal allowed.

SABYASACHI MUKHARJI, JJ.

Matter No 122 of 1969, D/- 23-5-1969.

Estate Duty Act (1953), Section 10 — Gift — Bona fide possession and its retention by donee — Donor's stay at premises for few days prior to his death — No benefit given to donor by contract or otherwise — Section not attracted.

Where the donee had assumed bona fide possession of the house property immediately after the gift, and also retained the possession and enjoyment throughout, without any benefit being conferred upon the donor by a contract or otherwise the mere fact that the donor had stayed at the premises for a few days prior to his death, would not prevent the retention of possession and enjoyment of the property by the donee to the exclusion of the donor as contemplated by Section 10 and that section would not be attracted. SANKAR PRASAD MITRA, J.: — This is a reference under Section 61 (1) of the Estate Duty Act 1953. On the 1st May, 1955, one Probodh Chandra Roy executed a Deed of

HN/HN/DS16/70/HGP/B

Trust in which he was referred to as a settlor. There were two trustees under this Deed viz., Usharanjan Ghosh and Sunil Roy, the only son of the settlor. The subject-matter of the trust was premises No. 38, Southern Avenue, Calcutta, where the settlor used to reside. The Trustees were directed to pay the rates and taxes and out of the balance of the income of the property they were to pay in any proportion whatsoever to Sm. Jyotirmoyee Ray, the settlor's wife, Sunil Roy, the settlor's son, Uma Mitra, the settlor's daughter, any children of Sunil Roy and any children of Uma Mitra by her existing marriage. None of these beneficiaries had any power of anticipation. At the end of a period of ten years, the trustees were to transfer the property to Sunil Roy or to any major child of Sunil Roy or Uma Mitra or to Uma Mitra's children born of her then existing marriage. In the absence of any of the beneficiaries aforementioned the property was to go to the Sadharan Brahma Samaj. On the 14th August, 1955, the settlor executed another document in respect of a property at Regent Park with which we are not concerned in this reference. The Deed of the 14th August, 1955, is, however, relevant to us to this extent that in this Deed executed a few months after the first Deed the settlor states that he was residing not at premises no. 38, Southern Avenue in Calcutta, but at premises no. 78/1, Sardar Sankar Road, in Calcutta.

2. Even before that only two days after the execution of the first Deed on the 1st of May, 1955, the settlor on the 3rd May, 1955, wrote to the Post-master, Calcutta-19, to redirect his letters to premises no. 78/1, Sardar Sankar Road. Then on the 26th August, 1955, the settlor wrote to the Insurance Company about his change of address. In September, 1955, he wrote to the State Bank of India intimating the change of address. In the same month he asked the Calcutta Electric Supply Corporation Ltd. to refund his security deposit with respect to premises no. 38, Southern Avenue, Calcutta, and to terminate his contract with the said Corporation in view of the change of ownership.

3. The trustees under the Deed of the 1st May, 1955, applied on the 6th September, 1955, to the Municipal Corporation for mutation of ownership. The trustees were also assessed to income-tax on income from premises no. 38, Southern Avenue.

4. A little over four years later, however, on the 8th May, 1959 the settlor executed a document in which he stated that the indenture dated May 1, 1955 created what would appear to be a deed of trust and that he executed the deed "himself knowing and also the persons in whose favour the deed was so executed knowing it to be an out and out benami transaction with the view of avoiding payment of estate duty." He stated in this document of the 8th May, 1959, that he never divested himself of his proprietary interest and actual physical possession and that he had at all times been and was still living in premises No. 38, Southern Avenue in his own right as the exclusive owner thereof with his wife, daughter and son-in-law. He stated that he cancelled and determined the transfer by way of benami i. e., the trust created by the indenture dated the 1st May, 1955. It was stated further that he had to execute the document of the 8th May, 1959, because the relationship between Sunil Roy and Uma Mitra was not quite happy. The settlor also on the same day viz., the 8th May, 1959, executed a Will under which he bequeathed the property at 38, Southern Avenue to Sunil Roy subject only to the condition that his wife should have the right of residence exclusively in a portion of the said premises. In this Will he also declared that Sunil Roy would have no claim whatsoever to the property no. 10, Regent Park gifted to his daughter. He appointed his son Sunil Roy and his wife Jyotirmoyee Roy as executor and executrix. In the Will the son is stated to be residing at premises no. 38, Southern Avenue, Calcutta. None of these documents of the 8th May, 1959, has been registered. The will has also not been probated.

5. At the hearing before us learned counsel for the Revenue placed considerable reliance on these two documents of the 8th May, 1959, in support of his contention that the property viz., premises no. 38, Southern Avenue, Calcutta, cannot escape the levy of estate duty. These documents may have created complications for the assessee at the initial stages of this case before the tax authorities but, in view of the findings they have arrived at, this Court, dealing with a reference under Section 64 (1) of the Estate Duty Act, 1953, cannot be invited to attach any importance to them. In paragraph 11 at page 43 of his order the Appellate Controller of Estate Duty, Eastern Zone, Calcutta, has stated:—"In my opinion the document dated 8th May, 1959, is only an evidence of the anger displayed by the father as a result of the various family quarrels which culminated in the filing of a complaint by his son Sunil Roy on 4th July, 1958, against the husband of his sister i. e. the son-in-law of the deceased. It is not necessary to recapitulate the entire course of the history of the litigation between the brother and the sister which has taken them to the Alipur Court and the Appellate Court to the District Judge and later on to the Calcutta High Court also. The position as it appears to me is that in his anger the father attempted to execute a document seeking a declaration of the cancellation of the trust. In my opinion this document is of no legal validity and has not served the purpose of cancellation of the trust which in any case was not in his power once he created an irrevocable trust and handed over the property to the trustees." We have gone through the order of the Appellate Tribunal dated the 25th May, 1968. The Tribunal has not in this order disturbed the findings of the Appellate Controller of Estate Duty so far as this aspect of the case is concerned. On the contrary at page 54 in paragraph 17 the Tribunal says:—"Before closing, we may clear up one aspect. The Departmental Representative appeared to suggest that the deceased was throughout in the premises right from 1-5-1955. The Appellate Controller has accepted the accountable person's case that the deceased soon after executing the document moved out of the premises and we do not find any reason to differ from him as there are no materials to show that the Appellate Controller did not properly come to the said conclusion. Our finding on this aspect is that the deceased moved out of this premises soon after the execution of the document; but subsequently came into it, at any rate, a few days before his death."

6. These observations of the Appellate Controller and the Tribunal have finally set at rest the controversy that was sought to be raised before us on the basis of the two documents of the 8th May, 1959.

7. In the course of the estate duty proceedings, however, the Assistant Controller of Estate Duty held that the property gifted to the son, was enjoyed by the deceased right up to the date of his death inasmuch as he seemed to have lived and died in that place. The Assistant Controller was of opinion that the property had passed under Section 10 of the Estate Duty Act, 1953.

8. The Appellate Controller's verdict was in favour of the applicant. The Tribunal, however, came to the following findings:—

(1) It is not proper to proceed on the assumption that the several provisions in the Estate Duty Act dealt with mutually exclusive situations;

(2) the Appellate Controller is not correct in proceeding on the assumption that S. 10 is excluded from the present case merely because there was a document creating a trust settlement;

(3) Section 10 covers the situation of a gift through the medium of trust or settlement;

(4) the Appellate Controller's inference was that the trustees assumed possession of the property. The only aspect that remained for investigation, therefore, was whether the deceased was entirely excluded from the enjoyment of the property by the trustees;

(5) On the facts of this case, the deceased remained in the premises admittedly for a few days after the document of the 1st May, 1955, and he died in the premises. During the period of his lifetime he was thus not really excluded from the possession and enjoyment of the premises. The provisions of Section 10 are, therefore, attracted to this case; and of the document of the 1st May, 1955 but subsequently came into it a few days before his death.

9. The Tribunal has confirmed the assessment based on the application of Section 10. And the following question of law has been referred to this Court:—

"Whether, on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the provisions of Section 10 were attracted so as to justify the inclusion of the value of 38, Southern Avenue in the assessment."

10. Now, Section 10 of the Estate Duty Act, 1953, as it stood at the material time was, inter alia, as follows:—

"Property taken under any gift, whenever made, shall be deemed to pass on the donor's death to the extent that bona fide possession and enjoyment of it was not immediately assumed by the donee and thenceforward retained to the entire exclusion of the donor or of any benefit to him by contract or otherwise .....

11. The Supreme Court in George D. Costa v. Controller of Estate Duty, Mysore AIR 1967 SC 849 = 63 ITR 497, has construed these provisions. Their Lordships are of the view that the crux of Section 10 lies in two parts: (1) The donee must bona fide have assumed possession and enjoyment of the property, which is the subject-matter of the gift to the exclusion of the donor, immediately upon the gift, and (2) the donee must have retained such possession and enjoyment of the property to the entire exclusion of the donor or of any benefit to him by contract or otherwise. According to their Lordships, as a matter of construction both these conditions are cumulative and unless each of these conditions is satisfied, the property would be liable to estate duty under Section 10 of the Act. The Supreme Court has said further that the second part of the section has two limbs: The deceased must be entirely excluded (i) from the property and (ii) from any benefit by contract or otherwise. In the context of the Section the word 'otherwise' should, in the opinion of their Lordships, be construed ejusdem generis and it must be interpreted to mean some kind of legal obligation or some transactions enforceable at law or in equity, which, though not in the form of a contract, may confer a benefit on the donor. Their Lordships held that as a matter of construction the words 'by contract or otherwise' in the second limb of the Section will not control the words "to the entire exclusion of the donor" in the first limb. The first limb of the section may be infringed if the donor occupies or enjoys property or income even though he has no right to do so which he could legally enforce against the donee; in other words, in order to attract the Section it is not necessary that the possession of the donor of the gift must be referable to some contractual or other arrangement enforceable in law or in equity; even if the donor is content to rely upon the mere filial affection of the donee with a view to enable him to continue to reside in the house, it cannot be said that he was "entirely excluded from possession and enjoyment" within the meaning of the first limb of the Section, and therefore, the property would be deemed to have passed on the death of the donor and will be subject to levy of estate duty.

12. Learned Counsel for the department submitted to us that this was a fit case for applying the first part of Section 10. We cannot uphold this contention in the face of the overwhelming evidence on record which we have already discussed. In this case the donee had assumed possession of the property immediately after the gift, the donee had also retained possession and enjoyment throughout. No benefit had been conferred on the donor by contract or otherwise, as explained by the Supreme Court in the aforesaid decision. After possession and enjoyment had been bona fide assumed by the donee, and retained by him, mere presence or stay of the donor for a few days prior to his death, on the facts and circumstances of this case, without any benefit being given to the donor by contract or otherwise, would not prevent retention of the possession and enjoyment of the property by the donor (sic) to the exclusion of the donee (sic) as contemplated by the Section. In these premises, we are unable to agree with the Tribunal's view and our answer to the question in this reference is in the negative. The Controller will pay to the applicant the costs of this reference.

SABYASACHI MUKHARJI, J.:— 13. I agree.

Reference answered negatively.

AIR 1970 CALCUTTA 545 (V 57 C 109)

D. BASU AND A. K. BASU, JJ.

The Union of India and others, Appellants v. Sashi Bhushan Biswas, Respondent.

A. F. O. O. No. 546 of 1969, D/- 12-12-1969.

(A) Railway Establishment Code, Vol. I, Rule 1731 (ii) (a) — Appeal against order of punishment to General Manager — Complaint about procedure followed — Appellate order not dealing with question whether procedure under this Rule was followed or such non-compliance resulted in failure of justice — Appellate order is invalid. (Para 1) of giving effect to removal order — Date filled in by other officer — Propriety.

(B) Railway Establishment Code, Vol. I, Rule 1731 — Order removing employee from service — Punishing authority not filling date

Where the punishing authority passed an order removing employee from service and the date of giving effect to the removal order was however not filled up by him but by somebody who had no authority to punish the employee, the removal order suffered from serious infirmity. It was however held that the defect was not such as to render the punishment order without jurisdiction as the punishing authority wanted to give immediate effect to his order but since he being superior officer could not hand over the order and so handed it down to the immediate superior of the employee who was to fill up the gaps recording the date after delivering the order. (Para 1)

(C) Railway Establishment Code, Vol. I Rule 1713 — Disciplinary authority — Duty of.

Rule 1713 is mandatory. It goes beyond the requirements of Article 311 (2) of the Constitution and requires the punishing authority to apply his mind to the materials on the record over again even where he may agree with the findings of the Inquiry Officer. Where the punishing authority does not examine the findings of the Inquiry Officer upon which the employee was found guilty and does not record his own findings separately on the charges, his order gets vitiated for non-compliance with R. 1713. (Para 1)

(D) Railway Establishment Code, Vol. I, Rule 1713 (2) — Right of delinquent employee to get assistance of defence helper is statutory — Examination of defence-helper as prosecution witness — No substitute given neither employee made aware that he can nominate another person — Punishment order is invalid for non-compliance with R. 1713(2). (Para 1)

S. K. Roy Choudhury and Anil Chandra Sen, for Appellants; Noni Coomar Chakravarti and Madhusudan Banerjee, for Respondent.

D. BASU, J.:— The Union of India has preferred this appeal against an order passed by A. K. Sinha, J., dated the 12th of March, 1969 by which the Rule obtained by the respondent Dr. S. B. Biswas was made absolute and the impugned order of removal which is to be found at page 51 of the Paper-Book was struck down as invalid. Various grounds were taken by the petitioner-respondents but the Court only founded its judgment on two points: firstly, that the order of punishment was defective inasmuch as the material portion of the date, namely, the date from which the order was taken effect was kept blank by the punishing authority and it was subsequently filled in by a clerk at the office of the D. M. O. who delivered the punishment order to the respondent; secondly, that the appellate order which is at page 53, passed by the General Manager, did not comply with the requirements of Rule 1731 of the Railway Establishment Code, Vol. I which lays down the mode in which the appellate function was to be exercised. The respondent has also filed a cross-objection before us relying upon the grounds which were kept open by the learned judge as unnecessary because he thought that the other two findings were sufficient to dispose of the Rule. We have, therefore, to go through the points urged by the respondent in his petition.

1. So far as the appellate order is concerned, it is quite evident that the requirements of Rule 1731 which have been explained by this Court on numerous occasions previously, have not been complied with by the appellate authority. Even if his orders were read as beneficial to the administration as possible, it did not deal with the requirements of Clause (a) of sub-rule (ii) of Rule 1731, namely, whether the procedure prescribed in this rule has been complied with or if such non-compliance has resulted in any violation of the Constitution or a failure of justice. In his memorandum of appeal to the General Manager, the respondent complained about the procedure but the General Manager did not specifically give his decision on this complaint. The finding of the Court below on this point must therefore stand.

Coming now to the original order of punishment, though we are in agreement with the views taken by the trial court that the order of removal suffers from serious infirmity inasmuch as the date of giving effect to the removal order was not filled up by the punishing authority but by somebody else who had no authority to punish the respondents and though we also agree that such a practice should not be encouraged, we are of the opinion that in the instant case, the defect was not such as to go to the root of the jurisdiction to make the punishment order invalid. From a reading of the entire text of the order it was evident that the punishing authority wanted to give immediate effect to his order but since the order could not be handed over by the punishing authority who was a superior officer, he handed it down to the immediate superior to the petitioner, namely, the D. M. O. who was to fill up the gaps recording the date after delivering the punishment order. In our opinion, this practice should be stopped because, if this is allowed to continue, it is the Railway administration itself which may have to suffer in other cases, if any clerical or other officer fills up the gap and makes any mistake in doing this small job. In the facts of the instant case, as we have already stated, we are not satisfied that the defect goes to render the punishment order without jurisdiction. But even if our finding on this point is, contrary to that of the trial Court, the punishment order cannot be sustained because of other grounds which have been urged before us.

2. Mr. Chakravarti on behalf of the respondents has drawn our attention to Rule 1713 of the Railway Establishment Code which runs as follows: "The Disciplinary Authority shall, if it is not the Inquiring Authority, consider the record of the Inquiry and record of its findings on each charge." The 'record of the inquiry' is explained in sub-rule 5 of Rule 1712. Mr. Chakravarti is right in contending that both in the punishment order at page 51 of the paper-book as well as in the show cause notice at page 41 of the paper-book, the punishing authority has not examined the contents of the record and the findings of the Inquiry Officer upon which the respondents were found guilty and did not record his own findings separately on the charges, which were three in number. Reading the relevant provisions of the Railway Establishment Code it is quite evident that these rules in the Railway Code palpably go beyond the requirements of Article 311 (2) of the Constitution and require the punishing authority to apply his mind to the materials on the record over again even where he may agree with the findings of the Inquiry Officer. But as Rule 1713 stands, it is a mandatory statutory provision and cannot be ignored by us. We must hold that the orders at annexures H and I of the Paper-book are vitiated for a non-compliance with Rule 1713.

3. It was next urged by Mr. Chakravarti that the respondent was denied the assistance of a defence helper by reason of the administration having chosen to put the defence helper nominated by the respondent to the role of a witness on behalf of the prosecution. It was contended by Mr. Roy Choudhury that there was no prejudice inasmuch as the same defence helper continued to assist the respondent even subsequent to the date when he was examined as a witness namely, on 15-9-63. But on this point, apart from any prejudice, we have first to see whether there was any violation of sub-rule (2) of Rule 1713 which gives the provision as to a defence helper: "The accused Railway servant may present his case with the assistance of any other Railway servant employed on the same Railway (including a Railway servant on leave preparatory to retirement) on which he is working .....". It may be mentioned in this context that in the rule as it originally stood, the right of the delinquent to nominate the defence helper was subject to the approval of the authority, but by a subsequent amendment the condition of approval has been eliminated. It has also been held in several decisions of this Court that though the rule is in a permissive form, it gives a statutory right to the delinquent to get the assistance of a co-employer of his own choice. It cannot be overlooked that in a disciplinary proceeding the delinquent is denied legal advice. To provide a proper defence to the delinquent he is given the help of another co-employee who may be better enlightened and more efficient than the delinquent himself to conduct his own case. The Courts are, accordingly, to see that this vestige of a fair hearing is not interfered with by the administration. There is no procedure prescribed in the Code itself to show that the defence helper, remaining in his status as such, can be examined as a prosecution witness by the Railway. If the Railway sought to do so they might have given a notice to the accused to that effect. What happened in this case is that the choice of the prosecution to examine him was formed during the hearing when some other witness made some reference to the defence helper's knowledge about the affair. The question is raised by Mr. Roy Choudhury that since this was done pending hearing, whether it was for the Respondent to offer to the Railway a choice to nominate another person as the defence helper or for the delinquent to ask of that, having regard to the provision of sub-rule (2) of the Rule 1712 as it has been interpreted in various decisions of this Court, it must be held that it was for the Railway administration to give notice to the delinquent that his defence helper was going to be taken away for examining him as a witness and that if he likes he can get the opportunity to appoint another. It has been rightly pointed out by Mr. Chakravarti that in the counter-affidavit (para 12) at page 59 of the paper-book it was stated that after the said defence helper was examined as a witness it was the petitioner himself, who being a literate man, conducted his own defence and cross-examined the witnesses produced by the department and made comments on the evidence. When we asked the Railway to produce the records of the enquiry, it appeared that on two or three days subsequent to the date of examination of the defence helper as a witness, the cross-examination on behalf of the delinquent was stated to have been made by the 'defence helper'. But this is inconsistent with the pleading in Para 12 of the counter-affidavit. Be that as it may, the procedure of examining the defence helper of the respondent without giving him a substitute or telling him that he had the opportunity to nominate some other defence against him as provided in Rule 1712 (2) and that is an independent man for invalidating the punishment order (sic).

2-6. The other points which have been raised by Mr. Chakravarti do not appear to us to be of sufficient strength to invalidate the punishment order. The first one is that the petitioner-Respondent had been conferred a rank of a gazetted officer and if that be so, the procedure for enquiry should have been different and the punishing authority should have been different. But having seen the relevant circular which has been produced before us, we have no doubt that the status of a gazetted officer conferred upon the Respondent was only for certain privilege as is evident from the relevant Serial No. 5244, Circular No. E.308/O, dated the 26th April, 1963.

7. The other point raised by Mr. Chakravarti is that it was wrong on the part of the respondents to consider the service record of the petitioner without telling him that this would be considered. From the orders of the punishing authority as well as of the appellate authority, it does not clearly appear whether they were biased by a reference to the previous record of the petitioner. The enquiry officer did not refer to the service records nor did he recommend any punishment but he simply referred to the service records as documents which were relevant to the charges (page 76 of the Paper-book). The question of law which is involved in this case is whether the petitioner has been denied any opportunity to defend his case or did the respondents give any notice to him that they were going to look into his service records. If a copy of the enquiry report were served upon him at the stage of second show cause notice, certainly he had an opportunity to explain the entries in the service records in his explanation to that notice.

8. It does not, therefore, appear to us that there has been any violation of natural justice on this score.

9. In view of our findings on the several grounds at the beginning of this judgment, we are of the opinion, that, the order of the Court below should not be interfered with. The appeal is, accordingly, dismissed though partly on other grounds. We make no order as to costs.

10. The cross-objection is allowed pro tanto.

11. In view of our finding that the enquiry was vitiated because of a non-compliance with the requirement of a defence helper, the appellants may take fresh action according to law only after starting the proceeding from the stage of an examination of witness.

AJOY K. BASU, J.:— 12. I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

A. K. MUKHERJEA AND SABYASACHI MUKHARJI, JJ.

State of West Bengal, through Addl. Secy. Dept. of Excise and others, Appellants v. Ruttonjee and Company and another, Respondents.

A. F. O. O. No. 223 of 1967, D/- 16-3-1970 against order of D. Basu, J., in C Revn. No. 387 (W) of 1966, D/- 18-7-1966, reported in AIR 1967 Cal 450.

(A) Letters Patent (Calcutta), Clause 15 — Provision of Rule 22 of Order 41 of Civil P. C. is applicable — AIR 1920 Cal 776 held no longer good law in view of AIR 1921 PC 80 — (Civil P. C. (1908), Order 41, Rule 22). (Para 6)

(B) Bengal Excise Act (5 of 1909), Section 8 (1) (As amended in 1965), and Sections 13, 44A, 85, 86 — Rules under Sections 85, 86, Rules 58 (d), 87 — 'Control' contemplated by Section 8 (2) — Control may be exercised by issuing general instruction or direction — It cannot authorise State Government to issue specific instructions about disposal of particular application — (Civil P. C. (1908), Preamble — Interpretation of Statutes) — (Constitution of India, Article 14).

'Control' contemplated by Section 8(1) may be exercised by issuing general instruction or direction but that power cannot authorise the State Government to issue specific instructions about the disposal of a particular application, AIR 1966 SC 1081, Distinguished. (Para 12)

The amendment introduced in 1963 has not introduced any change in the licensing functions of the Collector or the Commissioner, save Section 8, no changes were also made in the rules regulating the licensing function of the Collector either in the rules framed under Sec. 85 or under Sec. 86 of the Act. A harmonious construction, if possible, of the different provisions of the Act and rules, should be striven for. AIR 1912 Bom. 1, Distinguished; AIR 1967 Cal. 450, Affirmed. (Para 13)

Giving the State Government the authority to issue orders in particular cases would amount to giving the State Government unrestrained and unguided power. A provision which leaves an unbridled power to an authority is liable to be struck down as ultra vires under our Constitution. AIR 1967 SC 829 & AIR 1967 SC 1427, Relied on; AIR 1970 SC 1896, Distinguished.

It is a well-known principle of construction that where two constructions are possible, one which would make the statute valid should be preferred rather than the one which would make it invalid. AIR 1961 SC 1230, Rel. on. (Para 13)

If, over and above power given in sub-sections (2) and (3) of Section 8, the State Government is given an authority, to direct the Collector or the Commissioner and thereupon the same State Government is given the authority to revise such order and/or to dispose of appeals therefrom, it would lead to certain amount of anomaly. But in a matter like the licensing unless the clear language and the intentment of the Act compel such a construction, it should be avoided. (Para 15)

(C) Bengal Excise Act (5 of 1909), Section 44-A — Applicability — It cannot be said that section has no application at all to brewing licence, 1963 Cal LJ 30, Distinguished. (Para 17)

(D) Bengal Excise Act (5 of 1909), Sections 85 (2) (e), 86 (3) — Rules under Sections 85, 86, Rules 58, 87, 207, 208, 209 — Brewing licence is of more permanent nature than vending licence. (Para 17)

(E) Bengal Excise Act (5 of 1909), Sections 85, 86 — Rules under Section 85, Section 86, Rule 87 (3) — Renewal of brewing licence — Applicant is entitled to have application dealt with in accordance with law if conditions are similar to conditions when original grant was made, in material respects. (Obiter). (Para 17)

(F) Bengal Excise Act (5 of 1909), Section 86 — Rule 87 (as amended on 23-2-1967) — Amendments made to Rule 87 do not affect application for renewal for the year 1966-67. (Para 17)

(G) Constitution of India, Article 226 — Relief under — Government passing certain order without jurisdiction — Reliance cannot be placed on undertaking given by petitioner to abide by decision of Government — Petitioner is not thereby disentitled to relief under Article 226. (Para 18)

P. K. Sen Gupta and B. S. Bagchi, for Appellants; A. K. Sen, T. P. Das and Bibhu Choudhury, for Respondent No. 1 (First set of appearance); Somnath Chatterjee and Sudhir Bose, for Respondent No. 1 (second set of appearance); R. C. Deb and Chandan Banerjee, for Respondent No. 2.

SABYASACHI MUKHARJI, J.— This is an appeal over right to brew intoxicants in a brewery at Kalyani. There is a registered firm hereinafter referred to as the firm carrying on business under the name and style of Ruttonjee and Company. Its partners are Hirjoo Ruttonjee Bhesania and Feroze Manchershaw Bhesania. There is also a limited Company bearing the name Ruttonjee & Company Ltd., hereinafter referred to as the limited Company. The company was incorporated in 1960 including two partners of the firm in its Board of Directors. It appears that the firm whose original business was sale of liquors, applied in 1957 to the appropriate authority for permission to start a brewery in West Bengal and obtained such permission from the State of West Bengal and also obtained the permission of the Government of India for the establishment of a new industrial undertaking for the manufacture of beer. In 1959 the brewery was established and the partners of the firm decided to promote a limited company. The brewery licence under the Rules framed under the Bengal Excise Act, 1909, hereinafter referred to as the Act, was granted for the period from the 2nd August, 1965 to the 31st March, 1966, jointly in favour of the company and the firm, subject to certain conditions mentioned in the letter of the Government of West Bengal dated 24th July, 1965. For the next year, commencing from the 1st April, 1966, an application for renewal of the licence was submitted to the Collector on the 25th of February, 1966, jointly by the firm and the company for the renewal of the licence granted for the previous period. The firm further alleged that on the 5th of April, 1966, the firm received a copy of the letter which is Annexure T and appearing at page 1 of the Supplementary Paper Book, and which is dated 30th March, 1966, written by the Assistant Secretary, Excise Department, Government of West Bengal, to the Excise Commissioner by which the Government expressed its approval for the grant of the brewery licence in respect of the said company alone, to the exclusion of the firm for the year 1966-67 commencing on the 1st of April, 1966. The firm thereafter made an application to this Court under Article 226 of the Constitution challenging the decision to issue Excise Licence for the brewery at Kalyani for the year 1966-67 in the sole name of the Company, on the ground, inter alia, that the application for renewal jointly made has not been dealt with by the Collector or the Commissioner of Excise who is alone entitled to deal with the application according to law and the State Government has no jurisdiction to pass the impugned order or direction. It was stated in the petition that no licence had then been granted pursuant to the impugned order, the petitioner therefore prayed for appropriate writs to quash the impugned order and command the respondents, the State Government, the Commissioner of Excise, West Bengal and the Collector of Excise to cancel or not to give effect to the impugned order and then to deal with the joint application for renewal according to law.

2. There was dispute among the Directors of the Company and there were certain proceedings under the Companies Act, 1956. The company was separately represented in respect of two contending groups before the learned trial Judge and they have been so represented before this Court. There is one group represented by the Bhesania Group of Directors and Mr. R. C. Deb, learned Advocate, appeared for them before us, another group representing Mr. A. K. Thakur and others was represented by Mr. Somnath Chatterjee. It appears that the proceeding under Companies Act has come to an end. We were however told that further proceedings have started challenging the internal management of the Company. Be that as it may, it is not necessary for adjudication of the disputes between the parties in this appeal to advert to the same any more.

3. After the application under Article 226 of the Constitution was moved before this Court, a rule nisi was issued. It was contended in the petition that after the joint application filed by the firm and the company for the renewal of the licence for the aforesaid period 1966-67, a separate application on behalf of the company was also made. Thereafter it appears the then Minister for Excise, Mr. I. D. Jalan considered the matter and recorded certain decisions and directions, which are appearing at pages 150-155 of the Paper Book. It was further contended that on the 12th May, 1965, there was a letter which is at page 101 of the Paper Book written by the firm, inviting the Minister and the Government to arrive at a decision regarding the renewal of the licence. By that letter the firm undertook, it has been asserted, to abide by whatever decision that is arrived at by the Minister or the Government regarding the renewal, i.e., whether it is decided to renew the licence in favour of the Company alone or in favour of the Company and the firm jointly. It was further asserted on behalf of the Government as well as on behalf of one group of directors representing the company that the lease of the premises in which the brewery is carried on as well as the industrial licence stand in the name of the limited company. Therefore, it was asserted that the limited company is alone entitled to grant or renewal of the licence. It was further asserted that in view of the amendments made to the Bengal Excise Act by the Act of 1955 the State Government has jurisdiction and authority to issue directions of the type that it has done in this case. On the other hand, on behalf of the company represented by the Bhesania group of Directors, and the firm, it was contended that the application for grant of licence or renewal of licence solely in the name of the company said to have been made by Mr. A. K. Thakur on behalf of the Company was without authority. It was asserted that the letter of the 12th May, 1963, was given for a specific purpose and in view of the facts and circumstances of the case it cannot be relied on by the government. The circumstances and the purposes for which the undertaking was given have been sought to be explained in paragraph 13 of the affidavit of Hingoo Ruttonjee Bhesania affirmed on 14th May, 1966, appearing at p. 263 of the Paper Book. It was asserted that the State Government has no authority to direct the Collector as to how a particular application should be dealt with and it was submitted that from its very nature brewery licence is of permanent nature, than vending licence and when conditions are similar when the grantee of a previous licence apply for renewal, it is entitled to such renewal. It was further submitted that the State Government has no authority to direct the renewal in the manner it has done.

4. The matter came up for hearing before D. Basu, J. and by a judgment delivered and order passed on the 18th July 1965, D. Basu, J. has made the rule nisi absolute and directed an order in the nature of mandamus to issue restraining the respondents, State Government, Commissioner and the Collector of Excise from giving effect to the impugned order dated 30th March, 1966 and commanding respondents, the Commissioner as well as the Collector to determine, according to law, the application for renewal of the licence jointly made by the firm and the company on 26th February, 1966. The learned Judge came to the conclusion that the expression "control" under sub-section (1) of Section 8, introduced by the Bengal Excise (Amendment) Act, 1965 cannot authorise the State Government to interfere with the licensing power vested by the statute and the rules made thereunder by the Collector and the Excise Commissioner. The State Government could only exercise the power of revision under sub-section (3) of Sec. 8. The learned Judge further came to the conclusion that the specific provisions of Sections 13 and 15 (2) read with Rule 87 framed in exercise of the power under Section 66, which deal with the matter of a grant or renewal of a brewery licence, expressly vest the discretionary power in the two authorities, Collector and Excise Commissioner without interference by such other persons or authority and as such the State Government has no power or authority to issue the impugned order. Discussing the nature of the brewery licence the learned trial Judge came to the conclusion that this is of a more permanent nature than vending licence. The learned Judge came to the conclusion that by reason of Section 44A of the Act there can be no legal right in favour of a holder of an existing licence to obtain a renewal, but where the government does not think fit to refuse it the renewal will be in favour of the holder or holders of the existing licence and on the same terms and conditions as in the existing licence as indicated by sub-rule (3) of Rule 87. Regarding the undertaking contained in the letter dated 12th of May, 1963, the learned trial Judge came to the conclusion that though mandamus is a discretionary remedy, but acquiescence is not applied to refuse mandamus in a case of want of jurisdiction, in the same way as it may be done to refuse Quo Warranto. As he held, the State Government has no jurisdiction to issue the impugned order, the learned trial Judge came to the conclusion that the letter of the 12th May, 1963 is no impediment to grant reliefs asked for in this case.

5. Being aggrieved by the said judgment and order of D. Basu, J., the State of West Bengal as well as the company, represented by Mr. A. K. Thakur, preferred appeals to this Court. This is the appeal of the State of West Bengal, challenging the said order of D. Basu, J. Several contentions in support of this appeal were urged by Mr. P. K. Sen Gupta, learned Advocate for the appellant. Mr. Somnath Chatterjee, learned Advocate for the Company represented by Mr. A. K. Thakur, contended that the appeal has become infructuous inasmuch as the period for which the application for renewal had been made has elapsed and during the pendency of the appeal pursuant to the orders made by this Court, Receiver has been granted licence for the said period. He therefore, submitted that the appeal has become infructuous. On behalf of the State Government it was however urged before us that in view of the fact that several points regarding the grant of licence under Bengal Excise Act, 1909 being involved in this appeal it would invite a decision for future guidance of the Department. Mr. Chatterjee made certain submissions supplementing the submissions made on behalf of the State of West Bengal by Mr. P. K. Sengupta.

6. Before we deal with the several contentions urged on behalf of the State of West Bengal as well as on behalf of the Company represented by Mr. A. K. Thakur as well as the contentions on behalf of the respondents, we have to deal with a point of procedure raised by Mr. Deb, learned advocate for the Company, representing Bhesania Group of Directors. It was contended by Mr. Deb, that Mr. Chatterjee cannot support the appellant in view of the fact that his client has preferred no cross objections and further in view of the fact that the appeal preferred by his client has been withdrawn. Mr. Deb, drew our attention to the provisions of sub-rule (1) of Rule 22 of Order 41 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The said sub-rule is in the following terms:—

“(1) Any respondent, though he may not have appealed from any part of the decree, may not only support the decree on any of the grounds decided against him in the Court below, but take any cross-objection to the decree which he could have taken by way of appeal, provided he has filed such objection in the Appellate Court within one month from the date of service on him or his pleader of notice of the day fixed for hearing the appeal, or within such further time as the Appellate Court may see fit to allow.” Mr. Deb contended that Mr. Chatterjee’s client is a respondent, he can support the decision of the Court below on any ground decided against him but he cannot challenge the decision on any grounds in view of the fact that his client has not filed any cross-objection and further in view of the fact his client has withdrawn the appeal filed by it. It appears that at one stage it was the view of this High Court that the provision of Rule 22 of Order 41 is not applicable to appeals under Clause 15 of the Letters Patent. Reference may be made to the decision of Mookherjee, C. J. and Fletcher, J., in the case of Brojendra Chandra Sarma v. Prosanna Kumar Dhar, 24 Cal WN 1016 = (AIR 1920 Cal 776). In view however of the subsequent decision of the Privy Council in the case of Sabitri Thakurain v. Savi, 48 Ind App 76 = (AIR 1921 PC 80) it must be held that Order 41, applies to the appeals under Letters Patent. Therefore on a matter of procedure Mr. Deb is right in his submission that without filing any cross-objection Mr. Chatterjee’s client cannot support the appellant. The question however is of little practical importance in this case because we have the advantage of Mr. Chatterjee’s arguments and in considering this appeal, it is of little consequence whether we treat his argument as separate argument or as additional points in support of the appellant, the State of West Bengal.

7. In support of this appeal it was urged that the application to this Court under Article 226 of the Constitution was premature. It was submitted that what is contained in Annexure I was merely a direction by the State Government and if the direction is given effect to the Collector will issue a licence and then any party aggrieved may move either in revision or in appeal as provided in sub-sections (2) and (3) of Section 8 of the Act. It was urged that then a party may have a right to move this Court. It was, therefore, submitted that the decision of the State Government as contained in the communication dated 30th of March, 1960 is not an order or direction against which the firm could move this Court under Article 226 of the Constitution. The petitioner cannot be aggrieved by such communication. It was then submitted that the amendment of Section 8, sub-section (1) gives the State Government the right to control the Collector apart from the right of appeal and right of revision. It was emphasised that the provision of Section 8, sub-section (1) has not been challenged in this proceeding as being ultra vires or beyond the competence of the legislature. It was therefore submitted that the State Government has the authority to issue the impugned communication dated 30th March, 1966. It was then submitted that the firm has no right to get a renewal in view of the provisions of the Act. Our attention was drawn to the several provisions of the Act and the rules framed thereunder for the argument that the firm has no right to get a renewal. Our attention was also drawn to the amendment of Rule 87 framed under Section 86 of the Bengal Excise Act, 1909 by the Notification published on the 23rd February, 1967. We shall deal with this argument and the amendment later on. Reliance was placed on the decision of this Court in the case of Asoke Chandra Banerjee v. B. N. Sen, 1963 Cal LJ 30.

8. On behalf of the firm Mr. A. K. Sen, learned Advocate, contended that the State Government has no such authority under the expression “control” in sub-section (1) of Section 8 of the Act to issue the impugned direction or to interfere with the discretion of the Collector, who according to him, is the sole statutory authority, who must exercise the discretion unhampered by the directions from any other authority. Mr. Sen further urged that the brewery licence was of a different nature than the vending licence and must be treated to be of a more permanent nature and unless there have been changes of the material conditions the parties are entitled to have a prior licence renewed. Mr. Sen drew our attention to the several provisions of the Act and the Rules framed thereunder. It was also urged, that as the points involved in the appeal would arise in respect of the application for subsequent period, we should pronounce our views as to how the future applications for renewal should be dealt with by the appropriate authorities. Several decisions were also referred to us. Mr. R. C. Deb, learned advocate for the company representing Bhesania Croup of Directors, supported Mr. Sen's contentions. He also referred us to certain provisions of the Acts and the Rules and to certain decisions.

9. The main point that requires consideration in this case is whether under Section 8, sub-section (1) as amended by the Act of 1965 the State Government has the authority to issue the impugned direction. Prior to the amendment of 1965, Section 8 was in the following terms—

"8 (1) The Collector shall, in all proceedings under this Act, be subject to the control of the Excise Commissioner, and shall, in such matters as the State Government may direct, be subject also to the control of the Commissioner of the Division.

(2) Orders passed under this Act or under any rule made hereunder shall be appealable in such cases, to such authorities and under such procedure as may be prescribed by rule made under Section 85, Clause (c).

(3) The State Government may revise any order passed by the Collector, the Excise Commissioner or the Commissioner of a Division or by any officer exercising the powers of an appellate authority under any rule made under Section 85, Clause (c). After the amendment by the Bengal Excise (Amendment) Act, 1965, the said section was amended as hereunder:—

"8 (1). In doing anything or taking any action under this Act—

(a) the Collector shall subject to the control of the Excise Commissioner and of the State Government and, in such matters as the State Government may direct, also of the Commissioner of the Division; and

(b) the Excise Commissioner shall be subject to the control of the State Government.

(2) Orders passed under this Act or under any rule made hereunder shall be appealable in such cases, to such authorities and under such procedure as may be prescribed by rules made under Section 85, sub-sec. (2), clause (c).

(3) The State Government may revise any order passed by the Collector, the Excise Commissioner or the Commissioner of a Division or by any officer exercising the powers of an appellate authority under any rule made under Section 85, sub-section (2) clause (c)."

10. The question is, what is meant by this expression 'control'? Can the State Government by the process of control direct the Collector as to how a particular application should be dealt with? Before the said question is answered, it would be necessary to discuss the relevant provisions of the Bengal Excise Act of 1909. Section 13 of the Act provides, inter alia, that no intoxicant shall be manufactured and no distillery or brewery shall be worked except under authority and subject to the terms and conditions of the licence granted in that behalf by the Collector. The working of a brewery without a licence or any breach of the terms thereof has been made an offence under Section 46 of the Act. Sections 42 and 43 of the Act give the authority powers under certain circumstances specified to cancel, suspend and withdraw the licence. Inasmuch as certain arguments were advanced about the right of the petitioner to get a renewal, it is necessary to set out Sec. 41A of the Act, which is: "No person to whom licence has been granted under the Act shall have any claim to the renewal of such licence or save as provided in Section 43, any claim to compensation on the determination thereafter." Under the Act the State Government has the rule-making powers by Secs. 85 and 86. It appears that the vending licence, that is to say, a licence for the sale of an intoxicant is controlled by sub-secs. (1) and (2) of sec. 85 while the brewery licence is controlled by S. 86. Pursuant to this authority rules have been framed both under secs. 85 and 86. It would be relevant to consider in this context R. 58 framed under S. 85 of the Act. The marginal notes state under R. 58 (d) that it deals with the period for which licence may be granted for wholesale and retail vend of intoxicants. The said R. 58 provides that licences for the wholesale or retail vend of intoxicant may be granted for one year from 1st April to 31st March or for any shorter period subject to certain conditions mentioned therein. Rule 87 framed under S. 86 of the Act deals with licensing and regulation of breweries. It may be relevant to set out the rules as hereunder:—

"87 (1) Every brewer for sale and every brewer of beer for private consumption shall, before he begins to brew, deliver to the Commissioner through the District Officer a description, in writing, signed by himself, of all premises, rooms, places and vessels intended to be used in his business, specifying the purpose for which each is to be used, and the distinguishing mark of each. On the outside of the door of every room and any place in which the business is carried on, and on some conspicuous part of each of the aforesaid vessels, there shall be legibly painted in oil colour the name of the vessel, utensils, room or place according to the purpose for which it is intended to be used. If more than one vessel is used for the same purpose, each shall be distinguished by a progressive number.

(2) Before the license to brew is granted, an Excise Officer authorized by the Commissioner shall inspect the premises, etc., compare the same with the particulars stated in the aforesaid written description and certify accordingly. The license shall be granted by the Collector with the sanction of the Commissioner if the description be found satisfactory and the applicant be considered a fit person to receive a license.

(3) The license for a brewery must be renewed annually. Such renewal will be granted by the Collector, subject to the approval of the Commissioner."

11. It has to be mentioned further that by notification published in the Gazette on the 22nd February, 1967 there were certain alterations of this Rule 87.

12. On a consideration of the whole scheme of the Act and the language of the section as amended by the Act of 1965, we have come to the conclusion that the learned trial Judge was right on the construction of the expression 'control'. We are of the opinion it does not authorise the State Government to make the impugned decision or direction. We will state the reasons for our conclusion. But before we do so, it would be relevant to refer to the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of State of Punjab v. Hari Kishan, AIR 1966 SC 1081 upon which reliance was placed by both sides. There the Supreme Court had occasion to consider similar provision under Section 5 (2) of the Punjab Cinemas (Regulation) Act (11 of 1952). Sub-section (1) of Section 5 provided that the licensing authority should not grant a licence under this Act unless he was satisfied about certain matters mentioned in Clauses (a) and (b) of that sub-section. It was thereafter provided by sub-section (2) of Section 5 that subject to the foregoing provisions of this section and to the control of the Government, the licensing authority might grant licences under this Act to such persons as it thought fit, on such terms and conditions as it might determine. Sub-section (3) authorised any person aggrieved by the decision of the licensing authority refusing to grant a licence under this Act, might within such time as may be prescribed, appeal to the Government or to such other person as the Government might specify in this behalf. Sub-section (4) of Section 5 authorised the Government to issue directions to licencees. What had happened was that the State of Punjab had issued instruction to the licensing authority stating that all requests for the grant of permission for opening all new permanent cinemas should be referred to the State of Punjab. The questions that came up for consideration were whether, the State Government had power or jurisdiction to issue such instructions in respect of a license, and the ambit and authority of the State Government under the relevant provisions of the Act. The Supreme Court came to the conclusion that the State Government was not justified in assuming jurisdiction which had been conferred on the licensing authority by Section 5 (1) and (2) of the Punjab Cinemas (Regulation) Act. If, therefore, the State Government required that all applications for the licences to be forwarded to it for disposal, it really converted itself into the original authority itself because section 5 (3) clearly allowed an appeal to the State Government to be preferred by a person who is aggrieved by the rejection of his application for a license by the licensing authority, the Supreme Court observed. The Supreme Court further held that though the language used in Section 5 (1) was very wide, but however wide this control might be, it did not justify the State Government to completely oust the licensing authority and itself usurp his functions. Section 5 (3), the Supreme Court pointed out, provided for an appeal at the instance of the party which was aggrieved by the rejection of its publication for the grant of a licence. No appeal was provided for against an order granting the licence; but when it appeared to the Government that an application had been granted erroneously or unfairly, it could exercise its power of control specified by Section 5 (2) and set aside such an erroneous order and that would make the provision as to appeal or revision self-contained and satisfactory. The Supreme Court further observed that the expression 'control' as contemplated by Section 5 (2) might justify the issuance of general instruction. It was contended in support of this appeal that the facts of the instant case are different, inasmuch as, that by the passing of the impugned order there has not been any divestiture of the authority of the Collector or the licensing authority. It was suggested that it was not the fact that the authority was deprived of his power by the instruction of the State Government. On a careful consideration of the decision of the Supreme Court, however, we are of the opinion that it is not possible to accept this submission on behalf of the appellant. There the language used by the statute was "subject to the foregoing provisions of the section and to the control of the Government". Even then the Supreme Court held that the licensing authority is solely given the power to deal with the said applications in the first instance and this position cannot be changed by the Government by issuing an executive order or by making rules. At p. 1085 of the report the Supreme Court observed "To hold that the control of the Government contemplated by Sec. 5 (2) would justify their taking away the entire jurisdiction and authority from the licensing authority, is to permit by means of its executive power to change the statutory provision in a substantial manner; and that position is not clearly sustainable." There sub-sec. (3) of Section 5 of the Act provided for an appeal but there was no provision for revision while in the instant case before us revisional power has been given in express terms by sub-section (3) of Section 8. Therefore in view of the whole scheme of the present section 8 (1) read with the entire scheme of the Act and the rules, we are of the opinion that the "control" may be exercised by issuing general instruction or direction but that power cannot authorise the State Government to issue specific instructions about the disposal of a particular application.

13. It was suggested that the learned Judge has considered the provisions of the Act as amended in 1965 with reference to the rules framed under Sections 85 and 86. It was argued that such a method of construction was unwarranted. We are not impressed by this criticism of the judgment. What the learned Judge has done is not to construe the Act with reference to the rules but the learned Judge has tried to make a harmonious construction of the provisions of the Act and rules. The Amendment introduced in 1965 has not introduced any relevant or material change in the licensing functions of the Collector or the Commissioner, save Section 8, no changes were also made in the rules regulating the licensing function of the Collector either in the rules framed under Section 85 and Section 86 of the Act. A harmonious construction, if possible, of the different provisions of the Act and Rules, should be striven for. It was then contended that the decision in the case of Ratanshaw Nusservanji Todiwalla v. Geoffrey William McEllunney, AIR 1942 Bom 1, is incorrect and secondly it was contended that the facts of that case were entirely different. That case was dealing with the provisions of Bombay Abkari Act. We are of the opinion that the provisions of that statute and the facts of that case were entirely different from the facts before us and the provisions of the present Act. We, therefore, do not think it necessary to discuss the question whether that case was correctly decided or not. We are further of the opinion, that giving the State Government the authority to issue the impugned order in view of the expression "control" under Section 8 (1) of the Act, would mean giving an uncontrolled authority to the State Government without any guiding principle. If the argument of the appellant is accepted on this point it would amount to giving the State Government unrestrained and unguided power. A provision which leaves an unbridled power to an authority cannot be said to be reasonable. Reliance may be made for this proposition on the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Hari Chand Sarda v. Mizo District Council, AIR 1967 SC 829 at p. 834. Such a provision is liable to be struck down as ultra vires our Constitution. In the case of Jaisinchani v. Union of India, AIR 1967 SC 1427 at p. 1434 it has been observed by the Supreme Court "In the context it is important to emphasize that the absence of arbitrary power is the first essential of the rule of law upon which our whole constitutional system is based

..... If a decision is taken without any principle or without any rule it is unpredictable and such a decision is the antithesis of a decision taken in accordance with the rule of law .....

In the scheme of the Act it was the Collector or the Commissioner, as the case may be, who was constituted as the licensing authority. Such licensing authority must act in accordance with the principles and policies laid down under the Act in the matter of granting, renewal of licence and the other functions that have to be discharged under the Act. If, over and above that the State Government, independently of its power of revision and appeal, is given an authority to control and direct the decision of the licensing authority, without indicating the occasions on which the State Government may decide to exercise its decision and control and without indicating the principles upon which such direction or control may be exercised by the State Government in particular cases, that would make the provision of Section 8 vulnerable to be struck down as ultra vires. That construction, if possible, should be avoided. It is a well-known principle of construction that where two constructions are possible, one which would make the statute valid should be preferred rather than the one which would make it invalid. Reliance may be placed for this on the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of R. L. Arora v. State of Uttar Pradesh AIR 1964 SC 1230. At page 1239 of the report the Supreme Court has observed as follows:—

"Thus there are two possible constructions of this clause, one a mere mechanical and literal construction based on rules of grammar and the other which emerges from the setting in which the clause appears and the circumstances in which it came to be enacted and also from the words used therein, namely, acquisition being for a company which has a public purpose behind it, and therefore the building or work which is to be constructed and for which land is required must also have the same public purpose behind it, that animates the company making the construction. We are, therefore, clearly of opinion that two constructions are possible of this clause of which the second construction which is other than literal is the better one. It is well settled that if certain provisions of law construed in one way will be consistent with the Constitution, and if another interpretation would render them unconstitutional, the Court would lean in favour of the former construction."

14. Reliance was placed on the decision in the case of The Purtabpore Co. Ltd. v. Cane Commr. of Bihar, 1969-1 SCC 308 = (AIR 1970 SC 1896). In that case the Supreme Court was concerned with an order passed under the "Sugar Cane" (Control) Order of 1966. It was held by the Supreme Court, in the facts and circumstances of that case, that the impugned orders in that case though purported to have been made by the Cane Commissioner were in fact made by the Chief Minister and they were invalid. The Supreme Court observed that the power exercisable by the Cane Commissioner under Clause 6 (1) of the Order was a statutory power which could be exercised only by him. It must however be observed that in that case the Supreme Court had no occasion to consider a provision of a statute similar to Section 8 (1) of the present Act as amended by the Act of 1965. Therefore, for the purpose of disposing of this case it will not be proper for us to rely on the aforesaid decision of the Supreme Court.

15. There is another aspect of this matter. By sub-section (3) of Section 8 the State Government has been given the authority to revise the orders passed by the Collector, by sub-s. (2) the State Govt. has been given the authority to hear appeal from the decision of the Collector or the Commissioner. If over and above this, the State government is given the authority, to direct the Collector, or the Commissioner and thereupon the same State government is given the authority to revise such order and/or to dispose of appeals therefrom, it would lead to certain amount of anomaly. The power of determining appeal and the revisional power must be exercised quasi-judicially. It is true that there are instances where an authority has been given the jurisdiction to decide administratively certain matters and the same authority has been given the authority to revise its order quasi-judicially. But in a matter like the licensing unless the clear language and the intentment of the Act compel such a construction, in our opinion, it should be avoided. We are further of the opinion, that the clear language and the intentment of the Act do not lead to the construction sought for by the appellant. We have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the expression "control" in sub-section (1) of Section 8 does not authorise the State government to issue the impugned communication or direction dated 30th March, 1966.

16. The next argument that requires consideration in this case is, whether the petitioner has any right to ask for renewal and whether if there is any claim which has to be acceded in favour of the grantee of a brewing licence for renewal if the conditions are similar to those prevailing at the time of the original grant of the licence.

17. Before this aspect of the matter is discussed in detail it is important to reiterate that it is not the case of the petitioner that it has not been granted the renewal of the brewing licence. This is not an application for directing the respondents to renew the licence in favour of the petitioner. The petitioner's case was and is that the application for renewal has not been dealt with in accordance with law. The petitioner further contends that the State government has no authority to issue the impugned direction dated 30th of March, 1966. We have considered the question of the authority of the State government to issue the impugned direction. It was contended on behalf of the respondents that the Chapter VI of the Act, which deals with the licences, permits and passes, and which contains Sections 30 to 44A, deal with vending licence or licence for the retail sale. Therefore, it was urged, Section 44A which in express terms states that no person to whom a licence has been granted under this Act shall have any claim to the renewal of such licence, or, save as provided in S. 43, any claim to compensation on the determination thereof, really do not affect a brewing licence. Even though there is a good deal of force in this argument as it appears that most of the sections in Ch. VI from the very terms thereof must relate to vending licence and not to brewing licence, in view of the clear language used in Section 44A and in view of the heading of the Chapter, we are of the opinion that it cannot be said that Section 44A of the Act has no application at all to a brewing licence. In this connection we may refer to a decision upon which some reliance was placed by the appellant, namely the case of 1963 Cal LJ 30. However, in view of the fact that that was a case dealing with the licence to run a country spirit shop, we do not think that in considering the nature of a brewing licence this case is of any assistance to the appellant. Section 85 of the Act empowers the State Government as mentioned hereinbefore to make rules. Clause (e) of sub-section (2) of Section 85 in specific terms empowers the government to make rule for regulating the periods for which licences for the wholesale or retail vend of any intoxicant may be granted. Section 86 deals with brewing licence. Rule 58 framed under Section 85 provides that licences for the wholesale or retail vend of intoxicants may be granted for one year, upon the terms and conditions mentioned in that rule, while Rule 87 which deals with the application of brewing licence framed under Section 86, does not specify any period for which licence may be granted. Sub-section (3) of the said rule provides that it must be renewed annually. It was argued that the provision to renew licence annually is for revenue purpose and it casts an obligation upon the authorities and not upon the grantee of the licence. It is further to be borne in mind that setting up of a brewery involves large sums of moneys and it is unlikely that any body would invest such a large amount of money if it was only for one year. In this context reference may be made to Rules 207 to 209 made under Section 86 of the Act. These rules, indicate that they relate to brewing licences, and they contain detail provisions for the "transfer of licence" by act of the parties, by death and by reason of change in the partnership subsequent to the grant of licence. Having therefore, considered all these aspects, we are of the opinion, that a brewing licence is of a more permanent nature than a vending licence. Even though we do not hold, for the purpose of this application, that there is any legally enforceable right in favour of the grantee of a brewing licence to have it renewed, if the conditions are similar to the conditions when the original grant was made, in material respects, if an application is made for renewal, the applicant is entitled to have that application dealt with in accordance with law. It was then urged that there have been certain amendments to Rule 87 by the Gazette Notification published on the 23rd February, 1967. We are of the opinion that the said amendments do not affect the application for renewal for the year 1966-67. Therefore it is not necessary for us to consider the effect thereof.

18. It is now necessary to consider the argument of Mr. Sengupta that the application was premature. Mr. Sengupta argued that no order has yet been passed by the Collector pursuant to the direction or decision of the Minister. We are, however, unable to accept this contention. The order of the government or the direction of the government dated 30th March 1966 was communicated to the petitioner. Further we find that on the 7th April 1966 a formal order was passed regarding the approval of the government to the grant of a fresh brewery licence in the name of a public limited company. The same appears at page 16 of the Supplementary Paper Book. It is inconceivable that under these circumstances the brewery licence would not be given in accordance with the direction, more so, when the respondents Nos. 1, 2 and 3 are all contending that the government has the authority to give the impugned direction. In that view of the matter, we are unable to accept this contention of Mr. Sengupta. Lastly, it was contended that in view of the undertaking referred to hereinbefore dated 12th of May 1965, the petitioner was not entitled to any relief in this application under article 226 of the Constitution. In our opinion, the learned Judge was right in holding that where the government has acted without jurisdiction the undertaking would not disentitle the petitioner to have the order made without jurisdiction quashed. Government cannot and do not acquire jurisdiction by virtue of the undertaking given by the petitioner. Furthermore in the facts and circumstances of this case it is highly doubtful whether any reliance can be placed upon such undertaking by the petitioner, in view of the fact that the undertaking was given under certain specific circumstances as referred to hereinbefore.

19. For the above reasons we are of the opinion that the learned trial Judge was right in his judgment and the order. The learned trial Judge has quashed the impugned order, being Annexure I, dated 30th March, 1966. The said order of the learned trial Judge is hereby confirmed. The learned trial Judge has further directed respondent Nos. 2 and 3 in the petition to determine according to law, the application for licence, which is annexure T to the petition. That was the application dated 25th February 1966 for the licence for the year 1966-67. After the order of the learned trial Judge the Court of Appeal had appointed Receiver and had directed the government to grant brewery licence for the aforesaid period to the Receiver appointed by this Court. As a matter of fact the Receiver appointed by this Court has been granted brewery licence and the Receiver had this licence renewed for the year 1969-70 ending 31st March, 1970. Therefore, in view of the fact that the period for which the application for renewal in respect of which application under article 226 of the Constitution was made has elapsed, and in view of the fact for the said period Receiver has been granted licence, we vacate that portion of the order of the learned trial Judge. We, however, make it clear in future if any application is jointly made for renewal of the brewing licence this must be dealt with in accordance with law and in accordance with the observations made in this judgment. Subject to the aforesaid variation the appeal is dismissed. The parties will pay and bear their own costs of this appeal. We however do not vary the order for costs as directed by the learned trial Judge.

20. There is an application for the discharge of the Receiver and for certain consequential directions. We shall pass separate orders in respect of the same.

ARUN K. MUKHERJEA, J.— 21. I agree.

Order accordingly.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 977 of 1969, D/- 81-7-1970.

(A) Penal Code (1860), S. 21 — Secretary of a Co-operative Society is not a public servant either under Clause (10) or under Clause (12) or Clause (11) of S. 21.

Secretary of a co-operative society is not a public servant under tenth clause of Section 21. AIR 1935 Bom 36 and 1935 Mad WN 1337 (1) & AIR 1958 Mys 82, Foll.

(Paras 2, 9)

Section 19, Bengal Co-operative Societies Act, 1940 (21 of 1940) makes a registered co-operative society a body corporate only for purposes enumerated in that section. Such society however cannot be classed as a corporation established by or under any Central, Provincial or State Act. A registered co-operative society is also not a corporation established under the Co-operative Societies Act. So a Secretary of such society cannot be a "public servant" within Sec. 21 Clause (12). (Per Dutt, J.) AIR 1969 Pat 173, Rel. on.

(Para 3A)

A secretary of a co-operative society discharges his functions with regard to that particular co-operative society and has no connection with the general or common purpose of any village, town or district and as such he is not a "public servant" within Section 21, Clause (11) (Per Sarma Sarkar, J.)

(Para 8)

(B) Companies Act (1956), Sections 2 (7), 6 — A co-operative society is specifically excluded from definition under Section 2 (7) — Companies Act under Section 6 not being applicable to co-operative societies, co-operative society cannot be classed as a corporation.

Chittaranjan Das and Amal Kumar Ghoshal, for Petitioner; J. M. Banerjee, for State.

R. N. DUTT, J.: The petitioner is on his trial before a Special Court at Alipore for an alleged offence under Section 409 of the Indian Penal Code.

2. The instant case was allotted to the Special Court by a notification of the State Government and the Special Court took cognizance on a petition of complaint filed before it by the Public Prosecutor. The petitioner raised an objection before the Special Court that the Special Court had no jurisdiction to try the instant case. But the Judge presiding over the Special Court has found that he has jurisdiction. The petitioner has thereafter obtained this Rule for quashing the proceeding pending before the Special Court against him.

3. The allegations are in short as follows:—

3-A. The petitioner was the Secretary of Mahasakti Samabaya Samiti, a registered Co-operative Society. While working as such Secretary the petitioner is said to have committed criminal breach of trust in respect of Rs. 14,432.92p. The Special Court will have jurisdiction to try this case if the petitioner can be said to be a public servant within the meaning of Section 21 of the Indian Penal Code. The learned Judge has found that the petitioner is a Public Servant within the meaning of the twelfth clause of Section 21 of the Indian Penal Code. The question if the Secretary of a Co-operative society would be a Public Servant under the tenth clause of Section 21 often arose and the Bombay, Madras and Mysore High Courts have held that the Secretary of a Co-operative Society was not a Public Servant under the tenth clause of S. 21. AIR 1935 Bom 36, 1935 Mad WN 1337(1) and AIR 1958 Mys 82. With respects we agree with the decision of the aforesaid High Courts and we think that the secretary of a Co-operative Society is not a Public Servant under the tenth clause of Section 21. We have then to see if the Secretary of a Co-operative Society is a Public Servant under the twelfth clause of S. 21 of the Indian Penal Code. The period during which the alleged criminal breach of trust is said to have taken place is between July 14, 1965 and June 24, 1966. The twelfth clause of Section 21 was first amended in 1958 and again amended in 1964. The amendment of 1964 became effective before July, 1965 and so we have to consider if a Secretary Co-operative Society is a Public Servant under the twelfth clause of S. 21 as it now stands. The relevant portion of the twelfth clause is that every person in the service or pay of a local authority, "a corporation established by or under a Central, Provincial or State Act or a Government Company as defined in Section 617 of the Companies Act, 1956 is a Public Servant. Mr. Banerjee who appears for the State has submitted that a registered co-operative Society is 'a corporation established by or under a State Act' and as such the Secretary of a registered Co-operative Society is a Public Servant. Mr. Banerjee has argued that a Co-operative Society formed under the Bengal Co-operative Societies Act, 1940 becomes a body corporate as soon as it is registered and as such the Mahasakti Samabaya Stores Ltd., being a registered Co-operative Society is a body corporate. Mr. Banerjee has further argued that being a body corporate it is 'a corporation' and becomes 'a corporation established under the Co-operative Societies Act'. This argument cannot be accepted. True under Section 19 of the Co-operative Societies Act the registration of a Co-operative Society renders it a body corporate but that is for the purposes enumerated in Section 19. The heading of the Chapter under which Section 19 comes is "Status and Management of Co-operative Societies". Under Section 19, a Co-operative Society when registered becomes a body corporate with perpetual succession and a common seal and with power to hold property, to enter into contracts, to institute and defend suits and other legal proceedings and to do all things necessary for the purposes for which it is constituted. Thus, as a body corporate the Society has its rights and liabilities and becomes a juristic person. But the language in Section 21, twelfth clause is 'in the service or pay of a corporation established by or under the Central, Provincial or State Act'. A registered Co-operative Society is not a 'corporation' established by or under the Co-operative Societies Act. The clause, "corporation established by or under" has reference to some Public Corporations established either by or under some statutes. Take for instance the Life Insurance Corporation which was established by the Life Insurance Corporation Act. Similarly, take the instance of the State Transport Corporation, Calcutta, which was established by the State Government under a Central Act, Road Transport Corporations Act, 1950. Under Section 19 of the Co-operative Societies Act a registered Co-operative Society is a body corporate for the purposes enumerated in Section 19 but it does not become a corporation established by or under the Co-operative Societies Act. Mr. Banerjee refers to the definition of a body corporate or corporation contained in Clause (7) of Section 2 of the Companies Act. It will however appear that the definition of "body corporate" or "corporation" excludes a Co-operative Society.

Furthermore, Section 6 of the Co-operative Societies Act states that the Companies Act shall not apply to Co-operative Societies. There is, therefore, no doubt that a Co-operative Society though registered under the Co-operative Societies Act does not become because of Section 19 of the Act, a Corporation established by or under the Co-operative Societies Act and in that view of the matter the Secretary of a Co-operative Society is not a Public Servant under the Twelfth clause of Section 21 of the Indian Penal Code. We may in this connection refer to the observation of the Patna High Court in State of Bihar v. Amulya Ratan Pathak, AIR 1969 Pat 173 at p. 180.

"The trial Court has found that the respondent while acting as the Secretary of the Society was a public servant, as mentioned in the charge. It is doubtful, however, whether an office bearer of a Co-operative Society is a public servant, while discharging his duties as such."

It was not necessary for the Patna High Court to decide this question in that case but from what we have said we have no doubt that the Secretary of a Co-operative Society is not a Public Servant within the meaning of Section 21 of the Indian Penal Code. Since the petitioner is not a Public servant the Special Court has no jurisdiction to try the instant case against him.

4. In the result, the Rule is made absolute. The proceeding now pending against the petitioner before the Second Special Court, Alipore, is quashed but the State will be free to proceed against him in accordance with law and in an appropriate Court.

SARMA SARKAR, J.—5. I agree with my Lord to the proposed order but I would like to add a few words.

6. The sole point pressed for consideration in this Rule is whether the petitioner, the Secretary of Mahasakti Samabaya Samiti, a registered Co-operative Society can be tried under Section 403 of the Indian Penal Code in the Court of a Special Judge under West Bengal Criminal Law Amendment (Special Courts) Act, XXI of 1919, (hereinafter called the Act) on the allegation that he misappropriated the funds of the Society amounting to Rs. 14,432.92 P. only during the period 1965-68. It was held by the trial Judge that the petitioner is a Public Servant and Mr. Banerjee appearing for the State supports it. Mr. Das however, appearing for the petitioner contends that the petitioner is not a Public Servant under Section 21 of the Indian Penal Code.

7. Mr. Banerjee has contended that in view of the amendment of Section 21, twelfth clause, in 1964 the petitioner is a Public Servant after that date. The twelfth clause of Section 21 as amended in 1964 reads thus:

“Every person—

(a) in the service or pay of the Government or remunerated by fees or commission for the performance of any public duty by the Government;

(b) In the service or pay of a local authority, a corporation established by or under a Central, Provincial or State Act or a Government Company as defined in Section 617 of the Companies Act, 1956 (1 of 1956).”

The learned Judge by reference to Section 19 of the Co-operative Societies Act has held that every Co-operative Society, after its registration under the Co-operative Societies Act as a corporate body for certain purposes and because it acts as a corporate body it is a corporation established under the State Act and as such the sub-clause (b) of twelfth clause after amendment is attracted. This argument is based on the assumption that whenever there is a corporate body there is a corporation. This assumption is not correct. A corporation is an entity by itself and can be established only by a statute passed by the Central or the State Government in India. The word ‘corporation’ has been defined thus in Stroud’s Judicial Dictionary, Third Edition, at page 643:

“‘Corporation’ is that which the civilians call universitatem, or collegium and is a body politic authorised to take and grant, having a common seal &c. These are constituted either by Prescription, by Letters Patent, or by Act of Parliament.”

It is thus clear that a corporation so far as India is concerned has to be set up or established by an Act passed by the Central or the State Government in order that any person serving in such a corporation may be a Public Servant. It is clear that a Co-operative Society was established under the Co-operative Societies Act and not as a corporation. There are corporate bodies in a corporation strictly so called and there may be corporate bodies in other associations which are not corporations. From that it does not follow that wherever there is a corporate body there is a corporation. So far as the Co-operative Society is concerned the purpose for which the Society is constituted is to discharge certain functions under the Co-operative Societies Act. It does not by itself establish any corporation strictly so called though after the Society is set up and it is registered under the Co-operative Societies Act the fact of such registration may grant certain rights of corporate bodies to the Co-operative Society itself. But from that it does not necessarily follow that a corporation and a Co-operative Society registered under the Co-operative Societies Act are synonymous terms. In this view of the matter it appears to me that a Co-operative Society does not become a corporation because for some specific purposes it functions as a corporate body. It will appear from Section 19 of the Co-operative Societies Act that this power of a corporate body is given to the Co-operative Society for certain specific and limited purposes as provided under the Act. In this connection, we may refer to several Acts by which Corporations were established by the Central or the State Government. The Life Insurance Corporation, for example, is a Corporation established by a Central Act directly by a particular statute but there may be corporations which are not directly established by any specific statute but they may be established under a general law passed by the Central or the State Government and these corporations are covered by sub-clause (b) of clause twelfth under Section 21 of the Indian Penal Code. Under Section 3 of the Road Transport Corporations Act 1950 passed by the Central Government, State Government may by Notification in the Official Gazette establish a Road Transport Corporation for the whole or any part of the State. Only such corporations are meant and referred to in Section 21 Clause 12 sub-clause (b).

8. Secondly, we may also refer to the various clauses of Section 21 to show the distinction that is sought to be made between a private servant and a public servant. All the clauses except the tenth and the eleventh give indication that the public servant is connected directly or indirectly with some functions of the Government. In the tenth clause there is no direct mention of the Government but even in that clause the particular officer must perform certain functions ‘for any secular common purpose of any village, town or district.’ But in the instant case the Secretary is to discharge his functions with regard to that particular Co-operative Society only and has no connection with the general or common purpose of any village, town or district. On analysing Section 21 also it will appear that both from the language of the twelfth clause and from the scheme of Section 21 of the Indian Penal Code that the Legislature did not intend to cover those cases where a person holds office for any particular private company or society for the benefit of that company or society only. It is significant that in Section 21 clause 12(b), the Government Company under Section 617 has been included thereby excluding by necessary implications other private companies though they function as body corporate. In this view of the matter twelfth clause cannot be attracted to the instant case.

9. Thirdly, we may also consider whether the petitioner accused come under the tenth clause as it is clear that the other clauses of Section 21 are not attracted to the instant case. Even with regard to the tenth clause there is some difficulty, namely, the petitioner is working only in the interest and for the benefit of a particular society and not for the common secular interest of any particular village or town or district. This view was also taken in several cases of which mention may be made to the case of AIR 1958 Mys 82, where it was held that the President of a Co-operative Society is not a public servant under the tenth clause of Section 21 of the Indian Penal Code. In my view, therefore, the petitioner cannot be held to be a Public Servant and as such he cannot be tried before a Special Court.

Petition allowed.

M. L. Bhargava and R. L. Tandon, for Petitioner; O. P. Malhotra, A. B. Saharya and V. S. Bhatnagar, for Respondents.

P. S. SAFEER, J.:— This petition challenges the order dated 15-11-1968 by which the petitioner was dismissed from service.

2. The petitioner was appointed as a Constable by the Commandant, Delhi Armed Police, on 6-4-1953. He was promoted as Head Constable on 27-2-1957 by the Senior Superintendent of Police and was confirmed as such on 7-3-1963 by the Assistant Inspector-General of Police.

3. The petitioner's case is that in August 1966, he had gone on leave to his village where the occurrence which resulted in his trial under Sections 336/337 of the Indian Penal Code took place. He was convicted only under Section 337 of the Indian Penal Code on 28-2-1967 but was given the benefit of the provisions of Section 4 of the Probation of Offenders Act, 1958 (hereinafter referred as "the Act"). While releasing him on probation, the petitioner was ordered to pay the amount of Rs. 500/- to the injured persons by way of compensation. The payment of the amount was to be made within a month from the date of the said order.

4. The petitioner's appeal to the Sessions Judge, Gurdaspur, was dismissed on 7-9-1967 and the revision filed by him under Section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was dismissed by the High Court of Punjab and Haryana on 2-2-1968.

5. The petitioner, upon his prosecution, was suspended from service on 30-9-1966. He was, however, reinstated by an order dated 6-9-1967, which is in these terms:—

"Head Constable Iqbal Singh No. 287/L, who was suspended vide this office order No. PRO. 14113-119/AC-IV dated 30-9-1966 is hereby reinstated from suspension with effect from 28-2-1967, the date of order of the Court of Judicial Magistrate, Class I, Gurdaspur."

6. While still under suspension, he was permitted in July-August, 1967, to appear in the test for admission to the training in Intermediate School Course at Police Training College, Phillaur, but his name did not appear in the list of successful candidates. The petitioner, thereupon, submitted an application to the Deputy Inspector-General of Police (A) stating certain facts and circumstances on the basis of which he urged that his eligibility for joining the above-mentioned training course be reconsidered. That application was rejected vide Memo No. 61/CB dated 3-1-1968. Against that order he made a representation dated 23-1-1968 to the Inspector-General of Police, Kashmir Gate, Delhi (Respondent No. 1) and in response to the same he received a call for appearing before the Deputy Inspector-General (A) for an interview on 30-4-1968. As a result an order dated 11-6-1968 was passed selecting him for the said course. He joined the course at Phillaur and it was there that he received the impugned order dated 15-11-1968 dismissing him from service. That order is as follows:—

"On having been convicted in Case F. I. R. No. 186 dated 26-8-1966 under Sec. 336/337 Indian Penal Code, P. S. Shri Hargovind Pur, District Gurdaspur, Head Constable Iqbal Singh No. 287/L (now under training at P. T. C. Phillaur) is hereby dismissed from the Force with effect from 15-11-1968." It may be emphasized that the order of dismissal was passed after the order of reinstatement and the ground of dismissal stated was the conviction of the petitioner under Sections 336/337, Indian Penal Code while, in fact the petitioner had not been convicted under Section 336, Indian Penal Code. The order of dismissal does not show that the consequences of the release of the petitioner on probation under Section 4 of the Act were considered by the dismissing authority, i.e., the Superintendent of Police, Old Police Lines, Delhi.

7. The respondents have placed reliance on sub-rule (2) of Rule 16.2 of the Punjab Police Rules, 1934. The submission is that the dismissal under that rule is valid and unassailable. The petitioner had filed an appeal under Rule 16.29 of the aforementioned ed Rules against the order of dismissal. The appellate order rejecting the said appeal relies upon the amended sub-rule (2) of Rule 16.2 of the said Rules. The unamended sub-rule (2) is as under:—

"(2) An enrolled officer sentenced judicially to rigorous imprisonment exceeding one month or to any other punishment not less severe, shall, if such sentence is not quashed on appeal or revision be dismissed. An enrolled police officer sentenced by a criminal Court to a punishment of fine or simple imprisonment or both, or to rigorous imprisonment not exceeding one month, or which having been proclaimed under Section 67 of the Code of Criminal Procedure fails to appear within the statutory period of thirty days may be dismissed or otherwise dealt with at the discretion of the officer empowered to appoint him. Final departmental orders in such cases shall be postponed until the appeal or revision proceedings have been decided, or until the period allowed for filing an appeal has lapsed without appellate or revisionary proceedings have been instituted. Departmental punishments under this rule shall be awarded in accordance with the powers conferred by Rule 16.1." The amended sub-rule (2) is as under:—

"(b) When a report is received from an official source, e.g., a Court or the prosecuting agency, that an enrolled police officer has been convicted of an offence in a Criminal Court, the authority competent under Rule 16.1 to award the punishment of dismissal (hereinafter referred to in this rule as "disciplinary authority") shall consider the nature and gravity of the offence and if it is of the view that the offence is such as to render further retention of the convicted police officer in service prima facie undesirable it shall make an order in form 16.2 (2) dismissing him from service after the period for filing the appeal has elapsed or, if an appeal has been filed as soon as the first appeal is decided against him and before the second appeal is filed.

Provided that where the dismissal of the convicted police officer is not considered necessary, the disciplinary authority shall call for and examine a copy of the judgment and take such departmental action as it may deem proper.

8. The learned Counsel for the petitioner has urged three points.

9. In the first instance he submits that having been given the benefit of the provisions of Section 4 of the Act, the disqualification attaching to his conviction could not be made the basis of his dismissal. It is an admitted case between the parties that the petitioner's conviction was dealt with by the Court convicting him in terms of the provisions of Section 4 of the Act. That having been done, it is pleaded that the benefit of Section 12 of the Act immediately became available to him. The controversy centres around the interpretation of the provisions of Section 12 of the Act which provides a statutory protection to the convict against his suffering any disqualification attached to his conviction. It is submitted that on account of his conviction the petitioner could not suffer the disqualification of incurring dismissal under the Punjab Police Rules. Opposing that submission the learned counsel for the respondents contends that the impugned dismissal order has no connection with any disqualification attached to the conviction of the petitioner.

10. Section 12 of the Act is as under:

"12. Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law, a person found guilty of an offence and dealt with under the provisions of Section 3 or Section 4 shall not suffer disqualification, if any, attaching to a conviction of an offence under such law:

Provided that nothing in this section shall apply to a person who after his release under Section 4, is subsequently sentenced for the original offence.

*Note:— Person against whom action is taken either under Section 3 or Section 4, is not disqualified by reason of such action, from standing for election to any of the Houses of Parliament or to any State Legislature."

11. The second submission made by the learned counsel for the petitioner is that having once been reinstated in service after the conviction the impugned order of dismissal could not have been based upon it. It is also urged that no action by way of dismissal could have been taken against the petitioner without affording to him an adequate opportunity of showing cause and that he has been condemned unheard. The principles of natural justice are invoked without reference to Article 311 of the Constitution.

12. The third submission is that the order of dismissal is by an authority lower in rank to the appointing authority.

13. The last submission has no merit because it was a Senior Superintendent of Police who had promoted the petitioner to the rank of Head Constable by the order dated 27-2-1957 and the order of dismissal is by an officer holding the rank of Superintendent of Police. We cannot accept the contention that the dismissing authority was below the rank of the appointing authority. In both cases the authority was a Superintendent of Police. Seniority in service did not cause any disparity in rank. We find support from the observations contained in a Full Bench judgment of this Court in Union of India v. Surajbhan dated the 23rd of May 1969 by which LPA No. 86-D of 1965 (FB) (Delhi) was disposed of. It was noticed in that judgment that in terms of Rule 16.1(2) of the Punjab Police Rules, 1934, a Superintendent of Police was expressly empowered to dismiss even an Assistant Sub-Inspector. The Full Bench had relied upon a decision of the Supreme Court in Union of India v. Jagjit Singh, 1969 Ser LR 356 = (AIR 1970 SC 122). In our view, the Superintendent of Police was competent to pass the impugned order of dismissal because he was not subordinate to the authority, namely, the Senior Superintendent of Police, by whom the petitioner had been appointed.

14. Returning to the first contention, it is clear from the order of dismissal that it is based upon the conviction of the petitioner. Placing reliance upon the provisions of the unamended sub-rule (2) of Rule 16.2 the authorities concerned considered that the petitioner had become disqualified for being retained in service because of his having suffered the conviction mentioned in the impugned order. In that view of the matter it is not possible to hold that in terms of the unamended Rule 16.2 the order of dismissal will not be against the provisions of Section 12 of the Act.

15. The learned Central Government counsel did not confine himself to the unamended rule. He argued in the alternative that the dismissal was sustainable in terms of the amended sub-rule and it was not the conviction of the petitioner which gave rise to the disqualification resulting in his dismissal. The argument was that on being informed of the conviction the authority competent to award the punishment was not to dismiss the employee concerned straight off and was under an obligation to consider the nature and gravity of the offence and was to take action only if it formed the view that the offence was such as to render further retention of the convicted police officer in service prima facie undesirable. It was submitted that it was open to the competent authority to form the view that the convicted police officer was a person who could be retained in service. Our attention was also drawn to the proviso which is to the effect that in case dismissal is not considered necessary the disciplinary authority could call for and examine a copy of the judgment (affecting the concerned police officer) and take such departmental action as it may deem proper. We are of the view that reliance on the amended sub-rule is without merit. The order of dismissal does not show that it was not based merely on the conviction and that the competent authority had ever by itself considered the nature and gravity of the offence and had recorded its own conclusion that the retention of the petitioner in service was prima facie undesirable. In view of the clear language of the impugned order of dismissal the respondents cannot place any reliance on the amended sub-rule (2) of Rule 16.2.

16. Section 12 of the Act uses the word "disqualification" and the meaning given to this word in Webster's Third New International Dictionary is:—

- (i) the act of disqualifying or the state of being disqualified" (protesting his disqualification from office under the new law);
- (ii) "something that disqualifies or incapacitates"

The word "disqualify" is also stated to mean — making someone unfit for something. The further meaning given is that the person may be deprived within the meaning of the word "disqualify" of any right or privilege. We are of the view that the words "disqualification, if any, attaching to a conviction of an offence" as used in Section 12 of the Act would include a person's losing his right or qualification to remain or to be retained in service. Section 12 of the Act, clearly saves the convict from suffering such disqualification attaching to his conviction. In respect of his conviction, the petitioner had the protection of Section 12 and he was saved from suffering any disqualification such as the one which resulted in his dismissal.

17. Without a conviction neither the amended nor the unamended sub-rule (2) would be attracted. It is the conviction to which attaches the disqualification of attracting the provisions of sub-rule (2). In our view the dismissal of the petitioner is unsustainable even in terms of the amended sub-rule (2) of rule 16.2 of the Punjab Police Rules because of the express immunity which is provided by the provisions of Section 12 of the Act.

18. It may be stated that the amended sub-rule (2) of rule 16.2 provides that the competent authority to award the punishment of dismissal shall consider the nature and gravity of the offence and if it is of the view that the offence is such as to render further retention of the convicted police officer in service prima facie undesirable it shall make an order in form 16.2(2) dismissing him from service after the period for filing an appeal has elapsed or as soon as the first appeal filed has been decided against the said officer. The competent authority would be acting in terms of the said rule in a quasi-judicial capacity. Even if an executive order were to be passed it would still be incumbent upon the competent authority to act in accordance with the principles of natural justice. No determination could be made that the nature and gravity of the offence was such as to render the further retention of the convicted police officer prima facie undesirable without affording him a reasonable opportunity of being heard.

In M/s. K. G. Khosla and Co. v. Union of India, CWP No. 1166 of 1969, D/- 3-2-1970 (Delhi) we have held that the phrase "equal protection of laws" occurring in Article 14 of the Constitution is not restricted into legislated law and that it imbibes within itself the protection which is available because of certain principles of natural justice which are necessarily to be complied with before the rights of any person are sought to be adversely affected. The learned counsel for the petitioner has relied upon the observations of the Supreme Court made in A. K. Kraipak v. Union of India, 1969 Ser LR 445 = (AIR 1970 SC 150). The observations made in that case support our view. The orders which may be passed, while exercising quasi-judicial authority and even executive or administrative orders which adversely affect persons can be passed only after complying with the principles of natural justice. In our view the petitioner has not been given any such opportunity. The order of dismissal deserves to be quashed on this ground as well.

19. The only contention which remains to be dealt with is that the petitioner having been reinstated after the conviction the same could not become available to the respondents for dismissing him subsequently. The order reinstating the petitioner contains no reservation of any kind. It is dated 6-9-1967 and reinstates the petitioner with effect from 28-2-1967 and expressly mentions that date as the date of the order of the Magistrate, I Class, Gurdaspur, by which the petitioner had been convicted. The order of reinstatement was passed in full awareness of the conviction.

20. In Stroud's Judicial Dictionary, under the heading "reinstatement", it is stated:

"The natural and primary meaning of 'to reinstate', as applied to a man who has been dismissed, is to replace him in the position from which he was dismissed and so restore the status quo ante dismissal."

The learned counsel for the respondents urged that during the period of suspension the relationship of master and servant continued and that the reinstatement merely removed the suspension. The argument really goes against the respondents because, in such a case, reinstatement would result in restoration of status quo ante suspension, i.e., that the petitioner would be placed back in his post in the same way in which he held it before suspension. The result of the order of reinstatement would be to render the conviction unactionable and the impugned order of dismissal could not be based on the very same conviction.

21. In the result this writ petition is allowed with costs and the impugned order dated 15-11-1968 dismissing the petitioner from service is hereby quashed. Counsel's fee is fixed at Rs. 250/-.

Criminal Appeal Nos. 11, 63 and 64 of 1968, D/- 7-1-1970 from order of 1st Class Magistrate, Delhi, D/- 30-9-1967

(A) Prevention of Food Adulteration Act (1954), S. 2(xiii) — Sale — Supply of food by hotelier to resident guest on consolidated charge — There is no sale.

Supply of food by a hotelier to a resident guest from whom only a consolidated charge is made for the room and the other amenities and who is not entitled to rebate for any meal which may not be taken by him is not covered by any portion of the definition of "sale". The property in the food supplied as part of service does not pass to the guest except in that which is actually consumed by him. As the consolidated charge is for the service as a whole no portion of it can be regarded notionally as price of food even though the hotelier must have also taken into account the cost of food to be supplied by him in fixing the consolidated charge to be made from guests staying in the hotel. There is no sale of food in such a case. Case law discussed. (Paras 20, 21)

(B) Prevention of Food Adulteration Act (1954), Ss. 7, 16 — Store — Meaning of — Means storing for sale — Criminal Appeal No. 100D of 1964, D/- 13-6-1969 (Delhi), Overruled. AIR 1967 Cal 110 & AIR 1966 Cal 51 & AIR 1963 Assam 28, Dissented from.

The juxtaposition in which the expression "or store" occurs in Sections 7 and 16 and the scheme of the Act do not leave any doubt that the intention of the storing being "for sale" was implicit in the word "store" as used in those sections. Thus the word means storing for sale. Case law discussed. Criminal Appeal No. 100D of 1964, D/- 13-6-1969 (Delhi), Overruled; AIR 1967 Cal 110 & AIR 1966 Cal 51 & AIR 1963 Assam 28, Dissented from. fication regarding his appointment — Sample of food received in office before issue of notification — Evidentiary value of report.

A report signed by a Public Analyst after issue of notification regarding his appointment as such when the sample of food for analysis was received in the office of the Public Analyst and was caused to be analysed before the issue of the notification regarding his appointment as Public Analyst can be used as evidence of the facts stated therein in any proceedings under the Act. JAGJIT SINGH, J.:— The following three questions which had arisen during the hearing of four appeals (Criminal Appeals Nos. 11, 36, 63 and 64 of 1968) were referred to a Full Bench:—

- "(i) Whether for purposes of the Act there is no sale of food which is provided by a hotelier to a guest when a consolidated charge is made for room and the other amenities, including food, and when no rebate is allowed for any meal which may not be taken by the guest?
- (ii) Whether the expression "store", as used in S. 7 and S. 16 of the Act, means storage simpliciter or storing for sale?
- (iii) Whether a report signed by a Public Analyst after issue of notification regarding his appointment as such when the sample of food for analysis was received in the office of the Public Analyst and was caused to be analysed before the issue of the notification regarding his appointment as Public Analyst can be used as evidence of the facts stated therein in any proceedings under the Act?"

2. Detailed facts are given in the order of reference, dated September 22, 1969. This much may, however, be mentioned that on July 25, 1966, four food inspectors took samples of ice-cream, butter, milk and curd from the kitchen and stores of the Oberoi Maidens Hotel, 7 Alipore Road, Delhi. On the same day one sample of each of these articles of food was sent for analysis to the office of the Public Analyst for the Delhi Municipal Corporation area. On being analysed all the samples were found to be adulterated. On the basis of the reports of the Public Analyst four separate complaints were filed against Shri Laxmi Narain Tandon, Manager of the hotel and Messrs Associated Hotels of India Limited through the Managing Director Shri M. S. Oberoi. Admittedly the said hotel is owned by Messrs. Associated Hotels of India Limited.

3. The samples sent to the Public Analyst were received in his office on July 25, 1966. The samples of curd and Milk were analysed on the 26th July and that of butter on the 29th July. The sample of ice-cream was analysed on the 30th of that month. The reports showing the results of analysis were signed by Shri Sudhamoy Roy, as Public Analyst, in the first week of August 1966.

4. During the trial of the complaint relating to the ice-cream, the sample which had been retained by Shri P. P. Singha, Food Inspector, was sent, at the instance of the accused, to the Director Central Food Laboratory, Calcutta, for analysis. The Director as well found the sample sent to him to be adulterated.

5. As provided by Section 13 (3) of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954 (hereinafter referred to as "the Act") the certificate issued by the Director of the Central Food Laboratory supersedes the report given by the Public Analyst. The report of the Public Analyst regarding sample of the ice-cream was, therefore, superseded by the certificate issued by the Director of the Central Food Laboratory. Consequently it became immaterial whether or not the report of the Public Analyst regarding the ice-cream sample could be used as evidence of the facts stated therein.

6. So far as the reports of the Public Analyst in respect of samples of curd, butter and milk are concerned, a contention was raised that the said reports could not be used as evidence of the facts stated therein as Shri Sudhamoy Roy was not a Public Analyst on the date the samples were received by him or were caused to be analysed by him as he was appointed a Public Analyst on July 30, 1966 through a notification of that date issued by the Chief Commissioner, Delhi. It was further submitted that though the appointment was notified to be effective from July 20, 1966 yet the notification could only take effect prospectively and not retrospectively.

7. It appears the third question is not capable of a simple reply in the affirmative or negative. It would make all the difference if the appointment of Shri Sudhamoy Roy, through the Chief Commissioner's notification dated July 30, 1966 was a new one. It was, however, submitted by the learned counsel for the Municipal Corporation that Shri Roy was a Public Analyst from December 1964 and after availing of some leave had rejoined his duties on July 20, 1966.

8. Evidently if Shri Sudhamoy Roy was not a Public Analyst for the Delhi Municipal Corporation area on July 25, 1966, he had no authority to receive the samples sent to the Public Analyst on that date or to cause them to be analysed before his appointment as Public Analyst.

In that event even if the reports signed by him after his appointment as a Public Analyst are used as evidence of the fact stated therein, yet their evidentiary value would be seriously affected.

9. Even the counsel for the Municipal Corporation did not urge that the appointment of a Public Analyst can be made with retrospective effect. The stand taken by the learned counsel was that Shri Sudhamoy Roy was appointed Public Analyst for the Municipal Corporation area on December 30, 1964 and had proceeded on leave with effect from May 5, 1966 when Shri Prem Parkash Bhatnagar was appointed Public Analyst for that area for the period of leave in addition to his own duties as a Public Analyst for the New Delhi Municipal Committee area and Delhi Cantt. area. Shri Sudhamoy Roy was stated to have returned from leave and re-joined his duties as Public Analyst with effect from July 20, 1966 and for that reason his appointment as Public Analyst was notified by the Chief Commissioner, Delhi, with effect from July 20, 1966. It was, therefore, urged that though the notification was issued on the 30th of that month it did not amount to making the appointment of Shri Sudhamoy Roy as Public Analyst with retrospective effect but what was intended was to merely notify the fact that Shri Roy had re-joined as Public Analyst from a particular date.

10. Three notifications, as published in the extraordinary issues of the Delhi Gazette, were brought to our notice. One of these notifications, dated December 30, 1964 is about appointment of Shri Sudhamoy Roy as Public Analyst for the Delhi Municipal Corporation area in place of Dr. Kanan. The other notification is dated May 3, 1966 regarding appointment of Shri Prem Parkash Bhatnagar as Public Analyst for the Delhi Municipal Corporation area in addition to his own duties with effect from the 5th May, 1966. The third notification of July 30, 1966 is in the following terms—

"Delhi Administration, Delhi
Notification

Delhi, the 30th July 1966 No. F.32 (2)/66-M & PH— In exercise of the powers conferred by Section 8 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954 (37 of 1954) read with the Government of India, Ministry of Health Notification No. F. 14-46/57-P.H., dated 24th April, 1957, the Chief Commissioner, Delhi, is pleased to appoint Shri Sudhamoy Roy to be Public Analyst for the Delhi Municipal Corporation area in place of Shri Prem Parkash Bhatnagar with effect from 20th July, 1966.

By Order,
D. S. Faujdar, Under Secy."

11. Though in the notifications of the 3rd May and the 30th July, 1966 there was no mention of Shri Sudhamoy Roy proceeding on leave yet from the fact that Shri Prem Parkash Bhatnagar was appointed Public Analyst for the Municipal Corporation area in addition to his own duties it seems to follow that his appointment was a stop-gap arrangement. Moreover as Shri Sudhamoy Roy received the samples on July 25, 1966 he must have re-joined his duties earlier to that date. Under these circumstances the submission made on behalf of the appellant that Shri Sudhamoy Roy was already a Public Analyst and had re-joined his duties on July 20, 1966 appears to be correct. It seems that in substance the notification of July 30, 1966, to which reference was made in the Public Analyst's report, merely notified the fact of Shri Sudhamoy Roy having resumed the functions of the Public Analyst from July 20, 1966 and as such he was properly mentioned to have been appointed from that date. It cannot, therefore, be said that Shri Sudhamoy Roy was not competent to receive samples on July 25, 1966 or to get the analysis caused. The reports purporting to bear his signatures as a Public Analyst and which relate to analysis of curd, milk and butter can be used as evidence of the facts stated therein as provided by sub-sec. (5) of S. 13 of the Act.

12. We next advert to question No. 1. It will be noticed that the matter requiring consideration is as to whether there is a sale for purposes of the Act when food is provided by a hotelier to a guest from whom a consolidated charge is made for room and other amenities, and when no rebate is allowed for any meal which may not be taken by the guest.

13. The term "sale" is defined in Section 2(xiii) of the Act to mean:—

"sale" with its grammatical variations and cognate expressions, means the sale of any article of food, whether for cash or on credit or by way of exchange and whether by wholesale or retail, for human consumption or use, or for analysis, and includes an agreement for sale, an offer for sale, the exposing for sale or having in possession for sale of any such article, and includes also an attempt to sell any such article."

14. When a guest takes a room in a residential hotel and a consolidated charge is made from him for all the amenities provided, including food, it is difficult to say that in terms of the definition of sale as given in the Act there has been sale to him of any article of food. As is made clear in the question the guest is not entitled to any rebate if any meal is not taken by him. If providing food by such a hotelier was to constitute sale then it would follow that the property in the food served would be transferred to the guest. It was stated before us that a guest who does not take any meal cannot ask for the food not consumed by him to be served to a friend or any other person. Even the food which remains un-eaten cannot be carried away by him. There is thus no transfer of the property in the food to the guest unless it is actually consumed by him.

15. The matter came up before the Punjab High Court in the case of M/s. Associated Hotels of India Ltd., Simla v. Excise & Taxation Officer, AIR 1966 Punjab 449, though in connection with liability to tax under the Punjab General Sales Tax Act, 1948. The problem posed was whether the approximate cost of food included in the consolidated charge made by a hotelier from a resident client during his stay in the hotel is liable to tax under the said Act. Narula, J. held that such supply of food did not amount to sale but service, the transaction being indivisible contract of multiple service and did not involve any sale of food. The learned Judge also referred to a judgment of the Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey, Nisky et al v. Childs Co. (No. 49) cited in 130 NLJ 464, and considered that case to be nearest to the point and most helpful. The decision of Narula, J. was upheld by a Bench consisting of Kapoor and Jindra Lal JJ., on a Letters Patent Appeal being filed, State of Punjab v. Associated Hotels of India Ltd., (1967) 20 STC 1 (Punjab). The learned Judges comprising the Bench while dismissing the appeal observed that the view taken by the Single Judge appeared to be "unexceptionable and fully supported by authorities".

16. In the judgment in the case of Nisky et al, 130 NJL 464 referred to above, the observation made in Parker v. Flint, (1669-1732) 12 Mod 254 that an innkeeper does not sell but utters his provisions was referred to with approval and the following passage from Beale's treatise on Innkeepers, S. 169, was quoted:—

"As innkeeper does not lease his room he does not sell the food he supplies to his guests. It is his duty to supply such food as the guest needs, and the corresponding right of the guest to consume the food he needs and to take no more. Having finished his meal he has no right to take food from the table, even the uneaten portion of the food supplied to him. Nor can he claim a certain portion of the food as his own to be handed over to another in case he chooses not to consume it himself."

17. The learned counsel for the appellant contended that the case of Nisky could not be of much help in view of the wide definition of sale, as given in the Act. Reliance was also placed on two cases of the Madras High Court, In re T. S. Ananthanarayana Iyer, AIR 1941 Mad 320 and the Public Prosecutor v. R. Narayanaswami Reddy, (1956) 1 Mad LJ 481. Karnani Properties Ltd. v. Miss Augustine

AIR 1957 SC 309 and Dy. Custodian, Evacuee Property, New Delhi v. Official Receiver of the estate of Daluat Ram Surana, Delhi, AIR 1965 SC 951 were as well cited.

18. Lakshmana Rao, J. in the case of Ananthanarayana Iyer, AIR 1941 Mad 320 did not give any reasons and it appears that storing of ghee for sale in the hotel concerned was not a disputed fact. The case of Narayanaswami Reddy, 1956-1 Mad LJ 481 was not regarding a residential hotel. That case related to Modern Cafe in Tiruvannamalai. Out of the ghee prepared for sale along with the meals samples were taken by a Sanitary Inspector. The sample of ghee sent to the Government Analyst was found to be adulterated. The hotel keeper was acquitted by the trial court on the ground that he was not present in the cafe on the day the samples were taken. Appeal against the order of acquittal was accepted by Ramaswamy, J. as on the facts of the case the master was held to be liable for the acts of his servant. Thus the cases of Ananthanarayana Iyer, AIR 1941 Mad 320 and Narayanaswami Reddy, 1956-1 Mad LJ 481 can be of no help.

19. No assistance can even be derived from the Supreme Court cases on which reliance was sought to be placed by the learned counsel for the appellant. In the case of Karnani Properties Ltd., AIR 1957 SC 309 it was held that the definition of premises set out in the West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1950, was in very wide terms and included not only gardens, grounds and outhouses, if any, appurtenant to a building or a part of a building, but also furniture supplied by the landlord for the tenant's use and any fittings affixed to the building. That case, therefore, depended upon interpretation of the definition of a particular expression as given in the particular enactment which was applicable to the case. The case of Dy. Custodian, Evacuee Property, New Delhi, AIR 1965 SC 951 pertained to certain transfers by intending evacuees before migrating from India, which were held by the Supreme Court to come within the definition of evacuee property. Obviously no advantage can be taken by the appellant from that case as well.

20. It is true that the meaning of the expression "sale" as defined in Section 2(xii) of the Act was considerably widened by including within its ambit an agreement for sale, an offer for sale, the exposing for sale or having in possession for sale. Supply of food by a hotelier to a resident guest from whom only a consolidated charge is made for the room and the other amenities and who is not entitled to rebate for any meal which may not be taken by him is, however, not covered by any portion of the definition of "sale".

21. In determining whether there is a sale of food which is provided by a hotelier under the circumstances enumerated in the first question it is relevant to consider if the hotelier agrees to transfer the property in the food to be supplied to the guest for a price. It was not disputed that there is no separate agreement regarding the supply of food, which is supplied only as part of the service for which a consolidated charge is made. The property in the food supplied as part of service also does not pass to the guest except in that which is actually consumed by him. The food to be supplied is not even specified in advance. What the guest pays is for the service as a whole and it is not possible to split up the charges made from him by saying that a particular portion of it represents the price of food. Moreover as the consolidated charge is for the service as a whole no portion of it can be regarded notionally as price of food even though the hotelier must have also taken into account the cost of food to be supplied by him in fixing the consolidated charge to be made from guests staying in the hotel. In the case of State of Madras v. M/s. Ganon Dunkerley & Co., AIR 1958 SC 560, the Supreme Court held that in a building contract which was "one, entire and indivisible" there was no sale of the material used in such contract.

22. The view taken by Narula, J. in the case of Messrs. Associated Hotels of India Ltd., Simla, AIR 1966 Punj 449 appears to be correct. It may, however, be added that if a residential hotel permits non-residents to have meals against payment or undertakes catering for outsiders, it would not be possible to say which particular portion of any article of food is meant for the use of residents and which is meant for outsiders. In that case the articles of food kept in the hotel may be regarded for sale.

23. For answering the second question it would be necessary to refer to certain provisions of the Act and the rules made thereunder. Section 7 which inter alia prohibits manufacturing for sale, or storing, selling or distributing any adulterated food reads as follows:—

"7. No person shall himself or by any person on his behalf manufacture for sale, or store, sell or distribute—

- (i) any adulterated food;
- (ii) any misbranded food;
- (iii) any article of food for the sale of which a licence is prescribed, except in accordance with the conditions of the licence;
- (iv) any article of food the sale of which is for the time being prohibited by the Food (Health) Authority in the interest of public health; or

(v) any article of food in contravention of any other provision of this Act or of any rules made thereunder."

24. Section 16 provides penalties and the relevant portion thereof is as under:

"16. Penalties.— (1) if any person —

(a) whether by himself or by any other person on his behalf imports into India or manufactures for sale, or stores, sells or distributes any article of food—

(i) which is adulterated or misbranded or the sale of which is prohibited by the Food (Health) authority in the interests of public health; he shall, in addition to the penalty to which he may be liable under the provisions of Section 6, be punishable with imprisonment.

25. In Section 2 (xi) of the Act the expression "premises" has been defined to include any shop, stall, or place where any article of food is sold or manufactured or stored for sale. Section 10 deals with powers of Food Inspectors and authorises them to take samples of any article of food from (i) any person selling such article, (ii) any person who is in the course of conveying, delivering or preparing to deliver such article to a purchaser or consignee, and (iii) a consignee after delivery of any such article to him. By Section 12 a purchaser of any article of food other than a Food Inspector has been given power of having such article analysed by the Public Analyst. Under Rule 9(c) of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules, 1955, one of duties of Food Inspector is to procure and send for analysis, if necessary, samples of any articles of food which he has reason to suspect are being manufactured, stocked or sold or exhibited for sale in contravention of the provisions of the Act or the rules thereunder.

26. There has been some conflict of opinion as to the implications of the expression "store", as used in Sections 7 and 16 of the Act. By differing from the view taken in Municipal Corpn. of Delhi v. Prahlad Singh, Criminal Appeal No. 16-D of 1965, D/- 27-2-1969 (Delhi) another Bench of this Court held in Municipal Corpn. of Delhi v. Jetha Nand, Criminal Appeal No. 100-D of 1964, D/- 13-6-1969 (Delhi) that the absence of the words "for sale" after the word "store" was deliberate and that storing was an offence by itself whether it was for sale or not. Reliance was mainly placed on the judgment of P. B. Mukharji, J. in Shipping & Clearing (Agents) Pvt. Ltd. v. Corpn. of Calcutta, AIR 1967 Cal 110 in which the learned Judge held that storing of an adulterated article of food is by itself an offence and it is not necessary that such storing ought to be for sale before the offence can be said to have been committed. It was further remarked that importing the words such as "for sale" in Sections 7 and 16 after the word "store" would be unjustified legislation on the part of the Court. The same learned Judge in an earlier case, Gopalpur Tea Co., Ltd. v. Corpn. of Calcutta, AIR 1966 Cal 51 had also expressed an opinion that the language of Section 7 prohibited "even storing". In Bherudhan Charadia v. State, AIR 1963 Assam 28 as well Chief Justice G. Mehrotra considered that in Sections 7 and 16 the word "store" is not qualified and mere storing of adulterated ghee was an offence.

27. Food Inspector, Kozhikode v. Punsu Desai, AIR 1959 Ker 190, Narain Das v. State, AIR 1962 All 82, Municipal Board, Faizabad v. Lal Chand Surajmal, AIR 1964 All 199 and Rameshwar Dass Radhey Lal v. State, AIR 1967 Punj 132 are some of the cases in which it was held that the word "store" in Sections 7 and 16 means storing for sale.

28. While interpreting the word "store" as appearing in Sections 7 and 16 the scheme of the Act cannot be lost sight of and a harmonious construction has to be put on it. If storing simpliciter was to attract Sections 7 and 16 then Food Inspectors would have been not only authorised to take samples of any article of food from any person selling such article but also from persons not selling it. If storing simpliciter of the prohibited articles of food was to be an offence under the Act even persons buying such articles from market without knowing that these are adulterated or misbranded would incur liability.

29. In the case of Narain Das, AIR 1962 All 82 V. G. Oak and Kailash Prasad, JJ. took the view that under Section 7 of the Act manufacture of adulterated food is not prohibited and what is prohibited is its manufacture for sale. The learned Judges considered that there appeared no reason why manufacture of adulterated food should be treated differently from its storage. It was further remarked that the expression "or store" is preceded by the words "manufacture for sale" and is followed by "sale" and, therefore, the context in which the word "store" is used indicates that it means storing for sale; the word "store" having taken colour from the expression "manufacture for sale" and "sale" with which it is associated in the section.

30. Maxwell in his book on the Interpretation of Statutes (Twelfth 1969 Edition at page 228) while dealing with the topic of modification of the language to meet the intention stated as under:—

"Where the language of a statute, in its ordinary meaning and grammatical construction, leads to a manifest contradiction of the apparent purpose of the enactment, or to some inconvenience or absurdity which can hardly have been intended, a construction may be put upon it which modifies the meaning of the words and even the structure of the sentence. This may be done by departing from the rules of grammar, by giving an unusual meaning to particular words, or by rejecting them altogether, on the ground that the legislature could not possibly have intended what its words signify, and that the modifications made are mere corrections of careless language and really give the true meaning. Where the main object and intention of a statute are clear, it must not be reduced to a nullity by the draftsman's unskilfulness or ignorance of the law, except in a case of necessity, or the absolute intractability of language used."

Except Sections 7 and 16 wherever the Act refers to storing it is storing for sale. It seems to us that the juxtaposition in which the expression "or store" occurs in Sections 7 and 16 of the Act and the scheme of the Act do not leave any doubt that the intention of the storing being "for sale" was implicit in the word "store" as used in those Sections.

31. Mangal Das Raghavji Ruperal v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1966 SC 128 was also cited at the bar, in which their Lordships of the Supreme Court held that a sale for analysis to a Food Inspector must be regarded as sale within the meaning of the Act. In that case, however, their Lordships of the Supreme Court were not considering the scope of the word "store" as used in Sections 7 and 16 of the Act.

32. We, therefore, answer the questions referred to the Full Bench as follows:—

- (i) There is no sale of food.
- (ii) The word "store" used in Sections 7 and 16 of the Act means storing for sale.
- (iii) "Yes, but the evidentiary value of the report would be seriously affected if the Public Analyst before his appointment as such had received the sample of food and had caused it to be analysed.

33. The case shall now be laid before the Division Bench for disposal of the appeals.

Answers accordingly.

(A) Civil Services — Indian Audit and Accounts Department (Accountant General, Posts and Telegraphs) Transfer of Officers and other Staff Rules 1968, R. 6 — Rules relate to conditions of service — Rules do not confer unfettered discretion in their implementation. (Para 7)

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 309 — Rule-making powers — President and the Legislatures can respectively make rules and statutes to validate retrospectively invalid administrative actions and invalid statutes. (Para 6)

(C) Civil Services — Indian Audit and Accounts Department (Accountant General, Posts and Telegraphs) Transfer of Officers and other Staff Rules (1968) R. 6 — Validation of invalid promotion made under previous Rules — Validation is legal and so not mala fide. (Para 8)

(D) Constitution of India, Art. 309 — Rule-making powers not restricted to rules which are administrative in nature — Authentication of statutory instruments can also be done under Art. 77(2).

Executive power or the executive action of the President in Chapter I of Part V of the Constitution is not restricted to the exercise of powers which are entirely administrative in nature but is broad enough to include rule-making as distinguished from the power to issue ordinances which are Sovereign Legislation and not subordinate legislation like rule-making. So, the authentication of a statutory instrument made by the President under Art. 309, Proviso, has to be done in the same way as an administrative order is authenticated. (Para 13)

(E) Constitution of India, Art. 77(2) — Authentication — Authorities empowered to authenticate, duties of.

All that the authorities empowered to authenticate under Art. 77 (2) is to see that the order to be authenticated is made by the Executive as distinguished from the Legislature or the Judiciary. They have no powers to scrutinize the orders or to refuse authentication on the ground that the contents of the order are not administrative but are legislative in character. (Para 12)

(F) Constitution of India, Art. 77(2) — Authentication — Every type of Order of President has to be authenticated.

All orders made by the President whether acting as the head of the Central Government or otherwise have to be authenticated under Art. 77(2). There is no other provision in the Constitution for authentication of orders made by the President in his personal capacity. (Para 13)

When an order is established to have been made by the President it is neither necessary nor permissible to enquire whether the President was acting as the head of the Union Government or President as such. AIR 1967 SC 1145, Rel. on. (Para 16)

V. S. DESHPANDE, J.:— A constitutional question of first impression as to the nature and meaning of executive power of the President under the Constitution has arisen among other questions in this case.

2. The accounts work of the main Department of Posts and Telegraphs used to be done by the petitioners designated as Senior Accountants governed by the Posts and Telegraphs Accountants' Service (Recruitment) Rules, 1958 at Annexure R-2 of the written statement as amended on 29th March 1963 at Annexure R-3. The accounts work in the Tele-communications Branch of the Department of Posts and Telegraphs was, on the other hand, done by the personnel of the Audit department called the SAS

Accountants. The recruitment to the grade of Accounts Officers used to be made under the General Central Service Class II (Accounts/Administrative Officers) Recruitment Rules, 1968, dated 15th February 1968 at Annexure R-5 to the written statement. Under these rules, the Senior Accountants of the Posts and Telegraphs Department with five years' approved service in the grade were alone eligible for promotion as Accounts Officers.

3. On 27th March 1968, as per letter at Annexure C to the writ petition, the Government decided that the accounts work of the Tele-communications Branch of the Posts and Telegraphs Department should be transferred to the Accounts
Department of the Posts and Telegraphs
Board. Along with this work, the SAS Accountants belonging to the Audit department were also to be transferred to the Posts and Telegraphs Department.
The terms and conditions of the transfer were settled by the Government on 16th May 1968 as per letter at Annexure D to the writ petition. The SAS Accountants formerly of the Audit Department were equated with the Senior Accountants of the Posts and Telegraphs Department and were to be designated as Senior Accountants. As per para (11) of Annexure D the inter se seniority of the SAS Accountants formerly of the Audit Department vis-a-vis the Senior Accountants of the Posts and Telegraphs Department was to be fixed according to the length of the approved continuous service in the corresponding grades. Acting on this basis, on 6th July 1968, as per Annexure H, the Posts and Telegraphs Department appointed Sarvashri S. Jayaraman and
V. S. Srinivasan who were formerly SAS
Accountants in the Audit Department but who were since then transferred to the Posts and Telegraphs Department along with the accounts work of the Tele-communications Branch of the Posts and Telegraphs Department were on promotion as Accounts Officers.

4. The petitioners who have been Senior Accountants of the Posts and Telegraphs Department from before the integration have filed these writ petitions (Civil Writ Petitions 560 and 561 of 1968) challenging the promotion of Sarvashri
S. Jayaraman and V. S. Srinivasan as Accounts Officers on the following grounds, namely:—

(1) The promotion was contrary to the statutory rules, namely, General Central Service Class II (Accounts/Administrative Officers) Recruitment Rules, 1968, dated 15-2-1968 at Annexure R-5 which provided for the promotion of only the Senior Accountants of the Posts and Telegraphs Department to the grade of Accounts Officers;

- (2) The promotion could not be retrospectively validated by the two sets of statutory rules subsequently made by the Government, namely, (a) the Indian Audit and Accounts Department (Accountant General, Posts and Telegraphs) Transfer of Officers and other Staff Rules, 1958 dated 30-8-1958 at Annexure R-6 and (b) the Indian Posts and Telegraphs Accounts and Finance Service Class II (Recruitment) Rules, 1958, dated 23-11-1958 at Annexure R-7.

- (3) The equation of the SAS Accountants formerly of the Audit department with the Senior Accountants of the Posts and Telegraphs department for the purpose of promotion to the grade of Accounts Officers is discriminatory against the petitioners contrary to Arts. 14 and 16 of the Constitution.

5. Let us consider the above contentions in the order in which they have been set out.

6. On 6th July 1958, the Posts and Telegraphs Accounts Officers (Recruitment) Rules, 1958 at Annexure R-5 were in force. The Government could not therefore legally appoint Sarvashri Jayaraman and Srinivasan as Accounts Officers inasmuch as their transfer to the Posts and Telegraphs department, their designation as Senior Accountants and the fixation of their seniority vis-a-vis the pre-existing Senior Accountants of the Posts and Telegraphs Department was all done by administrative orders at Annexures C and D to the writ petition. These administrative orders were strictly speaking inconsistent with the statutory rules at Annexure R-5. They could not have the effect of amending the statutory rules. They could not, therefore, prevail against the statutory rules. The result was that strictly speaking the promotion of Sarvashri Jayaraman and Srinivasan being contrary to the statutory rules, was illegal and, therefore, initially invalid.

7. The Government had however made the promotion only on a purely ad hoc temporary basis. Apparently the Government did not have time to amend the existing statutory rules before actually making the promotion. But the Government soon put the administrative orders at Annexures C and D to the writ petition on statutory footing by promulgating the Indian Audit and Accounts Department (Accountant General, Posts and Telegraphs) Transfer of Officers and other Staff Rules, 1958, on 30-8-1958 as per Annexure R-6 to the written statement. Under Rule 1(2) thereof, these rules shall be deemed to have come into force on the first day of March 1958. It is now settled by the Supreme Court decision in B. S. Vadera v. Union of India, AIR 1969 SC 118 that the President acting under the proviso to Art. 309 can give retrospective operation to the rules relating to the conditions of service. Shri P. P. Rao, learned counsel for the petitioners, relied upon the Supreme Court decision in State v. Padmanabhacharya, (1966) 1 SCR 994 = (AIR 1966 SC 602) to urge that the rule at Annexure R-6 are not rules relating to the conditions of service at all but were made only to validate the promotion made on 6th July 1958 which was ab initio void. A look at the content of the rules at Annexure R-6 however shows that they genuinely related to conditions of service. Rule 2 authorises the transfer to the Posts and Telegraphs department of all persons who had been previously engaged in the accounting work relating to the Telecommunications Branch. The selection of persons for such a transfer was to be made by the Comptroller and Auditor General of India.

Shri P. P. Rao attacked this rule as giving unfettered discretion to the Comptroller and Auditor General. But the discretion is subject to the guidelines contained in Rule 2 itself. The transfer is to be effected according to the decision of the Government contained in the letter dated 1st March 1958. Secondly the transfer is to be of such officers and staff which shall, as far as possible, be persons who at the time of the transfer were engaged in the accounting work relating to the Telecommunications Branch which work itself was being transferred to the Posts and Telegraphs Department. Thus only those persons who were actually doing the work of the Telecommunications Branch were transferred along with the work itself. The Comptroller and Auditor General had thus little or no discretion left in choosing the persons to be transferred.

Further, the terms and the conditions of the transfer were to be agreed upon by the Comptroller and Auditor General of India on the one hand and the Secretary to the Government of India in the Department of Communications (Posts and Telegraphs) on the other hand, these being two departmental heads representing the two sets of employees to be integrated by the transfer. Rule 3 says that the transfers effected from 1st March 1958 onwards before the date of the publication of these rules (30-8-1958) shall be deemed to have been made in pursuance of these rules. The decision in Padmanabhacharya's case, 1966-1 SCR 994 is, therefore, inapplicable to the present case just as it was held inapplicable to the rules framed in Vadera's case in para 26 of the report in AIR 1969 SC 118.

8. Shri P. P. Rao, however, strongly attacked the transfer rules dated 30-8-1968 at Annexure R-6 as being mala fide. He argued that the sole purpose of these was to defeat the writ petitions which had already been filed. He argued that the Government should have first cancelled the promotion made on 6th July, 1968 and passed fresh orders of promotion after the promulgation of the transfer rules dated 30-8-1968. We are unable to agree. The course of action suggested by Shri P. P. Rao was certainly open to the Government. But it would have been inconvenient and roundabout. The officers promoted would have been reverted for no fault of theirs and the action of the Government in promoting them would have had to be admitted to be illegal. The Government, therefore, chose an alternative method of achieving the same result by making the transfer rules retrospective.

In State of Madhya Pradesh v. Vishnu Prasad Sharma, AIR 1966 SC 1593, the administrative action of the Government in acquiring certain lands was struck down as being contrary to the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894. Thereupon the Land Acquisition Act was amended and the administrative action consisting of acquisition of land was retrospectively validated. The legality of such retrospective validation was upheld by the Supreme Court in Udai Ram Sharma v. Union of India, (1968) 3 SCR 41 at pp. 62 to 67 = (AIR 1968 SC 1138 at pp. 1150 to 1152) after a review of the case law. Mitter J. speaking for the majority of the Court pointed out that the Legislature may adopt either of the following two methods to validate an invalid administrative action, namely, (1) to give retrospective effect to the legislation under which the administrative action would have been valid and (2) to declare that invalid action shall be deemed to have been validly taken. We see no reason why the same principle should not apply to the making of rules by the President to validate an invalid administrative action retrospectively. In the present case, the Government has adopted the first method, namely, of giving retrospective effect to the rules at Annexure R-6. The learned Chief Justice of India speaking for the Court in Shri Prithvi Cotton Mills Ltd. v. Broach Borough Municipality, AIR 1970 SC 192 para 4, made the following observations about validating statutes in general:

"When a legislature sets out to validate a tax declared by a Court to be illegally collected under ineffective or invalid law, the cause for ineffectiveness or invalidity must be removed before validation can be said to take place effectively."

The validation can, therefore, be not only of invalid administrative action but also of an invalid statute and both can be done retrospectively.

The Government was, therefore, justified in validating its invalid administrative action by giving retrospective effect to the rules at Annexure R-6. The question of mala fides simply does not arise. It would not be proper to insist that the Government should not exercise the power of giving retrospective effect to the rules though the Government undoubtedly possessed such power. The obvious reason for giving retrospective effect to the rules was to validate the promotions made by the Government in anticipation of the promulgation of the rules. It cannot be doubted that the legal Advisers of the Government must have advised the Government that statutory rules must be amended soon to regularise the ad hoc and temporary promotions made on 6th July, 1968. They must have also pointed out to the Government that in the absence of such new statutory rules, the promotions were invalid in the eye of law. The application by the petitioners that the respondents be asked to produce the files containing the deliberations and decisions to promulgate the new rules on 30-8-1968 was intended to expose the mistake committed by the Government and the admissions which may have been contained in the files that the action of the Government was legally wrong and had therefore to be validated. But we are prepared to assume all this to be true. The mere exposure of the mistake made by the Government would not help the petitioners because the Government subsequently validated their action retrospectively. We therefore disallow the application made by the petitioners for the production of these documents as they are not relevant for our purpose. We also hold that the retrospective validation of their action by the Government does not in any way amount to bad faith.

9. Shri Rao then advanced a novel argument against the validity of the transfer rules at Annexure R-6 as also the subsequent rules dated 23-11-1968 at Annexure R-7 which formally superseded the rules dated 15th February 1968 and provided for the promotion of both the transferred personnel as well as the pre-existing personnel as Accounts Officers. These rules were framed by the President under the proviso to Article 309 of the Constitution. In Jayantilal Amrit Lal Shodhan v. F. N. Rana, (1964) 5 SCR 294 = (AIR 1964 SC 648), Shah J. speaking for the majority of the Court at pp. 307 and 308 (of SCR) = (at p. 656 of AIR), drew a distinction between two kinds of powers exercised by the President, namely, (1) powers of the Central Government which may be entrusted to a State Government or an officer of the State or to other officers; and (2) powers which are not powers of the Union Government but are vested in the President and which are incapable of being delegated or entrusted to any other body or authority. The power to make rules under the proviso to Article 309 was placed in the second category to be exercised by the President and not to be entrusted or delegated to any other body or authority.

Shri P. P. Rao points out that the rules at Annexures R-6 and R-7 are not signed by the President himself. They are expressed to be made by the President but purport to be authenticated by officers of the Central Government apparently under Article 77(2) of the Constitution. But, says Mr. Rao, Article 77 like the preceding Articles 53(1) and 73(1) applies only to exercise of executive power of the Government of India. These articles do not authorise the authentication of the rules at Annexures R-6 and R-7 firstly because the rules are not made by the President as the head of the Union of India but as the President and secondly because the authentication under Article 77(2) can be made only of executive orders and instruments but not of rules which are legislative in character.

10. The rules at R-6 and R-7 are undoubtedly an exercise of legislative power i.e. rule-making or subordinate legislation by the President. These rules govern the "conditions of service of persons appointed to public services and posts in connection with the affairs of the Union" within the meaning of Article 309. Article 309 itself is a part of Chapter XIV of the Constitution which deals with "Services under the Union and the State". These services are therefore of the Central Government and not of the President as such. It would appear therefore, with respect, that the point emphasised by Shah J. is that this power of the President was not such as could be entrusted or delegated by him to some other authority. His Lordship did not say that the services for whom the rules under the proviso to Article 309 are made do not belong to the Union and belong to the President as such. It would appear, therefore, that these rules are made by the President as the head of the Union of India for the services of the Union of India though on principle this function of the President, being legislative in character, could not be entrusted or delegated by him to any other authority except in so far as the proviso to Article 309 expressly provides that the President may direct some other person to make such rules.

11. The legal position may be considered from two points of view, namely, (1) that the President acts as the head of the Union Government. In making these rules or (2) that he does so as a persona designata. If he acts as the head of the Central Government in making these rules, then the provisions of Chapter I Part V of the Constitution would be applicable to the exercise of this function by the President. Shri Rao however, argues against this on the ground that the rule-making is a legislative function and therefore these provisions do not apply to the exercise of this function by the President. We appreciate this argument. It is necessary to consider the scheme of Part V of the Constitution. The title of Part V is "The Union" namely, the Union of India. It is divided into four chapters. Chapter I deals with the "Executive". Chapter II with the "Parliament" and Chapter IV with the "Union Judiciary". The legislative powers proper i.e., the sovereign power to make ordinances equal in status to parliamentary statutes is dealt with separately in Chapter III. The power of the President to make rules either under the Constitution or under a parliamentary legislation is not covered by Chapter III. It is an administrative power though given by a statute. This is why rules are called by some authors "administrative quasi legislation" or "subordinate legislation". The power to make such rules is not covered by Chapter III. This power is covered by Chapter I as it is analogous to administrative power in the sense that it is a power exercised by the executive. The division of the Union of India is made into three departments or branches of the State, namely, the executive department, the legislative department and the judicial department — all three constituting the State or the Union of India. Such a division is different from the separation of powers exercised by the different branches of the State, namely, executive power, legislative power and judicial power. This latter division rests on the nature or quality of the function performed by the Government or the department concerned.

The distinction between legislative, administrative, judicial and quasi-judicial powers may be relevant in a totally different context, such as judicial review, etc. But Part V is not concerned with the nature or the quality of the powers exercised by the Executive, the Parliament and the Union Judiciary as observed by the Supreme Court at page 306 (of SCR) = (at p. 655 of AIR) of Jayantilal's case referred to above as follows:— "it cannot however be assumed that the legislative functions are exclusively performed by the Legislature and executive functions by the Executive and Judicial functions by the Judiciary alone. The Constitution has not made an absolute or rigid division of functions between the three agencies of the State. To the Executive exercise of functions legislative or judicial are often entrusted."

12. Under Article 53(1) the executive power of the Union shall be vested in the President and shall be exercised by him either directly or through officers subordinate to him in accordance with the Constitution. Under Article 73(1) "subject to the provisions of this Constitution, the executive power of the Union shall extend to the matters with respect to which Parliament has power to make laws". Under Article 77(1) "all executive action of the Government of India shall be expressed to be taken in the name of the President."

What is the meaning of the expressions "executive power" and "executive action" in the above provisions of the Constitution? They can mean only one of the following two things, namely:—

- (1) the power or the action exercised or taken by the executive department of the State, or
- (2) only such power as is administrative in nature as distinguished from legislative or judicial power exercised by the Executive.

The latter meaning could be placed on these provisions only if Chapter I of Part V of the Constitution were concerned with the distinction between different kinds of powers such as judicial, legislative and executive according to the quality or the content of the power. But such a distinction has no relevance to Chapter I of Part V of the Constitution inasmuch as the only division contemplated by Part V is between the three great departments of the State, namely, the Executive, the Legislature and the Judiciary, irrespective of the kinds of powers which may be exercised by each of them. It would follow, therefore, that the expressions "executive power" and "executive action" in this context mean the power or the action of the Executive. The adjective "executive" denotes that part of the State which is exercising the power. It is the source of the power which is designated thereby and not the nature or the quality of it. Therefore, so long as the source or the author of the power is the Executive, the provisions of Chapter I of Part V of the Constitution would apply whether the nature of the power is strictly administrative or not. Therefore, when Article 77(2) says that "orders and other instruments made and executed in the name of the President shall be authenticated in such manner as may be specified in rules to be made by the President", all orders and instruments made by the President are contemplated.

It is immaterial if a particular order or instrument is administrative or rule-making, that is, subordinate legislation in character. The very purpose of Article 77(2) is to enable certain authorised officers to authenticate the orders and instruments on the sole ground that they are made in exercise of the executive power of the Government of India. All that the officers have to see is that the order is made by the Executive as distinguished from the Legislature or the Judiciary. They do not have to scrutinize the nature or the contents of the order. In fact, they would not have the power to sit in judgment over such orders of the Government. It is not open to these authorised officers to refuse to authenticate an order of the Government on the ground that the contents of the order are not administrative but are legislative in character. Article 77 would be unworkable if every order and instrument would have to be scrutinized by the authorised officers with a view to determine if it is administrative in nature. In fact, some orders would be partly administrative and partly legislative and it would be impossible for anyone to decide whether it should be regarded as executive or legislative only.

The provisions of Article 77(2) are fundamental and have to be broadly construed. To construe them narrowly would be to defeat their very purpose and to subject action taken thereunder to the uncertainty of challenges and litigation. This is why Article 77(2) further enacts that "the validity of an order or instrument which is so authenticated shall not be called in question on the ground that it is not an order or instrument made or executed by the President." We are, therefore, of the view that the executive power or the executive action of the President in Chapter I of Part V of the Constitution is not restricted to the exercise of powers which are entirely administrative in nature but is broad enough to include rule-making as distinguished from the power to issue ordinances which are Sovereign Legislation and not subordinate legislation like rule-making. Therefore, the authentication of a statutory instrument made by the President in exercise of the powers conferred on him by the proviso to Article 309 has to be authenticated under Article 77(2) of the Constitution in the same way as an administrative order made by him has to be authenticated thereunder.

13. Let us now assume that the rules made under the proviso to Article 309 are made by the President not as a head of the Central Government but as a persona designata. There is no provision either in the Constitution or outside as to how orders made by the President as such are to be authenticated. The only provision is Article 77(2). It would be reasonable to conclude, therefore, that all orders made by the President whether acting as the head of the Central Government or otherwise have to be authenificated under Article 77(2) of the Constitution.

14. Shri Rao says that, except according to the proviso to Article 309, the power of the President to make rules thereunder cannot be delegated by him to any person or authority. As the President has not delegated this power to any other authority, the rules at R-6 and R-7 could not be issued under the signatures of the officers inasmuch as these officers have not been delegated the power to make these rules by the President. This argument proceeds on a misconception. There is a basic distinction between authentication of the order made in the name of the President by an authorised officer and action taken by a person or an authority to whom the President has delegated any of his powers.

Article 77(2) deals with authentication of the powers of the President and not with orders made by the delegates of the President. This is why the orders are expressed to be made by the President. Instead of being signed by the President personally they are authenticated by officers who are also a part of the Government of India to show that they are executed by the President himself. This is the significance of the provision in Article 77(2) that "the validity of an order or instrument which is so authenticated shall not be called in question on the ground that it is not an order or instrument made or executed by the President."

15. In Emperor v. Sibnath Banerji, AIR 1945 PC 156, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council had to consider Section 49(1) of the Government of India Act, 1935, which in the sphere of Provinces (now States under the Constitution) corresponded with Article 154(1) of the Constitution. In the Union field, it corresponds to Article 53(1) of the Constitution. In connection with this provision, their Lordships observed at page 162 column 2 of the report as follows:—

"Their Lordships would also add, on this contention, that sub-section (5) of Section 2 (of the Defence of India Act) provides a means of delegation in the strict sense of the word, namely, a transfer of the power or duty to the officer or authority defined in the sub-section, with a corresponding divestiture of the Governor of any responsibility in the matter, whereas under Section 49(1) of the Act of 1935 the Governor remains responsible for the action of his subordinates taken in his name".

The implication is that there is no delegation when the Governor remains responsible for the action of his subordinates taken in his name. In M/s. Bijoya Lakshmi Cotton Mills Ltd. v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1967 SC 1145 it was held by the Supreme Court that unless Rules of business required the Minister to deal with a matter himself, an Assistant Secretary could deal with it on behalf of the Government. The personal satisfaction of the Governor was not needed.

16. To sum up, therefore, when we have an order or an instrument before us which is expressed to be made in the name of the President and which is duly authenticated then, in our view, the order or instrument "shall not be called in question on the ground that it is not an order or instrument made or executed by the President" in view of Article 77(2) of the Constitution. Since the order is thus established to have been made by the President, it is neither necessary nor permissible to enquire whether the President was acting as the head of the Union Government or as President as such.

17. The terms and conditions on which the Audit personnel doing the accounts work of the Tele-communications Branch has been integrated with the pre-existing Posts and Telegraphs Department's Senior Accountants are eminently just and fair. The basis for the fixation of the seniority between the SAS Accountants and the pre-existing P. & T. Senior Accountants is simple, namely, the length of approved continuous service in the corresponding grades which carried the same pay scales. Shri Rao pointed out to the representation made by the P. & T. Senior Accountants at Annexure I to the writ petition. In our view, it would not be relevant to look into the previous history of the personnel belonging to these two different services. The only relevant consideration is the position occupied by the SAS Accountants vis-a-vis the P. & T. Senior Accountants at the time of the integration. At that time, they were both enjoying the same pay-scale. The SAS Accountants were actually doing the accounts work of the Tele-communications Branch. This work has been transferred to the Posts and Telegraphs department. Necessarily therefore the SAS Accountants doing that work had to be transferred to the Posts and Telegraphs department along with the work. They have also to be equated with the P. & T. Senior Accountants who are doing equivalent work in the Posts and Telegraphs department. It is because the SAS Accountants were doing the work now transferred to the Posts and Telegraphs department that the SAS Accountants are entitled to promotion as Accounts Officers in the same way that the P. & T. Senior Accountants are so entitled.

Therefore, the same criteria have been applied to both these sets of employees for promotion, namely, five years of approved service in the grades which have had the same pay-scale. It is not permissible to enquire any further into the history of the two services. The SAS Accountants themselves may have a grievance against their transfer to the Posts and Telegraphs department as their prospects in the Indian Audit and Accounts department may have been better and we understood during the argument that some of them had actually filed a writ petition in the Punjab and Haryana High Court complaining against their transfer to the Posts and Telegraphs department. But that writ petition failed. The present writ petitions by the P. & T. Senior Accountants would also fail inasmuch as the past history of the Services is not material at all. Whatever may be the previous history and whatever may be the reasons by which the SAS Accountants and the P. & T. Senior Accountants came to occupy their present position at the time of the integration, once they occupied the posts of SAS Accountants and the P. & T. Senior Accountants which had the same scales of pay and which had the same work, they are bound to be equated by the integration.

If the integration in any way affected their chances of promotion or even resulted in the reversion of some of them, the chances of promotion are not conditions of service and the reversion is not a reduction in rank. State of Mysore v. G. N. Purohit, 1967 SLR 753 (SC); State of Orissa v. Durga Charan Das, (1966) 2 SCR 907 = (AIR 1966 SC 1547); and State of Punjab v. Jagdip Singh, AIR 1964 SC 521 approving the decision in Devasahayam's case reported in AIR 1958 Mad 53 and AIR 1959 Mad 1. We therefore find that the integration did not involve any discrimination against the petitioners.

18. During the course of argument, the rules promulgated by the Government on 23rd November 1968 were produced by the learned counsel for the respondents. We took judicial notice of the same and exhibited them as Annexure R-7 to the written statement. Even in the absence of these rules, the decision of these writ petitions would have been the same. For the sake of completeness of the record, however, we have taken them on record as we are convinced that no prejudice is caused to the petitioners thereby.

19. The writ petitions are therefore dismissed but in the circumstances of the case we make no order as to costs.

Petitions dismissed.

General with Devinder K. Kapur, for Respondent.

JAGJIT SINGH, J.: Writ Petns. Nos. 699 and 709 were heard together as the facts relating to those cases are nearly the same and the points involved are exactly identical.

2. The petitioner company in writ No. 699 is the Saraswati Industrial Syndicate Ltd., Yamunanagar District Ambala in Haryana State. That company owns Saraswati Sugar Mills and is engaged in the manufacture of sugar. The petitioner company in writ No. 709 is the Delhi Cloth & General Mills Co., Ltd., Bara Hindu Rao, Delhi, which is also a public limited company having two sugar factories in the District of Meerut, known as Daurala Sugar Works and Mowana Sugar Works.

3. Both the petitioner-companies manufactured sugar, an essential commodity for purposes of the Essential Commodities Act, 1955 (hereinafter referred to for facility of reference as "the Act"), during the sugar season of the year 1968-69. The factories of the companies are situate in what was demarcated as Zone III.

4. On December 12, 1968 the Ministry of Food, Agriculture, Community Development and Co-operation (Department of Food) issued Notification No. G.S.R. 2181/Ess.Com./Sugar under sub-section (3C) of Section 3 of the Act. By that Notification the Central Government determined the ex-factory price payable for I.S.S. grade of sugar produced in the year 1968-69 by all vacuum pan sugar factories situate in Zone III and required to be sold by the Government under clause (f) of sub-section (2) of Section 3 at Rs. 164.22 per quintal. The price so determined was revised and raised to Rs. 169.21 to meet incidence of increased excise duty by a subsequent Notification, No. G.S.R. 764/Ess.Com./Sugar dated March 5, 1969. Again there was re-determination of price for sugar produced by factories in Zone III at Rs. 177.74 by Notification No. G.S.R. 1835/Ess. Com./Sugar, dated July 29, 1969.

5. A further Notification No. G.S.R. 1839/Ess. Com./Sugar, dated August 1, 1969, was issued by the Ministry of Food, Agriculture, Community Development and Co-operation (Department of Food), which provided for insertion of the following paragraph in the above-referred to Notification of July 29, 1969:—

"2. Notwithstanding the supersession of the notification of the Government of India in the Ministry of Food, Agriculture, Community Development and Co-operation (Department of Food) No. G.S.R. 764/Ess. Com./Sugar, dated the 5th March, 1969 (hereinafter referred to as the said notification) by this notification, any sugar required to be supplied under an order issued under clause (f) of sub-section (2) of Section 3 of the Essential Commodities Act, 1955 (10 of 1955) at the price determined in the said notification shall be supplied in accordance with the terms and conditions including terms and conditions as to price specified in such Order as if the said notification had continued in force and this notification had not been issued."

The Notification of August 1, 1969 was forwarded to the various Associations of Sugar Mills with a circular letter, dated August 6, 1969, in which also it was mentioned: "the revised prices of levy sugar notified on 29th July, 1969 will not be applicable to sugar despatched or to be despatched against allotment orders issued by the Directorate of Sugar and Vanaspati prior to 29th July, 1969 and the prices applicable in such cases will continue to be those fixed under Notification No. G.S.R. 764/Ess. Com./Sugar, dated the 5th March, 1969". The said Notification of August 1, 1969 and the circular letter were stated to have come to the notice of the Delhi Cloth & General Mills Co., Ltd. on the 11th of that month.

6. On July 1, 1969, the petitioner-companies had already been required by the Government of India, under clause (f) of sub-section (2) of Section 3 of the Act to sell certain quantities of sugar to the Governments of Haryana and Uttar Pradesh or their nominees, subject to the conditions which were specified in the orders issued for the purpose. The delivery of sugar was to commence immediately and was to be completed within forty-five days from the date of the orders. The price to which the producers were entitled was to be as provided in the above referred Notification of March 5, 1969.

7. Part of the supplies were made by the petitioner-companies in pursuance of the orders of July 1, 1969 before the Notification of July 29, 1969 was issued determining the price at Rs. 177.74 per quintal instead of Rs. 169.21 per quintal as provided in the Notification of March 5, 1969.

8. It was averred in the petitions that the price determined by the Notification of July 29, 1969, was the final price after the close of the sugar season on the basis of the actual recovery and duration of the season without any adjustment for the lower price fixed previously on estimated basis. After the fixation of the final price the Central Government was stated to be not competent to revise the price for sugar to be supplied after the date of such determination. It was as well mentioned that the Notification of March 5, 1969 having been superseded by the new Notification of July 29, 1969 could not be revived under the provisions of sub-section (3C) of Section 3 of the Act by issuing another Notification dated August 1, 1969.

The Notification of August 1, 1969 and the directions contained in the circular letter of August 6, 1969, requiring the petitioner-companies to supply sugar at the price determined by the earlier Notification of March 5, 1969 were dubbed as arbitrary, without jurisdiction and authority of law and to be violative of Article 31 of the Constitution in so far as these required the petitioner-companies to part with their property without the authority of law. The petitioner-companies, therefore, desired issue of a writ, order or direction in the nature of certiorari for quashing the Notification dated August 1, 1969 and the directions contained in the circular letter dated August 6, 1969 and also issue of mandamus directing the Union of India, the respondent in the case to cancel or withdraw the said Notification and the circular letter.

9. Some of the relevant provisions of the Act may be noticed at this stage. "Essential commodity" is defined in Section 2(a). Sugar being one of the food-stuffs is covered by that definition. Section 3 relates to powers of the Central Government to control production, supply and distribution etc. of essential commodities. Sub-section (1) provides that if the Central Government is of opinion that it is necessary or expedient so to do for maintaining or increasing supplies of any essential commodity or for securing their equitable distribution and availability at fair prices, it may by order provide for regulating or prohibiting the production, supply and distribution thereof and trade and commerce therein.

Sub-section (2), which is without prejudice to the generality of the powers conferred by sub-section (1), specifies certain matters which may be provided by order to be made. Clause (f) of sub-section (2) enables an order to be made requiring any person holding any stock in essential commodity to sell the whole or a specified part of the stock to the Central Government or a State Government or to an officer or agent of such Government or to such other person or class of persons and in such circumstances as may be specified in the order. Sub-section (3C) reads as under:—

“(3C). Where any producer is required by an order made with reference to clause (f) of sub-section (2) to sell any kind of sugar (whether to the Central Government or a State Government or to an officer or agent of such Government or to any other person or class of persons) and either no notification in respect of such sugar has been issued under sub-section (3A) or any such notification, having been issued, has ceased to remain in force by efflux of time, then, notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (3), there shall be paid to that producer an amount therefor which shall be calculated with reference to such price of sugar as the Central Government may, by order, determine, having regard to—

- (a) the minimum price, if any, fixed for sugarcane by the Central Government under this section;
  - (b) the manufacturing cost of sugar;
  - (c) the duty or tax, if any, paid or payable thereon; and
  - (d) the securing of a reasonable return on the capital employed in the business of manufacturing sugar,
- and different prices may be determined from time to time for different areas or for different factories or for different kinds of sugar.

Explanation:— For the purposes of this sub-section, producer means a person carrying on the business of manufacturing sugar.”

10. Mr. Chagla, learned counsel for the petitioner-companies, submitted that the material date for payment of price to the producer is the date of delivery and not the date of allotment orders. It was, therefore, contended that for deliveries made after July 29, 1969, the producer was entitled to price as determined by the Notification of that date. There could not be two prices, it was urged, for deliveries of sugar made after July 29, 1969. According to the learned counsel the crushing season having come to an end in June the determination of price by the Notification of July 29, 1969 was final and no change could be made in the price so determined by the subsequent Notification of August 1, 1969, more particularly when the change was given retrospective effect.

11. It will, however, be seen that the Notification of August 1, 1969 did not change the price as notified on July 29, 1969 with retrospective effect or even otherwise. It sought to clarify, by addition of a paragraph in the order of July 29, 1969, that any sugar required to be supplied, under an order issued under clause (f) of sub-section (2) of Section 3 of the Act before supersession of the Notification of March 5, 1969, shall be supplied in accordance with the terms and conditions including terms and conditions as to price specified in such order. In other words it merely meant that after the issue of Notification dated March 5, 1969 and before the issue of Notification dated July 29, 1969, any orders made by the Central Government, under clause (f) of sub-section (2) of Section 3, to producers for selling stocks of sugar had to be executed on the terms mentioned in those orders including the price specified therein. As in the allotment orders made on July 1, 1969 it was specifically mentioned that the producer shall be entitled to price as determined by Notification of March 5, 1969, the Notification of August 1, 1969 did not in any way affect the price to be paid for supplies of sugar required to be made with reference to allotment orders issued before July 29, 1969.

12. We are unable to agree with the learned counsel for the petitioner-companies that the price to be paid was the price prevalent on the date of making delivery. Orders for sale of sugar are issued by the Central Government keeping in view actual stocks with producers. These supplies are to be made on the terms specified in the orders. The price to be paid is that which stands determined on the date an order is made under clause (f) of sub-section (2) of Section 3 of the Act. Any re-determination of price subsequent to the making of such an order can only affect supplies to be made with reference to allotment orders issued after the re-determination of price.

13. The above view follows from the provisions of sub-section (3C) of Section 3 of the Act. That sub-section clearly provides that where any producer is required by an order made with reference to clause (f) of sub-section (2) to sell any kind of sugar then “there shall be paid to that producer an amount therefor which shall be calculated with reference to such price of sugar as the Central Government may, by order determine". A producer is, therefore, only entitled to the price which stands determined on the date on which he is required by an order made with reference to Cl. (f) of sub-section (2) to seti any kind of sugar. The date of delivery is of no consequence and if before the supplies or part of the supplies are delivered a different price is determined, the newly determined price does not affect the supplies made or to be made in pursuance of previous orders.

14. The learned Solicitor General urged on behalf of the respondent, and it seems to us quite justifiably, that the Notification of August 1, 1969, did not make any material modification or change in the Notification of July 29, 1969 and was issued to clarify the existing position. It was stated that even if the Notification of August 1, 1969 had not been issued and had not been circulated through a letter of August 6, 1969 the liability of the petitioner-companies to complete delivery of sugar of the required kind at the price determined by Notification of March 5, 1969, pursuant to allotment orders of July 1, 1969 made under Cl. (f) of sub-section (2) of S. 3 of the Act, would have remained unaffected.

15. By Notification of August 1, 1969 different prices were not determined in respect of sugar required to be sold by producers with reference to orders made after July 29, 1969, under Cl. (f) of sub-section (2) of S. 3 of the Act. For all such allotment orders price was to be paid as determined by the Notification of July 29, 1969. It was only in respect of orders made under Cl. (f) of sub-section (2) of Section 3 before July 29, 1969 that price was to be paid at the rate which stood determined when the allotment orders were issued.

16. We are, therefore, of opinion that the Notification of August 1, 1969 and the circular letter of August 6, 1969 did not materially modify or affect the determination of price made by Notification of July 29, 1969 as the said determination of price was with reference to orders to be made thereafter under Cl. (f) of sub-section (2) of S. 3 of the Act, for selling any kind of sugar whether to the Central Government or a State Govt. or to an officer or agent of such Government or any other person or class of persons. The impugned Notification and the circular letter appear to have been issued by way of abundant caution and even if these had not been issued supplies made in pursuance of allotment orders of July 1, 1969 were to be paid for at the price determined by Notification of March 5, 1969.

The Notification of August 1, 1969 and the circular letter dated August 6, 1969 cannot therefore, be regarded to have been issued arbitrarily or without jurisdiction. At least these did not in any way affect the existing liabilities or rights of the petitioner-companies regarding the allotment orders of July 1, 1969. Thus the grievance of the petitioner-companies that they were made to part with sugar at a somewhat lower price without the authority of law or that there was any contravention of Art. 31 of the Constitution is without any real basis. For Zone IV price was determined by the Notification of July 29, 1969 at the rate of Rs. 153.75 per quintal instead of Rs. 158.20 per quintal as was determined by the Notification of March 5, 1969. If the price determined by Notification of July 29, 1969 for Zone III, in which sugar mills of the petitioner-companies are situate, had been lower than the price determined by Notification of March 5, 1969 the petitioner-companies, obviously, would have been entitled to be paid the higher price on the ground that the supplies were to be paid for at the price which stood determined when allotment orders were issued to them.

17. Another contention raised on behalf of the petitioner-companies was that sale of sugar could only be completed on delivery being made and the sale price must, therefore, have reference to the date of delivery and not the date of making an order under Cl. (f) of sub-section (2) of Section 3 of the Act.

18. The above submission is part of the general argument that the price which stands determined on the date of supply of sugar has to be paid to the producer rather than the price prevalent on the date of making an order under Cl. (f) of sub-section (2) of S. 3 of the Act and which price is specifically mentioned in the order as the price to which the producer is entitled. As already discussed the date of delivery is not the material date. As the Central Government has the power to require any producer holding any stock of sugar to sell the whole or a specified part of the stock and to determine the price to be paid to the producer therefor the date on which sale is completed or delivery of sugar is made is not the relevant date. For supplies made in pursuance of an order under Cl. (f) of sub-s. (2) of S. 3 of the Act the producer is only entitled to the price already determined, at which he is required to make the supplies. A Bench of this Court had also held in Saraswati Industrial Syndicate Ltd. v. Union of India, Civil Writ No. 1218 of 1967, D/- 10-10-1967 (Delhi) that the price determined from time to time is not liable to adjustment on the basis of price determined at the end of the crushing season.

19. There being no merit in the writ petitions the same are dismissed with costs. The counsel fee for each case shall be assessed at Rs. 300/-.

Civil Revn. No. 19 of 1968, D/- 31-3-1970.

(A) Railways Act (1890) (as amended in 1961), S. 73 (new) — Effect of amendment — Liability of railway for loss of goods — When onus of proof shifts on railway.

Prior to the amendment in 1961 the responsibility of the Railway Administration, with respect to loss, non-delivery etc. of the goods entrusted for carriage by railway was that of a bailee only. The amendment made the liability as of a common carrier. (Para 11)

Even when the railway administration can claim exemption from liability under any of the clauses of S. 73 (new) the burden is cast on the railway administration to prove further that it had exercised reasonable foresight and care in the carriage of goods. (Para 12)

(B) Railways Act (1890) (as amended in 1961), S. 77-C — Section does not refer to loss or non-delivery — Railway administration when can be absolved of its liability for short delivery.

Section 77-C does not refer to loss or non-delivery of goods. It refers to damage, deterioration, leakage or wastage. To get itself absolved from liability for damage etc. the railway administration must prove (1) that the goods were defectively packed (2) that the defective packing was recorded by the sender or his agent in the forwarding note (3) that the defective packing was not brought to the notice of the railway administration at the time of the delivery of the goods for carriage. S. 77-C does not absolve railway of its responsibility for short delivery. AIR 1960 Pat 571, Dist. (as decided prior to 1961 amendment). (Para 14)

So, once loss, non-delivery or damage is proved, it is not for the claimant to establish negligence or misconduct on the part of the Railway. (Para 12)

Chhabil Dass, for Petitioner; R. S. Phul, for Defendant.

ORDER:— This revision petition is directed against an order of the learned Judge, Small Cause Court, Simla whereby he dismissed a suit of the petitioner for the recovery of Rs 347-56 paise. The allegations of the petitioner, in the plaint, were as under :—

2. The petitioner is the sole proprietor of the firm known as Messrs. Dewan Chand Atma Ram, 47, the Mall, Simla. The firm is dealing in wool and other goods. A consignment, containing one case of wool was sent to the petitioner by Bengal National Textile Mills Limited, Calcutta from Howrah, vide R. R. No. 052528 dated 2-11-1964. Due to the misconduct and negligence of the Railway Administration, the above consignment reached Simla in a damaged condition. The petitioner had taken open delivery of the goods and it was found that 29 packets of Raj Hans knitting wool were short. The shortage certificate was obtained from the Chief Goods Clerk on 15-12-1964. The certificate was sent to the Chief Commercial Superintendent (Claims Branch), Kashmere Gate, Delhi along with the letter of the petitioner dated 22-12-1964 in which claim for shortage was made against the Railway Administration. On account of the misconduct and negligence of the Railway Administration, the petitioner suffered loss amounting to Rs. 347-56 paise. The petitioner prayed that a decree for the recovery of Rs. 347-56 paise be passed against the respondent, Union of India.

3. The suit was contested on behalf of the respondent. The respondent did not admit that the petitioner was the sole proprietor of the firm known as Messrs. Dewan Chand Atma Ram. The respondent did not deny that the consignment was booked at Howrah on the basis of R. R. No. 052528 dated 2-11-1964. The respondent did not specifically deny the shortage in the consignment. However, it pleaded that the shortage, if any, was not due to any negligence or misconduct on the part of the Railway Administration or its employees. The plea of the respondent was that the shortage, if any, was due to defective packing of the consignment at the time of booking. The respondent did not admit that the value of the goods, delivered short, was Rs. 347-56 paise. The respondent also challenged the validity of the notice under Section 78-B Indian Railways Act. The respondent pleaded that no notice under Section 80, Civil P. C., appeared to have been served.

4. On the pleadings of the parties, the learned Judge, Small Cause Court formulated the following points for determination:—

1. Whether the plaintiff is the sole proprietor of the concern known as Messrs. Dewan Chand Atma Ram?
2. Whether there was a short delivery of 29 packets of wool to the plaintiff?
3. What was the value of the goods delivered short?
4. Whether short delivery was the result of misconduct or negligence on the part of the Railway Administration?
5. Whether such short delivery was on account of defective packing of the consignment at the time of booking?

6. Whether the plaintiff served the requisite notices under S. 78-B of the Indian Railways Act and S. 80, Civil P. C. before filing the suit?

7. To what relief, if any, the plaintiff is entitled?

5. The learned Judge. Small Cause Court found points 1, 2, 3, 5 and 6 in favour of the petitioner, points Nos. 4 and 7 were decided against the petitioner and his suit was dismissed.

6. Aggrieved by the dismissal of his suit, the petitioner has come up in revision.

7. The learned counsel for the petitioner contended that the finding of the trial Court on point No. 4 was erroneous. The learned counsel argued that the trial Court had wrongly held that it was for the petitioner to prove negligence or misconduct of the Railway Administration. According to the learned counsel, the burden lay on the Railway Administration to furnish an explanation about short delivery.

8. The learned counsel for the respondent controverted the contentions of the learned counsel for the petitioner. He also supported the order of the trial Court on the grounds decided against the respondent.

9. There is un rebutted statement, made on oath, of the petitioner that he was the sole proprietor of the concern, Messrs. Dewan Chand Atrna Ram and that the value of the goods short delivered, including sales tax, was Rs. 347-56 paise. The trial Court had accepted the statement. There is absolutely no valid reason to take a different view. The findings of the trial Court on points Nos. 1 and 3 are upheld.

10. Regarding short delivery, besides the statement of the petitioner, that 29 packets were delivered short, there are letters Ex. P. 1, Ex. P. 5 and Ex. P. 7, showing that there was short delivery. Letter Ex. P. 1 was addressed to the Chief Commercial Superintendent, Claims Branch, requesting for the payment of Rs. 347-56 paise for short delivery of 29 packets. It was stated in the letter that open delivery of the consignment was taken and that shortage certificate was obtained from the Chief Goods Clerk, Simla. That certificate was enclosed with the letter. No reply was received to this letter. The petitioner then sent the letter Ex. P. 5 as a reminder. Ex. P. 7 is the letter received by the petitioner from the office of the Chief Commercial Superintendent Claims Branch. The letter asked the petitioner to submit the original Trade Invoice. This letter did not question that there was short delivery of 29 packets. The respondent did not produce any rebuttal evidence. As already stated, short delivery was not specifically denied by the respondent in the written statement. It stood established that there was short delivery of 29 packets of wool.

11. So far as point No. 4 is concerned, the trial Court appears to have misunderstood the legal position. The consignment had been booked and there was short delivery in November-December 1964. The Indian Railways (Amendment) Act, 1961, had effected far-reaching changes in the Indian Railways Act, as it stood before. Prior to the Amendment Act, the responsibility of the Railway Administration, with respect to loss, non-delivery etc. of the goods, entrusted for carriage by railway, was that of a bailee only. The amendments, introduced by the Amendment Act, made the liability of the Railway Administration as of a common carrier. The new Section 73 of the Indian Railways Act provides—

"Save as otherwise provided in this Act, a railway administration shall be responsible for the loss, destruction, damage, deterioration or non-delivery, in transit of animals or goods delivered to the administration to be carried by railway, arising from any cause except the following, namely,—

- (a) act of God,
- (b) act of war,
- (c) act of public enemies,
- (d) arrest, restraint or seizure under legal process,
- (e) orders or restrictions imposed by the Central Government or a State Government or by any officer or authority subordinate to the Central Government or a State Government authorised in this behalf,
- (f) act or omission or negligence of the consignor or the consignee or the agent or servant of the consignor or the consignee,
- (g) natural deterioration on or wastage in bulk or weight due to inherent defect, quality or vice of the goods,
- (h) latent defects,
- (i) fire, explosion or any unforeseen risk.

Provided that even where such loss, destruction, damage, deterioration or non-delivery is proved to have arisen from any one or more of the aforesaid causes, the railway administration shall not be relieved of its responsibility for the loss, destruction, damage, deterioration or non-delivery unless the administration further proves that it has used reasonable foresight and care in the carriage of the animals or goods."

12. It is clear, from a perusal of the above provisions, that the Railway Administration is responsible for loss, destruction, damage, non-delivery etc. of goods while in transit except in the cases where the cause of damage etc. is act of God, act of war etc. Even when the Railway Administration can claim exemption from liability in any of the aforesaid causes, the burden is cast upon the Railway Administration to prove further that it had exercised reasonable foresight and care in the carriage of goods. It follows that once loss, damages, non-delivery etc. is proved, the burden shifts on to the Railway Administration to prove that it is not liable. It is not for the claimant to establish negligence or misconduct.

13. In the present case, short delivery of 29 packets was proved. It was for the Railway Administration to prove that it was not responsible for short delivery. The plea of the respondent was that short delivery was due to defective packing and the Railway Administration was not responsible for short delivery under Section 77-C of the Indian Railways Act. That section reads:—

(a) are in a defective condition as a consequence of which they are liable to damage, deterioration, leakage or wastage, or

(b) are either defectively packed or packed in a manner not in accordance with the general or special order, if any, issued under sub-section (4), and as a result of such defective or improper packing are liable to damage, deterioration, leakage or wastage and the fact of such condition or defective or improper packing has been recorded by the sender or his agent in the forwarding note, then notwithstanding anything contained in the foregoing provisions of this Chapter, the railway administration shall not be responsible for any damage, deterioration, leakage or wastage or for the condition in which such goods are available for delivery at destination, except upon proof of negligence or misconduct on the part of the railway administration or any of its servants.

(2) When any goods delivered to a railway administration to be carried by railway are found on arrival at destination to have been damaged or to have suffered deterioration, leakage, or wastage, then, notwithstanding anything contained in the foregoing provisions of this Chapter, the railway administration shall not be responsible for the damage, deterioration, leakage or wastage of the goods on proof by the railway administration,—

(a) that the goods were, at the time of delivery to the railway administration, in a defective condition or were at that time either defectively packed or packed in a manner not in accordance with the general or special order, if any, issued under sub-section (4) and as a consequence of such defective condition or defective or improper packing were liable to damage, deterioration, leakage or wastage, and

(b) that such defective condition or defective or improper packing was not brought to the notice of the railway administration or of any of its servants at the time of delivery of the goods to the railway administration for carriage by railway.

Provided that the railway administration shall be responsible for any such damage, deterioration, leakage or wastage if negligence or misconduct on the part of the railway administration or any of its servants is proved.

(3) A railway administration shall not be responsible under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) for any damage, deterioration, leakage or wastage occurring after the expiry of the period of thirty days after the termination of transit as defined in sub-section (5) of S. 77.

(4) The Central Government may, by general or special order, prescribe the manner in which goods delivered to a railway administration to be carried by railway shall be packed.”

14. It is to be noted that the aforesaid section does not refer to loss or non-delivery of goods. It refers only to damage, deterioration, leakage or wastage. The present case is a case of short delivery. It is, further, to be noted that the section lays down certain circumstances, to be proved by the Railway Administration, before it can be absolved from its responsibility. The first circumstance to be proved is that the goods were defectively packed. The second circumstance to be proved is that the fact of defective packing was recorded by the sender or his agent in the forwarding note. Under sub-section (2), it is to be proved that defective packing was not brought to the notice of the Railway Administration at the time of the delivery of goods for carriage. Reliance was placed, on behalf of the respondent, on the note made on R. R. No. 052528 dated 2-11-1964. The R. R. is marked as Ex. P. W.1/1. The note referred to is not decipherable on the R. R. The note was quoted in the written statement and was also put to the petitioner when he had appeared as his own witness. The note shows that the packing was defective. But there is no evidence that the fact of defective packing was recorded by the sender in the forwarding note. The note made on Ex. P. W. 1/1 is a clear proof of the fact that defective packing was within the knowledge of the servants of the Railway Administration. In the circumstances of the case the respondent was not absolved from responsibility for short delivery under Section 77-C of the Indian Railways Act.

15. The trial Court had placed reliance on Sarjag Prasad Ishwar Purbey v.

Union of India. AIR 1960 Pat 571. That case is distinguishable from the present case. That case was decided under the Indian Railways Act as it stood before its amendment by the Railways (Amendment) Act, 1961. Further, that was a case where the goods had been booked on owner's risk rate. In the present case, the goods had been booked on railway risk rate.

16. For the reasons stated above, I am of the opinion that the learned Judge, Small Cause Court was in error in holding that the petitioner had failed to prove that short delivery was the result of misconduct or negligence on the part of the Railway Administration. As the petitioner had established short delivery of goods, the burden shifted on to the Railway Administration to prove that it was not responsible for short delivery. The respondent has failed to discharge that burden. It was, therefore, liable to pay Rs. 347.56 paise to the petitioner for short delivery of goods.

17. Point No. 6, formulated by the trial Court, remains to be dealt with. The copy of the claim submitted to the Railway Administration, is Ex. P-1. The copy of the notice under Section 80, Code of Civil Procedure, is Ex. P-3. The learned counsel for the respondent failed to point out any defect in the claim or in the notice. The finding of the trial Court on point No. 6 is upheld.

18. The result is that the decision of the learned Judge, Small Cause Court dismissing the suit of the petitioner is not in accordance with law and is erroneous. It is set aside. The revision petition is allowed and the suit of the petitioner for the recovery of Rs. 347.56 paise with costs of both the Courts is decreed against the respondent.

Appellants.

JUDGMENT:— Hukam Singh, Bal Kishan, Ram Singh, Rattan, Lekhan and Prabhati alias Parshadi were tried by Shri Jagdish Chander, Assistant Sessions Judge, Delhi. They were alleged to have committed dacoity on the night between the 21st and the 22nd October, 1965, while armed with deadly weapons in the house of Neel Kanth in Radhapuri Colony, Hukam Singh, Ram Singh, Rattan and Prabhati alias Parshadi were found guilty under Section 397 of the Indian Penal Code and each one of them was sentenced to seven years rigorous imprisonment. Bal Kishan and Lekhan were given benefit of doubt and were acquitted.

2. Four separate appeals were filed by the convicted persons, which were registered as Nos. 99, 101 and 102 of 1969.

2. It may be mentioned that on the night of the occurrence Neel Kanth was sleeping in a room of his house. His wife and their five children, including Geeta a girl of about 19 years of age, were in an adjoining room. The elder brother of Geeta, Ramesh Chander, was lying in a separate room which had no door shutters.

4. Ramesh Chander (P.W. 3), at about 11-30 in the night, heard the sound of some persons jumping over a wall of the compound. He saw that ten or twelve men were entering the verandah of the house out of whom two persons came to his room and gave lathi blows to him on his left ear due to which he became unconscious. During the trial Hukam Singh and Rattan Singh were identified by him as the persons who had entered his room. He also stated that his marriage had been fixed for November 1965 and, therefore, sarees and jewellery has been purchased. A ring and some sarees purchased by him from his earnings were mentioned to have on them the initials of "RC".

5. The evidence given by Neel Kanth (P.W. 4) was that on hearing the sound of footsteps in the courtyard of his house he peeped out of a window and saw seven or eight persons in the open verandah. He asked them as to who they were to which they replied that they were policemen. Those persons were then stated to have broken open the door of his room and to have given him and his wife, who had in the meantime come there from the adjoining room, lathi blows. According to him he became unconscious and only regained consciousness on the next day in a hospital.

6. The version of Geeta (P.W. 1) was that when the dacoits broke open the outer door of her father's room four or five of them gave lathi blows to her father and two of them took out her mother in the verandah where she was caused injuries. She also stated that on being threatened she removed her Ballis (ear rings) and handed those over to the dacoits who then started removing boxes from a shelf (parchhati) in the room where she and some others had been sleeping. From her father's room a box and an attache case containing ornaments and sarees were removed. It was added by her that the dacoits also gave beating to a chowkidar who was lying outside the house and when they had left she went to Ariun Nagar for help. Someone in that colony telephoned to the police and when the police arrived she made a report (Exhibit P.W. 1A) about what had happened.

7. Lajwanti (P. W. 2), wife of Neel Kanth, supported the prosecution version. According to the above-named witnesses the dacoits had torches with them in the light of which they could be seen.

8. It so happened that in connection with the investigation of some other dacoity case Inspector Bhim Singh, who in the year 1965 was posted as Station House Officer Nangloi, arrested on October 31, 1965 Hukum Singh, Ram Singh, Bal Kishan and one Ram Saran alias Ram Charan from old Delhi main Railway Station. On the same day Hukum Singh was alleged to have made a disclosure statement and then to have taken the police to village Barondi to the houses of Rattan and Lakkan. From the search of their houses certain articles were recovered including sarees. Another disclosure statement dated November 16, 1965 was attributed to Hukum Singh resulting in the recovery of one handkerchief containing certain articles from a corner of the Jhuggi of one Babu Bawaria in village Rabhupura. One of the recovered articles was the gold ring having the initials of Ramesh on it. On December 12, 1965 Hukum Singh was as well stated to have made a confessional statement before Shri Sat Narain, Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Shahdara Circle.

9. The story of Neel Kanth, Ramesh and Lajwanti receiving injuries at the hands of dacoits is beyond doubt and finds corroboration from medical testimony. The only matter agitated before the trial judge and in appeals was about the identity of the alleged dacoits.

10-11. The appellants not being represented Shri Charanjit Talwar, Advocate, agreed to act as amicus curiae and argued the cases with ability. It was urged by him that Hukum Singh had been tendered pardon under provisions of Section 337 of the Code of Criminal Procedure which was duly accepted by him and he could not be tried jointly with the other accused. The joint trial was stated to have caused prejudice. On merits as well it was submitted the case was not free from doubt.

12. The record of the case shows that on February 24, 1966 the police had produced Hukum Singh before Shri R. Jain, Additional District Magistrate, Delhi, for being tendered pardon. The Additional District Magistrate after recording the statement of Hukum Singh passed an order under Section 337 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, tendering pardon on the condition of his making full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge relative to the offence of dacoity and the offenders concerned therein whether as principals or abettors. The Additional District Magistrate had also read over and explained the order tendering pardon to Hukum Singh who accepted the pardon on the conditions contained in the order.

13. On March 1, 1966 Hukum Singh was produced before Shri Sukh Raj Bahadur, Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Sadar Bazar, Delhi, for his statement being recorded. He, however, expressed his unwillingness to make any statement. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate, therefore, directed him to be produced before the Additional District Magistrate for "further orders". The Additional District Magistrate, on March 8, 1966 cancelled the pardon which had been tendered on February 24, 1966 by remarking that Hukum Singh had stated before him that he did not want to be an approver.

14. Section 339 of the Code of Criminal Procedure provides that where a pardon has been tendered under Section 337 and the Public Prosecutor certifies that in his opinion any person who has accepted such tender, has either by wilfully concealing any facts essential or by giving false evidence, not complied with the condition on which the tender was made, such person may be tried for the offence in respect of which the pardon was so tendered or for any other offence of which he appears to have been guilty in connection with the same matter. A proviso to sub-section (1) of this section, inserted by Act 18 of 1923, enjoins that such person shall not be tried jointly with any of the other accused and that he shall be entitled to plead at such trial that he has complied with the conditions upon which such tender was made, in which case it shall be for the prosecution to prove that such conditions have not been complied with.

14A. In A. J. Peiris v. State of Madras, AIR 1954 SC 616 Ghulam Hassan, J., while delivering the judgment on behalf of himself and Chief Justice Mahajan and Bose, J. observed that the moment pardon was tendered under Section 337 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the accused must be presumed to have been discharged whereupon he ceases to be an accused and becomes a witness. The Madhya Pradesh High Court in State of Madhya Pradesh v. Dalchand Hardayal, AIR 1960 Madh Pra 63 held that though Section 339 does not expressly say as to how the approver is to be treated if he refused to give evidence on behalf of the prosecution impliedly it is obvious that the holding back of his evidence amounts to wilfully concealing the facts which are essential for the prosecution. It was further held that an approver where he gives false evidence or is unwilling to step in the witness box on behalf of the prosecution forfeits his pardon and can be tried for the offence in respect of which he was tendered pardon but according to the proviso to sub-section (1) of Section 339 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the approver cannot be tried jointly with the other accused in the case.

15. The learned counsel for State relied upon Emperor v. Budhan, 1906-4 Cr LJ 142 (All) and Basireddi Narappa v. Emperor, AIR 1924 Mad 391. In the first of the above mentioned cases an accused who had an opportunity of cross-examining the prosecution witnesses was tendered pardon on condition of his making a true disclosure but after accepting that pardon he refused to make any statement saying that he knew nothing. The Magistrate revoked the pardon and committed him to the Court of Session along with the other accused. A Bench of the Allahabad High Court held that there was no illegality in the Magistrate's procedure. In the other case the Madras High Court took the view that when an accused person rejects the conditional pardon tendered to him and refused to give evidence as an approver before he is put into the box, his action does not amount to forfeiture of his pardon so as to make his case fall under Section 339 and bar his joint trial with the other accused persons. The acceptance of the pardon, it was considered, should continue in force till the accused actually gives evidence and then if he forfeits the pardon by not making a full and true disclosure of facts within his knowledge he should be separately tried.

16. With great respect, it seems to me, that after the insertion of the proviso to sub-section (1) of Section 339 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the view taken in the cases relied upon by the learned counsel for State can no longer be accepted as laying down the correct law. The dictum laid down by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in the case of A. J. Peiris, AIR 1954 SC 616 does not support that view. A. H. Khan, J. in the case of Dalchand, AIR 1960 Madh Pra 63 referred to above, dissented from the case of Basireddi Narappa, AIR 1924 Mad 391 and in that connection made the following observations:—

"The learned Judges of the Madras High Court no doubt have taken a view that when an accused person rejects the conditional pardon tendered to him and refused to give evidence as an approver, his action does not amount to forfeiture of his pardon so as to make his case fall under Section 339, and that in the circumstances there is no bar to his joint trial with the other accused persons. It seems that there was conflict of opinion as to whether an approver, who has broken the condition of pardon could be tried (for the offence for which he was tendered pardon) along with other accused or not. This controversy was resolved by the enactment of Proviso that was added to clause 1 of sub-section (1) of Section 339 of the Criminal Procedure Code in year 1923. Perhaps the attention of the learned Judges of the Madras High Court was not directed towards the proviso, which had been incorporated a few months earlier.

Moreover, in examining the dictum on merits, the view of the learned Judges that while rejecting the pardon, the accused does not forfeit his pardon, requires reconsideration. If the rejection of the pardon by the approver does not amount to forfeiture of his pardon (as stated by the learned Judges of the Madras High Court) then the pardon continues and if the pardon continues, he can be tried neither jointly nor separately for any offence. Anyway, the proviso which was added to Section 339(1) by the Amendment of 1923 sets all doubts at rest and it is now clear that an approver who has resiled from his promise to make a full and true disclosure of facts within his knowledge, cannot now be tried jointly with other accused in the case."

17. Once the pardon was tendered and was accepted by Hukam Singh he ceased to be an accused and became a witness as observed in the above referred to Supreme Court case. Thereafter he could not be tried jointly with the other accused and could only be tried for the offence in respect of which the pardon was tendered or for any offence of which he may have appeared to have been guilty in connection with the same matter in accordance with the provisions of Section 339 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

18. Obviously the trial of Hukam Singh jointly with the other accused was against the provisions of the proviso to sub-section (1) of Section 339 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. As an alleged confessional statement made by Hukam Singh was also taken into consideration against the other appellants they were obviously prejudiced. Hukam Singh was also prejudiced by the joint trial as he was deprived of the opportunity of pleading that he had complied with the conditions upon which tender was made. The conviction of the appellants cannot, therefore, be sustained. The appellants having already been in custody for nearly five years even a retrial would not be in the interest of justice.

19. On merits as well the case against the appellants is not altogether free from doubt. The night on which the occurrence took place was admittedly a dark one. The house of Neel Kanth had yet to be provided with electric connection and there were no other lights. The glimpses which the inmates of the houses had in the momentary flashes of torch lights, at a time when they were naturally greatly agitated, could not normally enable them to properly identify the dacoits. It was probably for that reason that in the report made by Geeta only a very general description of the dacoits was given.

20. The confessional statement of Hukam Singh was recorded on December 24, 1965 by Shri Sat Narain, Sub-Divisional Magistrate. On the day Hukam Singh was arrested a disclosure statement was alleged to have been made by him which almost amounted to a full confession. If Hukam Singh was prepared to make a clean breast of everything on October 31, 1965 then it is not clear why he should not have shown his willingness to make a confessional statement before a Magistrate for about two months. At any event the possibility of the confessional statement having been made in view of some promise for tendering pardon to him can also not be eliminated. Considering all the circumstances of the case it is difficult to hold the confessional statement to have been made voluntarily.

So far as identification of Hukam Singh during the trial was concerned that too, in my opinion, was not such on which a conviction may be safely based. The disclosure statement alleged to have been made on November 16, 1965, is also not free from suspicion.

21. Though Parbhathi was identified by Geeta and Lajwanti but there is no other evidence to connect him with the alleged offence. The position of Ram Singh is almost similar. So far as Rattan is concerned he was not identified by any one during the identification parade.

22. The conviction of the appellants for committing dacoity along with others while being armed with deadly weapons is not altogether free from doubt. The joint trial of Hukam Singh and the other accused was also irregular and against the provisions of the proviso to sub-section (1) of Section 339 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and in the circumstances of the case has caused prejudice. The appeals are, therefore, accepted and the conviction and sentence of each of the appellants are set aside.

Appeals allowed.

C. W. No. 33-D/ of 1961, D/- 24-4-1970.

(A) Prevention of Food Adulteration Act (1954), Section 2 (v) — 'Food' — Test to determine — Definition wide enough to include Katha (Catechu).

In order that an article should be food within the meaning of the Act it is not essential that it must be an article which is consumed by human being as such. Katha is admittedly used in composition of Pan and, therefore, would be governed by the definition of food given in Section 2(v) of the Act. To constitute food what has to be seen is whether the article in question is usable and enters into the composition or preparation of food which is taken by human beings. The definition is worded in a very wide language and would govern any article which enters into the composition or preparation of human food and would cover any flavouring matter and condiments. N. D. Bali and Roshan Lal, for Petitioners; K. S. Chawla, for Respondents.

ORDER:— The question that arises in this petition is whether Katha is included within the meaning of Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954 (hereinafter referred to as the Act) and whether Item A-21 of Appendix B of Rule 5 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules, 1955 (hereinafter referred to as the Rules) is ultra vires of the Act and the Constitution of India.

2. In this petition under Article 226 of the Constitution of India prayer is made for a writ restraining the respondents, Union of India and the Delhi Municipal Corporation, Delhi, from interfering with the petitioners' trade of Katha (Catechu) and from enforcing the restrictions laid down in Item A-21 of Appendix B under Rule 5 of the Rules framed under the Act.

3. The petitioners are members of the Katha Dealers Association, Delhi and they are commission agents and wholesale merchants of the raw material from which Katha of various qualities for different purposes is manufactured. It is alleged that Katha represents two varieties of Catechu derived from the heartwood of the Khair tree and the raw material of Katha is manufactured from those trees. It is also alleged that making Katha fit for edible purposes better qualities of raw material are put into a huge quantity of water and boiled and strained through thin cloth. It is this kind of solution which is applied as a paste along with lime on betel leaves used for chewing. It is alleged that Katha is never eaten or consumed as food. It is stated in the petition that the Central Government by means of Notification dated 14-7-1956 added Item A-21 in Appendix B of Rule 5 of the Rules prescribing the standard laid down for edible Katha. It is stated that the standard prescribed in the said Rules is of the highest possible quality and it is impossible to conform to the standard. It is stated that the respondents have started checking up the stock of Katha with the wholesale dealers and seizing the same if it is not in accordance with the prescribed standard laid down under the Rules. This is said to be in violation of the Fundamental Rights of the petitioners and it is claimed that the Rules are ultra vires of the Act and sub-articles (5) or (6) of Article 19 of the Constitution of India. It is also stated in the petition that Item A-21 in Appendix B of Rule 5 of the Rules had been framed without previous publication and without laying it before the Houses of Parliament as is required by the Act. It is stated that no Katha in the market conforms to the prescribed standard and the tests made by the Public Analyst on some of the samples of Katha are given in annexures P-1 to P-3 to the petition.

4. This writ petition was admitted on 31-1-1961. Along with the said writ petition a stay application namely C.M. 228-D of 1961 was filed. But apparently it was not pressed at the time the matter came up before the Motion Bench. Later on C.M. 1451-D of 1961 was filed in which it was stated that the respondents have taken samples of Katha and were threatening to seize stocks of Katha and have also started prosecution of the petitioners. It was stated that the next date of hearing of the case was 17-7-1961 and a prayer was made for restraining the respondents from enforcing the impugned restrictions against the Katha dealers of Delhi and from prosecuting the petitioners. Ex parte stay of proceedings was ordered by Gosain J. on 17-7-1961. Harbans Singh J. on 24-1-1962 confirmed the stay given by Gosain J. and ordered that the main petition be expedited and heard, if possible, during February, 1962.

5. Return was filed on behalf of respondent No. 1 i.e., Union of India by Dr. M. S. Chadha, Deputy Director General of Health Services dated 28-11-1961. It was maintained that Katha and Cutch do not represent two varieties of Catechu derived from heartwood of the Khair tree. Katha is crystallised from the heartwood extract whereas Cutch represents the residual product obtained after Katha is separated. It was stated that Katha is not a raw material and is mainly used by panwalas by only mixing water and making a paste out of it or by straining it and then boiling the residue to a paste. It was maintained that Katha is food or at any rate an adjunct to food. It was stated that the minimum standards of quality for catechu have been prescribed by the Central Government in exercise of the power vested in them, vide Clause (b) of sub-section (1) of Section 23 of the Act. It was denied that the draft rules regarding the standards of catechu were not published or were not placed before the Parliament. It was specifically stated that the rules regarding the standards of quality were published on 14-7-1956 after consultation with the Central Committee of Food Standards. The said copies of notifications were laid on the table of the Lok Sabha and the Rajya Sabha on August 3, 1956 and August 5, 1956. It was maintained that the petitioners had not stated the correct facts before this court and the petition was liable to be dismissed on this ground alone. It is stated that the quality of tree does not materially affect the quality of the product. Katha is usually extracted during the winter season and, therefore, the question of season does not arise. It is strongly maintained that Katha obtained by indigenous process can be as good and pure, if not superior, as the machine made product. It is asserted that the standards prescribed in appendix B of Rule 5 of the Rules are the minimum standards required for Katha which form the major bulk of the good quality products in the country. It was denied that the standard was of highest possible quality. Katha sold by the petitioners was food within the meaning of the Act. It was further stated that large stock of heavily adulterated Katha is lying with the petitioners for sale and does not conform to the prescribed standards and that the Government is entitled to enforce the provisions of the Act and the Rules. It is denied that there is any invasion of the Fundamental Rights of the petitioners or that the Rules were in any case ultra vires. It is also submitted that the Act provides for the cognizance of offence under the Act and the proper remedy for the petitioners is to make a proper defence when the penal action is taken against them.

6. The petitioners also filed C.M. 502-W of 1970 in which certain documents were filed. One of the documents, annexure P-6 was said to have been the report of a sub-committee issued by the Indian Standard Institution. This sub-committee is said to have recommended that there should be three grades of Katha namely grades 1, 2 and 3. It was said that this committee was of the opinion that the standard laid down for Katha in the Rules is highly unreasonable and did not relate to the facts as they exist.

7. A reply was filed on behalf of the respondent by Shri D. S. Chadha, Assistant Secretary (P.F.A.), Directorate General of Health Services and it was maintained that Katha entered into human consumption with Pan which is ordinarily taken by human beings. It was also maintained that the sub-committee mentioned by the petitioners is not a sub-committee of the Central Government for food standards but is a sub-committee of the Indian Standard Institution. It was denied that the sub-committee has ever opined that the standard laid down for Katha in the Rules is highly unreasonable and did not relate to the facts. It was stated that the method of sampling given in Indian Standard Institution Publication had no relevancy to the case. The method to be adopted for sampling of the food for the purpose of the Act was laid down by the Rules and it is these methods alone which are to be followed.

8. Mr. Bali, the learned counsel for the petitioners raised the following points before me:—

1. that Katha is not a food within the meaning of the Act and hence no prosecution or action can be taken against the petitioners in pursuance of any provisions of the Act and the Rules.

2. that the standards prescribed for Katha are impossible of fulfilment and are unreasonable and, therefore, standard A-21 of Appendix B of Rule 5 of the Rules is ultra vires.

9. It is necessary to mention that though in the petition grievance has been made that the addition of A-21 of Appendix 'B' of Rule 5 of the Rules was bad because it had not been framed after previous publication and after laying it before the Parliament, no arguments were addressed by Mr. Bali on this point, and rightly so because there was categorical assertion in the written statement that the draft rules were duly published and were also laid on the table of the Parliament. In view of that fact Mr. Bali did not challenge the vires of the Rules on this ground.

10. Before I deal with the arguments of Mr. Bali it is necessary to reproduce the relevant provisions of the Act and the Rules. Section 2(v) of the Act defines 'Food' as follows:—

"Food, means any article used as food or drink for human consumption other than drugs and water and includes:—

- (a) any article which ordinarily enters into, or is used in the composition or preparation of human food, and
- (b) any flavouring matter or condiments."

11. Section 7 of the Act reads as follows:—

"No person shall himself or by any person on his behalf manufacture for sale, or store, sell or distribute:—

- (i) .....
- (ii) .....
- (iii) .....
- (iv) .....

- (v) any article of food in contravention of any other provision of this Act or of any rule made thereunder."

12. Section 16 provides for penalties if any person sells or manufactures for sale any article of food which is adulterated.

rated or which is in contravention of any provision of this Act or any of the Rules made thereunder.

13. In exercise of the power conferred by sub-section (2) of Section 4 and sub-section (1) of Section 23 of the Act, the Central Government has framed the Rules known as the Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules, 1955. Rule 5 of the said Rules reads as under:—

"Standards of quality of the various articles of food specified in Appendix B to these rules are as defined in that appendix."

14. Appendix B, to which a reference is made in Rule 5 provides in A-21 the standard prescribed for Catechu and the standard to which it is to conform and is as follows:—

"A-21. Catechu (Edible) shall be the dried aqueous extract prepared from the heartwood of Acacia catechu. It shall be free from infestation, sand, earth or other dirt and shall conform to the following standard:

(a) 5 ml. of 1 per cent, aqueous solution, and 0.1 per cent, solution of ferric ammonium sulphate shall give a dark green colour, which on the addition of sodium hydroxide solution shall change to purple.

(b) when dried to constant weight at 100° C, it shall not lose more than 12 per cent of its weight.

(c) Water insoluble residue (dried at 100° C) shall not be more than 25 per cent by its weight.

(d) Alcohol insoluble residue in 90 per cent. alcohol dried at 100° C — not more than 30 per cent by weight.

(e) Total ash on dry basis—not more than 8 per cent by weight. (Water insoluble matter shall be determined by boiling water).

(f) Ash insoluble in Hcl not more than 0.5 per cent on dry weight basis."

15. It is quite clear from the provisions reproduced above that before the petitioners could be prosecuted under the Act and the Rules they must be held to have violated the provisions of the Act and the Rules. Mr. Bali contends that provision of this Act or any of the Rules Katha is not food and, therefore, the Rule—down any standard for Katha. His con-making authorities should not have laid tention is that if food as defined in the Act does not cover Katha then standard prescribed by A. 21 of Appendix B of Rule 5 of the Rules is ultra vires of the Act and the petitioners, therefore, could not be proceeded with. His main argument, therefore, is that Katha is not food as defined in the Act. Mr. Bali submits that an article of food must be an article which is used as a nutrition for the body and it must be a thing which one eats for the development of body. He submits that Katha is not eaten by human beings either as a nourishment or for the strength of the body and it is, therefore, not food. According to Mr. Bali, the essential criterion to determine whether any article is food or not is to see whether that article is consumed by the human body for one of the two purposes of nutrition or for the strengthening. He has in this connection referred me to a decision of the Supreme Court in State of Bombay v. Virkumar Gulabchand Shah, AIR 1952 SC 335. But that case in my opinion goes against the contention of Mr. Bali.

In that case the question called for determination was whether Turmeric was 'foodstuff' within the meaning of clause 3 of the Spices (Forward Contracts Prohibition) Order, 1944, read with Section 2(a) of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946. Their Lordships held that keeping in view the object of the legislation Turmeric fell within the definition of 'foodstuff'. It has to be remembered that definition of food is not to be taken in the abstract but it will depend on the contexts and the background whether the definition should be narrow or wide. In the context of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, the purpose of which is to prevent adulteration of all articles which are used for human consumption, it would be consistent with the object of the Act to give wider meaning to the definition of food in the Act. The definition of food also in the Act specifically means not only an article used as food or drink but includes any article which ordinarily enters into or is used for the composition or preparation of human food. This definition supports the respondents' contention that in order that an article should be food within the meaning of the Act it is not essential that it must be an article which is consumed by human being as such. It would still be food within the meaning of the Act if this article enters into the preparation of human food. Admittedly Katha by itself is not an article which is consumed by human being but it cannot be denied that Katha is an extremely important and essential component of Pan. No one can deny that Pan is taken by lakhs of people in our country, and Katha which is an essential component cannot, therefore, be held to be other than food. According to Mr. Bali, simply because Katha is not taken by human being separately it cannot be said to be food within the meaning of the Act, but it is not the correct way of looking at the things, as Supreme Court said in the case referred to above:

"Even in a popular sense, when one asks another, 'Have you had your food?' one means the composite preparations which normally go to constitute a meal—curry and rice, sweetmeats, pudding, cooked vegetables and so forth. One does not usually think separately of the different preparations which enter into their making, of the various condiments and spices and vitamins, any more than one would think of separating in his mind the purely nutritive elements of what is eaten from their non-nutritive adjuncts.

So also, looked at from another point of view, the various adjuncts of what I may term food proper which enter into its preparation for human consumption in order to make it palatable and nutritive can hardly be separated from the purely nutritive elements if the effect of their absence would be to render the particular commodity in its finished state unsavoury and indigestible to a whole class of persons whose stomachs are accustomed to a more spicily prepared product."

16. The definition of food specifically mentions that even those articles which are used in the preparation of articles are to be considered as articles of food. The mere fact, therefore, that Katha by itself is not consumed by human being is not determinative of the matter. Katha is admittedly used in composition of Pan and, therefore, would be governed by the definition of food given in Section 2(v) of the Act. To constitute food what has to be seen is whether the article in question is usable and enters into the composition or preparation of food which is taken by human beings. The definition is worded in a very wide language and would govern any article which enters into the composition or preparation of human food and would cover any flavouring matter and condiments. In Sainsbury v. Saunders, (1918) 88 LJKB 441 the question that came up for consideration was whether tea was food. The question was whether tea would be food within the meaning of the expressions used in certain provisions of Defence of the Realm Regulations read with the New Ministries and Secretaries Act of 1916 which empowered the Food Controller to regulate 'the food supply of the country' and the 'supply and consumption and production of food'. Avory J. held that tea comes within the expression of food as used in statute and in regulation. Salter J. also agreed that tea was food within the meaning of the Act of 1916. Now it would be seen that tea by itself is not consumed by human beings. It is not food in the sense that it is not nutritious nor will it add to the amount of tissues in the body of the person who drink it nor can a person live on it. Thus the test which Mr. Bali propounds that an article in order to be food must be one which is nutritious or helps in developing the tissues of the body of human being inapplicable in the case of tea and yet learned Judges Avory and Salter JJ. held that tea was food. I cannot see any distinction in the proposition why on a parity of reasoning Katha should not be held to be food within the meaning of the Act. Mr. Bali also referred to the definition of Katha as given in the Wealth of India, a Dictionary of India Raw Materials and Industrial Products which is as follows:—

"Cutch has long been used in Indian medicine. According to Dymock, Warden and Hooper, (1,557), Sanskrit writers mention two varieties, dark and pale. The latter is katha, the medicinal variety Katha is regarded as astringent, cooling and digestive, useful in relaxed conditions of the throat, mouth and gums also in cough and diarrhoea. Externally it is employed as an astringent and as a cooling application to ulcers, boils and eruptions on the skin. Katha also enters into a number of compound preparations and a few prescriptions are given by Birdwood (50).

It is an indispensable ingredient of pan preparations. In combination with lime, it gives the characteristic red colouration resulting from the chewing of pan. Continued use is said to cause blackening of teeth."

17. This definition also mentions that Katha is an indispensable ingredient of Pan preparation. It is thus obvious that this definition does not advance the argument of Mr. Bali on this point. It cannot, therefore, be accepted that simply because Katha is not taken as an edible article, it cannot amount to food. This way of defining the term food was not accepted in the case reported as James v. Jones, (1894) 1 QB 304 where Hawkins J. held as follows:—

"We do not, however, in anything we have said intend to convey it as our opinion that nothing can be deemed to be an article of food unless it be made up into an eatable or drinkable form and fit for immediate use, for we have no doubt that the substantial and requisite materials for making, and which are to form part of the unadulterated article when made, e.g., flour, butter, salt, mustard, pepper & C. are articles of food; for though nobody would ordinarily dream of eating them alone, yet they are articles intended to form substantial components of articles of food, or to be eaten as adjuncts thereto."

18. I may also mention that it has been held in Chitar Mal v. State, AIR 1955 NUC (All) 169 that 'Definition of food is wide enough to include Katha as article of food' within the meaning of Section 2 of U. P. Prevention of Adulteration Act (6 of 1912).

19. The first contention of Mr. Bali, therefore, is devoid of merits and is rejected.

20. The second contention of Mr. Bali was that the standards prescribed in A.21 of Appendix B of Rule 5 of the Rules are impossible of attainment and the Rule must be held to be ultra vires. It was not, however, made clear how the said Rule was said to be impossible of fulfilment. All that was suggested was that Katha is mainly prepared by indigenous method. The standards laid down cannot be attained and if these standards are to be held to apply then many persons who are earning their livelihood by manufacturing Katha by indigenous method will be thrown out. One answer to this contention is that the present writ petition has been brought by persons who are dealers and not by those who are engaged in the manufacture of Katha. They, therefore, cannot make a grievance, if any, which is concerning those persons who are engaged in the manufacture of Katha. That apart it has been specifically denied in the returns that the standard prescribed in the Rules and Appendix by indigenous method does not mean that the prescribed standard cannot be fulfilled. No material has been placed on record by the petitioners in any way to substantiate this bald contention. In the absence of that, therefore it cannot be held that the standard prescribed in A-21 of Appendix B of Rule 5 of the Rules is in any manner unreasonable restriction on the rights of the petitioners to carry on their trade.

In this connection it is well to remember that the petitioners are stated to be prosecuted for violation of the Rules and it will always be open to them in the appropriate proceedings to show by evidence that the standard prescribed is impossible of performance. In the absence of any material on record it is not possible to hold that the standard prescribed is unreasonable or very high. The petitioners had filed along with their petition annexures P-1 to P-3 to show the report that the public analyst had found from some of the tests that he made of Katha obtained from the market that it was adulterated. Those have been filed by the petitioners with a view to show that not only the Katha dealt with by the petitioners but the Katha found in the market was adulterated and this with a view to support their case that the standard prescribed was unreasonable. The petitioners had also filed annexure P-6 along with C.M. 502-W/of 1970 which was said to be a report of the sub-committee issued by the Indian Standard Institution which sub-committee had recommended three grades of the Katha.

A reference to P-6 and the relevant portion will show that table 1 shows the requirements for Katha for grade 1, grade 2 and grade 3 and lays down different characteristics that it should possess. Report P-1 shows that it is said to be adulterated due to excess of moisture by 43% and excess of ash insoluble in Hydrochloric acid by 0.84%. Similarly P-2 is said to be adulterated due to 1.2% excess of ash insoluble in Hydrochloric acid, and P-3 is said to be adulterated due to excess of 1.2% ash insoluble in hydrochloric acid. The standard by which it has been judged is laid down in A.21 of Appendix B of Rule 5 of the Rules as reproduced above. If reference is made to P.6, the documents filed by the petitioners it will be seen that the requirements laid down for grades 1, 2 and 3 in item No. 1 are 12% on drying by weight. This corresponds to what is given in Cl. (b) of A.21. Similarly Item 6 of page 6 of P 6 gives the requirement of acid insoluble ash percent by weight as 0.5 for grade 1 and 0.5 for both grades 2 and 3. A comparison of Cl. (f) of A.21 will show that 0.5% is given there as being common to all grades. This comparison will show that of these two items the standard laid down in A.21 is almost similar to the standard which according to the petitioners has been suggested by the sub-committee of Indian Standard Institution. It is quite obvious, therefore, that if a sub-committee in which the petitioners have faith has itself recommended the standard for some of the characteristics for Katha in almost similar terms as laid down in A.21, the challenge to the said Rules as being unreasonable and impossible of attainment is futile and without any justification. Mr. Bali was not able to give any cogent reason how the said Rule A-21 can be considered to be ultra vires. Challenge to this ground also fails.

21. The result is that there is no merit in the petition and the same is, therefore, dismissed with costs. The prosecution had been stayed for all these years and the counsel for the parties have not been able to tell me in which court the prosecutions are pending. I, therefore, thought it proper to direct the parties through their counsel to appear before the Chief Judicial Magistrate on 15-5-1970.

not accompanied by a certificate of the Commissioner to the effect that the appellants had deposited with him the compensation payable. The compensation had been deposited earlier with him by the appellants on 14th January, 1969. The appeal came up for hearing on 2nd July, 1969, when it was pointed out by this Court to Mr. Ataide Lobo, learned Counsel for the appellants, that the memo of appeal was not accompanied by the required certificate of the Commissioner. Mr. Lobo thereafter made an application on 8th August, 1969, seeking permission to place the certificate on the record. This application was later followed by an affidavit sworn by him on 17th August, 1969. In that affidavit it was affirmed that the appellants had sent him the certificate along with their letter dated 15th January, 1969, but on account of a mistake of his office, it was not attached to the memo of appeal.

According to Mr. Kakodkar, learned counsel for the respondent, in absence of the certificate, there was really no appeal in law on 6th February, 1969, under Section 30 (1). In other words, the appeal was not competent. It was for the first time on 8th August, 1969, that the certificate was produced and by this time, continues Mr. Kakodkar, the appeal became barred by limitation under sub-section (2) of Section 30. Mr. Lobo, in his turn, submits that the appellants had deposited compensation before the period of limitation prescribed, and a mere omission to attach the certificate with the memo of appeal on 6th February, 1969, is not fatal to the maintainability of the appeal. He also submits that assuming it is, even then this is a good case for condoning the delay in filing the certificate under Section 5 of the Limitation Act.

4. The third proviso has been construed in a number of cases and Mr. Kakodkar relies on the principles enunciated thereunder. The first case cited by him is Nandy v. G. M. E. I. Rly., AIR 1954 Cal 435. In this case the compensation awarded was not deposited when the memo of appeal was filed. The preliminary objection taken was that the appeal is not maintainable, inasmuch as in the absence of compensation deposited, no appeal lay from the order passed by the Commissioner. This objection was upheld. The learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court observed:—

“The principle of the section appears to me to be that if the appeal be such that by it the workman's right to the compensation awarded to him is placed in jeopardy, security for the workman must be provided for by the deposit of the amount of compensation and such a deposit would be essential to the maintainability of the appeal.”

The second case is Bhurangya Coal Co. v. Sahebjan, AIR 1956 Pat 299. This decision also is by a Division Bench. The facts of this case are that the order awarding compensation was passed on 27th August, 1951. The appeal was filed on 9th November, 1951. It was then barred by limitation. Therefore, an application for condonation of delay as provided by sub-section (3) was filed, along with the memo of appeal, wherein it was stated that a certificate had been applied for. The Patna High Court, on hearing the application, condoned the delay and thereafter admitted the appeal. The certificate was not even filed on that day. It was produced for the first time in the Court on 16th January, 1955 in the course of the hearing of the appeal. It was argued on behalf of the workman that the appeal was barred by limitation and, as such, it should be dismissed in limine. The learned Judges after considering the earlier decision of their Court in Ramnivas v. Marian, AIR 1951 Pat 260, said:—

“..... the proviso to Section 30 (1) of the Act on a true construction demands that the certificate should be filed along with the memorandum of appeal as an essential part of it. In other words, an appeal as contemplated by it cannot be said in law to be an appeal unless it is accompanied with the aforesaid certificate of the Commissioner. If that is the import of the proviso, which, I think, it is difficult to resist on its language, then the filing of a memorandum of appeal cannot by itself amount in law to a formal presentation of an appeal unless the memorandum of appeal is accompanied with the certificate referred to in that Proviso. That being so, I think it has to be held that the appeal as presented here is time-barred. But on the facts of this case and on the submissions made by Mr. Chatterji as to the circumstances in which the certificate could not be filed earlier, though it was secured long before, I think it is a fit case in which the delay in filing the certificate should be condoned under Section 30 (3) of the Act.”

The earlier decision also was by a Division Bench of the Patna High Court. This decision is relied upon by Mr. Lobo and, it would not be out of place, to reproduce the relevant passage therefrom:—

“On the language of the section it is doubtful whether when an appeal has been filed within the period of limitation allowed by law, it would be time-barred merely because it is not accompanied with a certificate by the Commissioner to the effect that the appellant has deposited with him the amount payable under the order appealed against. It says that no appeal by an employer under sub-clause (a) shall lie unless the certificate is given. In other words, if the certificate is not produced at some stage before the hearing of the appeal, the appeal will not be entertained. The limitation of 60 days applies to the preferring of an appeal. It is no doubt true that the certificate in question may be a very material document which the law enjoins to be filed in order that the appeal may be entertained, but I feel doubtful whether merely because of the non-production of this certificate within the period of limitation the appeal will become barred."

The delay in this case was condoned by the learned Judges of the Patna High Court on the ground that the appellants should be given benefit of the period taken in securing a certified copy of the order passed by the Commissioner. This decision expresses doubts, apart from the consideration that it was really not necessary to have expressed any opinion. In any case it is obiter.

Sada Ram v. Chhotu Ram, AIR 1957 Him Pra 26, is the third case cited by Mr. Kakodkar. The order passed by the Commissioner awarding compensation was dated 16th March, 1955. The memo of appeal was presented on 7th May, 1955, that is, within the period of limitation after excluding the period of 37 days taken in obtaining a certified copy of this order. It was, however, unaccompanied by a certificate of deposit. The period of limitation prescribed expired on 21st June, 1955. On 20th May, 1955, the Deputy Registrar granted the appellants 10 days' time to produce the certificate. On 7th June, 1955, their counsel stated that he could not contact them and therefore he asked for three weeks' further time to produce the certificate. The compensation was finally deposited with the Commissioner on 5th July, 1955, that is, 14 days after the expiry of the period of limitation prescribed. The learned Judicial Commissioner came to the conclusion that the appellants had made out no case for condonation of the delay under Section 5 of the Limitation Act.

It was argued on behalf of the appellants that since the appeal had been presented within the period of limitation, the delay in producing the certificate could not affect competency of the appeal. This argument was not accepted. The learned Judicial Commissioner expressed the opinion that a memo of appeal by an employer presented within the period of limitation, but unaccompanied by a certificate of deposit issued by the Commissioner, will not save limitation. In view of the particular facts found, the delay in producing the certificate was not condoned because the appellants were regarded as negligent.

The fourth case cited by Mr. Kakodkar is Bihar Journals Ltd. v. Nityanand, AIR 1959 Pat 112. In this case the application under Section 5 of the Limitation Act for condonation of the delay in filing a certificate was made on 1st August, 1958. Along with that application, certificate was produced on 29th March, 1955. The memo of appeal was also filed on that day, and along with it, a chalan indicating deposit was produced. The application for condonation of the delay in producing certificate was rejected as sufficient cause had not been made out within the meaning of the said Section 5. The learned Judges said:—

"In our opinion this is not a sufficient ground for condoning the delay made by the petitioners in filing the appeal. We should also refer to the fact that this appeal came up for hearing before a learned Single Judge on the 11th February, 1958, and even on that day the appellants had not taken steps for procuring the certificate from the Commissioner and no application for condoning the delay was filed before the learned Single Judge."

The fifth case cited by Mr. Kakodkar — and the last on this topic — is C. E. Corporation v. Dorai Raj, AIR 1960 Orissa 39. This decision by a Single Judge after considering the principles enunciated in the Calcutta case and the two Patna cases of 1951 and 1956 cited earlier, held that the appeal was not maintainable under Section 30 (1). In this case memo of appeal was not accompanied by a certificate and the preliminary objection that the appeal did not lie in absence thereof was sustained. The argument that the third proviso was mandatory and not directory was accepted by the learned Judge.

In reaching this conclusion, the learned Judge also referred to the decision of the Supreme Court in Kamaraja Nadar v. Kimsu Thevar, AIR 1958 SC 687 wherein the meaning of S. 117 Representation of the People Act 1951, was elucidated by the Supreme Court. Section 117 provides that the petitioner shall enclose with the petition a Government Treasury receipt showing that deposit of 1,000/- rupees has been made by him either in a Government Treasury or in the Reserve Bank of India in favour of the Secretary of the Election Commission as security for the costs of the petition. The question for consideration before the Supreme Court was whether the words "in favour of the Secretary to the Election Commission" are "mandatory in character".

Bhagwati, J., speaking for the Supreme Court, said that they were directory in character. In the words of the Supreme Court:—

"What is of the essence of the provision contained in Section 117 is that the petitioner should furnish security for the costs of the petition, and should enclose along with the petition a Government Treasury receipt showing that a deposit of one thousand rupees has been made by him either in a Government Treasury or in the Reserve Bank of India, is at the disposal of the Election Commission to be utilised by it in the manner authorised by law and is under its control and payable on a proper application being made in that behalf to the Election Commission or to any person duly authorised by it to receive the same, be he the Secretary to the Election Commission or any one else. If, therefore, it can be shown by evidence led before the Election Tribunal that the Government Treasury receipt or the chalan which was obtained by the petitioner and enclosed by him along with his petition presented to the Election Commission was such that the Election Commission could on a necessary application in that behalf be in a position to realise the said sum of rupees one thousand for payment of the costs to the successful party it would be sufficient compliance with the requirements of Section 117. No such literal compliance with the terms of Section 117 is at all necessary as is contended for on behalf of the appellant before us."

The requirement of enclosing a Government Treasury receipt, however, was regarded as essential to the maintainability of the election petition under Section 81 of this Act. This had to be fulfilled absolutely. The said Section 117 was relied upon by the Orissa High Court by way of analogy. The Patna case of 1959 also relies on the Calcutta case.

Coming back to the third proviso, it is true that it does not expressly declare what shall be the consequence of non-compliance, but from its language and the object, the requirement of a certificate is essential to the maintainability of the appeal. There is an implied nullification for disobedience that an appeal will not lie in absence of a certificate. The object is to assure a workman that he will receive the compensation awarded to him in case an appeal fails. An appeal postpones his right to receipt of compensation awarded. It places in jeopardy this right and hence the above legislative safeguard. An absolute provision has to be obeyed exactly unlike a directory provision which has to be obeyed substantially. I agree that the third proviso is mandatory and, in absence of the certificate in this case, this Court will not have jurisdiction to deal with the appeal. This view is technical and may cause hardship, but it cannot be helped.

In Ohene Moore v. Akesseh Tayee, AIR 1935 PC 5, Lord Atkin, a celebrated Judge, delivering speech on behalf of the Judicial Committee, observed:—

"After all, it is to be remembered that all appeals in this country and elsewhere exist merely by statute and unless the statutory conditions are fulfilled no jurisdiction is given to any Court of Justice to entertain them . . . . ."

It is quite true that their Lordships, as every other Court, attempt to do substantial justice and to avoid technicalities; but their Lordships, like any other Court, are bound by the statute law and if the statute law says, there shall be no jurisdiction in a certain event, and that event has occurred, then it is impossible for their Lordships or for any other Court to have jurisdiction."

5. The third proviso having not been complied with, a further question arises whether the delay in producing the certificate after the memo of appeal was filed should be condoned. The important consideration in this case is that the amount of compensation awarded had been deposited with the Commissioner before the memo of appeal had been filed within the period of limitation prescribed. The certificate had also been obtained before the memo of appeal was filed, but due to a mistake on the part of the office of Mr. Lobo, learned Counsel, it was not produced along with the memo of appeal. There is therefore no negligence in this case. The appellants have made out a sufficient cause for condoning the delay in producing the certificate within the meaning of Section 5 of the Limitation Act. It is a fit case for exercising discretion in their favour. It is well settled that the words "sufficient cause" in this section should receive liberal construction so as to advance substantial justice when no negligence nor inaction nor want of bona fides is imputable to the appellant (Dinabandhu v. Jadumoni, AIR 1954 SC 411). Each case has to be judged on its own merits and circumstances, the decisions in other cases being illustrative. The delay is accordingly condoned. The appeal is competent.

6. The second preliminary objection raised by Mr. Kakodkar is that no substantial question of law is involved in this case in terms of the first proviso to Section 30 (1) of the Act and, therefore, the appeal filed is not maintainable. The first proviso says:—

"Provided that no appeal shall lie against any order unless a substantial question of law is involved in the appeal and, in the case of an order other than an order such as is referred to in clause (b), unless the amount in dispute in the appeal is not less than three hundred rupees."

We are not concerned in this case with the order referred to in Clause (b). The amount in dispute in the appeal is more than Rs. 300/- and, therefore, it is necessary for the appellants to satisfy this Court that a substantial question of law is involved in this appeal. Mr. Kakodkar contends that in the memo of appeal no such plea is taken, but I am not inclined to view this omission seriously provided the appellants can satisfy the Court on facts found that the appeal involves a substantial question of law. It may be convenient to consider this aspect of the matter after the merits of the appeal are discussed.

7. The facts found by the Commissioner and also gathered from the evidence recorded by him are:— (1) that the deceased was in the employment of the appellant for a period of 15 years before his death; (2) that there was no quarrel between him and the respondent widow before he left for the barge; (3) that he asked the respondent to look after the sick child in his absence before he left for the barge; (4) that the deceased was not in the habit of taking drinks, nor was he seriously sick at any time; (5) that the deceased started the engine of the barge before it left Sirigao at about 9 p.m. on 22nd May, 1967; (6) that the deceased was on the barge upto 10-30 p.m. and he was last seen by Waman Shambu Porob leaving the wheelhouse at that time; (7) that the deceased did not inform Waman Shambu Porob as to why he was leaving the wheelhouse; (8) that there was a strong wind and the barge was found jolting; (9) that, on inquiry, it was found later that the deceased was missing; (10) that there was no latrine or lavatory in the barge for the crew to answer calls of nature; (11) that the deck of the barge is one foot wide and the metal guard runs round from inside the deck and that the members of the crew answer calls of nature sitting on the deck and catching the metal guard; (12) that there was no quarrel or ill-feeling between the deceased or any other member of the crew before he was found missing from the barge; (13) that the deceased was not seen by any member of the crew falling into the sea; (14) that the corpse of the deceased was found next day at about 4 p.m.; (15) that there were very few cases of members of the crew falling from the barges into the sea by accident; (16) that there were no marks of violence on his corpse and, according to medical evidence, death was due to drowning. In view of these facts, is the inference drawn by the Commissioner — "it is highly probable that the deceased during the course of his employment accidentally fell from the barge into the sea resulting in his death" — reasonable?

8. It is common ground that the onus is on the respondent to prove that the accident arose out of and in the course of employment. This she can prove either by direct evidence or from inferences drawn from the facts found. The death by drowning proves that the deceased fell from the barge into the sea. It is not the case of the appellants that he committed suicide or was murdered. There is a presumption against suicide Bender v. Owners of S. S. Zent, (1909) 2 KB 41 C. A. p. 45. The accident occurred on the barge and therefore we are not concerned with the doctrine of notional extension, as in S. S. Manufacturing Co. v. Bai Valu Raja, AIR 1958 SC 881, and B. E. S. T. Undertaking v. Mrs. Agnes, AIR 1961 SC 193.

In the latter case, after reviewing some leading English decisions, Subba Rao, J. (as he then was), delivering majority judgment observed that the Courts are agreed that the employment does not necessarily end when the "down tools" signal is given or when the workman actually leaves the workshop where he is working. There is a notional extension at both the entry and exit by time and space.

The language of Section 3 (1) of the Act "if personal injury is caused to a workman by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment" — is similar to the language employed in the English Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 and the National Insurance (Industrial Injuries) Act 1946. In Weaver v. Tredegar Iron and Coal Co. Ltd., (1940) 3 All ER 157 (at pages 163 to 165) cited by the Supreme Court, the House of Lords after reviewing the case law in England gave a wider meaning to the concept of duty. Lord Porter, while dealing with the test of duty, observed at p. 179.—

"The man's work does not consist solely in the task which he is employed to perform. It includes also matters incidental to that task. Times during which meals are taken, moments during which the man is proceeding towards his work from one portion of his employer's premises to another, and periods of rest may all be included. . . . The question is not, I think whether the man was on the employer's premises. It is rather whether he was within the sphere of area of his employment."

As, stated earlier, the deceased was not seen in this case by any member of the barge falling from the barge into the sea. There is no evidence that before his fall he did some work for his own benefit unrelated to his employment, and that he contravened some statutory regulations or instructions by his employers or by the Tindal. The doctrine of "added peril" also has no application in this case, apart from the fact, as pointed out by Lord Denning M. R., in R. v. Industrial Injuries Commissioner, (1966) 1 All ER 97 C. A. that, "the house of Lords itself in 1939, in Harris v. Associated Portland Cement Manufacturers Ltd., (1938) 4 All ER 831 had to throw over — I use the word deliberately — the whole doctrine of "added peril" which the House itself enunciated in Lancashire and Yorkshire Rly. Co. v. Huggle, (1917) AC 352 in 1917, and in Stephen v. Cooper, (1929) AC 570 in 1929". There is also no evidence that the deceased fell into the sea because he was drunk. There is, on the contrary, evidence to show that he was not given to drinking.

According to Mr. Lobo, the place of the duty of the deceased has to be confined to the engine room and not beyond it, and, therefore, when the deceased left the wheelhouse and the engine room it cannot be said that he was on duty when he fell down. This argument takes a very narrow view of the place of duty. The entire barge was his place of duty. A member of a shipping company while at sea is continuously in the course of his employment. (See Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd Edition Vol. 27 p. 805). With a greater force it can be said that a member of a barge, on a barge, while at sea, is continuously in the course of his employment. I have no doubt that when the deceased fell from the barge, he was within the sphere of area of his employment. In other words, the accident arose in the course of his employment, but this, by itself, is not enough. It is also necessary to prove that it arose out of his employment. This is a case of unexplained drowning and, in this connection, my attention is drawn by Mr. Kakodkar to Mackinnon Mackenzie and Co., Pvt. Ltd. v. Ibrahim Mahommed Issak, Civil Appeal No. 850 of 1967—(reported in 1969-2 SCC 607), decided by the Supreme Court on 14th August, 1969. This decision cites some cases of unexplained drowning in England. Ramaswami, J., speaking for the Supreme Court, construed the words "accident arising out of and in the course of his employment" thus:—

"The words 'in the course of the employment' mean 'in the course of the work which the workman is employed to do and which is incidental to it'. The words 'arising out of employment' are understood to mean that 'during the course of the employment, injury has resulted from some risk incidental to the duties of the service, which, unless engaged in the duty owing to the master, it is reasonable to believe the workman would not otherwise have suffered'. In other words there must be a causal relationship between the accident and the employment. The expression 'arising out of employment' is again not confined to the mere nature of the employment. The expression applies to employment as such — to its nature, its conditions, its obligations and its incidents. If by reason of any of those factors the workman is brought within the zone of special danger the injury would be one which arises 'out of employment'."

As regards the burden of proof, His Lordship said:—

"On the one hand the Commissioner must not surmise, conjecture or guess; on the other hand, he may draw an inference from the proved facts so long as it is a legitimate inference. It is of course impossible to lay down any rule as to the degree of proof which is sufficient to justify an inference being drawn, but the evidence must be such as would induce a reasonable man to draw it."

9. The cases of unexplained drowning in England cited by the Supreme Court are:—Kerr or Lendrum v. Ayr. Steam Shipping Co. Ltd., (1915) AC 217; (1909) 2 KB 41; Marshall v. Owners of S. S. "Wild Rose", (1909) 2 KB 46; Rice v. Owners of Ship "Swansea Vale", (1912) AC 238; Catten v. Limerick Steamship Co., (1910) 2 IR 561; Rourke v. Hold and Co., (1917) 2 IR Rep. 318 at 321; Simpson v. L. M. and S. Rly. Co., (1931) AC 351; and Rosen v. S. S. "Quercus" (Owners), (1933) AC 494.

The facts of these cases as mentioned by the Supreme Court may be recalled. They are interesting. In Kerr's case, the steward of a ship in harbour was lying in his bunk, when he was told by his Captain to prepare tea for the crew. He was shortly afterwards found missing, and the next day his dead body, dressed in his underclothes only, was found in the sea near the ship. The bulwarks were 3 feet 6 inches above the deck. The steward was a sober man, but was subject to nausea. Murder and suicide were negatived by the Arbitrator, who drew the inference that the deceased left his bunk, went on deck, and accidentally fell overboard and was drowned. He accordingly held that the accident arose out of and in the course of his employment as steward. The Court of Sessions reversed his decision on the ground that there was no evidence to support it. The House of Lords, by a majority, upheld the decision of the Arbitrator on the ground that, although upon the evidence it was open to him to have taken a different view, his conclusion was such as a reasonable man could reach.

In Bender's case, 1909-2 KB 41 the chief cook on board a steamship fell overboard and was drowned while the ship was on the high seas. He was seen at 5-25 a.m. looking over the side; 5-30 a.m. was his usual time for turning out; and he was last seen at 5-35 a.m. going aft. The weather was fine at the time. It was daylight. The ship was steady, and there was no suggestion that the duties of the deceased would lead him into any danger. There was a 4' rail and bulwark all round the ship and there was no evidence to show how the deceased had fallen overboard. The County Court Judge drew the inference that his death was caused by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, but the Court of Appeal held that there was no evidence to warrant such an inference. Cohens-Hardy M. R., pointing out that, although it was conceivable that he might have been engaged on some ship's work, it was equally conceivable that he had been larking or had committed suicide.

In Marshall's case, 1909-2 KB 46 an engineer came on board his vessel, which was lying in a harbour basin, shortly after 10 a.m. Steam had to be got up by midnight. He went below and took off his clothes, except his trousers, shirt and socks. It was a very hot night, and he subsequently came out of his berth, saying that he was going on deck for a breath of fresh air. Next morning his dead body was found at the side of the vessel, just under the place where the men usually sat. It was held by the Court of Appeal, reversing the decision of the County Court Judge, that there was no legitimate ground for drawing the inference that the engineer died from an accident arising out of his employment. This decision was upheld by the House of Lords by a majority of one.

In Rice's case, 1912 AC 238 where the deceased was a "seaman" in the strict sense of the term — that is to say, one whose duty it was to work on deck — and not a ship's cook, as in Bender's case, 1909-2 KB 41 nor an engineer as in Marshall's case, 1909-2 KB 46 a different conclusion was arrived at. In that case the Chief Officer who was on duty on deck, disappeared from the ship in broad daylight. No one saw him fall overboard, but there was evidence that not long before he had complained of headache and giddiness. It was held that there was evidence from which the Court might infer that he fell overboard from an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. The cases of Bender, 1909-2 KB 41 and Marshall, (1909) 2 KB 46 were considered as distinguishable, as in those cases their duties were below deck and at the time they lost their lives they had certainly no duties which called them on the deck.

In Catten's case, 1910-2 IR 561 a night-watchman on board a vessel, whose hours of duty were from 7 p.m. to 7 a.m. when he awoke the crew, was last seen on board at 6 a.m., but on that morning he did not awake the crew. His cap was found on the deck, and his body was found in the harbour some months afterwards. The County Judge held that it was not proved that the accident arose out of his employment and the Court of Appeal on the ground that this was a finding of fact with evidence to support it, refused to interfere.

In Rourke's case, 1917-2 IR Rep 318 a seaman disappeared during his spell of duty at wheel in the wheel-house in the centre of the flying deck and was not afterwards seen. The night was rough, the sea choppy but the vessel was steady. The flying deck was protected by a rail. There was no evidence as to how he met his death and in spite of the presumption against suicide the County Court Judge was unable to draw the inference that the death was due to accident. It was held by the Court of Appeal that in the circumstances of the case the conclusion of the County Court Judge was right.

In Simpson's case, 1931 AC 351 Lord Tomlin after reviewing the previous decisions, enunciated the principle that where the evidence establishes that in the course of his employment the workman was properly in a place to which some risk particular thereto attaches and an accident occurs capable of explanation solely by reference to that risk, it is legitimate, notwithstanding the absence of evidence as to the immediate circumstances of the accident, to attribute the accident to that risk, and to hold that the accident arose out of the employment.

Lastly, in Rosen's case, 1933 AC 491 Lord Buckmaster explained that in Simpson's case, 1931 AC 351 the place referred to was not the exact spot at which the accident occurred, but meant, in that case, the train on which the workman was travelling and in the later case in the House of Lords, the ship on which the workman was employed.

The material facts of the Mackinnon Mackenzie and Co. case, Civil Appeal No. 850 of 1967, D/- 14-8-1969= (reported in 1969-2 SCC 607) (supra) were that Shaikh Hassan Ibrahim was employed as a deck-hand, a seaman of category II on the ship. The medical log book of the ship showed that on December 13, 1961, he complained of pain in the chest and was, therefore, examined, but nothing abnormal was detected clinically. The Medical Officer on board the ship prescribed some tablets for him and he reported fit for work on the next day. On the 15th, however, he complained of insomnia and pain in the chest for which the Medical Officer prescribed sedative tablets. The official log book of the ship shows that on the 16th when the ship was in the Persian Gulf, he was seen near the bridge of the ship at about 2-30 a.m. He was sent back but at 3 a.m. he was seen on the Tween Deck when he told a seaman on duty that he was going to bed. At 6-15 a.m. he was found missing and a search was undertaken. The dead body, however, was not found either on that day or later on. The evidence did not show that it was a stormy night. The Commissioner made a local inspection of the ship and saw the position of the bridge and deck and found that there was a bulwark more than 3½ feet. Nobody saw the missing seaman at the so-called place of accident.

The Additional Commissioner held that there was no material for holding that the death of the seaman took place on account of an accident which arose out of his employment. According to the Supreme Court he did not commit any error of law in reaching this finding and the High Court of Bombay was not justified in reversing it. In this view of the matter the appeal by the employers was allowed and the judgment of the Bombay High Court set aside.

10. Coming back to the facts of the case under consideration, the bulwark of the barge was one foot wide, unlike the bulwarks and rails in Kerr, Bender and Mackinnon Mackenzie cases. Murder and suicide are also negatived, as in the Kerr case, 1915 AC 217. The deceased was hale and hearty before he was found missing and there was no quarrel between him and the respondent and also between him and other members of the barge. His duty as a deck hand was to work on the barge as in the case of Rice, 1912 AC 238 and he was also a "seaman" in the strict sense of the term. His cap and other clothes were not found on the deck as in Catten's case, 1910-2 IR 561. The flying deck was not protected by a rail nor was the vessel steady, as in the case of Rourke. There is evidence to show that the death of the deceased was due to drowning. He was not suffering from pain in the chest or insomnia and further he was not seen in rather odd circumstances before his death as in the case of Shaikh Hassan Ibrahim. His dead body was found but not the dead body of Shaikh Hassan Ibrahim.

This case is relied upon by Mr. Lobo, but the facts are distinguishable. A case is an authority for what it decides. Do the facts found "give rise to conflicting inferences of equal degrees of probability so that the choice between them is a matter of mere conjecture", as observed by Lord Birkenhead L. C., in Lancaster v. Blackwell Colliery Co. Ltd., (1918) WC Rep 345. I would answer this question in the negative. The Commissioner is the judge of the facts and he had the advantage of hearing and seeing the witnesses and, unless his conclusion is perverse, not based on evidence or influenced by irrelevant considerations, it would not be reasonable to reject it.

Earl Loreburn observed in Kerr's case, 1915 AC 217 that "they should regard these awards in a very broad way and constantly remember that they were not the tribunal to decide". In Rice's case, 1912 AC 238 decided by the House of Lords, Lord Loreburn, L. C., said:

"The other alternatives were suicide or murder. If we weigh the probabilities one way or the other, the probabilities are distinctly greater that this man perished during the accident arising out of and in the course of his employment".

I might also refer to one more Indian case of an unexplained drowning cited by Mr. Kakodkar before I conclude. This is Vishram Yesu Haldankar v. Dadabhoy Hormasji and Co., AIR 1942 Bom 175. In this case the applicant's son was one of six khalasis employed on a barge which was tied up along side a steamer in the dock. The finding was that the khalasis had to prepare and take their meals on the barge and also to sleep there either in the rooms allotted to them by the employer when there was no work at night, or in the hatches when there was work at night. On the day in question, which was the night of 22nd/23rd October, 1940, meals were taken at half-past eight and the khalasis slept on the hatches. The work of loading goods into the ship was to begin at 3 a.m. on the 23rd. The deceased went to sleep on one of the hatches at about 9 p.m. and when his companions woke up, he was found missing and a considerable time afterwards his body was discovered in the dock where the barge had been. Owing to the amount of decomposition which had taken place, it was not possible to say what was the cause of his death. It was also in evidence that on the night in question there was a storm and that the hatches were on a higher level than the deck. The khalasis slept with their feet pointing towards the deck, and the deck was about one and half feet wide. The Commissioner did not find as a fact that the accident did not occur out of and in the course of employment, but he found that there was no evidence on which he could base the finding that the accident occurred out of the employment.

Beamont, C. J., delivering judgment on behalf of the Division Bench after considering the cases of Simpson, 1931 AC 351 and Rosen, 1933 AC 494 (supra) observed:—

"..... that the workman was sleeping on the barge in the course of his employment, and there must necessarily be a risk inherent in the discharge of his duty in so sleeping that he may fall off the barge into the water. The most natural inference to draw is that the accident occurred because for some reason or other in the middle of the night the workman fell off the barge either in his sleep or when half awake and struck his head in the process. I say that because the evidence is that he was a good swimmer. So he must have lost consciousness before he got into the water. No doubt there are other possible inferences. It is conceivable though highly improbable, that the man committed suicide. It is conceivable, and rather less improbable, that he was murdered and his body was thrown into the water. But there is absolutely no evidence to suggest suicide or homicide and the most natural inference from the evidence is that he met with an accident which arose out of his duty in sleeping on the barge."

11. Applying the principles enunciated in all these cases, are not the probabilities greater in this case that the deceased accidentally fell from the barge into the sea and that his death was by "an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment"? Times during which meals are taken or moments during which calls of nature are answered and breaths of fresh air taken are matters incidental to the duties of barge crew including an engine driver and they fall within the sphere of their employment. Having a deck one foot in width and answering calls of nature in the manner mentioned above were, in my opinion, risks incidental to the duties of employment of the deceased. It could be reasonably said that the deceased brought himself within the zone of special danger, when engaged in his employment in the circumstances mentioned. The inference drawn by the Commissioner is legitimate.

The Act is a piece of what is known as social legislation and, in the words of Lord Wright in Noble v. Southern Rly., (1940) 2 All ER 383 at p. 393, in relation to the English Workmen's Compensation Act 1925, "was intended to be administered with as little technicality as possible". In the words of Lord Denning M. R.

"the other mistake which the Courts made in the earlier decisions was to interpret the Workmen's Compensation Act too narrowly. Even the House of Lords did not appreciate the social significance of this legislation". "They debarred men from compensation when Parliament thought that they ought to have it". (R. v. Industrial Injuries Commis- sioner', (1966) 1 All ER 97 at p. 101 C. A.). I agree with Mr. Kakodkar that the inference drawn by the Commissioner is reasonable based on the evidence and not on conjectures. This is not one of those cases where, in the words of Lord Shaw of Dunfermline in Marshall's case, 1909-2 KB 46, "the name of inference may be apt to be given to what is purely conjecture".

In the view taken of this matter, I am inclined to hold that the probabilities are greater that the deceased died by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, while taking a breath of fresh air or answering a call of nature. The finding of fact recorded by the Commissioner that the deceased died by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment is supported by evidence, and, therefore, I would not interfere. The Commissioner did not commit any error of law in reaching this finding. The cause may be jolting of the barge due to a strong wind and the sea being slightly rough. It takes seconds to fall off the deck. I do not agree with Mr. Lobo that the accident did not arise out of the employment of the deceased. The bulwark one foot wide coupled with jolting of the barge due to strong wind were risks inherent in the discharge of his duties.

12. Mr. Kakodkar next submits that the appeal does not involve a substantial question of law and, in this connection, he cites: 'Kaikushroo Pirojsha v. C. P. Syndicate Ltd.', AIR 1949 Bom 134; 'Jawli v. Babu Lal', AIR 1958 All 564; and 'Chunilal V. Mehta v. C. S. and M. Co. Ltd.', AIR 1962 SC 1314. In the Bombay case, Chagla, C. J., observed:—

"Frankly, it is not at all easy to determine what a substantial question of law contemplated by Section 110, Civil Procedure Code is. The only guidance that we have had from the Privy Council is that substantial question is not necessarily a question which is of public importance. It must be a substantial question of law as between the parties in the case involved. But here again it must not be forgotten that what is contemplated is not a question of law alone; it must be a substantial question. One can define it negatively. For instance, if there is a well-established principle of law and that principle of law is applied to a given set of facts, that would certainly not be a substantial question of law. Where the question of law is not well settled or where there is some doubt as to the principle of law involved, it certainly would raise a substantial question of law which would require a final adjudication by the highest Court."

In Jawli's case, AIR 1958 All 564 the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court said:—

"We are unable to accept the submission that the words 'substantial question of law' in Section 30 (1) of the Workmen's Compensation Act must be given the same meaning as in the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 110 of that Code makes provision for appeals from decrees and final orders of a Court which, unless leave to appeal to the Supreme Court is granted, is a final appellate Court. Section 30 of the Workmen's Compensation Act on the other hand makes provision for an appeal to this Court from a tribunal of first instance and if learned counsel's submission is accepted it follows that this Court will have no jurisdiction in a case in which the Commissioner had arrived at an obviously wrong conclusion on a question of law. We do not think that that was the intention of the legislature. In our opinion the phrase "substantial question of law" as used in the proviso to Section 30 (1) of the Act must be given a wider construction than is to be attributed to it in Section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the phrase should be construed to cover a case such as the present in which the Commissioner has clearly misdirected himself on a question of law."

In Chunilal's case, AIR 1962 SC 1314 Their Lordships of the Supreme Court said:—

"The proper test for determining whether a question of law raised in the case is substantial would, in our opinion, be whether it is of general public importance or whether it directly and substantially affects the rights of the parties and if so whether it is either an open question in the sense that it is not finally settled by this Court or by the Privy Council or by the Federal Court or is not free from difficulty or calls for discussion of alternative views. If the question is settled by the highest Court or the general principles to be applied in determining the question are well settled and there is a mere question of applying those principles or that the plea raised is palpably absurd the question would not be a substantial question of law."

The proper legal effect of a proved fact is necessarily a question of law, and so also where there is or is no evidence to support a finding of fact, and the interpretation of a statutory provision and its scope and effect. Whether a fact has been proved when the evidence for and against has been properly received is a question of fact. That the deceased was working for his employer is a question of fact. Questions of fact are not to be inflated or magnified into questions of law. This tendency has to be deprecated. Questions of law and of fact are often difficult to separate. Whether the death in this case was caused by an accident arising out of and in the course of the employment of the deceased is a mixed question of fact and law. The question of liability of the appellants is to be determined in the light of the facts found.

As, stated earlier, there is evidence to support the conclusion of the Commissioner in favour of the respondent. A question of law undoubtedly arises in this appeal, but we have to go a step further and satisfy ourselves whether it involves a substantial question of law. The general principles on cases of unexplained drowning have been set out and explained by the Supreme Court in Mackinnon Mackenzie case, Civil Appeal No. 850 of 1967, D/- 14-8-1969= (reported in 1969-2 SCC 607) (supra), in the light of the English case-law cited. What remains is to apply them to the facts found. I am not called upon to consider the proposition that these words have a different meaning from similar words used in Section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

According to Mr. Kakodkar, the appeal does not involve a substantial question of law because the general principles are well-settled. It may be contended, on the other hand, that the question of determining liability in this case is not free from difficulty or, at any rate, it "calls for discussion of alternative views". The probabilities of this case have been considered from different angles, but on the facts found, it may be difficult to agree with Mr. Lobo that the appeal involves a substantial question of law. There is no misdirection on question of law as in Jawli's case, AIR 1958 All 564, so as to warrant interference. The question of law directly affects the rights of the parties, but this consideration by itself is not enough. When we consider the probabilities of this case some difficulty does arise in reaching a correct conclusion, but this consideration also is not enough.

We have a welter of decisions on the construction of liability in the context of Section 3 of the Act, but by now the Law appears to be well established. I am inclined to uphold the submission of Mr. Kakodkar that the appeal does not involve a substantial question of law. This would be an additional ground for not accepting the appeal, apart from my decision on merits. It may be added that this Court is the final Court of Appeal. The law favours a finality in litigation except in special cases. The right to receive compensation need not be further postponed. In this view of the matter, the appeal is dismissed with costs. The respondent may be paid compensation as directed by the learned Commissioner. Order accordingly.

Appeal dismissed.

S. K. Kakodkar, for Petitioner; Joaquim Dias, Govt. Pleader, for Respondents.

ORDER:— This is a petition filed under Arts. 226 and 227 of the Constitution of India praying to quash the temporary permit No. 6408 issued by respondents 1 and 2 under Section 62(c) of the Motor Vehicles Act to the third respondent to ply his bus No. GDT 2232 on new route between Sal and Margao.

2. The petitioner Premnath Sitaram Raut holds a regular stage carriage permit valid from 2/4/68 to 1/4/71 to ply his bus No. GDT 2119 from Sal to Betim via Cansarpal and Assonora and he has been plying that bus. The petitioner alleges that in January, 1970, on his coming to know that the first and second respondents were intending to open a new route between Sal and Margao via Sankirwal-Cansarpal and Assonora and grant temporary stage carriage permit thereon to the third respondent, got represented through his attorney Shri S. M. Dhond to the first respondent that there was no necessity of opening the intended route and that in any event there was no necessity of granting a temporary stage carriage permit on the said route but the respondents 1 and 2, without even giving oral hearing to him (petitioner) granted on 23/2/70 a temporary stage carriage permit to the third respondent on the newly opened Sal-Margao route via Sankirwal-Cansarpal and Assonora, that that route overlaps his (petitioner's) route from Sal to Assonora, that the first respondent, in spite of repeated requests by him (petitioner) did not grant to him certified copies of all documents connected with the grant of temporary stage carriage permit to the third respondent, that there are 23 buses plying on regular permits between Sankirwal and Margao via Assonora and there was no need to open the new route, that the grant of temporary permit to third respondent is illegal as not one of the conditions (a), (b), (c), (d), mentioned in Section 62 of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939 is satisfied, that there was no particular temporary need to authorize the third respondent to ply the bus temporarily and that considerable loss is being caused to him (petitioner) by the grant of illegal temporary permit to the third respondent.

3. The respondents have filed affidavits opposing the petition. Their case is that as there was pressing demand from the villagers of several villages to open a bus route from Sal to Margao decision was taken to open that route after making full enquiries about the genuineness of the demand, that the enquiry was first made by the Assistant Inspector of Motor Vehicles and later on by the first respondent, that the Assistant Inspector of Motor Vehicles submitted his report on 6/2/70 recommending the opening of new route from Sal to Margao, that the first respondent visited Sal on 11/2/70 and there, among others, gave the petitioner an oral hearing, that the first respondent was convinced about the genuineness of the need for a bus service from Sal to Margao, that then he ordered that the route be advertised for grant of regular permit and later on issued a temporary permit to the third respondent to meet the immediate demand, that there was temporary need for granting the permit to ply bus between Sal and Margao, that the temporary permit was granted to meet the immediate transport demand of traffic pending finalization of the case for issuing regular permit for which very elaborate procedure is prescribed by the Motor Vehicles Act, that there is no direct route from Sal to Margao, that the certified copies of the documents connected with the grant of temporary permit to the third respondent were not granted to the petitioner as he had no locus standi in the matter and as Shri Dhond, attorney of the petitioner, was not having authority to receive the certified copies, that no loss is caused to the petitioner by the grant of temporary permit to the third respondent, that the temporary permit issued to the third respondent is in accordance with law, that the petitioner could prefer appeal against the order by which temporary permit was granted to the third respondent, that the petitioner filed this petition without exhausting his remedies and so the petition is not maintainable, that the petition is misconceived, baseless and frivolous and that it is fit to be dismissed.

4. In view of the arguments advanced before me the first and foremost point for determination in this matter is whether the temporary permit granted to the third respondent is in accordance with law.

5. Grant of temporary permits is governed by Section 62 of the Motor Vehicles Act. Clause (c) of that section is as follows:—

"to meet a particular temporary need." The respondents contend that there is no direct bus route from Sal to Margao, that there was pressing demand from the villagers of several villages to open bus route from Sal to Margao, that the first respondent first got the enquiries made by the Assistant Inspector of Motor Vehicles and then he himself made enquiries, visiting Sal, about the genuineness of the demand made by the public to open bus route from Sal to Margao and was convinced that the demand was genuine and the route should be opened at once, that pending completion of the formalities for the grant of regular stage carriage permit temporary permit was granted and that no application for the grant of regular permit was received by the date on which temporary permit was issued to the third respondent. The learned Government Pleader, relying on the decisions in M. P. State Road Transport Corpn., Bairagarh, Bhopal v. B. P. Upadhyaya, AIR 1966 SC

156; Burdwan Bus Service v. R. T. A. Burdwan, AIR 1966 Cal 568 and Ashok Auto Service v. Union of India, AIR 1968 Goa 67, argued that whenever there is a permanent need to provide transport facilities it must be presumed that a particular temporary need also exists and that where necessity for grant of regular permits on a route exists it is within the jurisdiction of the Regional Transport Authority to grant temporary permit under Section 62(c) of the Motor Vehicles Act. I have gone through the rulings cited by learned Government Pleader carefully. The judgments reported in AIR 1968 Goa 67 and AIR 1966 Cal 568 cited by him are based on the judgment of the Supreme Court reported in AIR 1966 SC 156. In that judgment of the Supreme Court it has not been held that whenever there is permanent need to provide transport facilities it must be presumed that a temporary need also exists. For this reason I am unable to agree with the opinion expressed in the judgments reported in AIR 1966 Cal 568 and AIR 1968 Goa 67 that, whenever there is permanent need it must be presumed that temporary need also exists. What has been held by the Supreme Court is that the view that whenever there was permanent need there could be no temporary need and so temporary permit could not be granted under Section 62(c) of the Motor Vehicles Act is erroneous, that there is no antithesis between a particular temporary need and a permanent need, that those two kinds of need may co-exist on a particular route, that sub-section (c) of Section 62 thus contemplates that there may exist a temporary need for transport facilities on a particular route even in case of permanent need for such facilities, and that where therefore the Regional Transport Authority considered in a case of permanent need for transport facilities there was also a particular temporary need and granted a temporary permit his action cannot be challenged as legally invalid. The Madhya Pradesh High Court in Raipur Transport Co. Pvt. Ltd. v. R. T. A. Jabalpur, AIR 1967 Madh Pra 141 and M. P. State Road Transport Corpn. Bhopal v. R. T. A. Raipur, AIR 1968 Madh Pra 148 held that the Supreme Court had not held in AIR 1966 SC 156 that whenever there is a permanent need then it must be taken that a temporary need also exists. I am in full agreement with the opinion expressed by the M. P. High Court. In view of the judgment of the Supreme Court noted above it is held that permanent need and temporary need may co-exist on a particular route and that temporary permit to provide transport facilities can be issued if the Regional Transport Authority comes to the conclusion that there is need to issue such permit. In the case on hand enquiries to find out the genuineness of the demand made by the public to open new route from Sal to Margao were first made by the Assistant Inspector of Motor Vehicles in obedience to the orders of the first respondent and were later on made by the first respondent, Secretary, State Transport Authority and Director of Transport, Panjim. The order passed by the first respondent in connection with granting temporary permit to the third respondent is as follows:

"There is a demand from the residents of Sal and surrounding areas for a bus service from Sal to Margao. I have visited the place and heard some of the villagers of Sal who pressed to me the urgency for introduction of a bus service from Sal to Margao. They said that there will be at least 30 to 35 daily passengers who are going from Sal to Bicholim Ponda and Margao for their work. It is my firm conviction that there is a genuine need for a bus service from Sal to Margao and it is necessary to take immediate steps to provide transport for the people of Sal. This particular need leads me to examine the applications received from the following persons... ..

For these reasons I hereby order that Shri S. V. Joshi be issued a temporary permit to operate his bus No. GDT 2232 from Sal to Margao and vice versa for a period of four months with immediate effect and the route be advertised for grant of a regular stage carriage permit to operate the same service." ... ..

On reading the above order and paragraphs 4 and 9 of the affidavit filed by the first respondent I feel that the first respondent after full enquiry, having come to the conclusion that there was immediate need to provide transport facilities on the new route from Sal to Margao granted temporary permit as per clause (c) of Section 62 of the Motor Vehicles Act to the third respondent and that it is not correct to say that he (the first respondent) acted without jurisdiction or illegally. It may be noted that the petitioner has not charged the first respondent with mala fide in granting temporary permit to the third respondent. It is established that the first respondent after convincing himself that there was particular temporary need, issued temporary permit to meet that need and that he acted as per Sec. 62(c) of the Motor Vehicles Act. It had been argued on behalf of the petitioner that temporary permit can be issued only with regard to existing route and that it cannot be issued in respect of a new route. I find no force in that argument because under Cl. (c) of Section 62 of Motor Vehicles Act whenever it is found that there is a particular temporary need temporary permit can be granted. I am supported in my view by the decision of Calcutta High Court in AIR 1966 Cal 568.

6. Even though the petitioner alleged that without giving him an oral hearing temporary permit was issued to the third respondent, during arguments the learned advocate for the petitioner admitted that on 11/2/70 at Sal the first respondent had heard the petitioner. If certified copies of the documents relating to the grant of temporary permit to the third respondent had not been supplied to the petitioner by the first respondent, it cannot be said that the temporary permit issued to the third respondent is illegal. In the course of the arguments the learned Government Pleader placed before this Court the entire record relating to the grant of the temporary permit to the third respondent. The contention of the respondents that there is no direct bus from Sal to Margao is not denied by the petitioner. The argument advanced by the learned Government Pleader, that the petition is not maintainable because the petitioner did not prefer appeal against the order by which temporary permit was granted to the third respondent and he (the petitioner) filed this petition without exhausting his remedies, has no importance because the petitioner had filed this petition contending that there is illegality apparent on the face of the record and because this Court thought fit to decide the petition on merits. It cannot be said that considerable loss is being caused to the petitioner by the grant of temporary permit to the third respondent because that permit had been issued in accordance with law. The petition is fit to be dismissed as it is proved that the temporary permit had been issued as per the provisions of Section 62(c) of the Motor Vehicles Act.

7. The petition is dismissed. Considering the circumstances of the case parties will bear their own costs.

Petition dismissed.

M. D. Gaitonde, for Applicant; B. Ramani for Respondent.

ORDER:— The learned Sessions Judge at Panaji has made this reference. The applicant herein is the husband of the respondent Sumitra. The respondent filed petition under Section 488, Criminal P. C. in First Class Magistrate's Court at Quepem stating that her husband was not maintaining her and that he directed to pay maintenance to her. The learned Magistrate allowed the petition after inquiry. The petitioner herein filed revision application in Sessions Court at Panaji against the order of the Magistrate, stating various reasons and contending that that order was bad in law. In the revision petition he did not state that for the Magistrate not recording his statement under Section 242, Criminal P. C. he was prejudiced or the proceedings had become null and void. After hearing the arguments in revision, the learned Sessions Judge made this reference to this Court stating that the Magistrate did not record the statement of the revision petitioner under Section 242, Criminal P. C., that as such as per the decision of this Court in reference No. 101 of 1966 (Goa) the entire proceedings have become null and void, that the order of the Magistrate is fit to be set aside and that the matter is fit to be remanded to Magistrate's Court to decide the case as per law after complying with the provisions of Section 242, Criminal P. C.

2. The point for determination is whether the proceedings have become null and void due to the Magistrate not recording the statement of the petitioner herein under S. 242, Criminal P. C.

3. Chapter 45 of the Criminal P. C. deals with the irregularities which vitiate or do not vitiate the proceedings. In that chapter it is not mentioned that if in a case filed under Section 488, Criminal P. C. the respondent is not examined under Section 242, Criminal P. C. the proceedings are vitiated. It is clearly laid down in Section 537, Criminal P. C. that any error or omission or irregularity in the complaint, summons, warrant, proclamation, order, judgment, or other proceedings before or during trial or any inquiry or other proceedings under the Criminal P. C. will not be reversed or altered under Chapter 27 or on appeal or revision unless such error or omission or irregularity etc. has in fact occasioned a failure of justice. In the case on hand, the learned advocate appearing for the revision petitioner stated in this Court that he had not contended in the Sessions Court that the proceedings were vitiated for his client not being examined under S. 242, Criminal P. C. When the revision petitioner himself does not contend that he was prejudiced by his not being examined under S. 242, Criminal P. C., it cannot be said that there was failure of justice. It is against law in this case to say that the proceedings are vitiated due to the Magistrate not examining the revision petitioner under S. 242, Criminal P. C.

4. The learned Sessions Judge based his reference on the judgment of my learned predecessor in reference No. 101 of 1966 (Goa). In that judgment my learned predecessor opined to the effect that the provisions of Section 242, Criminal P. C. in a case under Section 488, Criminal P. C. should be followed and if they are not followed the proceedings are vitiated. He referred to the judgment of the Supreme Court in Nand Lal v. Kanhaiya Lal, AIR 1960 SC 882 in his judgment. I have gone through that judgment of the Supreme Court. It is nowhere held in that judgment that for not following the provisions of Section 242, Criminal P. C. the proceedings under Section 488, Criminal P. C. are vitiated. That judgment is to the effect that Section 488, Criminal P. C. does not contemplate preliminary inquiry before issuing notice to the respondent. The procedure to be followed in cases filed under Section 488, Criminal P. C. is laid down in sub-sec. (6) of that Section. That sub-section is as follows:—

"All evidence under this Chapter shall be taken in the presence of the husband or father, as the case may be, or when his personal attendance is dispensed with, in the presence of his pleader, and shall be recorded in the manner prescribed in the case of summons-cases:

Provided that if the Magistrate is satisfied that he is wilfully avoiding service, or wilfully neglects to attend the Court, the Magistrate may proceed to hear and determine the case ex parte. Any order so made may be set aside for good cause shown, on application made within three months from the date thereof."

According to that sub-section the entire evidence is to be recorded in the manner prescribed in the case of summons cases in the presence of the husband or father as the case may be, or, when his personal attendance is dispensed with, in the presence of his pleader. Section 355, Criminal P. C. lays down the mode of recording evidence in summons cases. In summons cases the Magistrate has to record memorandum of the substance of the evidence of each witness as the examination of the witness proceeds if he does not think fit to act as per Section 358, Criminal P. C. In sub-section (6) of S. 488, Criminal P. C. it is not laid down that the cases filed under Section 488, Criminal P. C. shall be disposed of observing the procedure prescribed for the trial of summons cases. All that is mentioned in that sub-section is that the evidence shall be recorded in the presence of the husband or father as the case may be and it shall be recorded in the manner prescribed in the case of summons cases. The learned advocate appearing for the revision petitioner does not state that the procedure prescribed for recording evidence has been violated in this case. A person against whom a case is filed under Section 488, Criminal P. C. is not an accused. A petition filed under Section 488, Criminal P. C. is not a complaint. The proceedings under S. 488, Criminal P. C. are in the nature of civil proceedings, but they are governed by the provisions of the Criminal P. C. It has already been noted that the procedure which the Magistrate should follow in disposing of a case filed under Section 488, Criminal P. C. is laid down in sub-section (6) of that section. According to that procedure when the evidence has to be recorded in the presence of the respondent in the petition or his advocate, it will have to be said that the respondent in the petition will have to be summoned. If in spite of the summons being served on the respondent he does not appear in court, the Magistrate is empowered under the proviso to sub-section (6) of S. 488 to determine the case ex parte. In view of the fact that the Magistrate is empowered to determine the case ex parte, it cannot be said that the entire procedure prescribed for the trial of summons cases in the Criminal P. C. is applicable to the cases filed under S. 488, Criminal P. C. I am unable to agree with the finding of my learned predecessor in reference No. 101 of 1966. To my mind, the proceedings in this case are not vitiated. It is admitted that notice of the petition filed by the respondent herein, along with a copy of that petition was served on the petitioner herein as per the orders of the Magistrate and he (petitioner herein) was asked to appear in the court to have his say. The petitioner herein appeared in the Magistrate's court but did not file any counter even though the case was adjourned number of times. The Magistrate then started recording evidence and disposed of the case. Under these circumstances it can never be said that there was failure of justice in this case. I cannot accept this reference. The reference is rejected. The learned Sessions Judge will dispose of the revision petition on merits.

Reference rejected.

M. S. Usgaocar, for Plaintiff; Joaquim Dias, Govt. Pleader, for the State.

ORDER:— This is a reference made by the learned Civil Judge, Senior Division, Bicholim.

2. In regular civil suit No. 63 of 1968 filed under the Portuguese Law in the Court of Civil Judge, Senior Division, Bicholim, for eviction of the defendant (Cont. on Col. 2) from a cashew garden alleging that he (the defendant) even after the expiry of the lease period was not handing over possession of that garden to the plaintiff, the defendant pleaded that he was in possession of the suit property as lawful tenant since about 40 years and that he could not be evicted from it by Civil Court in view of the provisions of the Protection of Rights of Tenants (Cashewnuts and Arecanuts) Order, 1965.

3. The learned Civil Judge, Senior Division, Bicholim after hearing the parties felt that the order of 1965 under which the defendant was claiming protection was not a valid order and he referred the matter under Section 9 of the Goa, Daman and Diu (Judicial Commissioner's Court) Regulation, 1963 for the opinion of this Court about the validity of that order.

4. Arguments of the learned Government Pleader and the learned Advocate for the plaintiff have been heard. The impugned order, viz. the Protection of Rights of Tenants (Cashewnuts and Arecanuts) Order, 1965 shows that it was passed by the Lt. Governor of Goa, Daman and Diu i.e. the Administrator in exercise of the powers conferred on him by Cl. 2 of the Goa, Daman and Diu (Administration) Removal of Difficulties Order, 1962 and all other powers enabling him in that behalf. It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff that Cl. 2 of Goa, Daman and Diu (Administration) Removal of Difficulties Order, 1962 does not empower the Lt. Governor to pass the impugned order and he had no power to pass that order and that that order is ultra vires and invalid. The said Clause 2 as amended on 19-12-1963 is as follows:

"Until any law in force immediately before the twentieth day of December, 1961, in Goa, Daman and Diu or any part thereof is altered, repealed or amended by a competent Legislature or other competent authority, the powers conferred and the duties imposed by or under any provision of such law on any functionary specified in Column I of the Table below shall, unless such provision is inconsistent with, or repugnant to, the provisions of the Constitution, be exercisable and performed, subject to such directions as the Central Government may give, by the functionary specified in Column II thereof opposite to that functionary.

President of Portugal, Overseas Minister (Ministro do Ultramar), Governor General of the State of India
Secretary General
Police Commandant (Comandante-general da Policia)

II

Administrator
Chief Civil Administrator, Goa.
Senior Superintendent of Police.

5. A careful reading of the above Clause makes it clear that the impugned order could be passed by the Lt. Governor of Goa, Daman and Diu if it could be passed either by the President of Portugal or Overseas Minister or the Governor General of the State of India. Even though it has been argued on behalf of the plaintiff that the President of Portugal or Overseas Minister or the Governor General of the State of India had no power to pass the impugned order as it is against the provisions of the Portuguese Civil Code and Civil P. C., the learned Govt. Pleader was not in a position to contradict that argument. The defendant and advocate for the defendant have chosen to be absent in this Court. All that is stated by the learned Government Pleader is that under S. 4 of the Goa, Daman and Diu Mamlatdar's Court Act, 1966 the plaintiff could file the suit for eviction in Mamlatdar's Court and it is not necessary to decide in this case whether the impugned order is valid. The plaintiff was not bound to file the suit for eviction in Mamlatdar's Court only. He could file it in Civil Court and the Civil Court could entertain it. When for the just disposal of the suit filed by the plaintiff it has become essential to consider the validity of the impugned order and when it is coming to light that the President of Portugal or the Overseas Minister or the Governor General of the State of India could not pass that order it will have to be held that the Lt. Governor of Goa, Daman and Diu had no power to pass the impugned order. It has not been stated on behalf of the State that the impugned order could be passed by the Lt. Governor of Goa, Daman and Diu in exercise of any powers conferred on him except the powers under Cl. 2 of Goa, Daman and Diu (Administration) Removal of Difficulties Order, 1962. It has already been noted that under that clause the impugned order could not be passed by the Lt. Governor.

6. It is held that the Impugned order is ultra vires and invalid.

Reference answered accordingly.

Civil Appeal No. 41 of 1969, D/-13-7-1970.

Portuguese Civil Code, Art. 1566—Under S. 5(1), Goa Daman and Diu (Administration) Act (1962) laws in force in the territories were saved — However under Section 4(1), Goa, Daman and Diu (Laws) No. 2 Regulation (1963) corresponding laws stood repealed — Reading of the two provisions show that law relating to pre-emption under Art. 1566 is saved even after coming into force of T. P. Act (1882) as neither S. 44 nor any other section in T. P. Act deals with right of pre-emption. (Para 5)

IN/IN/E14/70/BDB/T

B. Reis, for Appellant; V. M. S. Neuren-car, for Respondent.

ORDER:— This appeal is against order dated 17-10-1969 passed by the Civil Judge, Margao.

2. The facts necessary to be mentioned for the disposal of this appeal are these: One Valente I. X. Franco Coutinho commenced execution proceedings against Joaquim Manuel Raimundo da Cruz and his wife. In those proceedings a portion of the property named "Madaabata" situate at Margao was auctioned. The appellant herein was the highest bidder in the auction but the Court did not sell the property to him as the respondent herein claimed that he was co-owner and he had right to purchase the property in exercise of his right of pre-emption under Section 1566 of Portuguese Civil Code. By the order under appeal, the lower Court sold the property to the respondent herein.

3. The appellant contends that as the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 came into force in this territory from 1-11-1965, the lower court could not sell the property to the respondent herein as per Art. 1566 of Portuguese Civil Code.

4. The point for determination is whether there is any force in the contention of the appellant.

5. The Transfer of Property Act 1882 was extended to this territory by the Goa, Daman and Diu (Laws) No. 2 Regulation 1963. Section 4(1) of that Regulation is as follows:—

"Any law in force in Goa, Daman and Diu or any area thereof corresponding to any Act referred to in Section 3 or any part thereof shall stand repealed as from the coming into force of such Act or part in Goa, Daman and Diu or such area, as the case may be."

According to that section if there is any law in force in this territory corresponding to Transfer of Property Act that law would stand repealed. The point in dispute in this case is whether the right of pre-emption claimed by the respondent herein was rightly accepted by the lower court. In the Transfer of Property Act 1882 there is no mention about pre-emption. When it is so, it cannot be said that the law relating to pre-emption existing in this territory has been repealed.

The learned advocate for the appellant brought to my notice Section 44 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. That section deals with rights of a person who purchased property from a co-owner. That section has nothing to do with pre-emption. Section 5(1) of the Goa, Daman and Diu (Administration) Act, 1962 is as follows:—

"All laws in force immediately before the appointed day in Goa, Daman and Diu or any part thereof shall continue to be in force therein until amended or repealed by a competent legislature or other competent authority."

Even according to that section the law relating to pre-emption existing in this territory will continue to be in force till it is repealed by competent Legislature or authority. Up to now the Law relating to pre-emption has not been repealed. For this reason it will have to be held that in spite of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 coming into force from 1-11-1965 in this territory, the lower court was right in selling the property in dispute to the respondent herein when he expressed his desire to purchase it and when it was proved that he was co-owner and he had right to purchase it in exercise of his right of pre-emption. I find no force in this appeal. The appeal is dismissed. Parties will bear their own costs.

test and must be held to be an officer. He was duly authorised for the purpose by Ex. 14. The receipt of the sample by Chemist Vaghela thus creates no infirmity and Mr. P. D. Desai's contention in this behalf has no merit.

36. The aforesaid were the only contentions raised on merits and for the reasons stated, they are not capable of acceptance. The various points of law raised earlier have been answered by me as aforesaid. In the result, I must maintain the conviction of the appellant. As regards the sentence, although the minimum sentence provided for the offence is one of imprisonment which shall not be less than six months and fine which shall not be less than Rs. 1,000/-, the learned Magistrate appears to have found that there were adequate and special reasons in the case to impose a lesser sentence. The reasons considered are that the milk contained the required percentage of fat and further that the accused was a hawker. The learned Magistrate has accordingly awarded the lesser substantive sentence of one month's R. I. He has, however, imposed the minimum sentence of fine of Rs. 1,000/- and in default R. I. for three months. In my opinion, having regard to the special facts and circumstances of this case and the further fact that the accused has already undergone seven days' imprisonment before he was released on bail in this appeal, it would be appropriate to reduce his substantive sentence to the period already undergone. Mr. G. T. Nanavaty's objection to the reduction of the sentence has not impressed me as of much substance. Accordingly, I maintain the conviction of the accused as also the sentence of fine and the sentence in default of payment of fine as awarded by the learned City Magistrate, but I reduce the substantive sentence to the one already undergone. Orders accordingly.

Orders accordingly.

N. V. Karlekar (Amicus Curiae), for Appellant; C. N. Desai, Government Pleader, for Respondent.

M. U. SHAH, J.:— This second appeal has come to us by a reference made by Mr. Justice B. G. Thakore on February 18, 1969. It raises an important question concerning the age of compulsory retirement of a pre-1938 April ministerial Central Government servant

2. Appellant Mulchand Dasumal Pardasani was appointed as a clerk in the Sindh Salt Department on June 10, 1930. He was transferred to Bombay Central Excise Department with effect from 15th August 1947 and was appointed as Upper-Division Clerk in about October 1948. At that time, he was drawing a salary of Rs. 280/- plus Rs. 50/- dearness allowance per month in the scale of Rs. 130-5-160-8-200 E B.-8-280-10-300. He continued to be in that scale on the date of the issuance of establishment order No. 286 of 1963 dated December 18, 1963 by the Collector, Central Excise, Baroda. The said order was served on him on December 28, 1963, and he proceeded on leave preparatory to retirement on March 14, 1964, the date on which he attained the age of 55 years. The order reads as under:

Shri Mulchand Pardasani, Upper-Division Clerk, Head Quarter Office, Baroda, who attains the age of 55 years on 14-3-1964 is hereby informed that the Collectorate Departmental Promotion Committee, 1963, has not considered him suitable for further retention in service beyond the age of 55 years. He has the option to retire with effect from 14-3-1964 forenoon or proceed on leave as may be admissible and granted to him preparatory to retirement.

Thereafter, the appellant made several representations to the appropriate authorities in the matter, served a statutory notice on the Government and instituted Regular Civil Suit No. 343 of 1965 in the Court of the Civil Judge (Senior Division) Baroda, on March 9, 1965. Therein the appellant challenged the aforesaid order Ex. 26 as being wrongful, illegal, ultra vires, mala fide, void, unconstitutional and inoperative at law on the grounds, inter alia, that it was in contravention of his right to be continued in service until he attains the age of 58 years as per Fundamental Rule 56(i) that the order casts a stigma on the appellant and was made in violation of Art. 311(2) of the Constitution of India, that it was mala fide, that three months' notice required to be given to a Government servant to retire him on his attaining the age of 55 years was not given and further that it was against the latest orders raising the age of superannuation to 58 years. The Union of India which was sued as defendant resisted the suit contending inter alia that the Government had the right to retire the appellant on his attaining the age of 55 years. It was contended that the appellant was found to be insubordinate, insolent and unreliable while in the service during years 1944 to 1946 in the Sindh Salt Department prior to partition. It was contended that the plaintiff was not found efficient and suitable for further retention and continuation in services beyond the age of 55 years and as such, he was validly given the option as required by law. He was not found fit for promotion by the Departmental Promotion Committee for the post of Head Clerk. It was contended that the impugned order was legal and gave the requisite three months' notice to the appellant to retire him and further that the order was in conformity with the provisions of Fundamental R. 56(b) (i). The learned Civil Judge found that the impugned order of compulsory retirement was not in contravention of the provisions of Fundamental R. 56(b) (i). He found that the order did not violate the provisions of Article 311 (2) of the Constitution and the departmental rules. He negatived the defence contention that the suit was barred by limitation. However, as in his view the impugned order was valid order, he dismissed the suit. In First Appeal No. 250 of 1966 that was filed by the appellant against the decree of the trial Court dismissing his suit and which came to be heard by the learned Second Extra Assistant Judge, Baroda, the decree of the trial Court has been confirmed, on the learned Judge holding that the impugned order was not in violation of the Fundamental Rule 56(b) (i) and further that it was not in violation of Art. 311 (2) of the Constitution of India. The learned Judge further held that the appellant was not entitled to three months' notice. In this view of the matter, he has dismissed the appeal by his judgment and decree dated November 30, 1967. Being aggrieved, the appellant has filed this second appeal which has now reached hearing before us.

3. Mr. N. V. Karlekar, who has appeared as amicus curiae on behalf of the appellant-plaintiff, has contended before us that the age of compulsory retirement of pre-April 1938 ministerial Central Government servants was raised from 55 to 58 and as such the Government had no right to retire the appellant before he attained the age of compulsory retirement. He has contended that the impugned order attached a stigma to the appellant and was in violation of Art. 311(2) of the Constitution of India. He has further contended that the impugned order is mala fide. Lastly, he has contended that the impugned order does not amount to an order of retirement within the meaning of para 6 of the office memorandum No. 33/18/62-ESTS.(A) dated 30th November, 1962, issued by the Government of India, Ministry of Home Affairs. Mr. G. N. Desai, the learned Government Pleader, appearing for the respondent, Union of India, has supported the decree of the lower Court. He has contended that the Fundamental Rule 56(b) (i) as it stood prior to November 30, 1962, was kept intact and that the age of compulsory retirement of the appellant who is a pre-April 1938 ministerial servant continues to be 55. He has contended that the impugned order amounted to notice within the meaning of para 6 of office memorandum dated 30th November 1962. According to him, even if the memorandum is held to have the force of the statutory rule, the right of the appellant to continue in service till the age of retirement was subject to the absolute right of the Government to retire a Government servant on three months' notice.

4. It is not in dispute that the plaintiff-appellant is a ministerial servant who had entered in Central Government service prior to April 1, 1938. It is also not in dispute that the appellant would have attained the age of 55 on March 14, 1964, and the age of 58 on March 14, 1967.

5. In order to appreciate the rival contentions aforesaid raised in this appeal, it will be convenient first to refer to Fundamental Rule 56 and the modifications or amendments that have been made in the rule from time to time. Fundamental Rules were applicable to members of services under the rule-making control of the Governor General in Council and were made by the Secretary of State in Council under Section 96-B of the Government of India Act, 1915. The rules as they stood on the 27th day of May 1930 were subsequently amended from time to time by the Governor General in Council in exercise of the powers conferred on him by Rules 33(2), 37, 42 and 44(d) of the Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules in respect of the personnel under his rule-making control. They have originally come in force with effect from the 1st January, 1922, and continue to be in force after the commencement of the Constitution. Question of compulsory retirement is dealt with in Chapter IX of the Fundamental Rules. F. R. 56 which deals with the compulsory retirement of the various classes of Government servants as prior to the 1962 amendment reads as under:

"F. R. 56(a): Except as otherwise provided in the other clauses of this Rule, the date of compulsory retirement of a Government servant, other than a ministerial servant, is the date on which he attains the age of 55 years. He may be retained in service after the date of compulsory retirement with the sanction of the Local Government on public grounds, which must be recorded in writing, but he must not be retained after the age of 60 years except in very special circumstances." Proviso to CL (a) deals with the case of a workman and need not be set out. Clause (b) which is material for our purpose provides:

"(b)(i). A ministerial servant who is not governed by sub-clause (ii) may be required to retire at the age of 55 years, but should ordinarily be retained in service. If he continues efficient, upto the age of 60 years. He must not be retained after that age except in very special circumstances, which must be recorded in writing, and with the sanction of the Local Government.

(ii) A ministerial servant:

(1) who enters Government service on or after the 1st April 1938, or

(2) who being in Government service on the 31st March, 1938, did not hold a lien or a suspended lien on a permanent post on the date, shall ordinarily be required to retire at the age of 55 years. He must not be retained after that age except on public grounds which must be recorded in writing, and with the sanction of the Local Government and he must not be retained after the age of 60 years except in very special circumstances."

The other clauses of the rule are not relevant for our purpose.

6. It is obvious that the rule as regards compulsory retirement is more favourable to ministerial servants who fall within CL (b) (i) of F. R. 56 than those who fall under CL (b) (ii) of the same rule or Govt. servants who are not ministerial servants. For whereas in the case of these, viz. Government servants—who are not ministerial servants, and ministerial servants under CL (b) (ii) — retention after the age of 55 itself is intended to be exceptional, to be made on public grounds which must be recorded in writing and with the sanction of the Local Government, in the case of ministerial servants who fall under CL (b) (i) of F. R. 56 their retention after the age of 60 is treated as exceptional and to be made in a similar manner as retention in the case of the other servants mentioned above after the age of 55. It is clear, therefore, that whereas the authority appropriate to make the order of compulsory retirement or of retention is given no discretion by itself to retain a ministerial servant under CL (b) (ii) if he attains the age of 55 years, that is not the position as regards the ministerial servants who fall under CL (b) (i). Now, CL (b) (i) which would govern the case of the appellant provides (i) that the Government servant may be required to retire at the age of 55 years, (ii) that he should be ordinarily retained in service upto the age of 60 years, the pre-condition being continued efficiency, (iii) that after he attains the age of 60 years, he cannot be retained in service except in very special circumstances. The rule as it then stood, gave no right to the ministerial servant of pre-April, 1938, to continue in service beyond the age of 55 years. The appropriate authority has the right to require the servant to retire as soon as the age of 55 is reached. Between the ages of 55 and 60, the appropriate authority is given the option to retain the Government servant, but he is not bound to do so even if the servant continues to be efficient. His retention after the age of 60 is treated as exceptional and to be made in a prescribed manner. This is the resultant position of such a rule as found by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in the case of Kailas Chandra v. Union of India, AIR 1961 SC 1346, where the Supreme Court was dealing with the case of a railway servant falling under Rule 2045 (2) (a) of the Indian Railway Establishment Code which corresponds to Fundamental Rule 56 (b) (i), as it originally stood. Rule 2045 (2) (a) of the Railway Code reads:

"(2) (a). A ministerial servant who is not governed by sub-clause (b), may be required to retire at the age of 55 years, but should ordinarily be retained in service, if he continues efficient upto the age of 60 years. He must not be retained after that age except in very special circumstances, which must be recorded in writing, and with the sanction of the competent authority."

Dealing with the case, Das Gupta, J., speaking for the Supreme Court, has observed at page 1349:

"The correct interpretation of Rule 2045 (2) (a) of the Code is that a railway ministerial servant falling within this clause may be compulsorily retired on attaining the age of 55, but when the servant is between the age of 55 and 60 the appropriate authority has the option to continue him in service, subject to the condition that the servant continues to be efficient."

On a parity of reasoning, F. R. 56 (b) (i) gives the plaintiff-appellant no right to continue in service beyond the age of 55. This would be the legal position if the F. R. 56 (b) (i) was not amended.

7. By office memorandum No. 33/18/62-ESTS (A) dated 30th November, 1962, Ministry of Home Affairs and M. F. (D. R.) F. No. 6/25/62-Coord (644), dated 4th December 1962, published at pages 531 and 532 of the C. B. R. Bulletin, Customs and Central Excise Administration and Land Customs, October-December, 1962 — Part under the caption "Age of Compulsory retirement — Raising of" amendment was made in Fundamental Rule 56. The office memorandum may be here conveniently set out:

"Government have had under consideration for some time past the question whether the age of compulsory retirement of Government servants should be raised above 55 years.

2. It has now been decided and the President is pleased to direct that the age of compulsory retirement of Central Government servants should be 58 years subject to the following exceptions:

(i) The existing rules under which ministerial Government servants recruited before 1-4-1938 are to be retained in service upto the age of 60 years subject to their continuing to be efficient and physically fit after attaining the age of 55 years will remain in force.

(ii) The age of compulsory retirement for those categories of Class IV staff who are at present entitled to serve upto the age of 60 years including new entrants should continue to be 60 years.

(iii) xx	xx	xx.
3. xx	xx	xx.
4. xx	xx	xx
5. xx	xx	xx.

6. Notwithstanding anything contained in the foregoing paragraphs, the appointing authority may require a Government servant to retire after he attains the age of 55 years on three months' notice without assigning any reason. This will be in addition to the provisions already contained in Rule 2(2) of the liberalized Pension Rules, 1950 to retire an officer who has completed 30 years' qualifying service, and will normally be exercised to weed out unsuitable employees after they have attained the age of 55 years. The Government servant also may, after attaining the age of 55 years, voluntarily retire after giving three months' notice to the appointing authority.

7. These provisions will have effect from 1st December, 1962.

By para 2 of the aforesaid memorandum, the age of compulsory retirement of all Central Government servants was raised to 58 years, but this was subject to the relevant exceptions (i), (ii), (iii) to be found in para 2 thereof. Exception (i) which is relevant for our purpose will govern the case of the Ministerial servants recruited before 1-4-1938, the appellant being the servant falling in that category. The exception is carved out in the general rule which raises the age of compulsory retirement of the Central Government servant to 58 years. However, in so far as it applies to the pre-April 1938 ministerial Central Government servants, it does not introduce any substantial modification in Fundamental Rule 56(b) (i) as it stood earlier which provided that a Government servant may be retained in service after he attains the age of 55 and upto the age of 60 subject to the pre-condition of the Government servant continuing to be efficient upto the age of 60 years. Only the words "and physically fit" are added to it, thus adding one more pre-condition for being retained in service after 55. This is indicated by the use of the significant expression "after attaining the age of 55 years" used in the last sentence in exception (i), which age still remained the starting point for the exercise of the discretion by the appropriate authority to retain the Government servant in service upto the age of 60 years and between the ages of 55 and 60. In our opinion, therefore, although the age of compulsory retirement is increased from 55 to 58 and thus appears at first sight to create an impression that the servant may be required to retire as soon as he reaches the age of 58 and not 55 as before, in substance, the modification relating to the retention of a Government servant between the ages of 55 and 60 is insubstantial and to this extent the original Rule 56 (b) (i) appears to have been kept intact. The memorandum, however, confers an absolute right in the appointing authority to require a Government servant to retire after he attains the age of 55 years on three months' notice.

8. The aforesaid office memorandum was subsequently modified by the decision of the President contained in Home Ministry's No. M. R. A. O. M. 33/2/63-Ests. 'A' dated 31-12-1963 and Finance Ministry's No. M. F. (D. R.) F. No. 6/4/64/Co-or (11) dated 15-1-1964, published in C.B. R. Bulletin, Customs and Central Excise Administration, January-March, 1964, Part, at Pages 3, 4, and 5 as item No. 6 under Caption "Age of compulsory retirement-raising of-Clarifications in respect of "pre-1938 entrant Ministerial Government servants, which reads:

"In partial modification of Ministry of Home Affairs Office Memorandum No. 33/18/62-Ests. (A), dated the 30th November, 1962, and 31st December, 1962 and the Ministry of Finance Officer Memorandum No. F. 22 (1)-EV/63, dated the 14th April, 1963, inserted as Government of India's decision No. (2) below F. R. 56 in the Posts and Telegraphs Compilation of F. R. and S. Rs., the President is pleased to decide that subject to the right of Government to retire any Officer on 3 months' notice after he has attained the age of 55 years, the pre-1938 ministerial officers governed by F. R. 56(b) (i) should also be continued in service like all other Government servants except those whose age of retirement is (60) upto the age of 58 years without any annual order sanctioning their retention. After the age of 58 years and till he attains the age of 60 years however, such an annual order would be necessary. There will, however, be a review in the case of all employees (whether pre-1938 or post-1938) to assess their suitability for retention beyond the age of 55 years. Instructions detailing the procedure for conducting this review are being issued separately. In view of this, the date of compulsory retirement of a Government servant who is the substantive holder of a ministerial post and is governed by Cl. (b) (i) of F. R. 56 but who was officiating in a non-ministerial post on 1st December, 1962 or who may have been appointed to officiate in such a post after this date, will be the date on which he attains the age of 58 years. If such a person would like to become eligible for further retention in service under F. R. 56 (b) (i) or the grant of any leave (including leave preparatory to retirement) extending beyond that date, he must revert to a ministerial post before he actually attains the age of 58 years.

2. xx                      xx                      xx

3. xx                      xx                      xx

4. Action to make necessary formal amendments in F. R. & S. Rs. C. S. Rs. is being taken separately.

5. xx                      xx                      xx

9. The aforesaid decision of the President thus covers the case of pre-April 1938 Ministerial officers who are governed by F. R. 56(b) (i). The decision is to continue such servants like all other Government servants except those whose age of retirement is 60 upto the age of 58 years and without requiring an annual order sanctioning the retention. Thus, the pre-1938 ministerial servants are, as a general rule, put on par with all other Government servants except the servants whose age of retirement was 60. But, thus again is subject to these absolute rights of the Government to retire any officer on 3 months' notice after he has attained the age of 55 years. Thus, to the pre-1938 ministerial officers, para 6 of the 1962 office memorandum was continued or made applicable. In case of all servants, whether pre-1938 or post-1938 ministerial servants, however, a provision for review in order to assess their suitability for their retention beyond the age of 55 years was made. The language of the second memorandum which extends the period of compulsory retirement of the Government servant to the age of 58 years and dispenses with an annual order sanctioning the retention of the Government servant beyond the age of 55 years and upto the age of 58 years is intrinsic evidence of the intention of the rule-making authority to put the pre-April 1938 ministerial Government servants on par with other Government servants whose age of retirement was formerly 55 years and which by virtue of the first memorandum was raised to 58 years as stated in para 2 thereof. The use of the expression "like all other Government servants" to be found in the second office memorandum thus strengthens our view that the age of retirement of the pre-April 1938 Central Government servants was raised to 58 years. This 1963 memorandum thus substantially amends the fundamental Rule 56 (b) (i). The result is that every Government servant shall retire on the date he attains the age of 58 years which appears to be the age of superannuation fixed. This will be subject to (a) the option of the appropriate authority to retain him in service after he attains the age of 58 years and till 60 years, (b) the right of the Government to review the case of all employees for retention beyond the age of 55 years in order to assess their suitability for retention, after following a prescribed procedure for conducting the review and (c) the absolute right of the appointing authority to retire any officer on 3 months' notice, after he attains the age of 55 years.

10. The 1962 office memorandum set out earlier which will hereafter be referred to as "the first memorandum" and the aforesaid memorandum containing Home Ministry's letter dated 31-12-1962 and Finance Ministry's letter dated 15-1-1964, which will hereafter be referred to as the second memorandum thus introduce substantial amendments in fundamental R. 56 (b) (i) and create substantive rights and liabilities and as a result the corresponding provisions of the Service Code already in operation stand amended by implication as they are not expressly saved, and this is independently of the consideration whether the consequential changes in accordance therewith are or are not incorporated in the relevant Service Code, viz. in F. R. 56(b) (i), the act of incorporating the consequential changes in the Service Code in such cases being mostly a procedural part of the law. The result is that the appellant who was a pre-April 1938 Ministerial Government servant would be entitled to the benefit of the increased age of compulsory retirement subject to right of the Government to review his case for retention beyond the age of 55 and the absolute right of the Government to retire him on 3 months' notice as provided for in para 6 of the first memorandum.

11. Mr. Desai has, however, contended that neither of the two memorandums aforesaid can be said to be a rule or a condition of service. His submission was that the two memorandums were merely executive or administrative directions or instructions not having the force of a rule. His submission further was that the memorandums were not gazetted and that they were not in the usual form in which such Presidential decisions or rules are issued. Now, as regards the first memorandum, it may be remembered that, in our opinion, it kept the original Fundamental Rule 56 (b) (i) intact in a way so far as the appellant was concerned at the time of the issuance of the first memorandum, and therefore, it may be said that by itself and without the second memorandum following, it had no impact on the rights of the appellant after he attained the age of 55 years. Even then, as Mr. Desai's contention covers both the memorandums, the first and the second, we would deal with the question also as far as it concerns the first memorandum. Para 2 of the first memorandum in terms says that "It has now been decided and the President is pleased to direct" that the age of the compulsory retirement of Central Government employees should be 58 years subject to the exceptions which follow. The second memorandum says that "the President is pleased to decide" in partial modification of the first memorandum that pre-1938 ministerial officers governed by F. R. 56 (b) (i) should also be continued in service like all other Government servants except those whose age of retirement is 60, upto the age of 58 years. Thus, both the memorandums contain the rules in the form of the directions or decisions made by the President in the matter. The proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution lays down that it shall be competent for the President to make rules regulating the recruitment, and the conditions of service of persons appointed, to such services and posts until provision in that behalf is made by or under an Act of the appropriate Legislature under the Article and any rules so made shall have effect subject to the provisions of any such Act if made by an Act of the appropriate Legislature. No such relevant Act is shown to have been made. The President had thus the powers to make rules regulating the conditions of service of persons appointed to Central Government services in connection with the affairs of the Union. The rules are not shown to be inconsistent with any provision of the Constitution. In our opinion, therefore, the two memorandums are in substance rules made by the President regulating the conditions of service of the Central Government servants. The rules will have the same effect as if they are in the Act and are to be judicially noticed for all purposes of construction of rights and obligations.

12. It was contended by Mr. Desai that the office memorandums were not published or gazetted and as such, they had no force or validity. There is no merit in the contention. Neither the proviso to Article 309 of the Constitution, nor the Rules of Business lay down any condition that the rule made in exercise of the powers under the proviso to Art. 309 shall not be effective or binding until the same has been published or posted in the relevant Service Code. The question of publication in the gazette or otherwise in such circumstances is a matter of propriety and desirability so that all persons concerned therewith may have necessary notice in regard thereto. But, surely that cannot lead to the conclusion that until the publication of the rules (the memorandums) is effected, any rule made in exercise of the powers given in the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution shall have no force as a statutory rule as contemplated therein. This is apart from the fact that the two memorandums have been published in the C. B. R. Bulletins.

13. Mr. Desai has relied upon a decision of the Supreme Court in the case of I. N. Saksena v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1967 SC 1264, where Wanchoo, J., speaking for the Court, had, while dealing with a memorandum raising the age of compulsory retirement of State Government servants to 58 years issued by the Government of Madhya Pradesh to all Collectors of the State, construed the memorandum as merely an executive direction and not a rule. In the case before their Lordships, the memorandum in question was issued by the State Government and stated that the State Government had decided that the age of compulsory retirement of the State Govt. servants should be raised to 58 years. The memorandum in para 5 contained a provision conferring a right upon the Government or the appointing authority to require a Govt. servant to retire after he attains the age of 55 years on 3 months' notice. It stated that necessary amendments to the Civil Service Rules will be issued in due course. In the subsequent notification which was issued by the Finance Department and was published by the Madhya Pradesh Gazette, this para 5 of the memorandum did not find its place. The subsequent notification was stated to have been issued by the Governor in exercise of the powers conferred by the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution. The earlier memorandum was not in the form of a rule. The memorandum in question was issued not by the Governor as required under proviso to Art. 309, but it was issued by the State Government. It was on the peculiar facts of the case that the Supreme Court took the view that the memorandum in question was merely an executive direction or instruction of the Government to the Collectors. In the case before us, the second memorandum in its para 4 clearly states that action to make necessary amendments in F. R. & S. Rs. C. S. Rs. is being taken separately. Thus, the second memorandum itself was considered as a rule and what remained to be done was merely to make necessary formal amendments in the fundamental rules, etc.

14. As regards the form in which the order is to be expressed, we do not find any data or warrant for the contention of Mr. Desai that it should be in a particular form. In support of his contention, Mr. Desai invited our attention to the Fundamental (6th) Amendment Rules, 1965, which are expressed to be made in exercise of the powers conferred by proviso to Art. 309 and are made in the form of rules. Para 1 of the amendment states that "in the exercise of the powers conferred by proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution and Cl 5 to Art. 148 of the Constitution and all other powers enabling him in this behalf and after consultation with the Comptroller and Auditor General in relation to persons serving in Union or Accounts Departments, the President makes the rules." It is true that the said rules are so expressed to be made, but that does not mean that in every case the rules or the office memorandums should be expressed to have been made by the President in exercise of the powers under the Article of the Constitution. The two memorandums in terms say that they have been made under the directions of the President. They contain the decisions of the President in the matter. The form in which the memorandums are issued is not material if the memorandums can be treated as issued under the powers of the President under the proviso to Art. 309. Again, the purpose of publishing a new rule in the form of amendment to the Civil Service Rules is, as observed by Their Lordships of the Supreme Court in Shyamal v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1954 SC 369, only to clarify the exact scope of those new rules and not to bring them into force for the first time. There can be no escape from the conclusion that the provisions made in the two memorandums as to the increase of age, viz. age of superannuation and of premature compulsory retirement had the character of statutory rules contemplated under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution and are not administrative orders or executive instructions. We cannot, therefore, accept Mr. Desai's contention that the memorandums are in the nature of administrative or executive instructions and that the entire Fundamental Rule 56(b) (i) as it stood prior to the issuance of the President's directions to be found in the two memorandums was kept intact.

15. As aforesaid, the second memorandum introduces substantial amendments to the F. R. 56(b) (i) and creates substantive rights in the Government servants to be continued in service upto the age of 58 years subject to the right of the Government to dispense with his services on 3 months' notice and the right of review.

It would follow that the appellant who was a ministerial Government servant within the meaning of Fundamental Rule 56(b) (i) will be entitled to the benefit of the increased age of compulsory retirement subject to the right of the Government to review his case of retention beyond the age of 55 years and the absolute right of the Government to retire him on 3 months' notice. Here, we wish to make it clear that neither Mr. Karlekar, nor the appellant himself has contended that the proviso in para 6 of the first memorandum which purports to give the Government an absolute right to retire a Government servant on three months' notice, as also a similar provision contained in the second memorandum amount to the removal of the servant in question and is inconsistent with the provisions contained in Art. 311 (2) of the Constitution. We have, therefore, not examined the question of validity of the provision and proceeded on the assumption that it is valid.

16. Now, at the date when the impugned order Ex. 26 was served on the appellant, viz. on December 28, 1963, the appellant had not attained the age of 55. It is true that the order gave him an option to retire with effect from March 14, 1964 forenoon on which date he would have attained the age of 55 years. But, the order gave another option to the appellant, viz. to proceed on leave as may be admissible and granted to him preparatory to retirement. The appellant is not shown to have retired on the date on which he attained the age of 55 years. On the contrary, it appears to have been contended on behalf of the Government in the lower appellate Court, and the same arguments have been adopted here by Mr. Desai, that the plaintiff-appellant was on preparatory leave extending upto 28 months after 14-3-1964. In fact, the appellant was paid the salary that was admissible to him for this leave period of 28 months. Thus, for 28 months after he attained the age of 55, he continued to be the Government servant. The petitioner was granted leave preparatory to retirement and this precludes the concept of retirement before the expiry of such leave. The use of the word "preparatory" indicates that the leave granted precedes the retirement. It means that the servant retires only after the expiry of the leave, notwithstanding the fact that he attained the age of 55 years when the period of leave commenced. Thus, at the date of the issuance of the second memorandum which must necessarily have been some time prior to the end of the year 1963 A. D., the appellant continued to be in service. He was thus entitled to the benefit of the increased age of compulsory retirement, viz., 58 years as aforesaid. In this view of the matter, the impugned order Ex. 26 was clearly beyond the powers of the Collector who issued the order. The order was in violation of the right of the appellant normally to continue in service until he attained the age of 58 years and now 60 years by virtue of the Fundamental (Sixth Amendment) Rules 1965, as we shall later on see, and as such, is illegal and unconstitutional.

17. As observed earlier, the normal right of the Government servant to continue upto the age of 58 years and now 60 is subject to (i) the power of the Government to review the case of the servant to assess the suitability of the servant for retention beyond the age of 55 years, the power to be exercised according to the procedure prescribed for conducting the review, and (ii) the absolute right of the Government to retire the Government servant on 3 months' notice after he attains the age of 55 years. Now, the impugned order does not purport to be a review order. In the very nature of things, Ex. 26 cannot be said to have been made by the Collector in the exercise of the power of review for the simple reason that the second memorandum was issued some time in the end of the year 1963. Although we have nothing on record to show on what particular date the President had passed the order and thus made the rules contained in the second office memorandum. Mr. Desai being unable to point out the date of the Presidential order, it is clear by a reference to the second memorandum as published in C. B. R. Bulletin, January-March, 1964, at pages 3, 4 and 5 that the second memorandum contains the Ministry of Home Affairs memorandum dated December 31, 1963, and Ministry of Finance memorandum dated January 15, 1964. It follows that the second memorandum must necessarily have been issued some time prior to December 31, 1963. It might very probably have been issued prior to December 28, 1963, when the impugned order Ex. 26 was received by the appellant. Apart from that, at the date of issuance of the impugned order which was on December 18, 1963, instructions detailing the procedure for conducting the review are not shown to have been issued, nor is it shown that the Collectorate Departmental Promotion Committee which appears to have considered the appellant unsuitable as stated in the impugned order had the right or authority to review the case. The second memorandum, in terms, says that instructions for detailing the procedure for conducting the review are being issued separately. Thus, there was no question of the Government exercising the power of review at the time of the issuance of the impugned order. Therefore, the contention of Mr. Desai that the impugned order was an order in exercise of the power of review as contemplated by the second memorandum has no merit and cannot be accepted.

18. This will take us to the next question, viz., the absolute right of the Government to retire a Government servant on 3 months' notice after he has attained the age of 55 years. This restriction on the normal right of the Government servant to continue in service until he attains the age of 58 years, the benefit of which was conferred on the pre-April, 1938 Ministerial Government servants by the second memorandum has to be read, in the context of para. 6 of the first memorandum which we have set out earlier. It was urged that para. 6 of the first memorandum which provides that the appointing authority may require a Government servant to retire after he attains the age of 55 years on 3 months' notice without assigning any reason, would be operative in the case of pre-April 1938 ministerial Government servants only after the issuance of the second office memorandum some time in December, 1963. Apart from that, we have to see whether the impugned order Ex. 26 amounts to the exercise of such absolute right of the Government. What is contemplated by the powers under para 6 of the first memorandum is to require a Government servant to retire after he attains the age of 55 years. That can be on 3 months' notice and without assigning any reasons. Now, the impugned order Ex. 26 which we have set out earlier does not conform to this requirement as we shall presently see. The order merely communicates the view of the Collectorate Departmental Promotion Committee, 1963, that the appellant was not found to be suitable for further retention in service beyond the age of 55 years. But, it does not require him to retire after he attained the age of 55 years. He was, on the contrary, given an option (i) to retire with effect from March 14, 1964, forenoon, or (ii) to proceed on leave as may be admissible and granted to him preparatory to retirement. In pursuance of this order, the appellant did not retire on that date, nor was he made to retire on that day; but, on 14-3-1964, he simply proceeded on leave admissible and as granted to him preparatory to retirement. Again, it is to be remembered that the order was admittedly received by the appellant on 28-12-1963 and he was called upon to exercise the option on 14-3-1964, within 3 months of the date of the order. Obviously, the order did not give him 3 months' time. Considering the tenor of the document as a whole and in the context of the appellant opting for 28 months' preparatory leave which was granted to him and for which he was paid salary admissible under the rules, it could not be said that the impugned order amounts to the exercise by the appointing authority of the absolute right of the Government to retire the pre-April 1938 ministerial servants on 3 months' notice after he has attained the age of 55 years. Further, it is clear that no action can be taken against any public servant in the exercise of the power given in para 6 of the first memorandum unless 3 months' notice was given to him. The impugned order does not fulfil this requirement either. In any view of the matter, therefore, the impugned order cannot be said to be an order of compulsory retirement passed by the Government in the exercise of its absolute right under the memorandums. Thus, the two restrictions which are put on the normal right of the Government servant to continue in service until he attains the age of 58 and now 60, cannot be invoked in this case. The resultant effect is that the impugned order must be found to be illegal and unconstitutional and as such not effectual at law. The appellant thus would be entitled to the benefit of the increased age of compulsory retirement.

19. In the aforesaid view of the matter which we are inclined to take in this appeal, it is not necessary for us to go into the other questions which have been raised by Mr. Karlekar on behalf of the appellant, viz. (i) that the impugned order Ex. 26 attaches stigma to the appellant and amounts to his removal and therefore, is in violation of the provisions of Article 311(2) of the Constitution as he has not been offered any opportunity to meet the charge and (ii) that the order is mala fide. However, when such contentions have been raised, it would be but appropriate to decide these questions. Considering the first question, we may say that the impugned order merely states that the Collectorate Departmental Promotion Committee, 1963, has not considered the appellant suitable for further retention in service beyond the age of 55 years. The use of the expression "suitable" appears to have been made in an attempt to bring the order in conformity with para 6 of the first memorandum. As observed by the Supreme Court in AIR 1954 SC 369, a compulsory retirement has no element of stigma or any implication of misbehaviour or incapacity. The observations have been approved in P. L. Dhingra v. Union of India, AIR 1958 SC 36, at p. 49, wherein S. R. Das, C. J., speaking for the Court has while summarising the position of law relating to termination of service observed: "x x x x Likewise the termination of service by compulsory retirement in terms of a specific rule regulating the conditions of service is not tantamount to the infliction of a punishment and does not attract Art. 311(2) as has also been held in AIR 1954 SC 369." A larger Bench of the Supreme Court has reviewed the position in Moti Ram Deka v. N. E. Frontier Rly., AIR 1964 SC 600. Gajendragadkar, J., expressing the majority view has therein observed at page 610: "x x x x A person who substantively holds a permanent post has a right to continue in service, subject of course, to the rule of superannuation and the rule as to compulsory retirement. If for any other reason that right is invaded and he is asked to leave his service, the termination of his service must inevitably mean the defeat of his right to continue in service and as such, it is in the nature of a penalty and amounts to removal. In other words, termination of the services of a permanent servant otherwise than on the ground of superannuation or compulsory retirement, must amount per se to his removal x x x x x."

The learned Judge has earlier observed at p 607:

"In regard to servants holding substantively a permanent post who may conveniently be described hereafter as permanent servants, it is similarly well settled that if they are compulsorily retired under the relevant service rules, such compulsory retirement does not amount to removal under Art. 311(2) x x x x x".

The point is concluded by the observations in a recent decision of the Supreme Court in AIR 1967 SC 1264, at p. 1266 that "Where an order requiring a Government servant to retire compulsorily contains express words from which a stigma can be inferred, that order will amount to removal within the meaning of Article 311. But, where there are no express words in the order itself which would throw any stigma on the Government servant, we cannot delve into Secretariate files to discover whether some kind of stigma can be inferred on such research x x x x x".

Now, looking to the language used in the impugned order, we do not find express words throwing any stigma on the appellant. In our opinion, therefore, it does not amount to his 'removal' within the meaning of the expression as used in Article 311 of the Constitution. Thus, it cannot be said to contravene Art. 311(2) of the Constitution. Mr. Karlekar's contention in this behalf must, therefore, fail.

20-21. On the question of mala fides, it was contended that a long drawn out correspondence had ensued between the appellant and the appropriate authorities of the Government which would show that the authorities had a bias against the appellant. For this purpose, our attention was invited to letters Exs. 18, 20, 21, 34, 35, 36, 22, 74, 23, 39 and 41. It appears from these letters that the appellant was making complaints about his transfer being discriminative. We have been taken through this correspondence by the appellant himself who was also allowed to argue the appeal in person, as Mr. Karlekar who was appointed as Amicus Curiae did not dwell on this point. The correspondence does not reveal the mala fides of the appropriate authorities, viz., the Collector or the Collectorate Departmental Committee, 1963, which had considered appellant's case for retention beyond the age of 55 years and had found him not suitable for the purpose. We cannot, therefore, accept the appellant's contention that the impugned order suffers from the vice of mala fides.

22. It was contended by Mr. Desai that, in any view of the matter, the right of the appellant who was a pre-April 1938 Ministerial Government servant was only to have salary of 3 months' period in lieu of a notice required under para 6 of the first office memorandum. Now, this is an attempt to introduce the ordinary concept of the relationship between the master and servant. But, the appellant is a permanent Government servant and as such, he has the right to the security of his service tenure as guaranteed by the Constitution of India. He has a right to continue in service, subject, of course, to the rule of superannuation and the rule as to compulsory retirement. The concept of master and servant has no application. Again, there is no service rule that a permanent Government servant can be compulsorily retired on payment of salary in lieu of 3 months' notice. In any view of the matter, therefore, Mr. Desai's contention in this behalf must, therefore, be rejected.

23. Mr. Desai has lastly contended that Fundamental Rule 56 (b) (i) was amended for the first time by the Fundamental (Sixth) Amendment Rules, 1965, which substituted new Rule for original F. R. 56 and therefore, the amendments in the original F. R. 56 should be considered to have been made, not by the first or the second memorandum, but by the Sixth Amendment Rules, 1965, and as such, the appellant was not entitled to the benefit of the increased age of retirement at 58 under the two office memorandums. This contention, as we shall presently see, is fallacious and has no substance. The Sixth Amendment Rules, on the contrary, increase the age of retirement of a Government servant from 58 to 60 and make the benefit of the increased age available to the appellant who must be deemed to have continued in service when the Fundamental (Sixth Amendment) Rules, 1965, came into force.

24. Now, Fundamental (Sixth Amendment) Rules, 1965, were made by the President further to amend the Fundamental Rules and this is stated to have been made in exercise of the powers conferred by the Proviso to Art. 309 and Clause 5 of Art. 148 of the Constitution. The rules are to be found in Notification No. M. F. 12 (2) LV (C)/63 dated 21-7-65.

Para 2 of the notification says that these rules may be called the Fundamental (Sixth Amendment) Rules, 1965. Para 3 reads:—

"3. In the Fundamental Rules for Rule 56, the following rule shall be substituted, namely:—

56 (a). Except as otherwise provided in this rule, every Government servant shall retire on the day he attains the age of fifty-eight years.

(b) xx

(c) xx

(d) xx

(e) xx

(f) xx

(g) xx

(h) xx

(i) xx

(j) Notwithstanding anything contained in this rule, the appropriate authority shall, if it is of the opinion that it is in the public interest to do so, have the absolute right to retire any Government servant after he has attained the age of fifty-five years by giving him notice of not less than three months in writing .....

It clearly appears from the substituted Rule 56(a) aforesaid that it merely clarifies the scope of the rules increasing the age of retirement of Government servants to be found in the first and the second memorandums and does not bring them into force for the first time. The relevant rules in the two office memorandums came into operation ex proprio vigore on the issuance of the said memorandums and their subsequent publication for general information in the form of amendment to the fundamental rules was only to make their scope clear. It does not appear to be the intention of the rule-making authority to make any such new rule on the date of such incorporation. The Sixth Amendment Rules do not bring about any new change in the rule as to the increased age of superannuation or as to age of premature compulsory retirement. They had already been in existence prior to the date of the Sixth Amendment. Therefore, the argument of Mr. Desai that the rule raising of age of superannuation of the pre-ministerial Government servant to 58 was made for the first time in the Sixth Amendment Rules, 1965, is incapable of acceptance.

25. On the contrary, it was urged by the appellant in person and with substance that he was entitled to the benefit of clause (c) of para 3 of the Fundamental (Sixth Amendment) Rules, 1965 aforesaid, as notified. The submission was that the appellant was a pre-1938-April ministerial Central Government servant falling within the purview of the original Fundamental Rule 56(b) (i) as it stood on the relevant date and sub-clause (ii) of clause (b) thereof did not apply to him and as such, he was entitled to be retained in service till he attained the age of 60 years. Now, clause (c) of F. R. 56 as amended by the Fundamental (Sixth Amendment) Rules, 1965 provides:

"A ministerial Government servant who entered Government service on or before the 31st March, 1938, and held on that date:

- (i) a lien or a suspended lien on a permanent post, or
- (ii) a permanent post in a provisional substantive capacity under clause (d) of Rule 14 and continued to hold the same without interruption until he was confirmed in that post, shall be retained in service till the day he attains the age of sixty years."

26. It was never in dispute that the appellant was a pre-1938 April Ministerial servant of the Central Government and held a permanent post. As he was governed not by F. R. 56(b) (ii) but by F. R. 56 (b) (i), in the very nature of things, he must be having a lien on a permanent post on the relevant date. The term 'lien' has been defined in F. R. 2 (13) as meaning "the title of a Government servant to hold substantively, either immediately or on the termination of a period or periods of absence, a permanent post, including a tenure post, to which he has been appointed substantively. The appellant was a substantive holder of a ministerial post. His case would thus fall within the purview of sub-clause (i) of clause (c) of F. R. 56 as amended by the Amendment Rules, 1965. It was contended by the learned Government Pleader that such was never the plea that was raised by the appellant-plaintiff in his plaint and further that the question whether the appellant held a lien or a suspended lien on a permanent post was a question of fact and as such could not be allowed to be heard in this second appeal. Now, in the very nature of things, it was not possible for the appellant to have raised such a specific plea in the plaint that was instituted on March 6, 1965, the amendment Rules which extended the retiring age of a Government servant in service till he attained the age of 60 years having been enacted in the Fundamental (Sixth Amendment) Rules, 1965, published by a notification No. M. F. 12 (2) LV (C)/63 dated 21-7-1965. Even then, we find that in para 3 (a) of the plaint, the plaintiff has claimed that he was entitled to continue in his service upto the age of 60 years as per the Fundamental Rule 56 (b) (i), although this prayer was made on the ground that he was not made physically unfit or inefficient. Again, the granting of the consequential relief to the appellant does not require any question of fact to be determined. Having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case, we are not inclined to accept Mr. Desai's contention that the appellant cannot be permitted to invoke clause (c) of Rule 56 as amended by the 6th Amendment. In this view of the matter, in our opinion, the appellant would ordinarily be entitled to be retained in service till the day he attained the age of 60 years.

27. Mr. Desai had, in passing, contended that the impugned order Ex. 26 was one contemplated by clause (i) of Fundamental Rule 56 as amended. Now, it is true that clause (i) set out earlier is a non obstante clause and confers on the appropriate authority the absolute right to retire a Government servant, after he has attained the age of 55 years by giving a notice of not less than three months. But, such a right is exercisable only if the appropriate authority is of the opinion that it is in the public interest to do so, which is not the case here. Again, this clause has come into effect on July 21, 1965. In any view of the matter, therefore, the impugned order Ex. 26 dated December 18, 1963, which is relied upon by Mr. Desai to canvass the view that the appropriate authority has given such a notice falling within the purview of clause (j) of the amended Fundamental Rule 56 cannot be construed as the requisite notice. This is apart from the question of validity of clause (j) which has not been challenged before us.

28. As aforesaid, the first and the second memorandums introduced substantial amendments in original Fundamental Rule 56(b) (i), as it stood prior to the date of the issuance of these office memorandums. The second memorandum has put the pre-April, 1938 Ministerial Government servants of the Central Government on par with all other Government servants and they have been given the benefit of the increased age of retirement that was conferred on other Government servants by the first memorandum. The Fundamental (Sixth Amendment) Rules, 1965 raised the age of retirement of the Government servant to 60 years. The resultant effect is that the appellant was entitled normally to be continued in service until he attained the age of 60 years, subject to the right of the appropriate authority to review his case for further retention beyond the age of 55 years in the prescribed manner and the absolute right of the appointing authority to retire him on 3 months' notice. We have found that the impugned order is not falling under either of the two accepted categories. The impugned order was thus beyond the powers of the appointing authority and is in violation of the appellant's normal right to be retained in service till he attains the age of 60 years. The impugned order Ex. 26 must, therefore, be found to be unconstitutional and illegal and as such ineffectual.

29. For the aforesaid reasons, we cannot sustain the impugned order and uphold the decree now under appeal. Accordingly, we allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower appellate Court, as also of the trial Court and quash the impugned order Ex. 26. The appellant will be deemed to have been continued in the service of the Government until he attained the age of 60 years. As, however, the appellant has attained the age of 60 years on March 14, 1969, it is not possible now to declare that he continues in service. Nonetheless, he will be entitled to his salary for the period and such benefits and emoluments of service as might have accrued to him and to which he was otherwise entitled to if he had been continued in service until he attained the age of 60 years. The appellant will get his costs from the respondent throughout. Decree accordingly.

30. We express our thanks to Mr. N. V. Karlekar who has appeared as amicus curiae at our request.

Appeal allowed.

A Firm of Pt. Ramprasad Chhotalal and others, Appellants v. Bai Reva, Respondent.

A. F. O. D. No. 1128 of 1960. D/- 18-4-1969, from decision of Extra Civil J., Sr. Division at Ahmedabad in Ju. Civil Suit No. 50 of 1958.

(A) Limitation Act (1908). Art. 60 — Loan or deposit — Determination of.

Art. 60 does not say that the amount due to become a deposit must be given to a banker or that he must be in a fiduciary position. In order to apply Art. 60, it is no doubt required to be shown that the amount was deposited with the firm. The evidence in that regard can well appear from circumstances disclosed leading to an inference that it was not a loan but kept as a deposit with the firm. (Para 8)

Under Art. 60 it is not necessary to prove that the borrower is carrying on business only as a banker. A man might become a banker, or place himself in the position of a banker, with regard to a particular customer, and if the dealings with the lender and the borrower are such that the Court is satisfied that it can be said that the borrower is in the position of a banker to the lender, then the money so lent can be considered as a deposit. ther a transaction is a transaction of loan or deposit does not depend merely on the terms of the document but has got to be judged from the intention of the parties and all the circumstances of the case. Even though the transaction is a transaction of deposit the deposit can be coupled with an agreement that it will be payable on demand. Such an agreement can be express or implied and if an express agreement in that behalf is recorded in the document the transaction of deposit cannot be thereby converted into a transaction of loan and the words "we shall pay the said sum" cannot convert the document into a promissory note. The promise to pay will be involved in a promissory note as well as in a deposit within the meaning of Art. 60, Limitation Act and the Court will have regard to the intention of the parties and the circumstances of the case. (Para 8)

Where no writing was obtained so as to serve as a security for the amount given to the firm viz. by way of receipt or promissory note or agreement and only a khata was opened in the name of person giving the amount; interest was regularly added to the same every year and account was regularly sent to the person for a long time; it was not shown that firm had borrowed the money out of necessity; the firm was not under a duty to seek out the creditor in a suit for repaying the amount but it had only to pay the amount on demand, the firm in such circumstances can well be said as if it acted as a banker qua the creditor and the amount was in the nature of deposit and a suit to recover that deposit will be governed by Art. 60. (B) Hindu Law — Pious obligation — Trade debts — Karta member of firm — Members of his family are liable to discharge liability of firm to the extent of their interest in coparcenary property.

The liability of Hindu sons in a Mitakshara coparcenary family to discharge the debts of the father, the karta, which are not tainted with immorality or illegality is based on the pious obligation of the sons which continues to exist in the lifetime and after the death of the father. (Para 9)

Where R and C were members of a firm which was a running concern till C's death and the liability of the firm to a third person was admitted, the heirs of C would be liable to pay the debts of the firm. Their liability is limited to the extent of their interest in the joint property. A. V. Mody, for Appellants; S. B. Vakil, for Respondent.

SHELAT, J.:— The suit from which this appeal arises was instituted by the respondent-plaintiff in the Court of the Civil Judge (S. D.) at Ahmedabad for recovering in all a sum of Rs. 17,131-86 p. due as per statement of accounts dated 27-10-1954 with future interest and costs of the suit, against the defendants-appellants.

6. Two points have been urged by Mr. Mody, the learned advocate for the appellants, before us. The first is that the trial court has erred in holding that the amount due from defendant No. 1 the firm running in the name of Ramprasad Chhotalal was in the nature of a deposit so as to be governed for the purpose of limitation by Art. 60 of the Indian Limitation Act. According to him, it was merely a loan and not a deposit and would, therefore, be governed by Art. 57 or 59 of the Indian Limitation Act. As the period of Limitation in that event commences from the date when the loan is made, this suit filed after a period of three years provided for the same, would be barred by limitation. On the other hand, it is said that the cause of action for a claim for money deposited with the firm under Article 60 of the Indian Limitation Act would commence from the date when the demand is made. On that basis the suit is within time — it having been filed within a period of three years from the demand made in the month of May 1956. The other point raised by him is that the right and share in the ancestral joint family properties of Chhotalal Lalubhai, with defendants Nos 4 to 10 cannot be held in any way liable for the suit claim since the family had nothing to do with that firm, and its partners were only Ramprasad and Natwarlal. Natwarlal, according to him was taken as a partner in the firm in his individual capacity and not as manager or the eldest member in the family. In order to appreciate the contentions raised before us, a few facts may well be set out. One Atmaram Kalidas happened to have close connections with both Ramprasad and Chhotalal. He had deposited in the name of his first wife by name Kamla a certain amount with the firm running in the name of Ramprasad Chhotalal Patel, even prior to S. Y. 1938. After her death, Atmaram's marriage took place with the present plaintiff. The amount that stood due in the name of his first wife with the firm was then transferred to the name of his second wife — the plaintiff. At any rate, that amount stood in the firm's accounts in the name of the plaintiff since 10-11-1931. A statement of accounts as per ext. 85 sent by the firm shows that Rs. 8784-12-0 were due to her. Later on it appears that some amounts were withdrawn by her and some were added to her account. It is common ground that the firm used to prepare statement of accounts at the end of every Samvat year and it was sent to her. That went on up to the death of Chhotalal which took place on 21-11-1950. Even after his death the firm continued in the same name and as the evidence discloses, Natwarlal-defendant No. 2, the eldest son of Chhotalal, joined in that partnership firm. He appears to have looked after the affairs of the firm as well. The statement of accounts in respect of the plaintiff's dues came to be sent to the plaintiff as usual every year as would appear from Exs. 87 to 106 and the last one was sent under the signature of Natwarlal as per Ex. 107. The amount due thereunder was Rs. 13,773-1-0 on Kartik Sud 1 of S. Y. 2010. As already pointed out hereabove, a demand was made in the month of May 1955 and since nothing came out from it, a notice under Ex. 108 dated 3-10-55 was sent to the defendants. The reply as per Ex. 111 dated 31-10-1955 thereto was given by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 both for themselves and on behalf of the firm-defendant No. 1 whereby while they admitted the amount due from them, they denied the liability of the other heirs and legal representatives of Chhotalal, including in respect of their shares in the ancestral or joint family properties of Chhotalal. In the suit, defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 did not appear and contest the claim. However, defendants Nos. 1 and 3 and also the heirs and legal representatives of defendant No. 2 have joined as appellants along with the defendants Nos 4 to 10—the heirs and legal representatives of deceased Chhotalal in this appeal, against the decision passed by the trial Court.

7. As to the amount due to the plaintiff, there is no dispute whatever raised before us. The question, however, is whether the amount due from the firm-defendant No. 1 was a deposit so as to be governed by Art. 60, or that it was a loan contemplated in Art. 57 or 59 of the Indian Limitation Act as urged by Mr. Mody before this Court. Mr. Mody's contention is that the onus of proving that the amount was deposited so as to entitle the plaintiff to claim it on demand with the firm would be on the plaintiff and she has failed to discharge the same. According to him, when a person hands over money to any person not being in the nature of a gift, even though payable when demanded, would ordinarily mean a loan so as to say that money was lent to the other person. In order to show that it was in the nature of a deposit so as to have the claim brought under Art. 60 of the Limitation Act, it would be essential for the plaintiff to show that it was not merely a loan but was a deposit. In support thereof, he invited a reference to the observations made in a decision in the case of Govind Chintaman Bhat v. Kachubhai Gulabchand, AIR 1924 Bom 28. The contention was of a similar character we have before us and while dealing with that contention it was observed as under:—

"It is not clear what the Legislature meant by the word "deposited" in Article 60 but there must be some difference between "money lent" and "money deposited", and one can only assume that a plaintiff relying upon Art. 60 must prove that something took place between the parties at the time the money passed which would constitute the handing over of the money "a deposit", and not "a loan".

Going further, the material observations relied upon run thus:—

that would be considered in law "a loan"; and when the plaintiff seeks to prove that the money so handed over was "a deposit", the onus would lie upon him to prove that there are additional circumstances which turned the "loan" into a "deposit". There is no distinction in the Act between the money lent and money deposited with regard to the agreement to re-pay. So that it is not the agreement that the money should be payable on demand that distinguishes a deposit from a loan. There must be something further proved, and it is not possible to define exactly what that something further must be. It has sometimes been suggested that facts must be proved which create a sort of fiduciary relationship between the lender and the borrower. It cannot be said that that is always necessary".

8. It was pointed out by Mr. Mody that the firm was carrying on business in cloth etc. and was not acting as a banker and that there existed no fiduciary relationship with the firm so as to say that amount was taken by way of deposit. No special circumstances are also shown to suggest that it was not a loan and that it was a deposit. In those circumstances, he argued that it was a claim for money payable for money lent so as to come under Art. 57 or even if it were to come under Art. 59 as a suit for money lent under an agreement that it shall be payable on demand, since the period of limitation commenced from the date when the loan is made, the suit would be time barred. It cannot be called a deposit as contemplated under Article 60 so as to say that the suit is in time from the date of the demand made for the same. If it is found to be a loan, it is not in dispute that the suit would be time barred. Now in the first place it is essential to point out that Art. 60 does not say that the amount due to become a deposit must be given to a banker or that he must be in a fiduciary position. In order to apply Art. 60, it is no doubt required to be shown that the amount was deposited with the firm. The evidence in that regard can well appear from circumstances disclosed, leading to an inference that it was not a loan but kept as a deposit with the firm. Before we refer to some of the decisions referred to by Mr. Vakil, the learned advocate for the respondents, we may observe, that it appears clear from the very decision relied upon by Mr. Mody that it cannot be said that there must exist fiduciary relationship between them, though if that existed, it may help in determining the nature of the transaction. In the case of Bhimanna Kumaji v. Venichand Fattechand, 28 Bom LR 73 = (AIR 1926 Bom 168) it was pointed out that under Art. 60 of the Indian Limitation Act, it is not necessary to prove that the borrower is carrying on business only as a banker. It has been further observed that a man might become a banker, or place himself in the position of a banker, with regard to a particular customer, and if the dealings with the lender and the borrower are such that the Court is satisfied that it can be said that the borrower is in the position of a banker to the lender, then the money so lent can be considered as a deposit. The mere fact, therefore, that the firm was carrying on some business in cloth etc. would not necessarily mean that it cannot be treated as a banker qua the plaintiff in the circumstances of the case. As observed in the case of V. E. A. Annamalai Chettiar v. S. V. V. S. Veerappa Chettiar, AIR 1956 SC 12, whether a transaction is a transaction of loan or deposit does not depend merely on the terms of the document but has got to be judged from the intention of the parties and all the circumstances of the case. Even though the transaction is a transaction of deposit the deposit can be coupled with an agreement that it will be payable on demand. Such an agreement can be express or implied and if an express agreement in that behalf is recorded in the document the transaction of deposit cannot be thereby converted into a transaction of loan and the words "we shall pay the said sum" cannot convert the document into a promissory note. The promise to pay will be involved in a promissory note as well as in a deposit within the meaning of Art. 60, Limitation Act and the Court will have regard to the intention of the parties and the circumstances of the case. In other words, even if there existed any document wherein there had been a promise to pay the said sum, it would not necessarily be taken as a document of loan and that the Court would be required to find out the intention of the parties as to whether the amount sought to be secured was a deposit or a loan secured by the document itself. In the various statements of accounts sent by the defendant-firm under the signatures of defendant No. 2 or Natwarlal the words "Baki lewa" have been used. They indicate no doubt about their having made a statement to the effect that they owed to them that much amount stated therein. But the use of such expression in the statements of account would not necessarily mean to convey that it was not a deposit and that it was in the nature of a loan. Going further, we may refer to a decision in the case of Suleman Haji Ahmed Umer v. Haji Abdulla Haji Rahimtulla, 42 Bom LR 971 = (AIR 1940 PC 132), where their Lordships of the Privy Council laid down some of the tests to determine as to whether any such amount given to the other person was in the nature of a deposit or loan. The facts of the case were that the plaintiff handed over his money to the defenddant who credited it in a bank in his own name, and credited it in his account-book to the plaintiff. That went on from time to time over a long period of time. A question having arisen whether the transaction was a loan or deposit for the purposes of the Indian Limitation Act, it was held that the transaction was not a loan falling within Arts. 57 and 59 of the Act because of the absence of any security for the alleged loans such as of any receipt in writing, or any promissory note, or any agreement as to what rate of interest the loan was to carry. It further held that the course of dealing between the parties was that the defendant was acting very much as a banker for the plaintiff, he received for safe custody whatever moneys the plaintiff wished to hand over to him, and he paid those moneys to the plaintiff only when the plaintiff asked for them, and that there was nothing to show that the defendant was under any duty to seek out the plaintiff to repay him. In these circumstances, the transaction was that of a deposit and the suit was governed by Art. 60 of the Indian Limitation Act. Applying these tests to the present claim by the plaintiff, it appears that at no stage any writing was obtained so as to serve as a security for the amount given to the defendants viz. by way of a receipt or a promissory note or the agreement. All that was done was that the amount was handed over to the defendant-firm and a Khata in her name was maintained in the account books of the firm. The interest was added to the same every year and after making accounts at the end of the year, a statement thereof was sent to the plaintiff showing the amount due from the firm to her. This course of conduct continued for long. It shows that it was not the defendant No. 1 who had borrowed the amount out of some necessity on his part or about the plaintiff having advanced or lent any such sum. On the contrary, the circumstances indicate, that having regard to the close connection of the plaintiff's husband with the firm and with a view to have the amount remain in the name of his wife that the amount was kept by way of a deposit with the firm. The firm was carrying on business and there is hardly any suggestion much less any evidence on record to show that the firm was in need of money or had at any time asked for any amount to say that it borrowed the same from the defendant. There was, therefore, no question of lending the money, but it was a question of depositing the amount in the name of the plaintiff in view of such relationship that existed between her husband and defendant No. 1 and the manner in which the amount has been allowed to remain with the firm. It also appears clear that the defendant-firm was not under duty to seek out the creditor such as the plaintiff in the suit for repaying the amount as it should have ordinarily happened in the case of having received a loan. On the contrary, the defendant had to repay the same only on a demand made by the plaintiff. The defendant-firm can, in those circumstances, well be said as if it had acted as a banker or shroff qua the plaintiff in the case. If we turn to the pleadings in the case, a clear case of deposit with the firm-defendant No. 1 was set out in the plaint. While the defendant-firm and its partners Nos. 2 and 3 have not chosen to appear and contest the claim, the other defendants also had not even suggested that it was in the nature of a loan and not a deposit. More than that we find some reference at two different places in the reply Ex. 111 given by defendants Nos. 1, 2 & 3 to the notice Ex. 108 whereby this amount was demanded by the plaintiff from them. In the very first para thereof it has been stated that in about the S. Y. 1988 the amount was deposited in the name of Bai Reva with interest at the rate of  $4\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. "Terikhe Vyajuka nana jama mukela" (Original in Gujarati transliterated here—Ed.). Towards the end of the reply in para 10 thereof a similar reference has again been made by saying that the amount was deposited at the rate of  $4\frac{1}{2}$  per cent by Atmaram in the name of his wife Bai Reva with the firm and that a Khata was maintained and that it continued for all the time. The words "nana jama mukela" (Original in Gujarati transliterated here—Ed.) clearly indicated about her having deposited the same and not about the firm having borrowed the same or about the plaintiff having lent or advanced the same to the defendant No. 1. There is, therefore, hardly any substance in the contention now raised that the amount was in the nature of a loan and not as a deposit so as to come within the ambit of Article 57 or 59 of the Indian Limitation Act. In our view, therefore, apart from clear admissions made by the persons concerned, in respect of the amount lying with the firm, applying the different tests to the facts of this case, we feel amply satisfied that the amount was in the nature of a deposit with the firm and that was payable on demand under an implied agreement and that the interest was to run at the rate of  $4\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. The suit claim would, therefore, be governed by Article 60 of the Indian Limitation Act and that the cause of action for filing a suit commenced from the date when the demand was made by the plaintiff in May 1955. That way the suit was filed within a period of three years contemplated for the same under Article 60 of the Indian Limitation Act. The finding of the learned Civil Judge in that respect is, therefore, correct.

9. The next question relates to the nature of liability of defendants Nos. 4 to 10, the heirs and legal representatives of deceased Chhotalal who happened to be a partner in the firm till his death. The liability of the firm is not in dispute. Its partners Ramprasad and Chhotalal were also personally liable for any such debt. There is no challenge on account of Ramprasad's heirs and legal representatives. The only question before us is whether the shares of defendants Nos. 4 to 10 in the joint family properties of Chhotalal were liable for the debt of Chhotalal. Mr. Vakil, the learned advocate for the respondents, urged that even on the basis that in the firm-defendant No. 1, Chhotalal was a partner in his individual capacity and not as a Karta or manager of the family, the liability in respect of such a debt of the firm would certainly be even against the joint family properties in which defendants Nos. 3 to 10 had the coparcenary interest by reason of the doctrine of pious obligation to pay the debt of the father unless it is shown that the debt was illegal or immoral. In that respect, he invited a reference to some decisions the principles whereof have been well set out in paragraph 290 of Mulla's Hindu Law. We may, therefore, conveniently refer to them instead of referring separately to those decisions. Clause (1) of paragraph 290 refers to the pious obligation of son, grandson and great-grandson to pay ancestor's debts. It relates to debts which have been contracted by the father in the capacity of manager and head of the family for family purposes. In that event his sons as members of the joint family are bound to pay the debts to the extent of their interest in the coparcenary property. The second part thereof, however, is important and that relates to debts which have been contracted by the father for his own personal benefit while the sons are joint with him. When such is the case, as stated therein, the sons are liable to pay the debts provided they are not incurred for an illegal or immoral purpose. The liability to pay the debts contracted by the father, though for his own benefit, arises from an obligation of religion and piety which is placed upon the Mitakshara law to discharge the father's debts, where the debts are not tainted with immorality. The fact that the father was not the karta or manager of the joint family or that the family consisted of other coparceners besides the father and sons, does not affect the liability of the sons in any way. This pious obligation, as set out in Cl. (2) thereof, to pay the ancestor's debts to the extent of their interest in the joint family property is not abrogated by the Hindu Succession Act and then as stated in Cl. (3) thereof, their liability is not a personal one, that is to say, the father's creditor is not entitled to proceed against their person or their separate property. It is limited to their interest in the joint family property unless there is acceptance of personal liability. Then we may usefully refer to CL (4-A) in paragraph 292 which relates to a creditor's suit. This CL 4(A) relates to a suit against the son after father's death, there being no suit against the father. In such a case, the creditor may file a suit and obtain a decree against the son, and attach the entire interest of the father and son in the coparcenary property, and have it sold in execution of the decree. The son being under a pious obligation to pay the father's debts, he cannot claim the benefit of survivorship. Such a debt as contracted by the father must be not one for an unlawful or immoral purpose. We may in this connection refer to the decision in the case of S. M. Jekati v. S. M. Borker, AIR 1959 SC 282, where it has been held that the liability of Hindu sons in a Mitakshara coparcenary family to discharge the debts of the father, the karta, which are not tainted with immorality or illegality is based on the pious obligation of the sons which continues to exist in the lifetime and after the death of the father and which does not come to an end as a result of partition of the joint family property unless a provision has been made for the payment of the just debts of the father. In other words the liability of the sons to discharge such a debt contracted by the father continues not only during his lifetime but also after his death. It is, therefore, not necessary that a decree must have been obtained against the father as a head of the family or that the sons should have been party to a suit in which that decree is passed. It is, therefore, clear that the firm-defendant No. 1, even as admitted by defendant No. 5 in his deposition before the Court, was a running concern till Chhotalal's death which took in November 1950. Taking Chhotalal as a partner of that firm in his own personal capacity and not acting as a manager or a head of the family by reason of his being the father of the members in the family, the liability in respect of any debt devolves or, at any rate, is required to be discharged by the sons by reason of this doctrine of pious obligation provided that it was not tainted with immorality.

10. Before we consider this aspect of the matter, we may deal with some points raised by Mr. Mody having reference to the claim being due on death of Chhotalal. In our view, the debt such as the one in this case continued to exist so far as the firm was concerned and that the cause of action in respect of that debt for recovering the same against the firm would only arise on a demand made thereof. The demand was made both from defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 as also from the members of the family of Chhotalal in May 1955 and the suit filed is in time. It was said that as soon as Chhotalal died, the partnership stood dissolved by reason of his death as contemplated under Section 42(c) of the Indian Partnership Act and, therefore, the debt became payable with effect from that date. On a perusal of the provisions of the Indian Partnership Act, we find no provision which says that the rights of the strangers to the partnership firm are affected thereby. Such a right continues in the creditor unless it is discharged by the firm or its partners, provided the claim is otherwise in time. Now in this connection we may state that it is no doubt true that the firm would be dissolved by the death of a partner, but that is always subject to the contract between the partners as contemplated in Section 42 of the Act. Such a contract need not be express. It may be implied and can well be gathered from the conduct of the parties and the circumstances disclosed in the case. We may in this connection point out that it is with effect from the date of the death of Chhotalal that defendant No. 3 Natwarlal is said to have entered into this partnership firm. That would appear from the registration certificate produced at Ex. 116. It is dated 14th January 1952. The recitals thereof indicate that Natwarlal joined this partnership firm running in the same name as of defendant No. 1 with effect from 21-11-1950, the date on which Chhotalal died. He was the eldest member in the family surviving after Chhotalal's death, the other sons being minors then. They were all joint and were living together. In those circumstances, there was hardly anything to the contrary to suggest that Natwarlal was taken in as a partner of the same firm in his individual capacity as is attempted to be said by Natwarlal and Ramprasad in their reply Ex. 111 to the notice given by the plaintiff. Ramprasad was the brother of Chhotalal and that way the uncle of Natwarlal. The course of events clearly suggests that Ramprasad on Chhotalal's death took Natwarlal, the eldest member of the family, as a partner in the firm, and he must have thus been a partner as representing the family. He has chosen to say otherwise, with a view to enable other members of the family escape the liability to the extent of their shares in the joint family property. Neither Natwarlal nor Ramprasad has chosen to produce the partnership deed. Nor any of them has appeared in the suit and given evidence in the case. In those circumstances we feel inclined to hold that Natwarlal being the eldest member in Chhotalal's branch was taken as a partner representing the members of the joint family of Chhotalal. That has been the plaintiff's case and it has remained almost uncontroverted by any evidence whatever led by Natwarlal or Ramprasad. Mere registration certificate Ex. 116 cannot justify them to say or even help other defendants in saying that Natwarlal was joined as a partner of that firm in his personal capacity and that he did not represent the family. In those circumstances, there would not arise any question of the dissolution of the firm so as to say that any money was required to be demanded on the dissolution of the firm. In fact the firm continued in the same name and the statements of account had thereafter continued to be sent to the plaintiff in the name of the firm in the same way as it was done before. No demand was at that time made and consequently the character of the amount of deposit lying with the defendant-firm cannot be said to have been lost so as to say that it was in the nature of a loan as is attempted to be said by Mr. Mody before us.

11. Mr. Mody also tried to suggest in that connection that even a receipt of some amount from the deposit amount lying with the firm would amount to a demand and that way he tried to show that the plaintiff had off and on recovered some amounts long before and the cause of action for the remaining amount had started from that date when some amount was withdrawn and that way the suit was time-barred. As we said above, the nature of the amount lying with the defendant-firm does not lose its character. It does not become a loan by reason of the fact that the partnership was taken to have been dissolved in the circumstances of the case, nor could it be said that even a receipt of some amount out of the deposit amount lying with the firm could amount to a demand made in respect of the whole amount so as to allow the period of limitation to run against the plaintiff. In the case of Daw Hnit v. Anamalai, AIR 1938 Rang 335, such an argument was advanced and it was held that the demand contemplated by Art. 60 is demand for the repayment of the whole amount of the deposit due, and not a demand for partial payment. As to the change in the character of the amount lying with the defendant, a similar argument appears to have been advanced in that case and it was observed that the creditor's claim was that of a deposit and that deposit had not lost its character as such by reason of insolvency proceedings. In other words, the dissolution even if it had taken place of the partnership firm with the death of Chhotalal cannot be taken to change the character of the amount lying with the defendant so as to affect the plaintiff, and the cause of action would therefore, only arise when a demand is made in respect of the entire amount of deposit due from the defendant-firm.

12. We may incidentally refer to the effect of the dissolution of the partnership or say winding up of the partnership arising under the provisions of the Indian Partnership Act. In order to wind up the affairs of a dissolved partnership, it is necessary first to pay its debts and then to settle other questions of account between the parties. In other words, the consequences of a dissolution of a partnership arise both as regards the creditors and as regards the partners themselves. As between the partners, as to the consequences on a dissolution of a partnership we are not concerned in this suit. But we may refer to the principles deduced from different decisions in so far as they relate to the creditors of the partnership firm, in "Lindley on Partnership" (Eleventh Edition) at page 722. Of the six principles so set out, the first two are of some relevance. They are as under:—

1. That a dissolution of partnership, whether general or partial, does not discharge any of the partners from liabilities incurred by them previously to the time of dissolution.
2. That in order that a member of a firm, wholly or partially dissolved, may be freed from his liability to a person who was a creditor of the firm at the time of its dissolution, such creditor must either have been paid, or satisfied, or must have released or discharged the late partner, or have accepted some fresh obligation in lieu of that which existed when the firm was dissolved.

We may point out that certain arguments advanced by Mr. Mody would be amply met thereby. His first argument was that the original partnership which ran in the name of Ramprasad Chhotalal was between four persons as would appear from the partnership deed Ex. 114 dated 7th December 1931. The amount was deposited with the firm even before that. Now this document makes no reference whatever about the plaintiff's dues. But it appears from the statement of accounts as per Ex. 85 that it has come to be acknowledged by this partnership firm from the previous one. That firm can be taken to have taken over the liability to the plaintiff for her dues from the previous firm. It was not discharged at any time. It can hardly be said that the liability came to an end with the same firm taking over some other partners or releasing some therefrom. How it came to be so changed we have no material on record. Now we find that the partnership again continued in the name of M/s. Ramprasad Chhotalal as per the other partnership deed Ex. 115. This deed shows that Chhotalal Lalubhai had ten annas share as against six annas share in a rupee of Ramprasad Lalubhai. This partnership admittedly continued till the death of Chhotalal and it was on the death of Chhotalal that Natwarlal is said to have joined viz. on 21-11-1950 in place of his father Chhotalal. The firm name remained the same. The partners thereafter continued to be Ramprasad Lallubhai and Natwarlal in place of his father Chhotalal. During the existence of the partnership firm, as per the deed Ex. 115 the claim of the plaintiff continued to remain and the firm had sent statements of accounts to the plaintiff every year. As already pointed out hereabove, Natwarlal joined the firm on the death of Chhotalal. The partnership agreement which was arrived at between them has not been before us. In fact Natwarlal was summoned to produce the same and he failed to do so. The only inference that can be drawn is that Natwarlal continued to be in place of his father and that he being the eldest member in the family, represented the family in that partnership firm. The said firm can be said to have continued on the same basis in absence of anything shown to the contrary. Even after Natwarlal having joined his father's firm, in the statements of accounts sent by the firm and in fact as already pointed out hereabove, in the reply to the notice given by the plaintiff, both Ramprasad and Natwarlal had admitted it. Even if, therefore, the partnership had come to be dissolved for one reason or the other, and so far as the first partnership was concerned or even the second partnership was concerned, it will have to be assumed that the next partnership had accepted the same obligation in lieu of that which existed when the firm was dissolved. In absence of any material whatever to show that the creditor must have been paid or his claim was satisfied or that he had released or discharged any such partner of the firm, this position would be covered in the second principle just set out hereabove from Lindley on Partnership. It is equally clear that even with the dissolution of partnership unless it is shown otherwise, the partners cannot be said to be discharged from the liability incurred by them previously till the time of dissolution. In view of these principles, the claim of the plaintiff would in no way stand affected by reason of the change in the partners of the firm, and the character of the dues so far as the plaintiff is concerned may also remain unchanged in respect of the firm having two partners and later, on the death of Chhotalal, Natwarlal having been taken over on behalf of the family. Thus, by reason of the fact that Natwarlal happened to be the manager of the family of defendants Nos 4 to 10, they would be liable, though not personally, to the extent of their interest and share in the joint family property.

13. Turning back to the doctrine of pious obligation even if Natwarlal was a partner of the firm in his individual capacity and not in his capacity as a head of the family representing all the members of the family, they would be liable to the extent of their share or interest in the joint family property by reason of the doctrine of pious obligation to discharge the debts of their father who was the partner of the firm till his death and in respect of which no demand was made till 1955. His liability as a partner continued in absence of the same having been discharged or taken over with the consent of the plaintiff by the new partners. That has not been so shown. As we said above, defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 were ex parte. They have not appeared and challenged the claim. Defendants Nos 4 to 10 have also not alleged that Chhotalal had contracted a debt which was illegal or immoral so as to enable them to avoid their liability in regard to their share or interest in the family property. No such plea is raised. It was urged by Mr. Mody that there has been no averment to that effect in the plaint for holding them liable on that basis viz., upon the doctrine of pious obligation to pay the father's debts, that they would be able to contend that the debt was of an immoral character. The claim of the plaintiff has been obviously on the basis that Natwarlal had become a partner of the firm as a head of the family and he represented them as such in that partnership firm in place of Chhotalal. The attempt on the part of the defendants was that Natwarlal had joined the firm in individual capacity and if that was the contention, naturally the question would arise as to their liability in respect of the debts of deceased Chhotalal by reason of his being a partner in that firm. That liability would be based on principle of law and if at all it was a suggestion or contention of the defendants that such a debt was illegal or immoral, the plea ought to have been raised that they are in no way responsible for paying the debts incurred by the father on such a ground. It was, however, pointed out by Mr. Mody that he can show that it was a debt contracted by the father in starting a new business, and that he cannot bind his sons for the debt contracted for a new business which may well be called Aavyavaharik debt. Some cases were referred to by him. It may not be so very necessary to refer to them for we find the principles well deduced from those decisions and have been set out in paragraph 224, clause (2) at page 264 in Mulla's Hindu Law under the caption "New Business". The principle set out therein is that the manager of a joint family cannot impose upon a minor member of the family the risk and liability of a new business started by him—estate in order to provide money for one self and the other adult members. Even where the father is the manager, he is not entitled to mortgage the joint family of his sons to start a new business. Such a mortgage is wholly invalid against minor coparceners. Later on it has been observed that as regards adult members it has been held in India that the manager cannot impose even upon them the risk and liability of a new business started by him, unless the business is started or carried on with their consent, express or implied or though started by the manager only. Joint funds were afterwards utilised for the business to the advantage of the joint family or its continuance was found beneficial to the family or it was adopted as a family business by the other members who continued to enjoy the benefits of the same. Before applying any such principle, it has to be established that the debt was contracted for the purpose of entering into a new business by any individual member in the firm so as to bind other members in the family. In the present case, as already pointed out hereabove, we have no material on record to exactly know how and for what purpose the amount was accepted by the firm. The only thing that we are able to gather from the material on record is the statement of accounts sent to the plaintiff every year from time to time by the firm acknowledging the firm's liability to pay the same. What happened to the first partnership and in what manner it came to be dissolved we do not know. All that could well be known by the defendants themselves. Their accounts would have shown the same. None of those accounts has been produced to show as to whether this amount was taken by way of a loan for starting a new business so as to create any such effect in respect thereof subsequently. Since the first partnership had two partners Ramprasad and Chhotalal, this amount was carried forward as the amount deposited with them. In other words, there is not an iota of evidence or material on record to suggest much less show that this amount was borrowed for the purpose of starting a new business. No attempt is made to explain the same and the material in that regard could only be with the defendants who have remained ex parte and have not chosen to produce the same. The written statement Ex. 24 filed by the defendants Nos. 4 to 10 does not even suggest any such thing and all that it says is that Natwarlal had become a partner of the firm in his individual capacity and that they were not bound by it. No such plea is raised and even there has been no material in that regard to substantiate any such argument advanced before us. In those circumstances, it is abundantly clear that the interests or shares in the joint family property so far as defendants Nos. 4 to 10 are concerned, would be liable for the claim of the plaintiff against the firm-defendant No. 1 of which Ramprasad and Chhotalal were partners and later on on Chhotalal's death Natwarlal joined the same as the head of the family. The learned Civil Judge was, therefore, right in holding accordingly.

14. In the result, the appeal fails and it is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

V. S. Patel with B. R. Shelat, for Applicant; K. S. Nanavati for I. M. Nanavati, for Opponent No. 1.

MEHTA, J.: The petitioner-employee challenges in this petition under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution, the order of the Industrial Court, dated October 11, 1966 by which the Industrial Court set aside the order of the Labour Court allowing the Mill's Appeal and dismissed the application filed by the petitioner in the Labour Court. The short facts which have given rise to this petition are as under—

GN/GN/D132/70/BDB/T

2. The petitioner was employee in the Respondent No 1 Mills Co., hereinafter referred to as 'the Mills', for a number of years and at the relevant time he was a Storekeeper in the Stores Department. One other Clerk, Kantilal, worked in the Sales Department and he had been discharged by the Mills. On August 4, 1959, Kantilal wrote a letter to the Manager referring to some misappropriations which were committed by the Manager from the sale proceeds of the two transactions in question. It appears that the petitioner was thereafter transferred as a Provident Fund Clerk. Kantilal reiterated his complaint by his second letter on November 9, 1959. It should be noted at this stage that both Kantilal and the petitioner are the share-holders of the Respondent No 1 Mills Co. Kantilal issued similar notices to the firms involved in those transactions viz., to one Kalidas of M/s. Barrels and Machinery Supplying Co. and to one Chimanlal Jemaldas mentioning that the proceeds of these goods purchased by them were not credited in the Mills account and were misappropriated by the Manager. These two transactions are of May 3, 1956 of sale of Beam Flanges to Chimanlal Jemaldas and on June 20, 1956 of sale of Cast Iron, a controlled item, to M/s Barrels and Machinery Supplying Company through the said Kalidas. The Manager, the said Kalidas and the said Chimanlal had on December 1 and 2, 1959 sent replies to that Kantilal. It appears that on September 4, 1959, the Gate-keeper reported to the Manager that the petitioner took away kachha gate passes from him on the pretext that he wanted to make pucca gate passes but he had not returned them. A show cause notice was issued by the very Manager, against whom these allegations were made by Kantilal, at Ex. 17 on December 3, 1959. Under the relevant Standing Order No 12, the petitioner was asked to show cause as he had misappropriated the amounts of the said two transactions which was detected when the inquiry was made after the said Kantilal who was a share-holder complained by giving a notice to the Manager. These amounts were not credited to the Mills, while the amounts were realised by the petitioner from the concerned Merchants. It was further alleged that an attempt was made to involve the Manager in this matter and the petitioner had colluded with Kantilal in this connection. In order to save himself, he had got defamatory allegations made against the Manager through Kantilal and thus he had committed misconduct under the relevant Standing Order 12 for which he was liable to be dismissed. After the said show cause notice was served on the petitioner, the Company served another letter at Ex. 19 dated December 5, 1959 on the petitioner pointing out that as the Manager was going to be a witness, if the petitioner wanted that the inquiry should be held by some other person, the Managing Director had ordered the Labour Officer Mr Desai to hold inquiry. The inquiry was started on December 16, 1959. At the time of the inquiry, the petitioner was consulted and as the Manager was going to be the witness, the inquiry was handed over to the Labour Officer who was appointed in this connection to hold inquiry by the Managing Director. When the inquiry was commenced by this Inquiry Officer, the petitioner filed his written reply dated December 16, 1959 at Ex. 25. In the said reply, the petitioner pointed out that he had prepared gate passes but the Manager had instructed him to prepare the gate passes of the merchants who had taken the goods and had paid the price to him. The Manager used to sign these kachcha gate passes and they were prepared by the petitioner as per the instructions of the Manager and many such gate passes had been prepared by him during the course of his service. The petitioner further pleaded that the Manager used to give him specific instructions before preparing these kachcha gate passes by telling him that the concerned merchants had paid the monies to him and so far the goods mentioned by the Manager the kachcha chits were to be prepared as instructed by him. It was according to this permanent practice, which was observed in the Mills for preparing such kachcha chits, that the two impugned kachcha chits, for the transactions of 3-5-1956 of M/s Chimanlal Jemaldas for Beam Flanges and on June 20, 1956 of M/s Barrels Supplying Co. for Cast Iron, were prepared by him on the instructions of the Manager himself. It was, therefore, finally pleaded by him that in the circumstances it was obvious that a person who was guilty himself was trying to find fault with the other person and the whole thing had been intelligently done to involve this innocent petitioner. After the written statement was presented, the petitioner submitted before the Inquiry Officer an application dated December 16, 1959. In that application, a request was made that before the inquiry commenced, the petitioner should be given a list of the Mills' witnesses and of the record and documents which the Mills wanted to rely upon against the petitioner and to permit inspection of all the records and only after this was done that further inquiry should be held. The petitioner also gave a second application on the same day to the Inquiry Officer asking for production of certain documents as they were vital for his defence, before even he could file the written statements. These records were (1) The gate-keeper's "Awak-Jawak" books of the Mills for the years 1955, 1956, 1957, 1958 and his daily "Awak-Javak" reports, (2) physical stock list of the stores department for 1955, 1956, 1957 and 1958 A.D. and the Mills' pucca stock list, (3) Store-keepers for the said years with monthly figure books for the said years, (4) Awak Javak books of the stores department for the said years. It was finally requested that these books or records should be produced before the inquiry was commenced. The Inquiry Officer, however, rejected the second application on the ground that the show cause notice was relating to only two transactions and the application for production related to books or records of four years. The petitioner, thereafter, presented the final application on the same day stating that he had a feeling that the inquiry that was going to be held against him in the matter was not going to be impartial and that he felt that the inquiry would be held as per the deliberately pre-determined scheme of discharging or dismissing him. On this ground, the employee refused to participate in the inquiry. It appears that the Inspector of the Textile Labour Association, the Representative Union, advised the employee to take part in the inquiry, but as the employee was in these circumstances not prepared to participate in the inquiry, even the said Inspector withdrew from the inquiry as he also did not think it proper to take part in the inquiry. Thereafter, an ex parte inquiry was held where the said Manager was examined before the Inquiry Officer and statements were taken of the concerned two merchants. Thereafter, considering the report of the Inquiry, the very same Manager against whom all these allegations were made has passed the dismissal order against the petitioner on December 23, 1959. An approach letter under Section 42(4) was written by the Textile Labour Association as a Representative Union on March 15, 1960 and thereafter the application was filed in the Labour Court by the Textile Labour Association as a Representative Union challenging the said dismissal order and for claiming reinstatement relief, on April 20, 1960. The Labour Court held that there was no fair and impartial inquiry as the petitioner's right of defence was completely stultified by withholding these material documents and as the Manager had such a bias, as he was himself charged for these misappropriations and had taken such an active interest throughout the proceedings and had been a witness and had been a judge also in his own cause. The Labour Court, therefore, held that the inquiry was vitiated and the order of dismissal was bad. However, the reinstatement was not ordered considering the strained relations between the management and the petitioner, and it was only ordered that the petitioner be deemed to be continued in service till the date of the order of the Lower Court dated February 19, 1965. The Mill Company was directed to pay his full wages from the date of dismissal to the date of the order of the Labour Court and from that date his services were to stand terminated and he was to be given all benefits to which an employee who has been discharged simpliciter would be entitled to. Against this order of the Labour Court, the Textile Labour Association filed an appeal and the Mills also filed a cross appeal before the Industrial Court. When these appeals came up for hearing before the Industrial Court, by a pursis given in the appeal filed by the Textile Labour Association, the Textile Labour Association withdrew the said appeal on the ground that the concerned clerk was advised to accept the reinstatement subject to other conditions but he was not prepared to go in the Mills in view of the strained relations. Therefore, the question of the proceeding with the said appeal did not survive and the Textile Labour Association did not press the said appeal and prayed for allowing it to be withdrawn. This appeal has, therefore, been dismissed by the Industrial Court, even though the petitioner himself wanted to press this appeal, on the ground that the Representative Union had a right to appear or act by excluding even any individual employee as per the settled legal position. As regards the other appeal of the Mills, the Industrial Court held that the Labour Court had completely misconceived the scope of the inquiry and it reversed the conclusion of the Labour Court that the employee's right of defence was stultified, by rejection of his request for the various books or records for the four years in question. The Industrial Court, further held that the inquiry was not vitiated on any other ground, especially as the concerned clerk had consented to the Manager remaining present at the inquiry and the enquiry was entrusted to an independent officer of the Company by the Managing Director. The Industrial Court also held that the employee in these circumstances was not justified in withdrawing from the inquiry and he must thank himself if he refused to participate in the inquiry. In the result, the order passed by the Manager was held to be justified on the basis of ex parte inquiry recorded against the petitioner and the petitioner's application was dismissed by the Industrial Court, by the impugned order dated October 11, 1966. The petitioner has, therefore, as a concerned employee, filed this petition chal-

3. At the hearing, Mr. Patel raised the following contentions:

(1) That the Industrial Court had disregarded the settled law in coming to the conclusion that such a dismissal order was not vitiated, even though it was passed by a Manager, who was a person against whom allegations for these particular misappropriations were made and who had himself started the inquiry by issuing the show cause notice and who was a witness and a Judge in his own cause.

(2) That the Industrial Court, on a complete misconception of the nature of the inquiry before the Management, had come to a patently erroneous conclusion that the right of defence of the petitioner was not stultified.

(3) That the Industrial Court on the aforesaid conclusion should not have dismissed the petitioner's appeal and in any event, should have invoked the powers under Order 41, Rule 33 or relevant Regulation 65 for doing substantial justice even in the Mills' appeal by declaring that the petitioner continued in service unaffected by the order of dismissal sought to be passed by such a disqualified person who totally lacked jurisdiction and which was against all the principles of natural justice.

(4) That in any event, the order of the Industrial Court is perverse even on the basis of the material of the ex parte inquiry.

(5) That the order in any event was vitiated because of the unfair labour practice as found by the Labour Court.

4. As regards the first question, from the facts which we have already set out, it is obvious that Kantilal made allegations in 1959 in his capacity as a shareholder against the concerned Manager that he had misappropriated the amounts realised from these two transactions in question which took place on May 3, 1956 and June 20, 1956, as the show cause notice itself mentions. It was the complaint of Kantilal which led to the said show cause notice being issued against the petitioner. The Manager, who was facing all these allegations of the concerned share-holder, had himself issued this show cause notice and even he mentioned this fact that the petitioner had colluded with Kantilal and to save himself the petitioner got these allegations made against the Manager that the Manager had himself misappropriated this amount. Even the notice addressed by

Kantilal to the Manager and the persons of M/s. Barrels and Machinery Supplying Co. and Chimanlal Jemaldas, the concerned merchants, were replied by those three persons on December 1 and 2, 1959, just a day or two before the issuance of this show cause notice. Even the management was conscious of the fact that looking to the nature of this allegation the manager was a necessary witness in the case. The Managing Director had, therefore, ordered right from the beginning that if the petitioner objected, the inquiry should be held by the Labour Officer. The petitioner was consulted and he reiterated his objection even at the stage of inquiry and that is why the inquiry was handed over to the Labour Officer. Therefore, it is clear that the Manager being a Judge in his own cause and as he was the person against whom this very allegation was made by the share-holder and who himself had issued the show cause notice and had initiated this inquiry against the petitioner and who was a vital witness could not become a judge in his own cause, as he naturally could not remain unbiased or impartial in such an inquiry. It is in these circumstances, that the Managing Director directed the present Manager not to hold the inquiry if the petitioner objected. Therefore, it is obvious from these facts that the present Manager who was in the position of the person facing the charge, the complainant, witness and the tribunal himself could not have passed the dismissal order. Such a dismissal order would be against all principles of natural justice by a bias of tribunal. The position of law in this connection is completely settled by various decisions of the Supreme Court. In Nageswarrao v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1959 SC 1376 (at p 1378), the doctrine of bias has been explained:

"The principles governing the 'doctrine of bias' vis-a-vis judicial tribunals are well settled and they are: (i) no man shall be a judge in his own cause; (ii) justice should not only be done but manifestly and undoubtedly seem to be done. The two maxims yield the result that if a member of a judicial body is 'subject to a bias (whether financial, or other) in favour of, or against, any party to a dispute, or is in such a position that a bias must be assumed to exist, he ought not to take part in the decision or sit on the tribunal'; and that 'any direct pecuniary interest, however, small, in the subject-matter of inquiry will disqualify a Judge, and any interest, though not pecuniary, will have the same effect, if it be sufficiently substantial to create a reasonable suspicion of bias'. The said principles are equally applicable to authorities, though they are not courts of justice or judicial tribunals, who have to act judicially in deciding the rights of others, i.e.,

5. There is no dispute that the Manager dismissing the employee acts as a quasi-judicial tribunal and that is why this principle has been applied by their Lordships of the Supreme Court even in industrial adjudication. In Andhra Scientific Co., Ltd. v. Seshagiri Rao, AIR 1967 SC 408 (at p. 410), the dismissal order by a person who gave actual decision was held to be vitiated by violation of rules of natural justice on the ground that the person who gave evidence as a witness at one stage acted as a Judge at the later stage and he actively procured the evidence, with the avowed motive of securing a conclusion against the workman. On these facts, the manner in which the inquiry was conducted could hardly be said to have ensured fairplay which rules of natural justice required. The same view was reiterated by following this decision by the Constitutional Bench in Workmen of Lambabari Tea Estate v. Lambabari Tea Estate, (1966) 2 Lab LJ 315 (SC) (at p. 317). It was held that the manager did not keep his function as the enquiry officer distinct but became witness, prosecutor and manager in turns and therefore, the inquiry was vitiated for contravention of principles of natural justice. Their Lordships in terms observed that they should content themselves by saying that the inquiry should always be entrusted to a person who is not a witness. If it is not possible to find such a person from that estate some officer from another estate should be asked to help in the matter. An inquiry cannot be said to be held properly when the person holding the enquiry begins to rely on his own statements. These observations of their Lordships furnish a complete answer to Mr. Nanavati's contention that the standing order necessitated a departure from the principles of natural justice by requiring the Manager to pass such an order of dismissal. In fact, there is no such necessity if we look to the wordings of the standing order to see which include the definition of Manager even an acting manager. Therefore, in such circumstances, when the Managing Director appointed another inquiry officer another acting manager could have been equally appointed. Mr. Nanavati in this connection also sought to make a distinction that when an inquiry was ordered to be held by an independent officer there was sufficient compliance with the principles of natural justice. Their Lordships observed that the inquiry should be entrusted to a person who is not a witness and not to be entrusted in this manner for their Lordships intend that actually the decision should not be taken by a lis of bias manager (sic). The inquiry must be conferred impartially and the very requirement of conferred impartial inquiry which is the necessity outcome of the principles of natural justice is that a person who is a witness should not only dis-associate himself with the inquiry but he should not pass even the actual decision. In such cases, it is obvious that he is a disqualified person being a judge in his own cause. He would not, therefore, remain indifferent or hold the scales even and that is why their Lordships went to the extent of observing that in such cases it is not possible to find such a person from that estate from that Company, some officer from other Company should be asked to help him to hold this inquiry. In the present circumstances it amply empowers the Company to appoint another officer for this purpose when this manager was disqualified.

6. In this connection, the decision of our Division Bench consisting of Miabhoy J. (as he then was) and myself, in A. S. Razvi v. Divisional Engineer, Telegraphs, ILR (1964) Guj 45 = (AIR 1964 Guj 139), is quite apposite. At pp. 59 to 62 (of ILR Guj) = (at pp. 143-144 of AIR), it was pointed out that this is a cardinal principle of administration of justice that no person shall be a judge in his own cause. The principle applies not only in a case where the judge or the adjudicator is himself the prosecutor or suitor, but it applies also to all those cases where the judge or the adjudicator is so situated with reference to the lis that there is a real likelihood of bias taking place in the final decision of the case. The principle had, therefore, been applied where the judge or the adjudicator appeared as a witness in the cause. The principle emerges from the fact that the judge or the adjudicator had a duty to act judicially. In the eye of law, a person cannot act judicially unless and until the person is qualified to be a judge or an adjudicator and a person is disqualified from being a judge or an adjudicator if he has a bias in the dispute which he is called upon to adjudicate. The seat of a judge or an adjudicator is held so sacrosanct that it cannot be occupied by any one unless and until he is qualified to be a judge or an adjudicator and a person, who has a bias in the lis, is totally disqualified and incompetent to occupy such a sacred seat. The principle emerges from the fact that the disqualification of a judge or an adjudicator results in the vitiation of the whole proceedings before him and demands that his orders should be quashed or set aside. The proceeding being void, the court does not pause to inquire whether the order passed or decision arrived at is right, nor does it pause to consider whether a qualified judge or an adjudicator would have passed the same order or come to the same decision. The decision is quashed because the disqualified person had no jurisdiction to pass even a correct order or record a right decision. Theoretically, it is possible to say that holiness, piety or a high sense of duty may endow a person with the rare gift of deciding correctly a case even against himself. But the aforesaid principle does not take into account such rare gifts. The law views the matter entirely on the footing that an average individual is subject to human frailties, and it bases itself on the fact that a person, endowed with ordinary qualities and subject to human weaknesses, to which human flesh is heir to, is not likely to maintain that mental equipoise, open mindedness and fair-play, which are the true badges of a judge or an adjudicator. The mind of a judge or an adjudicator must be so pure that the moment the law feels that a judge or an adjudicator is so situated with reference to a cause that the stream of his thought is likely to be polluted by personal or extraneous consideration or as stated by Lord Cranworth, LC in Ranger v Great Western Rly Co. (1854) 5 HLC 72, the judge or the adjudicator is not likely to be indifferent. It concludes that the cause is one which cannot be entrusted to the person suffering from such a disqualification. In view of 'his settled legal position, the Industrial Court was obviously in error in disregarding the settled law which on admitted facts would have required the Industrial Court to quash the present order of dismissal. The Labour Court had in terms held that there was no fair and impartial inquiry by such a manager who was a judge in his own cause and who was so vitally interested in that matter. Without even looking to the reasoning of the Labour Court, the Industrial Court has summarily brushed off the whole question by observing that there was nothing whatsoever on the record to show that the inquiry was vitiated. The Industrial Court has only been influenced by the fact that the employee consented by saying that he did not object to the presence of the manager at the inquiry. That would only preclude the employee from raising contention about the inquiry being vitiated by the presence of the manager. That does not mean that the present employee had waived this objection which he had been pressing at all stages and which led the Managing Director to entrust the enquiry to another officer. After this order of the Managing Director, this Manager who could never be expected to be an impartial judge in his own cause could not have passed the impugned order of dismissal. Therefore, on this short ground, the order of the Industrial Court which is in complete disregard of the settled law laid down by the various decisions must be set aside.

7. Mr. Nanavati, however, vehemently argued that this question was not specifically raised at any stage and not even in the present petition and it should not be allowed to be permitted. We do not agree with this contention of Mr. Nanavati. The employee was all along feeling that there would not be an impartial inquiry and he had objected to the Manager holding even an inquiry because he was a witness in the case. Ultimately, the employee walked out after putting on record the application that he was not going to have any impartial inquiry. In this matter his apprehensions have now proved to be true because the same manager who was a judge in his own cause actually passed the dismissal order against this employee. Even in the application before the Labour Court it was in terms mentioned that he was dismissed without any legal inquiry and on the basis of an ex parte inquiry. Even before the Labour Court this point was in terms agitated and the Labour Court held the inquiry to be vitiated because the Manager was a judge in his own cause. It is only the Industrial Court which has treated this objection in the perfunctory manner by holding that there were no vitiating grounds in the circumstances of the case. It is true that the Textile Labour Association had not pressed its other appeal and, therefore, the written arguments presented by the petitioner where all these grounds are specifically raised need not have been looked into by the Industrial Court. The Industrial Court, however, could not shut its eyes to the judgment of the Labour Court where all these questions have been elaborately discussed and it could not uphold such a dismissal order which is all against the principles of natural justice. Even in the present petition, Mr. Patel was able to point out certain paragraphs where the impartial nature of the inquiry and the competence of the authority to pass dismissal order has been challenged. Besides, in the present case, the point goes to the root. The circumstances are also such that this employee could not personally appear for supporting his own case when the Textile Labour Association was appearing before the Industrial Court. In such circumstances, when the point is raised on admitted facts on the record and when it touches the jurisdiction of the authority to pass the dismissal order and which is based on the ground of contravention of principles of natural justice as per the settled law of the land, we would permit this point even at this stage. Therefore, there is no ground whatsoever made out by Mr. Nanavati for supporting the order on this count. We may incidentally mention that at some stage of the argument Mr. Nanavati touched the question of waiver but he was unable to substantiate this ground on the facts of the case because the employee had all along protested and even refused to participate in the inquiry, taking the risk of an ex parte inquiry. The point was pressed even before the Labour Court and even before the Industrial Court he was shouting at the top of his voice even in the written arguments. Therefore, this is not a case where this point has been waived by the employee at any stage.

8. As regards the second question also, the approach of the Industrial Court is totally perverse as it has misconceived the entire nature of the inquiry. The written statement of the employee was to the effect that there was an established practice in this unit according to which he was asked to prepare kachcha gate passes by the manager by instructing him that he had received the amounts for the goods which were allowed to be passed from the concerned merchants. It was the case of the petitioner that this practice was not only a long standing practice, but almost a permanent practice. The shareholder was alleging that the Manager had misappropriated these two amounts of the transactions which took place in 1956. As the complaint of the shareholder was made in 1959, after three years, the present inquiry was instituted in 1959 on the basis of the said complaint, as it is in terms stated in the show cause notice. In such circumstances, in order to arrive at the real truth of the matter, whether the manager misappropriated the amounts of these two transactions which took place in 1956 or the concerned employee misappropriated these two amounts, the relevant plea of the employee as to the established practice had to be taken into account. In support of this plea, the employee would have to prove the other instances where such kachcha receipts were signed both by the manager and the concerned employee and in which case the goods had gone from the Mills' stores and the proceeds had not been credited in the Mills' account or that the proceeds were credited as having been realised by the manager himself. It is only with a view to show these instances that the concerned clerk demanded these books or records from the year 1956. The Industrial Court felt surprised as the demand was made of these four years' books or records. The Industrial Court ought to have taken into consideration the fact that the transactions were of the year 1956 and when a plea was of a practice of long standing, the employee would at least seek to prove the instances from the years 1955 to 1958 to give a complete picture of the practice relied upon by the employee. Without considering this aspect which would assume great importance in judging whether the employee or the concerned manager committed the alleged misappropriation, the Industrial Court summarily and cursorily brushed off this question on the ground that the show cause notice related to only two instances and, therefore, no evidence could be allowed of other instances. This conclusion of the inquiry officer, which is approved by the Industrial Court, is based on a complete misconception of the nature of the inquiry, where in order to ascertain the truth of the defence of the employee as to whether the Manager misappropriated or the employee misappropriated, the other instances would have to be examined. It is obvious that if the employee had been able to show a few instances where the same type of kachcha gate passes were signed by the Manager and the concerned employee and that the goods had gone out of the Mills' Stores and that the payments were not credited or were received by the manager, the employee's case, even in respect of the two present transactions would be completely corroborated by the independent documentary evidence. In these circumstances, the Industrial Court was entirely wrong in holding that these documents were irrelevant and that a roving inquiry was sought to be made for four years documents. The Mills' inquiry itself was started after three years and, therefore, the evidence had to be for the last four years. Therefore, the Industrial Court was wrong in holding that the Labour Court was under a misconception as to the nature of this inquiry. All these facts were not properly appreciated for otherwise the Industrial Court was bound to hold that the employee's right of defence was completely stultified by withholding these records, which were necessary to ascertain the truth of the defence of the concerned employee. Therefore, the Labour Court was right on both these grounds in holding that the inquiry and the dismissal order were vitiated. The Industrial Court had committed a patent error of law in reversing the decision of the Labour Court by disregarding the settled law in this connection and by a completely perverse approach on a total misconception of the nature of the inquiry. Therefore, on these two grounds, the order of the Industrial Court must be set aside.

9. As regards the reliefs which should be given, Mr. Patel vehemently argued his third contention. After the decision of the Supreme Court, in Giriashanker Kashiram v. Gujarat Spinning & Weaving Co., Ltd., 1962 (1) Lab LJ 369 (SC) it is well settled that an individual employee has no right to appear or act in any proceeding where the representative Union has appeared or acted. Therefore, when the Textile Labour Association, which had filed the original application in the Labour Court and filed the appeal before the Industrial Court, withdrew the appeal by acting in the matter, the individual had no locus standi to oppose that withdrawal. Mr. Patel vehemently argued that the decision of the Supreme Court based on the scheme of Sections 27-A, 32 and 33 would not apply to the present case where the question was of reinstatement of a single employee. We do not agree with this contention of Mr. Patel for the simple reason that even in that case the application was under Section 42(4) by individual employees and still it was held that where a representative had acted in that matter, the individual employees would have no locus standi to proceed with their applications. Mr. Patel next argued that the representative union is bound to act on behalf of the employees and its right to act is as the representative of the employees and it could not, therefore, withdraw the appeal when the individual protested against any such action. The representative union cannot be made to split up its personality. In any event, the point is concluded by the decision of the superior court which is completely binding on us and it is not open to this Court to distinguish this decision on facts. It is only in case of the decision of the concurrent court that the doctrine of obiter per incuriam, or distinguishable on facts could be applied. Therefore, the Industrial Court was right in allowing the Textile Labour Association to withdraw its appeal. In that view of the matter, the claim of reinstatement which was the subject-matter of the appeal filed by the Textile Labour Association could not be granted. Mr. Patel, therefore, argued that the provisions of Order 41, Rule 33 of the C. P. Code could be invoked to grant such relief to the employee as the justice of the case requires. Mr. Patel is right in urging that this is a case where the order of the disqualified Manager is against all the principles of natural justice and is in contravention of the mandatory terms of the standing orders. Besides, when the inquiry was vitiated the company had a right to lead evidence before the Labour Court and to get a decision from the Labour Court on merits by justifying its action of dismissal. This course has also not been adopted. Mr. Patel, therefore, argued that the order of the Labour Court is patently erroneous as it has declared the employee to be continuing in service only till the date of the order of the Labour Court and has discharged him from that date, by the order of discharge simpliciter.

10. In these circumstances, Mr. Patel wanted us to pass an order that the employee continued in service till the date when he would have superannuated, meanwhile, during the intervening period, or at least to grant compensation during the period. These were the reliefs which could be obtained in appeal filed by the Textile Labour Association. Once that appeal was withdrawn, in the Mills' appeal, no such relief could be granted. The provision of Order 41, Rule 33 of the Code of Civil Procedure has not been applied as Mr. Patel was unable to show any provision in the Industrial Court Regulations which required the Industrial Court to exercise all the powers of the appellate Court under the Code of Civil Procedure. Mr. Patel only relied upon the Regulation 65 which corresponds to Sec 151. The said Regulation provides that nothing in these Regulations shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect the power of the Court to make such order as may be necessary for the ends of justice. That residuary provision would not, in our opinion, be sufficient to invoke such a special power, which may be available under Order 41, Rule 33, for being resorted to even in the Mills' appeal. Therefore, once the order of the Industrial Court is set aside, the only relief that would be granted to the employee would be to restore the order of the Labour Court in toto.

11. As the first two points of Mr. Patel are accepted, it is not necessary to go into the fourth and fifth contentions of Mr. Patel.

12. In the result, this petition is allowed and the order of the Industrial Court is set aside and is quashed by a certiorari and the order of the Labour Court is restored in toto.

13. Rule accordingly made absolute with costs.

Rule made absolute.

SHAH, J.: 1-6. x x x x

7. Thus, although the plaintiff's theory that the oral agreement as set up in para 2 was arrived at the very commencement of the transactions, namely, in year 1941, is not proved as such, in our opinion, the plaintiff has successfully shown a course of dealings and transactions between the parties that had taken place ever since 1938 upto year 1952 when the parties fell out, presumably because of the differences in relation to the partnership business which was carried on between the plaintiff and the defendant in the name of Wadia Kiritsinh Transport for which the plaintiff has filed Regular Civil Suit No. 874 of 1963 for dissolution of partnership and accounts, that there was a sort of a peculiar over-all understanding between the parties in the matter arising out of a peculiar relation resulting in trust and confidence in each other, as we shall presently see, while dealing with the question of limitation.

8. Mr. Mehta's contention on the point of limitation is that the transactions between the plaintiff and the defendant were distinct transactions falling under four distinct heads: (i) for the price of goods sold and delivered where no fixed period of credit was agreed upon; (ii) for the price of work done by the plaintiff for the defendant at his request, where no time had been fixed for payment; (iii) for money payable for money lent; and (iv) for money payable to the plaintiff for money paid for the defendant, respectively covered by Articles 52, 56, 57 and 61 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908 (Act 9 of 1908). As regards the first category of transactions, Mr. Mehta's particular submission is that the Court is bound to check up the various items which go to constitute that cause of action and to apply Article 52 to deliveries which took place more than three years before the filing of the suit, although the cause of action is one, namely, for the price of all the goods delivered. For the purpose, Mr. Mehta has relied upon the decision in Atmaram Vinayak v. Lalji Lakhamshi, AIR 1940 Bom 158 = (42 Bom LR 227). Mr. Mehta's over-all submission, in substance, is that transactions are distinct transactions governed by the aforesaid relevant articles of the Limitation Act. Now here, it may be remembered that although the plaintiff had supplied the defendant with copies of the relevant accounts and bills respectively with the notice Ex. 45 and reply Ex. 48 and had also filed the accounts from Samvat year 2004 to Samvat year 2010 (from 1948 A.D. to 1954 A.D.) as annexures to the plaint, and although the defendant had ample opportunity to examine the various items of accounts, in his written-statement, not only did he not challenge any specific items of accounts and put up a positive case, but what is more significant is that he did not raise any plea of the bar of limitation and did not make any averment of fact showing that the items of accounts or any one or more of them were barred by limitation, having regard to the nature of the transactions. It is true that Section 3 of the Limitation Act requires that although limitation has not been set up as a defence, every suit instituted after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by the First Schedule to the Limitation Act shall be dismissed. But, this cannot be taken to mean that when limitation has not been specifically pleaded in the defence and the facts are not apparent on the face of the record, the Court is bound to speculate upon possible questions of limitation that may arise in the suit. It appears that it was precisely for this reason that the learned trial Judge appears to have thought it proper to raise relevant issue set out earlier so that the attention of the parties may be focussed on the point. However, the omission to raise such a plea of the bar of limitation assumes importance in the instant case when what we have to consider is the nature of the manifold transactions, whether they were single and indivisible transactions or whether they were distinct transactions for which different Articles of the Limitation Act might be said to apply. Now, the course of dealings between the parties as evidenced by the testimony of the plaintiff and his witnesses, as also the accounts that have been produced by the plaintiff at Exs 9 to 42 show the real nature of the transactions. The course of dealings discloses that the relations between the parties were cordial ever since the year 1938 when the defendant had purchased a motor car from the plaintiff. The relations appear to have grown thicker and each confided in the other. The evidence reveals that the plaintiff was in the effective control of the firm of M/s P. H. Wadia & Sons which carried on the business of the supply of provision materials, sale and purchase of motor cars, repairs of motor cars, sale of motor spare parts and accessories etc, ever since 1938 and that when the partnership was dissolved at the close of Samvat year 2005 (1949 A.D.), he became the sole proprietor of the concern. The relation had its origin some time in the year 1938 between the plaintiff who was residing in Rajkot and the defendant, who was a Prince or the Ruler of the nearby Gondal State and was working as a Road Superintendent of Gondal State and resided in Gondal, a nearby town. The transactions continued all along until almost the end of year 1952 when the parties appear to have fallen out, because of some dispute inter se relating to their partnership firm started in year 1949 in the name and style of Wadia Kiritsinh Transport. It appears that during all this intervening period, Rajkot was the place from which the defendant used to obtain most of his requirements of provision materials, cloth, motor-car, etc. Defendant used to make purchases of provision materials and other articles from the firm of M/s. P. H. Wadia & Sons on credit. The defendant used to purchase cloth and some other articles from some merchants in Rajkot, most of it on credit. The purchases were made and goods were obtained by the defendant from Rajkot either personally or through his trusted servant named Abedbhai, who was working in his bungalow since last about 35 years, and also through Abedbhai's sons Alibhai, Mamadbhai and Abdulla of whom Abdulla has subsequently become the heir, on the death of the defendant pending the hearing of the appeal, as shown in the title cause of the appeal before us. The acceptable evidence shows that the plaintiff was also looking after the various affairs and requirements of the defendant at Rajkot, sometimes paying up defendant's bills payable to other merchants in Rajkot, giving cash amounts to the defendant and his servants to make some cash purchases or make payments of defendant's various bills in Rajkot even paying off the defendant's Gymkhana bills and some medical bills of treatment of defendant's dog by a veterinary Surgeon at Rajkot, attending to defendant's income-tax matters, making payments by cheques of large amounts of income-tax payable by the defendant, and attending to all and sundry works entrusted to him by the defendant. The defendant had admittedly purchased a motor car from the plaintiff. Defendant's motor-cars were repaired in plaintiff's workshop and spare parts and accessories were supplied by the plaintiff from his stores and all this on credit. In short, the plaintiff worked as a sort of defendant's general agent and financier in Rajkot, supplied provision materials and other goods on credit procured the required goods from other shops for the defendant, repaired motor cars in his workshop, supplied motor spare parts and accessories, paid bills of defendant's creditors, gave cash amounts to pay off the defendant's other bills, paid income-tax amounts on behalf of the defendant from his own Bank balance and attended to all and sundry needs of the defendant. This appears to have been a peculiar relationship which had grown up between the parties during the course of years beginning from 1938. All these transactions have been entered into in one single account of the defendant maintained by the plaintiff. Moneys were debited in defendant's single account, Debit memos, debit vouchers and statement of accounts were from time to time given by the plaintiff to the defendant or his trusted servants. Payment was never demanded until in the year 1952 when the relations became strained. This was all because of the great confidence and trust the plaintiff had reposed in the defendant and vice versa. This peculiar course of dealings shows that moneys due to the plaintiff at the foot of accounts of the transactions were payable on demand. In any event, such appears to have been the tacit understanding. Although the transactions can be classified under eight broad heads as observed by us earlier, in substance, it was all part of a single and indivisible arrangement and the plaintiff's claim for the suit amount cannot be split up into different items for applying the bar of limitation. It is not the case of the defendant that demand of the moneys due was made by the plaintiff at any time earlier. Mere giving of debit memos, vouchers, statements of accounts, etc., do not amount to a demand and that was never the case of the defendant. Apart from the fact that the defendant has not in his written statement raised a plea of bar of limitation, we find that no case was set up that the suit transactions were divisible and separate transactions. Even in his evidence, the defendant has not made any statement indicating the distinct and divisible nature of the transactions. There is no reason to classify the suit claim into four distinct heads as contended by Mr.

Mehta. The defendant has not challenged plaintiff's deposition stating that the demand of the suit dues was made by him of the defendant personally in August 1952 for the first time. Defendant's conduct as reflected in the course of dealings in the matter also indicates that the transactions were all to be treated as part of an over-all implied arrangement or agreement, a sort of a composite agreement, to treat the transactions, as one and indivisible, the amount due being payable on demand. In our opinion, all these facts and circumstances lead to a reasonable conclusion that the parties treated the transactions as part of one and indivisible over-all arrangement at least impliedly. Thus, although the oral agreement pleaded by the plaintiff in para 2 of the plaint, namely, that the arrangement was arrived at at the very commencement of the suit transactions, meaning in the year 1941, is not satisfactorily proved, the fact that such was the arrangement impliedly arrived at between the parties during the course of the transactions is amply borne out by the course of dealings between the parties, the system of accounting, the nature of the various transactions and the implicit trust one had in the other. The plaintiff would not have otherwise sat silent for such a long time and gone on supplying goods and making payments of large amounts to the defendant or on his behalf over a number of years. It must here be remembered that the plaint para 2 also speaks of such an understanding having been arrived at during the course of the transactions. The case set up in plaint para 2 as regards the understanding is two-fold: (i) that it was arrived at at the very commencement of the suit transactions; and (ii) that it was also arrived at during the course of the transactions or dealings between the parties. Thus, if we say that the agreement was to treat the transactions as one and indivisible and that this was a sort of a composite arrangement by virtue of an implied over-all agreement for which the payment was to be made by the defendant on demand made by the plaintiff, such an understanding, in our opinion, was implicit and is covered by the pleadings. On these premises, the suit relief is clearly within limitation, the demand having been made by the plaintiff on December 21, 1952, by notice Ex. 45 and the suit having been instituted on July 7, 1954. Mr. Mehta's contention that the suit relief is not founded on pleadings has thus no merit.

9. It is true that if a party asks for a relief on a clear and specific ground and in the issues or at the trial, no other ground is covered either directly or by necessary implication. It would not be open to the said party to attempt to sustain the same claim on a ground which is entirely new. A party cannot be permitted to justify its claim on a ground which is entirely new and which is inconsistent with the ground made by it in its pleadings. But, even in such a case, considerations of form cannot override legitimate considerations of substance. As observed by the Supreme Court in Bhagwati Prasad v. Chandramaul, AIR 1966 SC 735, at p. 738:

"* * * in considering the application of this doctrine to the facts of the present case, it is necessary to bear in mind the other principle that considerations of form cannot override the legitimate considerations of substance. If a plea is not specifically made and yet it is covered by an issue by implication, and the parties knew that the said plea was involved in the trial, then the mere fact that the plea was not expressly taken in the pleadings would not necessarily disentitle a party from relying upon it if it is satisfactorily proved by evidence. The general rule no doubt is that the relief should be founded on pleadings made by the parties. But where the substantial matters relating to the title of both parties to the suit are touched, though indirectly or even obscurely in the issues, and evidence has been led about them, then the argument that a particular matter was not expressly taken in the pleadings would be purely formal and technical and cannot succeed in every case."

In our opinion, as aforesaid, the course of dealings does make out an over-all implied agreement between the parties of the sort set out in the plaint para 2. Even assuming otherwise, if the same sort of understanding can be spelt out or culled out from the course of dealings between the parties as is the case here, we would not allow the considerations of form to override the legitimate considerations of substance. We are inclined to take a liberal view of the matter. The suit transactions appear to us to be part of a single and indivisible arrangement (agreement) and the claim made by the plaintiff could not be split up into different items for applying the bar of limitation and therefore, in our opinion, Article 120 of the Indian Limitation Act which provides a period of six years from the date when the right to sue accrues applies. We are in a way fortified in this view by the observations of the Supreme Court in Union of India v. Watkins Mayor and Co., AIR 1966 SC 275, where in a suit by the bailees for compensation on account of expenses incurred in storing goods under 7 different heads: (a) godown rent, (b) watch and ward, (c) terminal tax, (d) cartage, (e) unloading charges, (f) cooliage, and (g) interest, it was contended by the defendant, inter alia, that the suit was barred under Article 61 of the Limitation Act with respect to items (c) to (f). The argument was repelled by the Supreme Court making the observations:

"The transaction of bailment between the parties was a single and indivisible transaction and the claim of compensation made by the plaintiff cannot be split up into different items for applying the bar of limitation. The High Court was right in taking the view that the suit was governed by Art. 120 of the Limitation Act and that the plaintiff was not barred under that Article."

It follows that in a case where the transactions are indivisible and the claim cannot be split up into different items, Article 120 of the Limitation Act applies, as in the instant case. It is not in dispute before us that if Article 120 of the Limitation Act governs the case, the entire suit of the plaintiff is within the period of limitation.

10. Article 120 is the residuary Article and it provides for a period of limitation of six years in a suit for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in the Schedule. The Article would apply unless it is clear that the suit is within some other Article, which, in our opinion, it is not. It is a general Article and it applies to suits to which no other Article is applicable. The time in such a suit begins to run when the right to sue accrues. The words "right to sue" mean a right to seek relief and there can be no right to sue until there is an accrual of the right asserted in the suit and its infringement by the defendant. The question as to when a right to sue arises depends mostly on the facts and circumstances of each case. The facts in the instant case disclose that the right to sue accrued to the plaintiff only when the demand was made for the first time on December 8, 1952, and the defendant refused compliance. In this view of the matter, the plaintiff's suit as instituted on July 7, 1954, is clearly within the period of limitation under the Article.

11. In our opinion, neither Article 52, which provides a period of three years from the date of delivery of the goods, nor Article 56 which provides a period of three years from the date when the work is done can be applied in the case. One does not cover the price of work done and the other does not cover the price of materials supplied. Likewise Article 57 which provides a period of three years for money payable for money lent from the date of the loan and Article 61 which provides three years' period from the date when the money is paid, do not apply. The decisions reported in 42 Bom LR 227 = AIR 1940 Bom 158, AIR 1961 Pat 485 and AIR 1961 Mad 388, relied upon by Mr. Mehta to support his contention that Articles 52, 56, 57 and 61 apply have no application to the instant case and need no detailed consideration. In the instant case, there appears to be a special, though implied, contract between persons who were friends and confidants. The parties appear to have made demand an integral part of the agreement or understanding and the transactions as aforesaid, in our opinion, were all a part of an over-all contract or understanding and they could not be split up into different items for applying the bar of limitation. Effect will, therefore, be given to their contract. The cause of action is a claim for the balance due at the foot of account, payable on demand. In any view of the matter, therefore, the suit of the plaintiff would be governed by Article 120 and is within the period of limitation.

Before parting with the case, we must refer to a contention raised by Mr. Desai for the respondent that document Ex. 46 dated December 21, 1952, constitutes an acknowledgment within the meaning of Section 19 of the Limitation Act. Now Ex. 46 is a reply of the defendant to the plaintiff's notice of demand, Ex. 45, dated December 8, 1952. In the reply, the suit claim is denied. It is denied that bills of accounts were given to the defendant. It states that nothing could be made out of the copy of the 'Khalavahi' (ledger) that was sent by the plaintiff to the defendants. It further states that, after examining the bills, an appropriate detailed reply will be sent. From this, Mr. Desai wanted us to infer that a sort of a jural relationship as of debtor and creditor subsisted between the parties. Mr. Desai's submission was that the reply did not in terms deny the correctness of the accounts and further that by asking for the accounts, the jural relationship was admitted. In our judgment, there is no merit in this contention. The reply merely denies the correctness of the accounts and calls for the relevant bills and says that on receipt of such bills, the defendant would give a detailed reply. Having regard to the tenor of the letter, it does not appear that the statements therein were made with the intention to admit jural relationship. In our opinion, the reply Ex. 46 cannot be construed as an acknowledgment of liability within the meaning of Section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act.

12. The aforesaid were the only contentions which were raised by the learned advocates of the parties. For the reasons stated, the suit is within limitation and is not barred. We must accordingly maintain the decree of the trial Court. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

(c) The provision, if any, made for the existing incumbent of the post; and

(d) whether it is proposed to make any arrangements for the performance of the duties of the post held in abeyance, and if so, the particulars of such arrangements."

It is therefore clear that the Government has got the discretion to keep a particular cadre post in abeyance for a period exceeding six months, but in such a case the Government has to send a report to the Central Government regarding the matters mentioned in Clauses (a) to (d) (supra). We are fortified in our view by a decision of the Delhi High Court in Madan Gopal v. Union of India, 1969 SLR (Services Law Reporter) 576 at p. 596 where their Lordships observed as follows:—

"A plain reading of the rule (Rule 10 of the Indian Police Service (Cadre) Rules, 1954 (Supra) shows that it provides for the keeping of the post vacant or for the holding of it in abeyance only prospectively..... The petitioner has not averred anywhere in his petition that the report contemplated by Rule 10 was not sent by the State Government to the Central Government. On the other hand the presumption that official acts have been done according to law would clearly apply to this case and it must be presumed that the State Government did send a report to the Central Government; otherwise the Central Government would have called for an explanation from the State Government and the petitioner would have come to know about it.

Furthermore Rule 10 gives an undoubted power to the State Government to keep a cadre post in abeyance but prescribes certain steps that the Government has to take. The rule, however, does not lay down any penalty that would be visited if these steps are not taken. Therefore the sending of the report after keeping the post in abeyance has only a directory, not a mandatory force. It is however, not necessary for us to dilate on this question because the petitioner himself has not alleged that no report as contemplated by Rule 10 was sent to the Central Government, so, it must be presumed that the report was sent in the normal course of things. Furthermore, from the historical facts of the events in the State of which a judicial notice can be taken, it is manifest that between the time that the petitioner was appointed to the IPS and the time when the impugned order was passed, the Government had changed three times and three different Ministries had come into power.

It is not possible for us to infer malice against all the three Government against the petitioner, in the absence of specific and cogent reasons which have not been pleaded. On the other hand keeping the cadre posts in abeyance was done by the very Government which had appointed the petitioner and no acts of malice have been alleged against that Government by the petitioner. Again the General Secretary has given cogent reasons why the posts were kept in abeyance, namely, that it took a long time for the Government to prepare the select lists both for the IAS and the IPS. It is absurd to expect that the Government was guilty of malice not only in the case of the petitioner but also in the case of IAS officers who had got nothing to do with the petitioner. Again if the Government decided not to fill up these vacancies and kept them in abeyance for a period of about 10 years, the petitioner made no grievance of it before filing this petition, and he cannot be heard to assail the conduct of the Government on the ground of mala fides ten years after the wrong was done. For these reasons the plea of the petitioner on this score is also overruled.

17. Lastly we come to the third stage namely the period between 1964-68 when according to the petitioner respondents 2 to 4 were appointed to cadre posts which could only have been held by members of the IPS. We have already mentioned that the Government for sufficient reasons was not in a position to prepare the select lists from 1958-68 and therefore the cadre posts of the DIsG Police were kept vacant. The appointment of respondents 2 to 4 to the alleged cadre posts was not really an appointment to the cadre post in the strict sense of the term. The respondents were merely promoted as DIsG Police in the State Service and were asked to look after the duties and responsibilities of these posts. It is obvious that so long as these posts were kept in abeyance or were not filled up, they could not be kept in a state of suspense or vacuum. These posts, namely the posts of DIG, CID, DIG Range and DIG Armed Police entail heavy and onerous responsibilities and the Government would have been failing in its duty if alternative arrangements to perform the duties attached to these posts were not made so long as the cadre posts were kept in abeyance.

It is not disputed before us that even while the respondents were asked to man these posts, they were not paid the emoluments which these posts carried if manned by a member of the IPS cadre, but they were given their own emoluments under the State service. In these circumstances it was the best solution that could have been achieved, although such a course was a little prejudicial to the respondents themselves because they had to discharge the difficult and onerous responsibilities of the high posts on their own emoluments. It was perhaps to remove this prejudice that the Government chose to appoint the respondents to these posts at the very first possible opportunity, that is to say the moment they became eligible after being appointed to the IPS cadre in the year 1968. In fact Rule 10 (d) of the Indian Police Service (Cadre) Rules (Supra) enjoins on the Government a duty to make alternative arrangements for performance of the duties of the posts held in abeyance.

The action of the Government in asking the respondents to look after the duties of these posts was therefore in consonance with Rule 10 (d) of which a report had to be sent by the State Government to the Central Government. Further, the Government having exercised its discretion under Rule 10 and in accordance with the conditions mentioned therein we do not see how any malice can be attributed to it. Furthermore it has been clearly averred by the General Secretary in his counter-affidavit that even at the time the respondents were asked to look after the duties of the posts of DIG mentioned above, the claim of the petitioner was fully considered but he was not found suitable to man these posts and therefore the Government did not promote him even at that time.

This assertion has been made in paras 4(v) and 4(vi) of the counter-affidavit of the General Secretary which runs as under:—

"It may be stated that even at the time of promotion of respondents 2 to 4 as DIG in the State Police Service, the claims of the petitioner as well as other officers were considered and they were not considered suitable for such promotion on the basis of their merit and suitability. . . . While making adjustments to the posts of Dy. Inspectors General the Government against considered the merits, suitability and qualifications of the petitioner as well as other members of the IPS and it was only on relevant and material considerations that respondents 2 to 4 were adjusted as Dy. Inspectors General in the IPS cadre."

18. It is therefore clear that the petitioner's case was fully considered at the time the alleged promotions were made which happened in 1964, 1965 and 1963 but the petitioner was not found suitable. If the petitioner was aggrieved with the decision of the Government, he should have filed a writ petition in this Court and the prayer of the petitioner made at this stage for quashing the impugned order or holding it to be mala fide is absolutely belated and cannot be entertained.

19. It is true that Rule 8 of the Indian Police Service (Cadre) Rules at page 62 of the All India Services Manual does provide that every cadre post shall be filled up by a cadre officer. It is also not disputed before us that the post of DIG Range, DIG, CID and DIG Armed Police are cadre posts. But the State has taken the stand that the respondents were not appointed to these cadre posts but were only asked to look after the duties of these posts without being appointed as cadre officers and therefore there was no violation of Rule 8 (Supra). In fact as pointed out above, Rule 10 of the Cadre Rules clearly empowers the Government to make alternative arrangements for performing the duties of cadre posts and this is exactly what the Government did in asking the respondents to discharge the duties attached to these posts. We are, therefore, unable to agree with the petitioner that the Government was guilty of mala fides.

20. It was then contended that at any rate the petitioner was of a much superior merit than at least respondent 3 who had risen from the lower ranks in the police department and therefore as against him the petitioner's claim should have been considered favourably for appointment to the cadre post of DIG when he was eligible for it. We have already pointed out that respondent 3 was a person of exceptional merit and ability by virtue of which he had risen from the lower ranks to the post of Superintendent of Police in the senior grade. It was in recognition of his services that the President of India appointed him to the IPS cadre in the senior scale. Having been appointed to this service, respondent 3 became as eligible as the petitioner for appointment to the cadre post of DIG. The post of DIG being a selection post, it was for the Government to have selected the best man available and after considering the case of the petitioner if the Government thought that respondent 3 was a more suitable person than the petitioner to be appointed as DIG, the order of the Government was perfectly valid and no fault could be found with it, merely on the ground that the petitioner was not selected.

21. Finally it was conceded that the order impugned is inconsistent with the Presidential order appointing the respondents 2 to 4, inasmuch as by virtue of the impugned order the respondents 2 to 4 would be deemed to have been promoted with effect from 26-10-63, the date of the Presidential order. The contention is prima facie attractive but on closer scrutiny we think it is devoid of substance. The preamble of the impugned order contains the following words:—

"Consequent upon the appointment of the following State Police Officers to the Indian Police Service Cadre of Jammu and Kashmir vide Government of India, Ministry of Home Affairs Notification No. 20/4/67-AIS (III) dated 26-10-63 the following postings and adjustments are hereby ordered.

A perusal of these words clearly shows that the impugned order was passed only as a consequence of the order passed by the President and it cannot therefore be held to be inconsistent with that order, because this order will take effect after the passing of the Presidential order, though both may be operative from the same date. It is not the case of the petitioner that the impugned order was given retrospective effect from a date previous to the passing of the Presidential order and if this was so something could be said in favour of the petitioner. In these circumstances we do not find any illegality in the impugned order on this ground.

22. Before closing this judgment we might state that although the State has taken the stand that the claim of the petitioner as against respondents 2 to 4 was fully considered both at the time when they were asked to perform the duties of the DI&G and at the time when they were subsequently promoted and adjusted as DI&G on their appointment to the IPS, yet there is nothing in the counter-affidavit of the General Secretary to show that there was anything particularly against the petitioner so far as his service record is concerned. It may be that the petitioner was not found suitable or could not be equated in merit with respondents 2 to 4, but if some other vacancy arises in future, he may be found to be equal or better than others who are then eligible for promotion. When this happens, we are sure that the Government will keep the petitioner's claim in view and consider the desirability of promoting him if he is found otherwise suitable in all respects.

23. For the reasons given above, the contentions raised by the petitioner fail. The application is dismissed but in the circumstances without any order as to costs.

R. N. Bhalgotra, for Petitioner; V. S. Malhotra, for Respondent.

JASWANT SINGH, J.— The petitioner JC-13018, Subedar Surat Singh and G-75829 Pioneer Joginder Singh and G-87982 Pioneer Tahal Singh, all of 1615 PNR COY (GREF) who were subject to the Army Act, 1950 (Act XLVI of 1950 hereinafter called "The Act") were tried by the General Court Martial at Work Shop Base GREF under Sec. 69 of the Act read with Section 302/109 of the Penal Code for causing the death of G. 87630 Pioneer Suriya Prasad Sharma of 1617 PNR COY on the night intervening 4th and 5th June, 1967, at village Shakti within the jurisdiction of Police Station Leh, District Leh, Jammu and Kashmir State. The Court Martial was convened by the Chief Engineer, Project Beacon Stationed at Srinagar, respondent, herein, who was empowered to do so under Section 109 of the Act. At the conclusion of the trial on 30th May, 1968, the General Court Martial held the petitioner and his aforesaid co-accused "not guilty" and acquitted them of the charges upon which they were arraigned and transmitted the proceedings through proper channel to the respondent for confirmation under Sections 153 and 154 of the Act read with Rule 63 of the Army Rules, 1954, hereinafter referred to as "the Rules". Acting under Sec. 160 of the Act, the respondent vide his order dated 20th July, 1968, sent back the finding of "not guilty" for revision to the General Court Martial, which originally tried the aforesaid accused. Pursuant to the order of the respondent, the General Court Martial reassembled and deliberated again but seeing no reason to depart from its previous finding, reaffirmed the same. This finding was again sent up under Sections 153 and 154 of the Act read with Rule 68 of the rules to the respondent. Being dissatisfied with the finding the respondent refused to confirm the same and by his order dated 6th February, 1969 directed the re-trial of the petitioner and his other two co-accused by another General Court Martial.

2. Aggrieved by this order, the petitioner has moved this Court under Article 32 (2-A) of the Constitution of India as applied to the State of Jammu and Kashmir and Section 103 of the State Constitution for a writ of Certiorari quashing the order, inter alia on the grounds that there is no provision in the Act or the Rules according to which the confirming authority can refuse to confirm the verdict of "not guilty" after the same has been re-affirmed on revision under Section 160 of the Act and reconvened the General Court Martial for retrial of the offender.

3. In the affidavits filed on behalf of the respondent in reply to the petition, it is contended, that the finding of "not guilty" has no validity unless it is confirmed under Section 153 of the Act read with Rule 63 of the Rules, that if the confirming authority finds that the finding of "not guilty" is perverse it is empowered under Section 160 of the Act to send back the proceedings to the General Court Martial for revision, that this power can be exercised only once, that if on revision the General Court Martial adheres to its former finding and transmits the proceedings for confirmation and the confirming authority comes to the conclusion that the finding given second time by the General Court Martial on revision is still perverse it can refuse to confirm the finding and order retrial because not to try the offender again would mean allowing the charge against him to remain without valid adjudication which would be against the provisions of Sec. 153 of the Act that in exercise of the powers conferred under Rule 70 of the Army Rules, the respondent refused to confirm the finding of "not guilty" of the General Court Martial in respect of the petitioner and his co-accused pioneers and ordered their retrial in order to meet the requirements of discipline as well as ends of justice, that in the circumstances the proposed fresh trial of the accused by the General Court Martial for the same offences cannot be said to be against the provisions of the Act and the Rules and that it is not open to the petitioner to seek relief by means of a writ petition as a specific remedy under Sec. 165 of the Act is available to him.

4. The petition first came up for bearing before one of us and finding that it was a case of first impression and involved important questions relating to interpretation of Sections 121, 153, 154 and 160 of the Act and Rule 70 of the Rules, it has been referred to this bench for an authoritative pronouncement.

5. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties at considerable length. They have reiterated the stands taken by their clients in the petition and the reply affidavits respectively.

6. The crucial point for determination in this case is whether the order passed by the respondent is valid or not. The answer to this question turns on the true interpretation of Sections 121, 153, 154 and 160 of the Act and Rule 70 of the Rules, which are reproduced below for facility of reference.

SECTION 121

When any person subject to this Act has been acquitted or convicted of an offence by a Court Martial or by a Criminal Court, or has been dealt with under any of the Sections 80, 83, 84 and 85, he shall not be liable to be tried again for the same offence by a Court martial or dealt with under the said sections.

SECTION 153

No finding or sentence of a general, district or summary general Court Martial shall be valid except so far as it may be confirmed as provided by this Act.

SECTION 154

The findings and sentences of general Court martial may be confirmed by the Central Government, or by any officer empowered in this behalf by warrant of the Central Government.

SECTION 160

(1) Any finding or sentence of a Court martial which requires confirmation may be once revised by order of the confirming authority and on such revision, the Court, if so directed by the confirming authority, may take additional evidence.

(2) The Court on revision, shall consist of the same officers as were present when the original decision was passed, unless any of those officers are unavoidably absent.

(3) In case of such unavoidable absence the cause thereof shall be duly certified in the proceedings, and the Court shall proceed with the revision, provided that, if a general Court Martial, it still consists of five officers, or, if a summary general or district Court martial, of three officers.

RULE 70

Upon receiving the proceedings of a general or district Court martial, the confirming authority may confirm or refuse confirmation or reserve confirmation for superior authority, and the confirmation, non-confirmation or reservation shall be entered in and form part of the proceedings.

It will be seen that Section 121 inter alia prohibits the second trial of a person subject to the Act who has been acquitted or convicted of an offence by a Court martial or by a criminal Court. Section 153 provides that no finding or sentence of a general, district or summary general court martial would be valid unless confirmed as laid down in the Act. Section 154 enumerates the authorities who are empowered to confirm the finding and sentence of a general court martial. Section 160 authorises the confirming authority to order revision of a finding or sentence by the court martial without taking or after taking additional evidence. But the finding or sentence of the Court martial requiring confirmation can be revised once only by the order of confirming authority. If on revision the Court does not find any reason to depart from its previous finding it has to reaffirm the same. If, however, the Court does not adhere to its former finding it has to revoke the finding and sentence and record the new finding and if such new finding involves a sentence, it has to pass a fresh sentence. In either case it has according to Rule 68(4) of the Rules to transmit the proceeding for confirmation to the confirming authority. The powers of the confirming authority are not absolute and untrammelled but are defined and circumscribed by Rule 70 of the Rules. According to that rule it can upon receiving the finding of the general Court martial adopt any one of the following courses:-

- (i) confirm, or,
- (ii) refuse confirmation, or,
- (iii) reserve confirmation for superior authority.

The powers of the confirming authority being limited, as stated above, it cannot go beyond that and direct retrial of the accused specially in the absence of a provision for retrial like the one contained in Secs. 423 (1) (A) and 376 (b) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is true that in India unlike in England where the acquittal by the Court martial is conclusive and requires no confirmation, every finding of a general Court martial whether of acquittal or of guilty cannot be regarded as valid unless it is confirmed by the competent authority but the legislature could not have reasonably intended that an officer convening a general Court martial can go on dissolving such Courts and reconstituting them ad infinitum until he obtains a verdict or a finding of his own liking. That would not only be against public policy and the ancient maxim "nemo debet bis vexari pro una et eadem causa" (no person should be twice disturbed for the same cause) but would also reduce the provisions of the Act to a mockery and given an appearance of mala fides. In the present case if the findings arrived at by the general Court martial on revision appeared to the respondent to be perverse he should have referred the case to his superior authority for confirmation and should not have taken upon itself the odium of withholding confirmation and ordering a retrial.

7. Section 117 of the Act cannot also be pressed into service by the respondent as it appears to relate to contingencies arising before the return of the finding by the Court martial and not to cases of the present nature.

8. As the impugned order does not appear to be warranted by any provisions of the Act or the Rules, we have no hesitation in declaring it to be invalid.

9. Before concluding we must also advert to the objection raised in one of the counter-affidavits filed before this Court that since it was open to the petitioner to apply to the Central Government to annul the proceedings, and he has not availed of the remedy the petition is not maintainable. It is now well settled that if the impugned order is manifestly contrary to law or principles of natural justice, it can be interfered with by the High Court under its writ jurisdiction even though an alternative remedy is available and has not been exhausted.

10. In Calcutta Discount Co. Ltd. v. Income Tax Officer, AIR 1961 SC 372, it was held that the existence of an alternative remedy is not always a sufficient reason for refusing a party quick relief by a writ or order prohibiting an authority acting without jurisdiction from continuing such action. It was further observed in this ruling that when constitution confers on the High Courts the power to give relief it becomes the duty of the Courts to give such relief in fit cases and the Courts would be failing to perform their duty if relief is refused without adequate reasons.

11. Again in Collector of Monghyr v. Keshav Prashad Goenka, AIR 1962 SC 1694, it was held that the High Court has certainly a discretion to grant relief under Article 226 even if there are other alternative statutory remedies.

12. In the present case, we find no reason which would justify our refusal to grant the relief.

13. In the result we allow the petition and quash the impugned order by a writ of certiorari and direct the respondent to order the release of the petitioner.

14. There will, however, be no order as to costs.

D. D. Thakur, for Appellants; Ishwar Singh, for Respondent.

S. MURTAZA FAZL ALI, C. J.:— These are two defendant's appeals in a suit filed by the plaintiffs for specific performance of a contract of sale of two shops and a house situate in Salimar Road, Jammu. As the facts and the points arising in the two appeals are identical, we propose to decide both the appeals by one judgment.

2. In first appeal No. 4 of 69— Harnam Singh v. Mohan Lal — the suit of the plaintiff which was based on the basis of an agreement to sell executed by Harnam Singh in favour of Mohan Lal dated 11-7-61 and 18-7-61 purporting to sell two shops and a house for Rs. 6,000 and Rs. 9,000 respectively, the plaintiff averred that the agreement was a valid one and the executant Harnam Singh agreed to execute a sale deed within one year of the date of the agreement but did not perform his part of the contract in spite of persistent demands by the plaintiff.

3. The suit was resisted by Harnam Singh defendant mainly on the ground that the agreement was void as it had been obtained by the plaintiff through fraud and undue influence. The defendant further pleaded, that the property being ancestral, there was no legal necessity to justify the sale in favour of Mohan Lal plaintiff.

4. Balwant Singh son of Harnam Singh filed another suit for injunction against the plaintiff restraining the plaintiff from getting the sale deed executed on the ground that the agreement executed by Harnam Singh in favour of his father was obtained by fraud and was not justified by legal necessity. First Appeal No. 140 of 69 arose out of the suit filed by Balwant Singh s/o Harnam Singh whereas first appeal 40 of 69 arose out of a suit filed by Mohan Lal for specific performance of the sale.

5. On the pleadings of the parties, the following issues were struck:—

1. Whether the suit is not maintainable because of the misjoinder of causes of action? OPD

2. Whether the suit is not maintainable as the description of the suit property given by the plaintiff is insufficient? OPD

3. Whether the defendant and his son S. Balwant Singh formed a Hindu joint family. Whether the suit property with regard to which agreements were executed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff on 11th

July and 18th July 1961 was ancestral and joint qua his son? OPD

4. Whether the agreements dated 11th July and 18th July 1961, were got executed by practising fraud? OPD

5. Whether the facts given in the agreements are incorrect, if so, with what effect? OPD

6. In case issue 3 is proved, whether the agreed sale was made for legal necessity? OPD

7. Whether the market value of the suit property is more than what has been agreed upon by the parties and as such the suit for specific performance cannot be decreed? OPD

8. Relief, OPP

Additional issue

Whether the findings recorded in the civil suit S. Balwant Singh v. Mohan Lal and others amounts to res judicata in the present case? OPD

6. The learned Judge after a careful consideration of the entire evidence and circumstances before him decided issues Nos. 1 to 4 against the defendant in the suit brought by Mohan Lal and against the plaintiff in the suit brought by Balwant Singh.

7. We have gone through the judgment of the court below and we do not see any reason to differ from the findings arrived at by the learned Judge. In fact the learned counsel for the appellant has not at all challenged the findings of the court below on the question of fraud, and has accepted the position that there is no evidence worth the name to prove that the agreements executed by Harnam Singh in favour of Mohan Lal were obtained by fraud. In these circumstances this issue was rightly decided against Harnam Singh and Balwant Singh and in favour of Mohan Lal.

8. The only point canvassed before us was regarding the question of legal necessity. The learned counsel for the appellant submitted that the learned District Judge had found very clearly that there was no legal necessity at all justifying the sale and on this ground alone the suit of Mohan Lal for specific performance of the contract of sale ought to have been dismissed and the suit filed by Balwant Singh ought to have been decreed. It is true that the learned District Judge has given a finding on this point in favour of the appellant, but on the findings given by the learned District Judge the question of legal necessity does not arise at all.

9. The main question that fell for determination in the suits was whether or not the property in question was a joint family property either in the hands of Harnam Singh or in the hands of Balwant Singh. Mr. Thakur conceded that it may be taken for granted that the property in dispute originally belonged to Ishwar Das and although Ishwar Das was joint with his brother Kirpal Singh, the properties in suit were the self-acquired properties of Ishwar

Das. There is also cogent evidence on record to prove this fact. Ishwar Das executed a will in favour of his mother Mst. Malan in respect of the properties in suit and Mst. Malan bequeathed this property in favour of Harnam Singh, by a will dated 19-1-2003 (Bikrami). It has thus been established from evidence that Harnam Singh got the property by virtue of a will from Mst. Malan his grandmother.

10. It was, however, contended by Mr. Thakur that the bequest by Mst. Malan who had a limited interest would not confer an absolute estate on the legatee Harnam Singh and it should be presumed that Mst. Malan intended to convey a joint family interest to Harnam Singh. We are, however, unable to agree with this argument. There is no presumption that a bequest made to any person carries a limited interest unless the intention of the testator is made clear by express words showing the nature of the interest bequeathed. So far as the first will executed by Ishwar Das in favour of his mother is concerned, it is not disputed that the bequest was an unconditional and an unlimited one and conferred an absolute estate on Mst. Malan. It was, however, faintly suggested that since Mst. Malan was a woman she could have got only a limited interest, even if there is no direction in the will to this effect. This legal position has now been settled by the Supreme Court in two decisions and it has been held that no such presumption can be drawn on this account.

11. In Ram Gopal v. Nand Lal, AIR 1951 SC 139 at p. 141, their Lordships of the Supreme Court observed as follows:

"It may be taken to be quite settled that there is no warrant for the proposition of law that when a grant of an immovable property is made to a Hindu female, she does not get an absolute or alienable interest in such property, unless such power is expressly conferred upon her. The reasoning adopted by Mitter, J., of the Calcutta H. C. in (1875) 24 WR 395 which was accepted and approved of by the Judicial Committee in a number of decisions, seems to me to be unassailable".

 "This is the general principle of law which is recognised and embodied in Section 8, T. P. Act and unless it is shown that under Hindu Law a gift to a female means a limited gift or carries with it the restrictions or disabilities similar to those that exist in a widow's estate there is no justification for departing from this principle. There is certainly no such provision in Hindu Law and no text could be supplied in support of the same".

To the same effect is a later decision of the Supreme Court in Arunachala v. Muruganatha, AIR 1953 SC 495, where it was held that a Mitakshara father had complete powers of disposition of his self-acquired property and if he made any deed of gift in favour of his son or some other relation there would be no presumption that the bequest was to confer the nature of a joint family property so that the property bequeathed became ancestral in the hands of the legatee unless there were express words to indicate the same.

12. In Venkata Rama v. Rajyalakshmi, AIR 1960 Andh Pra 509 it was observed:—

"It is now well settled that a gift or bequest to a woman should be construed in the same spirit as a gift in favour of a male".

13. It is therefore clear that a bequest by a male to a female would have to be construed in the same spirit as a bequest by a male to another male. It is true that at the time when Mst. Malan bequeathed the property to Harnam Singh, Harnam Singh was joint with his son, Balwant Singh, but that by itself would not show that Mst. Malan intended to treat the property as a joint family property. We have gone through the contents of the will and it has been mentioned in express terms that Harnam Singh was to get an absolute estate in the properties bequeathed. The words (Words in Urdu have been transliterated in English — Ed.) Meri wafat ke baad do makanat mazdoor wo deeger jaedad khavadari her kism ka wahed malik Sardar Harnam Singh mazkoraah pota mazhara hoga deeger kisi ka koyee taalug wasta na hoga clearly indicate that Mst Malan intended to convey an absolute estate to Harnam Singh in whose hands after her death the property would be self-acquired property of Harnam Singh. This being the position, the father Harnam Singh was fully competent to dispose of his self-acquired property as he liked and the question of legal necessity did not arise.

14. For these reasons, the first contention put forward by the appellant is overruled.

15. Secondly it was argued that there is some evidence to show that Harnam Singh after having acquired the property from his grandfather threw it into the joint stock and treated it as joint family property. The learned District Judge has gone into this question and has given a finding against the appellant. Furthermore, no such case appears to have been made out by the plaintiffs in their plaint. The question as to whether a self-acquired property was thrown into the joint stock and treated as a joint family property is essentially a question of fact and must be proved.

On the other hand the learned Judge has pointed out that there is overwhelming evidence to show that Harnam Singh never treated this property as a joint family property. One Karam Chand had obtained a decree against Mst. Buban, a concubine of Ishwar Dass and got the entire suit property attached. This was some time in 2005. Harnam Singh filed a claim under Order 21, Rule 58 of the Civil P. C. and averred that he was the sole owner of the property which was therefore not attachable. The property was therefore released. Thus Harnam Singh himself clearly stated that the property was his self-acquired property and if he had any intention to treat it as a joint family property he would have said so.

The learned Judge has pointed out that in the agreement to sell by Harnam Singh there is a clear statement by him that he was the sole and exclusive owner of the suit properties. It is common ground that at the time when the contract of sale was executed, Balwant Singh was alive and was even made to sign the contract of sale as a witness. In these circumstances the declaration of Harnam Singh in the agreement that the property was his sole property becomes both important and binding on his son Balwant Singh. For these reasons the learned District Judge was fully justified in holding that there was no legal evidence to show that the property in suit was treated as a joint family property by Harnam Singh by throwing it into the joint stock. Thus both the contentions raised by the appellant fail. No other point was raised before us. The appeal fails and is dismissed, but without any order as to costs.

JALAL-UD-DIN, J.: 10. I have had the benefit of perusing the judgment prepared by my Lord, the Chief Justice, and fully agree with the observations recorded therein. I agree with the conclusions arrived at by him and have nothing further to add.

Appeal dismissed.

Dr. Ashok Singh, Petitioner v. Chief Secretary Jammu and Kashmir Govt. and others, Respondents.

Writ Petn. No. 97 of 1969, D/- 14-5-1970.

(A) Constitution of Jammu and Kashmir, Section 103 — Wrongful termination of service — Existence of right to claim damages — Does not deprive the person to have a declaration that termination was unlawful — In appropriate cases court may order that he should be treated as lawfully in service. AIR 1964 SC 1680, Rel. on — (Constitution of India (J & K) Art. 32 (2-A)).

(Para 9)

(B) Constitution of Jammu and Kashmir, Section 45 — Order terminating service issued for and on behalf of Governor — Order signed by Secretary to Government — It is, by virtue of R. 13 of Jammu and Kashmir Government Business rules to be deemed to have been properly authenticated — Its validity cannot be questioned. AIR

(C) Constitution of Jammu and Kashmir, Section 126 — Contract authorising Government to terminate service without assigning any reasons by giving three months' notice — Order not mentioning that service to stand terminated at expiry of three months from its receipt — No benefits accrued to servant nor taken away nor aspersion cast on him. Order cannot be said to have been passed by way of penalty — Incumbent is not entitled to protection of S. 126. Case law discussed.

(D) Civil Services — Jammu and Kashmir Civil Services (Temporary Service) Rules (1961) R. 3 — Status of quasi permanent Government servant — Essentials.

To acquire the status of quasi permanent Government servant, it is necessary that a person should only have not continued in service for more than three years, but also he should have entered Government service within the prescribed age limit and a declaration regarding his suitability in respect of his age, qualification, work and character for employment in quasi permanent capacity should also have been issued. AIR 1964 SC 1854 & AIR 1970 SC 537, Rel. on.

ORDER:— Dr. Ashok Singh, a citizen of India and a resident of Banda, Uttar Pradesh, who was employed as Deputy Director in the Department of Geology and Mining has moved this Court under Article 32 (2-A) of the Constitution of India as applied to the State of Jammu and Kashmir and Section 103 of the Constitution of the State for a writ in the nature of Mandamus directing respondents Nos. 1 to 4 to withdraw and/or cancel and/or forbear from giving effect to the order dated 2nd May, 1969, terminating his services and to allow him to continue as Deputy Director, Geology and Mining.

2. The case of the petitioner is that after obtaining M. Sc. degree in Geology from the Benares Hindu University in 1953 he underwent an advanced course in Geology and Mining and obtained a doctorate from Clausthal Mining Academy, West Germany, and returned to India in 1958, that he was appointed as Economic Geologist in National Council of Applied Economic Research in November, 1958 and continued as such till 17th April, 1961, when on the recommendation of the Government of India, Ministry of Mining and Fuel, he was taken as Deputy Director in the Department of Geology and Mining of the State vide Government Order No. 126/MNG/61 of the even date, that the terms of his appointment were incorporated in the agreement dated 11th April, 1961, entered into between him and the Government of Jammu and Kashmir, that the said agreement which was to endure for three years expired on 21st April, 1964, that on the expiry of the said agreement the Government of Jammu and Kashmir did not enter into any further agreement with him but allowed him to carry on work treating him as a regular temporary officer as envisaged by Order No. 35-MNG/65 dated 17th February, 1965, according to which all gazetted and non-gazetted technicians employed in the department through the Public Service Commission were brought on the regular temporary basis from the date of their appointment, that the petitioner continued to work uninterruptedly till the 9th July, 1966, when he was selected by the Government of India and sent by the State Government on deputation to France to qualify further in higher research and technique in the field of bauxite and bentonite deposits of Jammu Province, that while recommending his application for foreign training the Government of Jammu and Kashmir did not take any objection to his i.e., the petitioner's describing himself as "regular temporary" in the questionnaire and obtained an undertaking from him to serve the State for three years after completion of the training, that he returned from France after successfully completing the training and in terms of the undertaking given by him joined the service of the State Government on 3rd October, 1967, that though the deputation was to be treated as one under Government Order No. 351 of 1967 dated 6th June, 1967 read with clause 5 of the agreement he was not paid pay and dues for 21 months including the period of his foreign training, that the representation made by him in that behalf did not bear any fruit and ultimately the Government pressurised him to sign a fresh agreement, that as there was no service agreement since 21st April, 1964, when his first agreement expired and he was considered as 'regular temporary' in the State employment he lodged a protest against the attitude of the State Government trying to change his service conditions but was told that the said agreement was only a formality meant to meet an audit objection and to secure the release of his salary which had been withheld by the Accountant General, that the agreement which was thus signed by him in good faith on 13th June, 1968, was illegally given retrospective effect from 21st April, 1967 that differences cropped up between him and respondent No. 3 as he pointed out some "grave" flaws in the plans and proposals submitted by the said respondent which in his (i.e., petitioner's) opinion were bound to cause huge loss to the State Government, that immediately thereafter the said respondent vide his letter No. PA/DGM/491-492 dated 7th March, 1969, ordered him to hand over the charge of the files and records to Shri R. L. Kaul, a very junior hand, which he complied with, that the said order of the respondent was illegal, ultra vires and mala fide and in spite of several applications and reminders a copy of the same was not supplied to him, that the State Government gave him notice No. 144/MNG/61/ii dated 2nd May, 1969, (terminating his services under clause 3 (4) of the agreement of service) which was received by him on 12th May, 1969, and that he submitted his reply to the notice but the same was not acknowledged.

3. It is contended by the petitioner that the aforesaid order terminating his contract of service is invalid having been passed against him by way of penalty on account of his pointing out certain flaws and fallacies in the proposals and plans submitted by the respondent No. 3 which was evident from the correspondence forming Annexure "E" to the petition and the warning given to him for the alleged direct representation to the Government in regard to the revision of his grade and pay, that the petitioner being on regular temporary basis by virtue of Government order No. 35 MNG dated 17th February, 1965, his services could not be terminated by invoking the terms of the contract which had ceased to apply to him by virtue of the aforesaid order, that his service could also not be terminated as his regular temporary status was equivalent to quasi permanent status and he had put in more than three years' service in the normal budget scheme of the Directorate of Geology and Mining as opposed to planned budget scheme of the said directorate that his services could not have been terminated except in accordance with Rule 6 of the Jammu and Kashmir Civil Services (Temporary Service) Rules, 1961 that in any event the contract of his service had to be read along with the bond (which was got from him at the time of his deputation for foreign training) and his services could not be terminated before the 4th October, 1970, that he has been discriminated against and his fundamental rights under Articles 14 and 16 have been violated as according to the Government order all persons on contract service had been made "regular temporary", and that the impugned order being in essence an order of dismissal or removal from service within the meaning of R. 11 of the Central Civil Services Classification, Control, and Appeal Rules, is illegal, unconstitutional and contrary to the principles of natural justice as it has been passed without following the procedure set forth in the Central Service Regulations and without giving him an opportunity as envisaged by Article 311 of the Constitution of India.

4. The petition has been resisted by the respondents inter alia on the ground that the petitioner was employed on contractual basis, that after the expiry of the initial period of three years specified in the agreement dated 11th April, 1961, the petitioner's services were extended for another term of three years vide Government Order No. 44/MNG/67 dated 18th March, 1964 on the same terms and conditions on which he was originally appointed under Government Order No. 126/MNG/61 dated 17th April, 1961, that the agreement dated 13th June, 1963, was executed by the petitioner not under any duress or misrepresentation or merely as a procedural formality but of his own free will pursuant to Government Order No. 425/MNG 63 dated 14th May, 1963, and as such was perfectly valid and binding upon him and it was not open to him to challenge the same after an inordinate delay of one year and specially in a writ petition, that the petitioner cannot be deemed to be a regular temporary officer and has never been treated as such, that Order No. 35/Mining 65 dated 17th February, 1965, did not apply to the petitioner nor was he entitled to the benefit thereof as he was appointed directly on contractual basis and not on the recommendation or advice of the Public Service Commission, that the petitioner has all along been serving on contractual basis and the terms and conditions of his service were governed by the agreement dated 13th June, 1963, that the termination of the petitioner's service which was validly effected according to the contract did not amount to imposition of penalty or punishment, that the impugned order was neither illegal nor mala fide nor was it violative of Article 14 or 16 of the Constitution of India or Section 126 of the State Constitution corresponding to Article 311 of the Constitution of India and was passed by the competent authority in a proper manner and since the petitioner did not file any review application or avail of the other remedy available to him, the petition was not maintainable.

5. Respondent No. 3 has also in the course of a separate affidavit filed by him supported the stand of the State Government and had denied the allegations and imputations of mala fides levelled against him.

6. At the hearing of the petition, Mr. A. P. Chatterjee appearing on behalf of the petitioner has urged the following points:—

- (i) That the termination order is bad because it is not made by the Governor of Jammu and Kashmir.
- (ii) That the termination is in essence by way of penalty and has resulted in deprivation of the benefits that had accrued to the petitioner and as such Section 126 of the State Constitution corresponding to Article 311 of the Constitution of India was applicable to the present case.
- (iii) That in any event the petitioner had acquired a permanent or quasi permanent right to the post of the Deputy Director Geology and Mining.
- (iv) That the contract is to be read along with the bond executed by the petitioner at the time of his deputation to France for higher training in the field of Baudite and Bentonite deposits and the petitioner had a right to serve the Government for three years which has been taken away.

Mr. Raina appearing on behalf of the respondents has on the other hand contended that since contract relating to service cannot be specifically enforced by means of a suit in view of Section 21 (b) of the Specific Relief Act, the petition is not maintainable and the petitioner could at best have sued for damages that the impugned order is in conformity with the requirements of Section 45 of the Constitution of the State and Rules 12 and 13 of the Jammu and Kashmir Government Business Rules that the petitioner's service was governed by the terms and conditions contained in the agreement dated 13th June, 1968, voluntarily executed by him and his service was validly terminated according to the agreement, that the impugned order was not passed by way of penalty and does not amount to dismissal or removal from service as conceived by Section 126 of the Constitution of the State or Rule 30 of the Jammu and Kashmir Civil Services Classification, Control and Appeal Rules, that the petitioner was not employed on regular temporary basis and had not acquired a permanent or quasi permanent right to the post of the Deputy Director, Geology and Mining.

7. Before dealing with the various contentions raised by Mr. Chatterjee, let me dispose of the first objection raised by Mr. Raina that since the relief claimed by the petitioner cannot be given even in a suit in view of the restriction contained in Section 21 (b) of the Specific Relief Act, the remedy, if any, of the petitioner lay in a suit for damages for wrongful termination of employment and not in a petition for a writ declaring the termination of employment unlawful and a consequential order for restoration to service. A similar contention raised in S. R. Tewari v. Dist. Board, Agra, AIR 1964 SC 1680 was repelled by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in the following words:—

"Under the common law the Court will not ordinarily force an employer to retain the services of an employee whom he no longer wishes to employ. But this rule is subject to certain well recognized exceptions. It is open to the Court in an appropriate case to declare that a public servant who is dismissed from service in contravention of Article 311 continues to remain in service even though by so doing the State is in effect forced to continue to employ the servant whom it does not desire to employ".

8. It was further pointed out by their Lordships in that ruling that the powers of a statutory body are always subject to the Statute which has constituted it, and must be exercised consistently with the Statute, and the Courts have, in appropriate cases, the power to declare an action of the body illegal or ultra vires even if the action relates to determination of employment of a servant.

9. In view of the above unequivocal enunciation of law, I find myself unable to accede to the contention of Mr. Raina and hold that the fact that a person may have a right to claim damages for wrongful termination of his service does not deprive him of his right to have a declaration that his service was unlawfully terminated and in an appropriate case the Court may command that the person be treated as lawfully in service.

10. Let me now proceed to consider each one of the grounds on which the impugned order has been challenged on behalf of the petitioner.

11. Regarding the first contention raised by Mr. Chatterjee I may at once observe that there is no substance in it. A reference to the agreement dated 13th June, 1968 between the petitioner and the Governor of the State would show that it was executed on behalf of the Governor by the Secretary to Government, Industries and Commerce Department, and Clause 3 (4) thereof empowered the State Government or their authorised officer to give three calendar months' notice in writing to the petitioner for terminating his service. Now under Section 45 (1) of the Constitution of Jammu and Kashmir all executive action of the Government is required to be taken in the name of the Governor or of the Government of Jammu and Kashmir. Sub-section (2) of that section provides that orders and other instruments made and executed in the name of the Governor or the Government of Jammu and Kashmir shall be authenticated in such manner as may be specified in the Rules to be made by the Governor and the validity of an order or instrument which is so authenticated shall not be called in question on the ground that it is not an order or instrument made or executed by the Governor or as the case may be by the Government of Jammu and Kashmir. According to Rule 13 of the Rules of Business framed under Section 43 and sub-section (2) of Section 45 of the Constitution of Jammu and Kashmir, every order or instrument of the Government of the State is to be signed either by the Secretary, or an Additional Secretary, a Joint Secretary, an Additional Joint Secretary, a Deputy Secretary or an Under-Secretary to the Government or such other officer as may be specially empowered in that behalf and such signature is to be deemed to be proper authentication of such order or instrument.

12. In the present case the impugned order has been signed by Shri G. M. Mir Secretary to Government, Industries and Commerce Department. It ex facie shows that it was issued for and on behalf of the Governor of the State. Having been so signed and issued, it has according to Rule 13 of the Jammu and Kashmir Government Business Rules to be deemed to have been properly authenticated and its validity cannot, in my opinion, be questioned.

13. In State of Bombay v. Purushottam Jog Naik, 1952 SCR 674 = AIR 1952 SC 317, where the order under consideration was expressed to be made in the name of the Governor because of its saying "by order of the Governor", their Lordships of the Supreme Court observed that the Constitution does not require a magic incantation which can only be expressed in a set formula of words, and what the Court has to see is whether the substance of the requirements is there.

14. Again in P. Joseph John v. State of Travancore Cochin 1955 SCR 1011 = AIR 1955 SC 160, the Supreme Court held that the notice signed by the Chief Secretary of the State and expressed to be on behalf of the Government, giving opportunity to the petitioner to show cause against the action proposed to be taken against him substantially complied with the provisions of Article 166 of the Constitution of India.

15. In State of Bihar v. Rani Sonabati Kumari, AIR 1961 SC 221, where an order of the Government namely a notification under Section 3 (1) Bihar Land Reforms Act, was expressed to be made "in the name of the Governor" and was authenticated by the Additional Secretary to Government as prescribed by Article 166 (2) of the Constitution of India the Supreme Court observed that the validity of the order or instrument could not be called in question on the ground that it was not an order or instrument made or executed by the Governor.

16. Again in Mohamad Yakub v. State of Jammu and Kashmir, AIR 1968 SC 765, where the order in question was in the form required by Section 45 of the Constitution of Jammu and Kashmir their Lordships of the Supreme Court held that the presumption must be made that the order was validly passed unless the petitioners could show that it was not passed as required by law.

17. The rulings namely 1959 SCR 1424 = (AIR 1959 SC 65), AIR 1963 SC 395, and AIR 1964 Cal 265, cited by the learned counsel for the petitioner in support of his contention are all distinguishable.

18. In Ghaiomall and Sons v. The State of Delhi, 1959 SCR 1424 = (AIR 1959 SC 65) the order in question did not purport to be made in the name of the Chief Commissioner and could not therefore be treated as a properly authenticated order to which the presumption raised by Article 166 of the Constitution of India could validly attach. Further in that case the letter under consideration was only a communication of the sanction and could not be equated with the sanction. Moreover in that case the records produced before the Supreme Court revealed that the application for grant of license for vending liquor had never been placed before the Chief Commissioner, nor any order granting the said licence was ever made by him.

19. In Bachhittar Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1963 SC 397, it was merely emphasized that before something amounts to an order of the State Government, two things are necessary viz. the order has to be expressed in the name of the Governor as required by Clause (1) of Article 166 of the Constitution of India and then it has to be communicated.

20. In the last case namely Ram Chandra v. Secy. to Govt. of West Bengal, AIR 1964 Cal 265 in which an inter-departmental letter issued by the Under-Secretary to the Government without mentioning the name of the Governor at all was sought to be utilized as a valid order, it was observed that an order of the Governor in view of Art. 166 (1) of the Constitution of India can be valid only if it is expressed in the name of the Governor, by the use of such words as "by order of the Governor" and not being so expressed it could not be treated as valid.

21. The impugned order satisfies, as already indicated, the requirements of Sec. 45 of the Constitution of Jammu and Kashmir and Rule 13 of the Jammu and Kashmir Government Business Rules. The first contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner is, therefore, rejected.

22. I am also unable to appreciate the second ground of attack levelled by Mr. Chatterjee. The impugned order does not cast any stigma on the petitioner and does not terminate his service forthwith but says that his service would stand terminated at the expiry of three months from its receipt by him. The order or notice also does not say that the petitioner will not be entitled to the salary for the period of three months or any other allowance which he might have earned..... As the impugned order or notice which was admittedly received by the petitioner on 12th May, 1969, does not take away any of the benefits which had accrued to the petitioner and does not cast any aspersion on him the same cannot be said to be by way of penalty. Clause 3 (4) of the petitioner's contract of service dated 13th June, 1968, expressly authorised the Government to terminate the petitioner's service giving him three months' notice without cause assigned. In these circumstances the petitioner was not entitled to the protection of Section 126 of the Constitution of Jammu and Kashmir.

23. In Ram Gopal Chaturvedi v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1970 SC 153, where the impugned order on the face of it did not cast any stigma on the appellant's character or integrity nor did it visit him with any evil consequences nor did it deprive him of any vested right to any office, their Lordships of the Supreme Court held that it was not passed by way of punishment and provisions of Article 311 of the Constitution of India were not attracted.

24. Again in State of Nagaland v. G. Vasantha, AIR 1970 SC 537, where the services of the respondent had been terminated according to the terms of the contract of service and the order terminating the service was one simpliciter and not by way of punishment, it was held that Article 311 of the Constitution of India had no application.

25. In Satish Chandra Anand v. Union of India, AIR 1953 SC 250, where a civil servant who had been engaged on the basis of a special contract for a certain term, was, on the expiry of the term re-appointed by a further contract on temporary basis and was discharged from service after notice in accordance with the Government Rules which formed part of his contract, it was held that Article 311 of the Constitution of India had no application because there was neither a dismissal nor a removal from service nor a reduction in rank.

26. In Hartwell Prescott Singh v. Uttar Pradesh Govt., AIR 1957 SC 886, it was held:—

"In the case of a person employed in a temporary capacity on probation and whose services could according to the conditions of service contained in the service rules, be terminated by a month's notice if he failed to make sufficient use of his opportunities or to give satisfaction, the termination of his services according to the Rules does not amount to dismissal or removal from service within the meaning of the Article. In principle there can be no distinction between the termination of his services in accordance with the conditions of his service and the termination of the services of a person under the terms of a contract governing him."

In P. L. Dinghra v. Union of India, AIR 1958 SC 36, it was held that if the termination of service is founded on the right flowing from contract or the Service Rules then, prima facie, termination is not a punishment and carries with it no evil consequences and so Article 311 of the Constitution of India is not attracted.

27. In Ranendra Chandra v. Union of India, AIR 1963 SC 1552, where a termination of service in accordance with the terms in the letter of appointment was brought about during the probationary period without any notice and without any reasons being assigned, it was held that it did not amount to dismissal or removal and the Civil servant was not entitled to the protection of Article 311 (2) of the Constitution of India.

28. In State of Punjab v. Sukhraj Bahadur, AIR 1968 SC 1089, their Lordships of the Supreme Court after an exhaustive review of the case law on the matter observed:—

"On a conspectus of these cases, the following propositions are clear:—

(1) The services of a temporary servant or a probationer can be terminated under the rules of his employment and such termination without anything more would not attract the operation of Article 311 of the Constitution.

(2) The circumstances preceding or attendant on the order of termination of service have to be examined in each case, the motive behind it being immaterial.

(3) If the order visits the public servant with any evil consequences or casts an aspersion against his character or integrity it must be considered to be one by way of punishment, no matter whether he was a mere probationer or a temporary servant.

(4) An order of termination of service in exceptionable form preceded by an enquiry launched by the superior authorities only to ascertain whether the public servant should be retained in service, does not attract the operation of Article 311 of the Constitution.

(5) If there be a full-scale departmental enquiry envisaged by Article 311 i. e. an Enquiry Officer is appointed, a charge sheet submitted, explanation called for and considered any order of termination of service made thereafter will attract the operation of the said Article."

Keeping in view the principles laid down in the above noted authorities, I hold that as the employment of the petitioner was on condition that his service could be terminated without assigning any reasons by giving him three months' notice and it was terminated in accordance with this condition and not for any misconduct, the termination cannot be challenged as illegal or unconstitutional. The second ground of attack, therefore, fails.

29. I may also at this stage deal with another contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner to the effect that the impugned order is mala fide. In the absence of sufficient material on the record I find it difficult to accede to the contention. The mere fact that the petitioner might have pointed out certain flaws in the proposals and plans of respondent No. 3 is not enough to hold that the order issued over the signature of Shri G. M. Mir Secretary to Government, Commerce and Industries Department suffers from the taint of mala fides. That apart, it is also well settled that the termination of services of a temporary servant which in form and in substance is no more than his discharge effected under the terms of the contract or the relevant rule cannot in law be regarded as his dismissal because the appointing authority was actuated by the motive that the said servant did not deserve to be continued for some alleged misconduct.

30. The third contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner that the petitioner had acquired a permanent or quasi permanent right to the post of Deputy Director, Geology and Mining, is wholly devoid of substance. The petitioner was initially appointed on the said post for a period of three years by virtue of Government order No. 123-MNG-61 dated 17th April, 1961 and the terms and conditions of his service were incorporated in the agreement dated 11th April 1961. On the expiry of his specified term he was reappointed for another term of three years vide Government Order No. 44/MNG-67 dated 18th March, 1967 on the same terms and conditions on which he was initially appointed. Ultimately his services were continued on the terms contained in the agreement executed on 13th June, 1968, pursuant to Government Order No. 125-MNG of 1968 dated 14th May, 1968. In all these orders and agreements the words "regular temporary basis" have not at all been used. The petitioner was also not employed on permanent basis. Accordingly the question of his continuing in service after the period of probation or his being regarded as a permanent servant without an order of confirmation cannot also arise.

The petitioner cannot also take advantage of order No. 35-MNG-65 of 1965 dated 17th February, 1965. A plain reading of the order would show that it applied to those non-permanent residents who were selected on the advice of the Public Service Commission for technical posts under the Directorate of Geology and Mining. The petitioner admittedly not having been selected on the advice of the Public Service Commission but directly by the Government could not avail of the benefit of this order.

31. The transmission by the State Government to the Government of India of the petitioner's questionnaire in connection with his training in France in which he had described himself as regular-temporary is also of no avail to him. It is clearly mentioned in Note 2 of that questionnaire that it was only for the purpose of evaluation of the technical assistance programme and would not be used for any other purpose. The petitioner cannot, therefore, bank upon his own recitals in the questionnaire.

32. The Jammu and Kashmir Civil Services (Temporary Service) Rules, 1961, on which reliance is placed by the learned counsel for the petitioner have also no application to the present case. In the first place it is clearly provided in sub-rule (3) of Rule 1 of these rules that they shall not apply to Government servants engaged on contract. Moreover according to Rule 3 of the said Rules a Government servant can be treated to be in quasi-permanent service if he fulfils each one of the following conditions:—

(i) If he has been in continuous Government service for more than three years.

(ii) If the appointing authority being satisfied as to his suitability in respect of age, qualification, work and character for employment in a quasi-permanent capacity, has issued a declaration to that effect in accordance with such instructions as the Government may issue from time to time, and

(iii) If he has entered government service in temporary capacity at the time of his first appointment within the age limits prescribed for entry into permanent Government service. If this condition is not fulfilled a declaration can be issued under this rule only if the age bar is relaxed by the competent authority. Thus for a person to acquire the status of quasi-permanent government servant, it is necessary that he should not have only continued in Government Service for more than three years, but it is further necessary that he should have entered government service within the prescribed age limit and a declaration regarding his suitability in respect of his age, qualification, work and character for employment in quasi-permanent capacity, should also have been issued. As no such declaration is alleged to have been issued in respect of the petitioner, he cannot claim to be in quasi-permanent service. I am fortified in this view by the observations of their Lordships of the Supreme Court in Champaklal v. Union of India, AIR 1964 SC 1854 and AIR 1970 SC 537. The third contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner is also, therefore rejected.

33. The fourth contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner that the contract of service is to be read with the bond given by the petitioner on the eve of his training in France and the petitioner had a right to serve the State for a full period of three years commencing from 13th June, 1968, is also devoid of force. The agreement dated 13th June, 1968, which is later in date than the bond and contains the terms and conditions on which the petitioner was to continue in service does not support the submission made on behalf of the petitioner. On the other hand, it clearly authorised the State Government to terminate the services of the petitioner at any time by giving him three months' notice.

34. The agreement cannot also be held to be invalid on the ground of its being unilateral as urged by the petitioner. A reference to Clause 3 (4) of the agreement would show that it is not unilateral but bilateral. It also gave an option to the petitioner to leave the service of the Government by giving three months' notice.

35. All the grounds of attack made by Mr. Chatterjee, therefore, fail.

36. For the foregoing reasons, I find no merit in this petition which is accordingly dismissed but without any order as to costs.

Petition dismissed.

for Respondent.

JUDGMENT: This is an appeal against an order passed by Jalal-ud-din J. sitting singly exercising jurisdiction under Section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure read with Section 104 of the Constitution of Jammu and Kashmir.

2. Mr. Raina appearing for the respondent has raised a preliminary objection that the appeal is not maintainable. In support of his objection the learned counsel for the respondent has submitted that no appeal under the Letters Patent lies from an order made under the revisional jurisdiction exercised by a Single Judge of the High Court under Section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure or from an order made by him in exercise of his supervisory jurisdiction under Section 104 of the Constitution of Jammu and Kashmir. In our opinion the contention raised by Mr. Raina is well founded and must prevail.

3. A perusal of Section 104 clearly shows that the power of superintendence and control over the subordinate courts conferred on the High Court is merely in the nature of a supervisory jurisdiction. This Section corresponds to Article 227 of the Constitution of India as held in a Full Bench decision of this Court reported in AIR 1967 J. & K. 98 (FB). It has been consistently held in a number of cases that the jurisdiction conferred by this provision is not an original jurisdiction.

4. In Hudi Goshaoon v. Sudi Goshaoon, AIR 1962 Punj 467, it was observed:

"Article 227, which is for all practical purposes a revival of Section 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915, is not an Article which in terms provides for writs etc; in this respect it is distinguishable from Article 226 of the Constitution which alone provides for writs etc.

Proceedings under Article 227 are not original proceedings for orders passed in these proceedings are not even amenable to Letters Patent appeals, as has been held by this court in more cases than one." In Sukhendu Bikash Barua v. Hare Krishna De, AIR 1953 Cal 636, it was held:—

"The relevant expression in CL 15 of the Letters Patent excludes a judgment pronounced by a single Judge in exercise of the powers of revision or in exercise of the powers of superintendence under Article 227 of the Constitution." Again in re V. Tirupuliswamy Naidu, AIR 1955 Mad 287, it was held:—

"Whether the jurisdiction that was invoked fell under Civil P. C. Section 115 or Constitution Article 227, it was revisional jurisdiction and no appeal lay under the Letters Patent against the order of the Single Judge. The jurisdiction under Constitution Article 227 is revisional jurisdiction within the meaning of Letters Patent Cl. 15."

5. A perusal of the Letters Patent of this court would also show that no appeal is contemplated against an order of the present nature which is passed by a Single Judge. Clause 12 of the Letters Patent runs thus:—

"And we do further ordain that an appeal shall lie to the said High Court of Judicature from the judgment (not being a judgment passed in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction by a court subject to the superintendence of the said High Court, and not being an order made in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction, and not being a sentence or order passed or made in the exercise of the power of superintendence) of one Judge of the said High Court or one Judge of any Division court and that notwithstanding anything hereinbefore provided an appeal shall lie to the said High Court from a judgment of one judge of the said High Court or one Judge of any Division Court, consistently with the provisions of Civil P. C. made in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction in respect of a decree or order made in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction by a court subject to the superintendence of the said High Court where the judge who passed the judgment declares that the case is a fit one for appeal but that the right of appeal from other judgments of the judges of the said High Court or of such Division Court shall be to us, Our Heirs or successors and be heard by our Board of Judicial Advisers for report to us."

The above provision of the Letters Patent clearly excludes an appeal from an order made by a single judge of the court in exercise of his revisional jurisdiction, as also an appeal from a sentence or order passed or made by him in exercise of his power of superintendence. An order passed under S. 104 of the Constitution of Jammu and Kashmir is nothing but an order made in exercise of the supervisory jurisdiction conferred on the court by the Constitution. In these circumstances, Cl. 12 of the Letters Patent excludes appeals from such orders. The learned counsel for the appellant has not been able to cite any authority taking a contrary view. In these circumstances, we are satisfied that the present appeal is not maintainable and on this ground alone the appeal is liable to be dismissed.

6. For the foregoing reasons, the appeal is dismissed as not maintainable, but in the circumstances without any order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed,

MADHAVAN NAIR, J.— In these appeals preferred by kanam tenants governed by the Travancore-Cochin Kanam Tenancy Act, 1955, the only controversy is of the correctness of calculation of Jenmikarams payable by them to their jenmis under the Act. It has been ruled by Krishnamoorthy Iyer, J., in S. A. Nos. 1150 and 1151 of 1962 (Ker) and by Narayana Pillai, J., in S. A. Nos. 1533 and 1534 of 1965 (Ker) that neither land revenue, nor a remission allowed for natural vicissitudes, can be deducted in the calculation of 'michavaram' within the meaning of the abovesaid Act. Counsel for appellants here challenges the correctness of those dicta.

2. Jenmikaram is defined in the Act as the sum total of michavaram and fractional fee. The fractional fees fixed by the Court below are not disputed: the controversy here is only as to the correctness of michavarams found.

3. Michavaram is defined in Section 2 of the Act thus:

"'Michavaram' means the balance of money or produce or both payable periodically under the contract of tenancy to the jenmi after deducting from the pattam the interest due on the kanam amount and puramkadam, if any."

'Pattam' is also defined therein as meaning

"the jenmi's share as fixed by the contract of tenancy of the produce of the holding whether in money or in kind or both, but does not include renewal fee."

Obviously, 'pattam' is what has been stipulated as pattam in the document of tenancy; and 'michavaram' is such pattam minus the interest due on the kanartham (i.e., the kanam amount plus puramkadam, if any). Counsel for appellants urges that as the documents of tenancy oblige the tenants to pay land revenue and provide for reimbursement thereof by deduction of part of the pattam in terms of paddy, only the net amount after such deduction can be taken as the pattam for purposes of calculation of michavaram under the Act. We are afraid that this contention is not one of construction of the definition in the Act, but for an improvement thereof. Under the law of property, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, the liability to pay revenue is on the jenmi or landlord. When the contract of tenancy has fixed the pattam as so many para's of paddy and directed the tenant to pay the land revenue and for that to deduct so many para's of paddy out of the pattam payable, the jenmi is only honouring his liability to pay the revenue, constituting the tenant as his agent for its remittance and compensating him therefor. A significant change has been made in the law by the Act, the Travancore-Cochin Kanam Tenancy Act, 1955, which conferred ownership of the land on the kanam-tenant, and limited the jenmi's right to receipt of jenmikaram thereon. Section 16 (5) of the Act has provided that 'notwithstanding any usage or contract to the contrary, the kanam-tenant shall be liable to pay all Government and local taxes in respect of the land comprised in his holding whether existing at the time of the demise or imposed afterwards' and defined michavaram as pattam minus interest on kanartham. The contention that land revenue which is payable to the State by the tenant must also be deducted from the jenmi's dues or michavaram ignores the law in Section 16 (5) of the Act and cannot be accepted.

4. The contract of tenancy concerned in S. A. No. 574 of 1964 provides also a remission for natural vicissitudes ('Kedupizha'). Such vicissitudes cannot in the nature of things be regular; and if they were regular with the concerned land, rent (pattam) would have been fixed low and not a provision made for remission out of the rent. Disallowance thereof in the calculation of michavaram by the Courts below appears right. There is no evidence of any such vicissitude in recent years on the land in question, either.

5. In the result, we affirm the dicta in the aforesaid decisions and find no error in the calculation of jenmikarams made by the Courts below in these cases. The appeals fail and are hereby dismissed, with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

BALAKRISHNA ERADI, J.

(On difference of opinion between M. U. Isaac and P. Narayana Pillai JJ.)

Kunjayamma Kartaiyayani Amma, Appellant v. Kunchali Karthiyayani Madakkavil, Veedu and others, Respondents.

A. S. Nos. 690, 691 and 692 of 1963 and 23 of 1964 and S. A. No. 1170 of 1964, D/- 31-7-1969.

(A) Travancore-Cochin High Court Act (5 of 1125), Section 23 — Finality as regards matter on which judges of Division Bench are in agreement — Difference as to reasons not material.

When the Judges constituting the Division Bench have agreed as to the ultimate decree to be passed, their decision is declared by Section 23 to be final and hence any difference of opinion between them as to the reasons on which such conclusion should properly be based is of no consequence.

(Para 11)

(B) Transfer of Property Act (1882). Section 92 — Equitable doctrine of subrogation — Applicability — Mortgage amount wiped off by adjustment against arrears of michavaram — Plaintiff-mortgagor not required to make any payment to mortgagee — Doctrine does not apply — Plaintiff-mortgagor gets no right to be reimbursed by other co-mortgagors.

The equitable doctrine of subrogation applies to cases in India not covered by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. But unless there has been a payment by a party in discharge of the obligation of another and consequently a right to reimbursement has accrued to him, there cannot be any scope at all for his invoking the equitable principle of subrogation. Where the suit for possession is instituted and the decree is passed on the basis that the entire mortgage amount had become wiped off by adjustment against arrears of michavaram it is not a case where the plaintiff-mortgagor had made any payment in discharge of the proportionate mortgage liability of other mortgagors and thereby acquired a right of reimbursement. The equitable doctrine of subrogation cannot apply to such a case. AIR 1953 SC 1, Rel. on. (Paras 13, 14)

(C) Transfer of Property Act (1882), Section 60 — Right of redemption — Mortgagee in possession to pay michavaram — Non-payment — Mortgage debt wiped off — Suit by mortgagor is not suit for redemption.

Under terms of mortgage, mortgagee put in possession with stipulation that he was to pay certain amount by way of michavaram and appropriate balance towards interest on mortgage amount — Held, when the stipulated michavaram remained unpaid, the mortgagee must be taken to have had in his hands at the end of each year an equivalent amount which really represented the surplus profits realised from the property — Interest due under the mortgage having been already realised by him by appropriation of the balance profits, the mortgagee was bound in law to apply the portion of the profits represented by the unpaid michavaram in reduction of the principal amount of the mortgage debt — Mortgage-debt becoming completely wiped off by adjustment against arrears of michavaram — Subsequent suit by mortgagor against mortgagee could not be regarded as one for redemption there being no subsisting mortgage on date of institution of such suit — AIR 1943 Bom 191 held no longer good law in view of AIR 1963 SC 1041. (Paras 17, 20)

(D) Travancore Limitation Act (1100 ME), Article 136 — Applicability — Mortgage amount wiped off by adjustment against arrears of michavaram in the hands of mortgagee — Redeeming co-mortgagor is not subrogated to the position of mortgagee — Suit by some of the co-mortgagors claiming recovery of their share in the suit property in such a case from redeeming co-mortgagor cannot be regarded as suit for redemption — Article 136 does not apply. (Para 21)

(E) Limitation Act (1908), Article 144 — Suit for possession against redeeming co-mortgagor barred by limitation — Plaintiffs however claiming to be in possession of a house on a portion of suit property — If the plaintiffs succeed in establishing that they were actually in possession of the house as on the date of the institution of the suit, they are entitled to the relief of injunction notwithstanding that their suit for recovery of possession of the remaining portion of the suit property is barred. (Para 22)

BALAKRISHNA ERADI, J. (agreeing with Isaac, J. (31-7-69)): These appeals which raise common questions and were heard together by a Division Bench consisting of my learned brothers Isaac and Naravana Pillai, JJ. have come up before me on a reference by my Lord the Chief Justice under Section 23 of the Travancore-Cochin High Court Act, 1125 (Act V of 1125) in view of the different opinions expressed in the separate judgments delivered by the two learned Judges constituting the Division Bench. Under the terms of Section referred to above the scope of enquiry before me is limited to a consideration of those matters on which the learned Judges have disagreed.

2. A. S. 690 of 1963 arises out of O. S. 83 of 1120 of the Munsiff's Court, Quilon and the appellant before this Court is the plaintiff. A. S. 691 of 1963 arises out of O. S. 1096 of 1120 of the Munsiff's Court, Quilon and the second plaintiff is the appellant. A. S. 692 of 1963 arises out of O. S. 710 of 1121 on the file of the Munsiff's Court, Quilon and the legal representative of the original plaintiff is the appellant. A. S. 23 of 1964 arises out of O. S. 79 of 1120 of the Munsiff's Court Quilon and here also the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff is the appellant. S. A. 1170 of 1964 arises out of O. S. 681 of 1957 on the file of the Munsiff's Court, Quilon and the plaintiffs are the appellants.

3. The common subject-matter of all these appeals is a plot of land 42 cents in extent situated in Quilon. Admittedly, this property belonged to one Kurumpa. She had two sons Kesavan and Narayanan and four daughters Kunchekki, Lakshmi, Parvathi and Nangeli. The parties belong to the Kammala community and are admittedly governed by Hindu Law as modified by custom. On the 6th Edavam, 1062 a mortgage was executed as per Ext. C by Kesavan, Narayanan, Kunchekki and Nangeli jointly along with Appili, daughter of Lakshmi who was by then dead, and Unichekki, daughter of Parvathi who was also deceased by that time. The mortgagee was one Muhammed Kunju and the amount borrowed was 1100 fs. The mortgage was for a term of 5 years and there was a stipulation for an annual payment of 40 fs. only by way of miehavaram. On 20-9-1065 four udampadies were executed by Kesavam as per Exts. B, D and E and Ext. P1 (marked in O. S. 681 of 1957 only) in favour of Kunchekki, Appili, Unichekki and Nangeli respectively, giving to each of them a 1/6th share in the equity of redemption of the property covered by Ext. C reciting that these documents were being executed in implementation of a partition arrangement which had been already entered into between the parties. The remaining 2/6th share in the equity of redemption was reserved for Kesavan and Narayanan.

4. In 1116 Kesavan's son Kunju Pillai and his children instituted a suit O. S. 639 of 1116 on the file of the Munsiff's Court, Quilon for recovery of possession of the suit property from the possession of the mortgagee contending that the mortgage debt had become discharged by set off against large arrears of miehavaram due from the mortgagee, that in spite of demand having been made on the mortgagee to surrender possession of the property along with the balance amount which was due to the mortgagor by way of arrears of miehavaram after effecting a set off of the mortgage amount the mortgagee had not surrendered possession of the property and that therefore the plaintiff should be given a decree for recovery of possession of the property with arrears of miehavaram amounting to 846 fs.

That suit was decreed as per Ext. H. judgment dated 29-12-1118 upholding the claim of the plaintiffs that the entire mortgage amount had become wiped out by set off against the arrears of miehavaram. The Court found that the contention of the plaintiffs that 846 fs. remained payable by the mortgagee by way of arrears of miehavaram even after adjustment of the entire mortgage debt was true, but, nevertheless, held that under the law of limitation the plaintiffs could legally recover such arrears only for a period of six years immediately preceding the suit. Accordingly the plaintiffs were granted a decree for recovery of 240 fs. from the assets of the defendants by way of arrears of miehavaram and in addition future mesne profits from the date of suit at the rate of Rs. 25 per year. Kunju Pillai had died during the pendency of the aforesaid suit. His widow and sons obtained delivery of possession of the property in execution of the above decree on 30-12-1119.

5. The suits which have given rise to these appeals have been instituted by the legal heirs of the other five children of Kurumpa, namely Narayanan, Kunchekki, Lakshmi, Parvathi and Nangeli claiming to recover the 1/6th share belonging to each of the five branches on the basis of the udampadies Exts. B, D, E and P1 executed by Kesavan. O. S. 79 of 1120 which has given rise to A. S. 23 of 1964 is the suit by Narayanan's son for recovery of his half share in the 2/6th part which had been jointly set apart for Kesavan and Narayanan after making the four dispositions as per Exts. B, D, E and Ext. P1. O. S. 83 of 1120, O. S. 1096 of 1120 and O. S. 710 of 1121 have been instituted by the respective representatives of the branches of Parvathi, Lakshmi and Kunchekki each claiming an 1/6th share on the strength of the udampadies Exts. E, D and B respectively. In all these suits the widow and children of Kunju Pillai (son of Kesavan) have been impleaded as defendants 1 to 4 and the relief of recovery of possession has been claimed against them. O. S. 681 of 1957 out of which S. A. 1170 of 1964 has arisen is a similar suit filed by the children of Nangeli claiming recovery of 1/6th share of the property from the same defendants.

6. O. S. Nos. 79 of 1120, 83 of 1120, 1096 of 1120 and 710 of 1121 were tried jointly. The common contentions taken by the defendants were that the udampadies relied on by the plaintiffs had not taken effect and that the plaintiffs had not derived any valid right to the plaint property under the documents evidenced by Exts. B, D and E, that in any event the defendants having redeemed the mortgage evidenced by Ext. C had been subrogated to the position of the mortgagee under that document and that the present suits which have been instituted beyond the period of 50 years after the expiry of the term fixed in Ext. C are barred by limitation. The trial court rejected these contentions of the defendants and decreed the suits as prayed for.

On appeal therefrom by the defendants, the Subordinate Judge set aside the decision of the trial court and allowed the appeals holding that the suits were barred under Article 136 of the Travancore Limitation Act, 1100. Second appeals were filed before this court by the plaintiffs in all the four suits challenging the correctness of the Subordinate Judge's decision. Velu Pillai, J. by judgment dated 28-8-1963 dismissed the second appeals upholding the view taken by the Subordinate Judge that the suits were barred by time under Article 136 of the Travancore Limitation Act. The learned Judge, however, granted the prayer of the appellants for leave to file appeals before a Division Bench. A. S. Nos. 690 to 692 of 1963 and A. S. No. 23 of 1964 have accordingly been preferred by the respective plaintiffs challenging the aforesaid decision of Velu Pillai, J.

7. When O. S. 681 of 1957 was instituted by the representatives of Nangeli the appeals filed by the defendants before the Subordinate Judge's Court challenging the decision of the Munsiff's Court in the earlier suits were pending. But by the time this suit was taken up for hearing, the Subordinate Judge had disposed of those appeals upholding the defendants' contention that the suits were barred under Article 136 of the Travancore Limitation Act. In the light of that decision, the Munsiff dismissed this suit also on the ground that it was barred by limitation under Article 136 of the Limitation Act. It was further held that even if for any reasons there was no bar under Article 130 of the Limitation Act and the suit was to be regarded as one not for redemption but only for recovery of possession, the plaintiffs had still to be non-suited on the ground that the defendants had perfected their title to the plaint property by adverse possession under Article 144 of the Limitation Act inasmuch as the suit had been filed after the lapse of 12 years from the date of delivery of possession of the property in execution of the decree in O. S. 639 of 1116. This decision of the trial court was confirmed on appeal by the Subordinate Judge and hence the plaintiffs have preferred S. A. 1170 of 1964. In view of the common questions involved, this second appeal was heard by the Division Bench along with the four other appeals and, as already noticed, the two learned Judges have disagreed and delivered separate judgments.

8. Isaac, J. has taken the view that since the mortgage debt due under Ext. C had become discharged by its being set off against the arrears of michavaram, there was no subsisting mortgage to be redeemed when O. S. 639 of 1116 was instituted and that therefore the decree passed therein cannot be regarded as one for redemption but only as one for recovery of possession of the property from the erstwhile mortgagee. Accordingly, the learned Judge has held that the present defendants 1 to 4 who took delivery of possession of the property in execution of the decree in O. S. 639 of 1116 cannot be regarded as co-mortgagors who have redeemed the entire mortgage and that they are not therefore entitled to invoke the principle of subrogation in their favour. In this view, the learned Judge held that the present suits claiming recovery of the plaintiffs' shares in the suit property from defendants 1 to 4 are not governed by Article 136 of the Travancore Limitation Act since they cannot be regarded as suits for redemption filed against a redeeming co-mortgagor who has become subrogated to the position of the mortgagee.

Accordingly, the learned Judge has expressed the conclusion that the first four suits namely O. S. 79 of 1120, O. S. 83 of 1120, O. S. 1096 of 1120 and O. S. 710 of 1121 which were instituted well within 12 years, whether the said period be calculated from the date of discharge of the mortgage debt or from the date on which defendants 1 to 4 obtained delivery of possession in execution of the decrees in O. S. 639 of 1110, are not barred by limitation and that the contrary view taken by Velu Pillai, J. is not correct. In regard to O. S. No. 081 of 1957 out of which S. A. 1170 of 1964 has arisen, the learned Judge held that the plaintiffs' claim for recovery of possession of their shares in the suit property is time-barred since this suit has been filed only after the expiry of 12 years even from the date of recovery of the property by defendants 1 to 4. But, with respect to the prayer of the plaintiffs in this suit for a permanent injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with the plaintiffs' possession of a house in the suit property, the learned Judge held that notwithstanding the circumstance that their suit for recovery of possession is time-barred, they would be entitled to a decree for injunction in respect of the house in case they are found to have been residing therein at the time of institution of the suit.

The learned Judge, however, felt that there has not been a proper investigation by the courts below of the factual question as to whether the plaintiffs were actually in possession of the said house as on the date of the institution of the suit and hence considered that a remand of the suit is necessary for determining this question afresh. The learned Judge, has, therefore, expressed the conclusion that the decree passed by the courts below dismissing the suit in toto should be set aside and the matter remitted to the Subordinate Judge's Court for the limited purpose mentioned above.

9. Narayana Pillai, J., on the other hand, has taken the view that the mortgage Ex. C cannot be regarded as a "self-redeeming mortgage" and that the mortgage debt did not therefore automatically get extinguished on non-payment of miehavaram. According to the learned Judge, the mortgage became extinguished only by virtue of the decree for redemption in O. S. 639 of 1116 the debt having become wiped off only when the court allowed the set-off of the mortgage amount against the arrears of miehavaram, and that hence the defendants should be regarded as co-mortgagors who have obtained possession of the property after redeeming the entire mortgage.

The learned Judge has further expressed the view that even though the defendants had not to pay anything to the mortgagee for effecting redemption, they were, nonetheless, entitled to invoke the doctrine of subrogation and to retain possession of the property as mortgagees until they were properly redeemed by the other co-mortgagors. Accordingly, he has held that Article 136 of the Travancore Limitation Act is applicable to the case and that since all the suits have been instituted only after the expiry of the period of 50 years prescribed by the said Article, the plaintiffs' rights to recover possession of their respective shares in the suit property had become barred and the suits had been rightly dismissed.

In regard to the prayer of the plaintiffs in O. S. 681 of 1957 for a permanent injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with their possession of the building on the suit property, the learned Judge has held that the plaintiffs would not be entitled to the relief of injunction unless they establish their title to the said building and in view of his having found that the right of the plaintiffs to recover possession of the property had become extinguished under Article 136 of the Travancore Limitation Act, the plaintiffs' claim for the relief of injunction was also negatived. In the result the learned Judge has expressed the conclusion that all the appeals should be dismissed.

10. Thus, the two learned Judges constituting the Division Bench have come to divergent conclusions on the following two questions.

1. Whether the four suits which have given rise to A. S. Nos. 690, 691 and 692 of 1963 and 23 of 1964 are barred by Article 136 of the Travancore Limitation Act?

2. Whether the plaintiffs in O. S. 681 of 1957 (out of which S. A. 1170 of 1964 has arisen) are entitled to the relief of permanent injunction in respect of the building on the suit property notwithstanding the fact that their claim for recovery of possession or rest of the property has become barred by limitation?

Both the learned Judges have concurred in holding that the claim of the plaintiffs in O. S. No. 681 of 1957 to recover possession of the suit property is barred by limitation and that the said suit in so far as it seeks that relief has been rightly dismissed by the courts below. Counsel appearing for the appellants in S. A. 1170 of 1964 contended that the two learned Judges have disagreed even in regard to this matter since Isaac, J. has held the suit to be barred only by applying Article 144 of the Indian Limitation Act whereas Narayana Pillai, J. has treated the suit as one for redemption and held it to be barred under Article 136 of the Travancore Act.

11. Section 23 of the Travancore-Cochin High Court Act, 1125 under which these appeals have been referred for my opinion, is in the following terms:

"Where two Judges forming a Division Bench agree as to the decree, order or sentence to be passed, their decision shall be final. But if they disagree, they shall deliver separate judgments and thereupon the Chief Justice shall refer, for the opinion of another Judge, the matter or matters on which such disagreement exists, and the decree, order or sentence shall follow the opinion of the majority of the Judges hearing the case."

Under this Section, that part of the subject-matter of the appeal respecting which the two learned Judges forming the Division Bench are in agreement "as to the decree to be passed" is outside the scope of the reference and it is only in respect of those matters on which there has been a disagreement between them that the third Judge to whom the reference is made is called upon to state his opinion. Inasmuch as both the learned Judges have agreed as to the decree to be passed in the suit O. S. 681 of 1957 in so far as it relates to the plaintiffs' prayer for the relief of recovery of possession of the property, I do not think it is open to the learned counsel for the appellants to re-agitate that question before me. When the Judges constituting the Division Bench have agreed as to the ultimate decree to be passed, their decision is declared by Section 23 to be final and hence any difference of opinion between them as to the reasons on which such conclusion should properly be based is of no consequence. I have not, therefore, permitted the learned counsel for the appellants in S. A. 1170 of 1964 to re-argue before me the contentions of his clients that their suit for recovery of possession of the suit property is not barred by limitation. The scope of the further discussion in this judgment will be limited to a consideration of the two questions mentioned supra on which the learned Judges have come to different conclusions.

12. The answer to the first question will depend on whether the suit O. S. 639 of 1116 can be regarded as a suit for redemption of a subsisting mortgage and, even if so, whether the principle of subrogation would apply in the circumstances of the case so as to entitle the defendants to retain possession of the property with all the rights of the mortgagee as against their co-mortgagors.

13. The Transfer of Property Act had no statutory force in the erstwhile Travancore State at the relevant time. Hence Sections 92 and 93 of the said Act are not applicable in terms to the present case, and the question has to be decided in accordance with principles of justice, equity and good conscience. It therefore becomes necessary to examine the true scope and content of the equitable doctrine of subrogation, the purpose and principle behind it and the conditions for its applicability in cases, like the present, not governed by a statute.

14. The law on the subject as laid down by the decisions of English and American Courts has been succinctly summarised by Sheldon in his well-known treatise on the Law of Subrogation and it is worthwhile extracting the following passage which deals with the aspects relevant to the present discussion.

"Subrogation is a doctrine primarily of equity jurisprudence . . . It is a substitution, ordinarily the substitution of another person in the place of a creditor, so that the person in whose favour it is exercised succeeds to the rights of the creditor in relation to the debt. It is broad enough to include every instance in which one party pays a debt for which another is primarily answerable, and which, in equity and good conscience, should have been discharged by the latter. . . . It is a legal fiction, by force of which an obligation extinguished by a payment made by a third person is treated as still subsisting for the benefit of this third person, who is thus substituted to the rights, remedies, and securities of another. . . Subrogation is an exercise of the equitable powers of the court, to relieve a meritorious creditor, who might otherwise be subjected to loss by his funds being applied to pay another's debt. . . . Subrogation to the rights of a creditor differs from an assignment of the debt, in that the latter assumes the continued existence of the debt, while the former follows only upon its payment. Before the right of subrogation accrues, the legal obligation resting upon the ultimate debtor must be discharged. . . . And the party for whose benefit the doctrine of subrogation is exercised can acquire no greater rights than those of the party for whom he is substituted; if the latter had not a right of recovery, the former can acquire none".

In Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, Volume V, the principle of subrogation is explained at page 5183 in these terms:

"When an obligation is discharged by one not primarily liable for it, but who believes himself to be acting either in performance of a legal duty, or for the protection of a legal right, or at the request of the party ultimately bound, and even in certain other cases favoured by public policy, where none of the above circumstances may be present, the party thus discharging the obligation is entitled in equity to demand, for his reimbursement, and subject to any superior equities, the performance of the original obligation, and the application thereto of all securities and collateral rights held by the creditor. The same equity which seeks to prevent the unearned enrichment of one party at the expense of another, by actions for reimbursement, contribution, and exoneration, operates here, by creating a relation somewhat analogous to a constructive trust, in favour of the subrogee, or party making the payment, in all legal rights held by the creditor, and the subrogee may proceed to enforce the trust. Whenever a party discharges an obligation in performance of a legal duty — that is, an obligation for the performance of which he was legally bound — but for which his liability was subsequent to that of another party, he is entitled to be subrogated to, and to have the benefit of, all rights of the creditor and all securities which may at any time have been put into the creditor's hands by a party whose liability is prior to his own, or which the creditor may have obtained from such party. The most conspicuous example of this class is the ordinary surety on an obligation for the payment of money, who has become such at the request of the principal debtor. . . . Other cases where the liability of a party making a payment is considered subsequent to that of some other party to the obligation, and in which, therefore, the former is entitled to subrogation, are cases of payment of more than his fair share by one of several joint debtors or co-sureties. In these cases, each party is considered, as against the others as primarily liable for his own proportionate share of the obligation, and as subsequently liable for the shares of the others. The subrogee is, in general, entitled to stand in the shoes of the creditor, and to enforce every right which the creditor himself could have enforced so far as necessary to secure reimbursement of contribution."

In Jones on Mortgages, 7th Edition, Volume II at page 407 the learned author, while discussing the conditions for the applicability of the doctrine of subrogation, has stated the legal position as follows:—

"In general it may be said that to entitle one to invoke the equitable right of subrogation he must either occupy the position of a surety having paid the debt, or one having made the payment under an agreement with the debtor or creditor that he should receive and hold an assignment of the debt as security; or he must stand in such a relation to the mortgaged premises that his interest cannot otherwise be adequately protected. . . . It only applies in favour of one who has bought the debt either expressly, or by paying it under circumstances which render the payment equivalent to a purchase."

The principles stated in the passages extracted above are fully applicable in this country also and will govern the decision of cases, like the present one, not covered by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. This is placed beyond doubt by the decision of the Supreme Court in Ganeshi Lal v. Joti Pershad, AIR 1953 SC 1 where their Lordships had occasion to consider the scope of the equitable doctrine of subrogation in a case arising from the State of East Punjab where the Transfer of Property Act was (not—Ed.) in force at the relevant time. The following observations occurring in para 9 of the judgment may usefully be extracted:—

"If we remember that the doctrine of subrogation which means substitution of one person in place of another and giving him the rights of the latter is essentially an equitable doctrine in its origin and application, and if we examine the reason behind it, the answer to the question which we have to decide in this appeal is not difficult. Equity insists on the ultimate payment of a debt by one who in justice and good conscience is bound to pay it, and it is well recognised that where there are several joint debtors, the person making the payment is a principal debtor as regards the part of the liability he is to discharge and a surety in respect of the shares of the rest of debtors. Such being the legal position as among the co-mortgagors, if one of them redeem a mortgage over the property which belongs jointly to himself and the rest, equity confers on him a right to reimburse himself for the amount spent in excess by him in the matter of redemption; he can call upon the co-mortgagors to contribute towards the excess which he has paid over his own share. This proposition is postulated in several authorities."

The position is therefore well established that the doctrine of subrogation is only a rule evolved by equity by which a surety paying a debt of the principal debtor, or a co-mortgagor who is compelled to pay more than his share of the common debt, is allowed to stand in the place of the original creditor and have the benefit of the securities which the creditor had, for the limited purpose of obtaining reimbursement from the persons whose liability he has discharged. It is undoubtedly of the essence of this doctrine that the benefit of the equity can be availed of only by one who has actually performed the obligations of another and has thereby become entitled to a right of reimbursement, for the protection of which right alone the security will be treated as kept alive for his benefit by a legal fiction. Hence, unless there has been a payment by a party in discharge of the obligation of another and consequently a right to reimbursement has accrued to him, there cannot be any scope at all for his in-

14A. Tested in the light of the legal principles stated above, I have no hesitation to hold that in the present case defendants 1 to 4 are not entitled to claim the benefit of the principle of subrogation as against their erstwhile co-mortgagors, namely the plaintiffs. It is not contended that they had to pay any amount whatever to the mortgagee under Ext. C before recovering possession in execution of the decree in O. S. 639 of 1116. A reference to Ext. P-5 which is a copy of the plaint filed in that suit shows that the suit had been instituted by the present defendants on the specific allegation that no amount remained due under the mortgage and that, on the other hand, after setting off of the entire mortgage amount against the arrears of michavaram, a substantial amount was due to them from the mortgagee by way of such arrears. Ext. H is a copy of the judgment rendered in that suit and it is seen therefrom that the Court held that the entire mortgage amount had become wiped off by adjustment against arrears of michavaram and a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiffs in that suit for recovery of 240 fs. being michavaram for 6 years prior to suit, and also future mesne profits at the rate of Rs. 25/- a year from the date of institution of the suit. If the mortgage was treated as subsisting till the date of institution of the suit there would have been no question of the bar of limitation in the matter of taking accounts, nor would the mortgagee have been made liable for mesne profits from the date of suit.

This is not, therefore, a case where defendants 1 to 4 have made any payment in discharge of the proportionate mortgage liability of the present plaintiffs and thereby acquired a right to reimbursement. The equitable principle of subrogation being intended only for protecting a right to reimbursement it cannot have any application to the present case. I am supported in this view by the observations of their Lordships of the Supreme Court in the decision already cited AIR 1953 SC 1 (supra), where it has been pointed out that to compel the co-debtors or co-mortgagors to pay more than their share of what was paid to the creditors or mortgagee would be to perpetrate an inequity or injustice and that such a result will not be countenanced by equity. Their Lordships have observed as follows at p. 4:

"If it is equitable that the redeeming co-mortgagor should be substituted in the mortgagee's place, it is equally equitable that the other co-mortgagors should not be called upon to pay more than he paid in discharge of the encumbrance."

Further, as pointed out by Sheldon, the party for whose benefit the doctrine of subrogation is applied can acquire no greater rights than that of the party in whose place he is substituted and if the latter had not a right of recovery the former can acquire none. In the present case, as on the date of institution of O. S. 639 of 1116 no amount whatever was due to the mortgagee and he had no right to hold the property by way of security. In these circumstances the defendants cannot claim to have acquired a right to retain possession of the property as security by virtue of any principle of substitution. I therefore hold that, irrespective of the question as to whether or not the suit O. S. 639 of 1116 can be regarded as an action for redemption of a subsisting mortgage, defendants 1 to 4 cannot claim the benefit of the equitable principle of subrogation and had derived no right to retain possession of the property as mortgagees.

15. In view of my having come to the conclusion that defendants 1 to 4 are not entitled to claim the benefit of the doctrine of subrogation, it is really unnecessary for me to consider the further question as to whether the suit O. S. 639 of 1116 can be regarded as an action for redemption and whether defendants 1 to 4 are co-mortgagors who have come into possession of the property on redeeming the entire mortgage. However, since this question was argued before me at considerable length by the learned counsel appearing on both sides I shall proceed to state my opinion on this point as well. According to the appellants the mortgage debt under Ext. C had become automatically wiped off by adjustment against the arrears of miclavaram and therefore there was no subsisting mortgage at all to be redeemed as on the date of institution of O. S. 639 of 1116. On the other hand, it is contended on behalf of the defendants that the set off was effected only as per the decree passed in that suit and hence the mortgage became extinguished only on the passing of the said decree.

16. As pointed by the Federal Court in Thota China Subba Rao v. Mattapalli Raju, AIR 1950 FC 1 at p. 6:

"The right of redemption is an incident of a subsisting mortgage and it subsists so long as the mortgage itself subsists".

If a mortgage has been discharged by payment or in any other manner recognised by law the right of the mortgagee to hold the property as security for the debt ceases to exist and the mortgagor becomes entitled to recover possession of the property from him without any necessity to "redeem". Since the present case is not governed by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act it has to be decided only on the general principles of law relating to mortgage. It is worthwhile in this connection to extract the following passage from "The Law of Mortgages of Real and Personal Property" by Francis Hullahd, Volume I, page 480:—

"From the intimate connection between the debt secured by the mortgage and the mortgage itself, which has been already explained, it of course results as a general proposition, that whatever extinguishes the former, puts an end to the latter also..... A mortgage is but a security for the payment of the debt, and when that is paid or extinguished, it can never be resuscitated. By payment, the whole mortgage is extinct; as much so as if released or paid and cancelled of record. It ceases to operate either at law or in equity, and the whole title reverts in the mortgagor. To call it a mortgage would be an abuse of the word. It is no more than a blank."

Such being the legal position, I shall proceed to examine whether the debt secured by Ext. C was subsisting on the date of institution of O. S. 639 of 1116 or whether it had become extinguished at any time prior thereto. It is contended on behalf of the respondents that the mere circumstance that the mortgagee had kept the miclavaram in arrears ever since the commencement of the transaction and that the accumulated arrears of miclavaram due by the mortgagee far exceeded the amount due under the mortgage, will not have the effect of extinguishing the mortgage as there cannot be said to have been any 'payment' of the debt by the mortgagor.

17. Under the terms of Ext. C the mortgagee was put in possession of the property with the stipulation that from out of the rents and profits he was to pay annually to the mortgagor 40 Is. by way of miclavaram and appropriate only the balance towards the interest on the mortgage amount. When the stipulated miclavaram remained unpaid, the mortgagee must be taken to have had in his hands at the end of each year an equivalent amount which really represents the surplus profits realised from the property. Interest due under the mortgage having been already realised by him by appropriation of the balance profits, the mortgagee was bound in law to apply the portion of the profits represented by the unpaid miclavaram in reduction of the principal amount of the mortgage debt. As stated in Jones on Mortgages, 7th Edition, Volume II, at page 733 "A mortgagee in possession whether in person, by trustee, receiver, or by a tenant, is in equity accountable for the rents and profits of the estate, and is bound to apply them in reduction of the mortgage debt. After paying the interest of the debt any balance of receipts is applicable to reduce the principal". To the same effect are the following observations at page 835 in Coote's Treatise on the Law of Mortgages, 9th Edition, Volume II:—

"A mortgagee, as soon as he is paid off, became before 1926 a mere trustee, holding the legal estate for the benefit of the mortgagor or the next pious incumbrancer of whose charge he has notice, who may require the reconveyance of the estate accordingly. After 1925, however, mortgagee, having no longer the legal estate to fee simple, but only a term of years in the land will have no legal estate or interest in the land after payment off, because under Section 116 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, the term will automatically cease. A mortgagee, who had entered into possession, must therefore, so soon as the rents and profits received by him have fully satisfied the moneys due under his mortgage, including principal, interest, and costs, deliver up the property to the person entitled to possession of it."

In Ashworth v. Lord, (1887) 36 Ch D 545, it was contended on behalf of the mortgagor that the mortgagees who were in possession of the mortgaged property and realising the rents and profits had been overpaid and that they should be charged with liability to account for rents and profits with interest by applying the principle of annual rests for the period subsequent to the date on which the mortgage debt was paid up in full by appropriation of rents and profits. North J. upheld this contention and stated thus at p. 551:

"But, after they have been paid in full, they are, as was pointed out by the Master of the Rolls in Wilson v. Metcalfe, (1826) 1 Russ. 530, persons who are, in receiving the rents after their debt has been fully paid, availing themselves of another man's money for their own use and benefit, and they ought to be charged with interest. In that case annual rests were directed to be made from the time at which the mortgage debt was fully paid, and that is what I have always understood to be the practice in the few cases in which the point has arisen. It seems to me that annual rests are in the present case a matter of course."

18. A similar question arose in an early case before the Allahabad High Court reported in Jajit Rai, by His Guardian Parbati Kuar v. Gobind Tiwari, (1884) ILR 6 All 303. There, by the terms of a usufructuary mortgage it was provided that the annual profits of the mortgaged property should be taken to be Rs. 65-10-6 out of which the mortgagee was to appropriate Rs. 42-6-6 as interest on the mortgage money and to pay Rs. 23-3-0 as the amount of jama payable as revenue to the Government on land. The mortgage was executed in 1864. The plaintiff obtained an assignment of the equity of redemption in 1869 and instituted the suit for recovery of possession of the mortgaged property alleging that the mortgage amount had become completely discharged because the mortgagee had not paid any revenue since 1869 and the plaintiff had been compelled to pay it. According to the plaintiff, by adjustment against the mortgage debt of that portion of the rents and profits of the mortgaged property as represented by the amounts reserved annually for payment of revenue, but not utilised for that purpose, the entire mortgage money had been paid and amounts were due to the plaintiff from the mortgagee by way of such profits.

In his defence to the action the mortgagee contended, inter alia, that the terms of the mortgage did not entitle the plaintiff to set off the annual sum of Rs. 23-3-0 against the mortgage debt and that the plaintiff's claim that the mortgage debt had become discharged and that he was entitled to recover surplus profits from the mortgagee, was therefore untenable. Mahmood, J. who delivered the judgment on behalf of the Division Bench rejected this plea of the mortgagee. Upholding the plaintiff's contention that the mortgage debt became discharged by set off against the amounts reserved for payment of revenue and that the mortgagee was, therefore, liable for profits calculated with annual rests, His Lordship stated thus at p. 308:—

"By a long course of decisions it has been settled in India that even a special agreement to the effect that the mortgagee shall remain in possession until payment of the debt is made in one sum, does not prevent the mortgage from being at an end whenever the mortgagee has realised both principal and interest from the usufruct..... This rule, though it probably originated in the exercise (express—Ed.) provisions of the old regulations, is so consonant with equity that it deserves recognition by the Courts, even irrespective of statutory provisions".

19. The above decision was followed by a Division Bench of the Madras High Court consisting of Venkatasubba Rao and Reilly, JJ. in Seshayya v. Lakshminarasimha Rao, AIR 1930 Mad 160. In that case, the mortgagee who was put in possession of the mortgaged property, the profits wherefrom were estimated to be Rs. 240, was required annually to pay Rs. 100 towards revenue and village expenses, appropriate Rs. 80 towards the mortgage debt and pay over the balance of Rs. 60 to the mortgagor. The mortgage amount was Rs. 2,200 and it was provided in the mortgage document that the debt was to be discharged in 55 years by the above process of appropriation, the interest for that period being stipulated to be an amount equal to the principal, namely Rs. 2,200. The mortgagee was to surrender possession of the property only thereafter. It was further provided that if the mortgagee failed to pay the amount of Rs. 60 he would be bound to relinquish a part of the holding in proportion to that sum. The mortgage was of the year 1865. From 1882 onwards the annual payment of Rs. 60 was never made to the mortgagor.

The question arose whether the mortgagee who thus retained in his hands the sum of Rs. 60 payable every year during the period subsequent to 1881 was bound to apply that sum annually in reduction of the mortgage debt. If that was done the mortgage debt would have become discharged long prior to 1920 in which year alone the stipulated term of 55 years was to expire. The Division

Bench upheld the claim of the mortgagor that it was the bounden duty of the mortgagee to apply the amount of Rs. 60 retained with him annually in reduction of the mortgage debt and that therefore the debt became wiped out long before 1920.

Venkatasubba Rao, J. observed thus at p. 163:—

"A portion (Rs. 60) was by agreement of parties excluded from the usufruct for a specific purpose. If the purpose failed or the term was not carried out, what was the result? The part excluded reverted without any further act or agreement and became again profits. The mortgagee would then be liable to apply it in reduction of the debt. Section 78 (h) enacts that the mortgagee shall apply the usufruct, first in reduction of the interest, then of the principal. This, he is bound to do under the law, so that, a part of the profits initially excluded was not applied as directed, it became usufruct as a matter of course, and without a special contract to that effect.

The proper way then of viewing the question is, has the part excluded, in the events that have happened, retained, its character of rents and profits? If so the mortgagee has no option but to appropriate it to the mortgage debt. (1884) 6 All 303, is a very instructive case on the point and gives effect to the principle as I have stated it. . . . I am, therefore, of the opinion that the plaintiff's contention must prevail, namely, that the sum of Rs. 60 should be debited against the mortgage debt and the account taken accordingly. It is obvious that in that event, the debt became wiped out long before 1920, that is, before the expiry of the period fixed."

"But on what principle could a mortgagee in possession be heard to say that he had in his hands money belonging to the mortgagor, which he had received in his capacity as mortgagee out of the income of the mortgaged property in his possession but that he refused to adjust that against the mortgage debt and that he would hold it until the mortgagor sues him for it in some proceedings unconnected with the mortgage. I do not think it is necessary in this connexion to drag in the idea that in those circumstances the mortgagee would be trustee for the mortgagor in respect of the mortgagor's money which he kept in his hands, though no doubt he would be so. It is enough, I think, to remember that the essence of a mortgage transaction is that the mortgage is security for the mortgage debt. When the mortgagee has obtained payment of his debt, the security is done with; there is no purpose left in it. Let us suppose that we reach a stage where the mortgage debt except Rs. 480 has been paid off by the application of Rs. 80 a year out of the income and at the same time by his failure to pay the Rs. 60 a year to the mortgagor the mortgagee has

"The mortgage debt still remains to the extent of Rs. 480. I have got the mortgagor's money to that amount in my hands; but I intend to keep that entirely separate. It has been suggested that the mortgagee could do that because he could have got the Rs. 60 a year in his hands not in accordance with the terms of the contract between the parties but in violation of the terms. Surely, we cannot allow a party to plead his own wrong in that way. In my opinion it is clear on principle that, when the mortgagee has paid himself the mortgage debt out of the mortgaged property in his possession, he cannot maintain that the mortgage is still in force. That principle is recognised in Section 62-A, T. P. Act and it was enforced in (1884) ILR 6 All 303. . . . The decision in (1884) ILR 6 All 303, has never been overruled, nor has dissent ever been expressed from it.

Now does the fact that in this case a term of 55 years is mentioned make any difference in the application of this principle? We are not concerned in this case with any question of redemption, because in this transaction the mortgagor could never redeem by paying the balance of the mortgage debt to the mortgagee; his right was only to recover possession when the mortgage debt was satisfied. For myself I doubt whether in these documents, Exts. A and B any term of years in the strict sense was really intended. I doubt whether the meaning is more than that the Rs. 4,400 was to be paid off out of the income of the property at the rate of Rs. 80 a year and so would be cleared of in 55 years ending with Siddarti. But, even if the mention of the term of 55 years ending with Siddarti means more than that, how does it really affect the mortgagee's position in the circumstances that have arisen? If the amount of the mortgagor's money which the mortgagee retained in his hands has to be adjusted against the mortgage debt then at a time long before the expiry of the 55 years the mortgage debt must have been satisfied. From that time, until the end of the 55 years in what capacity would the mortgagee claim to remain in possession? Obviously not as a mortgagee to whom any part of the mortgage debt was still due. I think the result of that is, that, if this transaction is a mortgage and nothing else, the Rs. 60 must clearly be adjusted as it fell due against the mortgage debt until it was discharged and that the plaintiff must be held to have been entitled to recover possession from the date on which the debt was so discharged."

In the light of the principles enunciated in the above decisions with which I am in respectful agreement, I have no hesitation to hold that the mortgage debt under Ext. C had become completely wiped off by 6-10-1090 by adjustment against arrears of michavaram.

20. Counsel appearing on behalf of the respondents relied very strongly on a decision of the Bombay High Court reported in Raghavendraharya Appacharya Katti v. Vaman Shrinivas Deshpande, AIR 1943 Bom 191; the facts of that case may be briefly stated. In 1931 one of the co-mortgagors in respect of a usufructuary mortgage brought a suit for redemption of the mortgage claiming the benefit of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. On an application of the provisions of the said Act it was found that the entire mortgage amount had become wiped off and that nothing remained due to the mortgagee. Accordingly a decree was passed directing the mortgagee to deliver possession of the property free from the mortgage and the decree-holder accordingly obtained possession. Subsequently, the assignees from two of the other co-mortgagors instituted a suit in April 1937 to recover their half share in the property and it is from that suit that the second appeal arose before the High Court. One of the questions to be decided was whether the co-mortgagor who had earlier sued and obtained possession in execution of the decree could claim the right of subrogation. The Division Bench which decided the case rejected the contention of the plaintiffs that the defendant could not be regarded as a co-mortgagor who had redeemed the mortgage and observed as follows at page 192:—

"It has been argued on behalf of the plaintiffs that no question of subrogation arises because in fact in the circumstances of this case there has been no redemption. The basis of that argument is that when accounts were taken under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act it was found that the mortgagee had recovered not only the principal money but also a fair rate of interest on it out of the income, and therefore by reason of the provisions of the Act the plaintiffs were not liable to pay anything. Mr. Belvadi referred us to the terms of Section 60 T. P. Act, which provides, that at any time after the principal money has become due, the mortgagor has a right, on payment or tender, at a proper time and place, of the mortgage money to get a reconveyance. He argues that redemption implies payment of the mortgage debt, and if there is no mortgage debt to pay, there is no redemption. In our view this is not a correct statement of the position. No doubt the mortgagor cannot redeem without paying or tendering whatever amount may be due. But that does not mean that there is no such thing as redemption if in the circumstances it turns out that there is nothing to pay. It was only as the result of the application of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act that nothing was found due. According to the terms of the mortgage itself, the mortgagee was entitled to remain in possession in lieu of the interest only, and however long he remained in possession he was entitled to receive the principal amount. Defendant 3, the plaintiff in the suit, was enabled to get those favourable terms because he established that he was an agriculturist. It does not follow that the other co-mortgagors would have been able to get redemption on the same terms. Apart from that, however, the suit brought by defendant 3 was undoubtedly a suit for redemption and the decree, the terms of which have already been given, was nothing less than or different from a decree for redemption."

These observations do, no doubt, support the contention advanced before me on behalf of the respondents. But, as I will presently show, this decision cannot now be regarded as laying down correct law. In Ram Prasad v. Bishambhar Singh, AIR 1946 All 400, a similar question arose for consideration before a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court, though in slightly different circumstances. There, the suit was instituted by the representatives of the mortgagor for recovery of possession of the mortgaged property on the strength of the provisions contained in Section 2 (9) of the U. P. Debt Redemption Act and the question arose whether the suit was barred under Article 148 of the Limitation Act which Article would apply, if the suit were to be regarded as one for redemption. The contention of the plaintiff was that the mortgage debt had become completely wiped off by virtue of the provisions of the U. P. Debt Redemption Act and hence there was no necessity for redeeming the mortgage and that the suit should not, therefore, be regarded as one for redemption falling within the scope of Article 148 of the Limitation Act. This contention was upheld by the Division Bench consisting of Braund and Yorke, JJ.

"Now, the question is whether this suit—being a suit to recover possession of the mortgaged property after (according to the law as it stood at the date the suit was begun) it had been paid off—is a suit 'against a mortgagee to redeem' or 'to recover possession of immovable property mortgaged'. The learned Civil Judge of Patehpur has dismissed the matter a trifle summarily by saying that 'in the present case right to recover possession accrued on the passing of Act 13 (XIII) of 1940 and as such the suit is within limitation. Before going further with this question, we think it right to refer shortly to those two sections of the Transfer of Property Act which are the statutory sources of the right to redeem or to recover possession at the instance of a mortgagor in this country. Section 60 says (paraphrasing it) that at any time after the principal money has become due the mortgagor may require the mortgagee to re-convey 'on payment or tender at a proper time and place of the mortgage money....' and it is that right that the section expressly describes as the 'right to redeem'. Now, it is quite obvious that that section can only refer to a case in which a mortgagor under a subsisting mortgage approaches the Court to establish his right to redeem and to have that redemption carried out by the process of the various declarations and orders of the Court by which it effects redemption. In other words, Section 60 contemplates a case in which the mortgage is still subsisting and the mortgagor goes to the Court to obtain the Return of his property on repayment of what is still due. Section 62, on the other hand, is in marked contrast to Section 60. Section 62 says that in the case of a usufructuary mortgage the mortgagor has a right to 'recover possession' of the property when (in a case in which the mortgagee is authorised to pay himself the mortgage money out of the rents and profits of the property) the principal money is paid off. As we see it, that it is not a case of redemption at all. At the moment when the rents and profits of the mortgaged property sufficed to discharge the principal secured by the mortgage, the mortgage came to an end and the correlative right arose in the mortgagor 'to recover possession of the property'. The framers of the Transfer of Property Act have clearly recognised the distinction between the procedure which follows a mortgagor's desire to redeem a subsisting mortgage and the procedure which follows the arising of a usufructuary mortgagor's right to get his property back after the principal has been paid off."

In Prithi Nath Singh v. Sursi Ahir, AIR 1963 SC 1041, their Lordships of the Supreme Court have expressly approved the above statement of the law contained in the judgment of Braund, J. In view of this pronouncement of the Supreme Court, the contrary view expressed in AIR 1943 Bom 191, can no longer be accepted as correct. It must then follow that the suit O. S. 639 of 1116 cannot be regarded as one for redemption since there was no subsisting mortgage on the date of its institution.

21. In the light of the discussion in the preceding paragraphs I hold that the defendants cannot be regarded as co-mortgagors who have obtained possession of the property on redemption of the whole mortgage and that in any event they have no right to claim the benefit of the equitable doctrine of subrogation since they have not paid any portion of the liability of the plaintiffs and had therefore no right to obtain any reimbursement from them. I, therefore, agree with the view taken by Isaac, J. that Art. 130 of the Travancore Limitation Act has no application and that the suits which have given rise to A. S. Nos. 690, 691 and 692 of 1963 and 23 of 1964 are not barred by time.

22. It now only remains for me to consider the subsidiary question raised in S. A. No. 1170 of 1964 relating to the plaintiffs' claim for the relief of permanent injunction in respect of the building on the property. If the plaintiffs succeed in establishing that they were actually in possession of the building as on the date of the institution of the suit, they are, in my view, entitled to the relief of injunction notwithstanding the circumstance that their suit for recovery of possession of the remaining portion of the suit property is barred under Article 144 of the Limitation Act. The question as to whether or not the plaintiffs were actually in possession of the building as claimed by them has not been properly investigated by the lower Courts. I am, therefore, in agreement with Isaac, J. that it is necessary in the interests of justice to have the suit remanded to the lower court for the limited purpose of investigating this question and that the decree passed by the courts below dismissing the suit in toto should, therefore, be set aside. The second question is also answered accordingly.

23. In the result, I hold that the first four suits, namely O. S. No. 79 of 1120, O. S. No. 83 of 1120, O. S. No. 1096 of 1120, and O. S. No. 710 of 1121 are not barred by limitation and that the appeals A. S. Nos. 690 to 692 of 1963 and A. S. No. 23 of 1964 should be allowed and the cases should be remitted to the Subordinate Judge for fresh disposal in the light of the directions contained in the judgment of Isaac, J. I also hold that the decree dismissing in toto O. S. 681 of 1957 has to be set aside and that the case should be remanded to the Subordinate Judge for the limited purpose of considering only the plaintiffs' claim for the relief of permanent injunction in respect of the building on the suit property in the light of the observations and directions contained in this judgment and in the judgment of Isaac, J.

M. U. ISAAC AND P. NARAYANA PILLAI, JJ. (11-8-69): 24. In accordance with the opinion of the majority, we hold that O. S. 79, 83 and 1096 of 1120 and O. S. No. 710 of 1121 are not time-barred, and that the plaintiffs in these suits are entitled to get from 30-12-1119 M. E. messee profits of the properties, which they seek to recover, subject to their claim to the ownership of the said properties is being upheld. We also hold that O. S. No. 681 of 1957 is time-barred in respect of the relief claimed for recovery of the plaint schedule property; but the plaintiffs will be entitled to an injunction restraining the defendants therein from interfering with the plaintiffs' possession of the house, in case they are found to be residing therein at the time of institution of the suit. Accordingly all the appeals are allowed, and the cases are remitted to the Subordinate Judge, who will take up all the appeals and dispose of them in the light of the opinion of the majority and the findings and observations contained therein.

25. The appellants in A. S. Nos. 690, 691 and 692 of 1963 and 23 of 1964 will get their costs from the respondents. The costs of the appeals in the Subordinate Judge's Court hereafter and the costs in the trial court will abide the result of the said appeals, and the Subordinate Judge will pass necessary orders in that respect. The parties in S. A. No. 1170 of 1964 will suffer their respective costs hitherto in all the courts. The Subordinate Judge will pass necessary orders regarding the costs of appeal incurred by the parties hereafter.

Appeals allowed.

The Special Tahsildar for Land Acquisition, Kozhikode-I and others, Appellants v. M/s. F. Shamsudin and Bros., Respondents.

Writ Appeal No. 625 of 1969 and Original Petn. No. 5201 of 1968, D/- 5-12-1969.

(A) Kerala Land Acquisition Act, 1961 (21 of 1962), Section 62 — Acquisition proceedings commenced under replaced Acts can be continued under the Act — Kerala Interpretation and General Clauses Act (7 of 1125), Sections 4, 23. 1968 Ker LJ 1 and 1969 Ker LJ 389, Overruled.

The land acquisition proceedings commenced either under the Travancore Land Acquisition Act (1089) or the Cochin Land Acquisition Act or the Central Land Acquisition Act (as amended by Madras Acts (21 of 1948 and (22 of 1953) (in force in Malabar area can be continued under the Kerala Act (21 of 1962) in view of Sections 4 and 23 of the Kerala Interpretation and General Clauses Act. 1968 Ker LJ 1 and 1969 Ker LJ 389, Overruled; ILR 1966 (2) Ker 631, Approved. (Para 5)

(B) Kerala Interpretation and General Clauses Act (7 of 1125), Sections 2 (2) and 23 — Word "Act" must mean any Act which Kerala Legislature has power to replace — Definition of "Act" so far as it excludes Central Act would be repugnant to subject and context of Section 23. (Para 8)

(C) Kerala Interpretation and General Clauses Act (7 of 1125), Section 23 — "Repeal" — Meaning — Includes supersession of one Act by another.

Whether what has happened is strictly speaking a repeal or not in the context of Section 23, the word "repeal" must be regarded as wide enough to include the supersession, at any rate the deliberate and conscious supersession of one Act by another Act. In the case of a replacement it does not matter what the replacing Act call the process by which the operation of the replaced Act is notionally determined. AIR 1961 Ker 154 and AIR 1967 SC 1541, Rel. on. (Para 10)

RAMAN NAYAR, C. J.: The Kerala Land Acquisition Act, 1961 (Act 21 of 1962) which came into force on the 1st April, 1963, replaced the laws till then in force in this State regarding the acquisition of property, namely, the (Travancore) Land Acquisition Act, 1089 in force in what we might call the Travancore area, the (Cochin) Land Acquisition Act, 1070 in force in the Cochin area, and the (Central) Land Acquisition Act, 1894 (as amended by Madras Acts XXI of 1948 and XII of 1953) in force in the Malabar area. (We shall refer to the first mentioned Act as the Kerala Act; to the second as the Travancore Act; to the third as the Cochin Act; and to the last as the Central Act). Section 62 of the Kerala Act says that the Travancore and Cochin Acts are repealed; with regard to the Central Act it says that that Act shall cease to apply to the Malabar area. The question in these cases is whether land acquisition proceedings commenced under the replaced enactments can be continued at all, whether under the replaced or the replacing enactment, or have to be begun afresh.

2. In Gopinatha Pillai v. The State of Kerala, 1969 Ker LJ 1 a single judge of this Court held that such proceedings could not be continued either under the replaced enactment or under the replacing enactment. That was with regard to a case where proceedings had been begun under the Travancore Act and were continued, at any rate purported to be continued, under the Kerala Act. On appeal—See State of Kerala v Padmanabhan Asari Kunju, 1969 Ker LJ 389, a division bench of this Court affirmed that the proceedings could not be continued under the replacing enactment, namely, the Kerala Act, but left open the question whether they could be continued under the replaced enactment, namely, the Travancore Act, although it appears to us that that question really fell to be decided having regard to the contention taken and repelled by the learned single judge that the further proceedings taken in that case though purportedly taken under the Kerala Act were in accord with the provisions of the Travancore Act under which they could have been continued, and should be regarded as having been really taken under that latter Act, the mistaken references to the provisions of the Kerala Act notwithstanding. However, in the earlier case of Anthony v. State of Kerala, ILR (1966) 2 Ker 631 which dealt with a case where proceedings were begun under the Cochin Act, a single judge of this Court had held that the proceedings could be continued under the provisions of the Kerala Act, although we should think that, having regard to the fact that this conclusion was reached by an application of Section 4 only of the (Kerala) Interpretation and General Clauses Act and not of Section 23 as well (Sections 6 and 24 respectively of the General Clauses Act, 1897) the decision should have been that they could be continued under the provisions of the Cochin Act.

3. It is because of these conflicting views that the present cases have come up before us—it would appear that ILR (1966) 2 Ker 631 was not taken to the notice of the judges who decided the later cases of 1968 Ker LJ 1 and 1969 Ker LJ 389.

4. It would be an unsatisfactory state of affairs, hardly in consonance with practical commonsense, or what one must presume to be the legislative intent, if proceedings commenced under the replaced enactments could not be continued either under those enactments or under the Kerala Act. The Kerala Act does not take away any rights or affect any of the safeguards conferred by the replaced enactments; and the petitioners in the cases before us have not been able to show that the continuance of the proceedings (instead of their being begun afresh under the provisions of the Kerala Act) prejudices them in the least. Of course, like most persons whose land is being acquired they do not like the acquisition and would like to keep their land. That however, is a grievance against the very idea of compulsory acquisition which can hardly face a valid law for acquisition; and counsel have been frank enough to own that the petitioners are seeking to place every legal obstacle they possibly can in the way of an acquisition which they do not relish so as to delay if not to defeat it altogether. That is certainly not an object to be encouraged; and, that object apart, to require that the proceedings should be begun afresh would mean a purposeless duplication of work with consequent delay and unnecessary expense. That in times of rising prices or fall in the value of money like the present, the landowners will get higher compensation (with corresponding prejudice to the public purse) if proceedings are begun afresh is no more a relevant consideration than that in times of falling prices — and there were such times in living memory—the landowners would get lower compensation (with corresponding benefit to the public purse). If there be a prejudice at all it is a prejudice occasioned by the compulsory acquisition, not by the continuance of the proceedings begun under the replaced enactments.

5. In our view, sections 4 and 23 of the (Kerala) Interpretation and General Clauses Act meet the situation and allow of the proceedings being continued under the Kerala Act. Section 4 which applies as much to a repeal and re-enactment as to a mere repeal (see State of Punjab v. Mohar Singh, AIR 1955 SC 84 and Baliah v. Rangachari, AIR 1969 SC 701) preserves rights accrued under the repealed enactment, and, in the case of a mere repeal enables the prosecution of a proceeding in respect of any such right as if there had been no repeal. But, where the repeal is accompanied by a re-enactment, section 23 also applies, and, by providing that certain things done under the repealed Act shall be deemed to be done under the corresponding re-enacted provisions enables pending proceedings to be continued under the re-enacting Act. We are here more concerned with section 23 which reads:

"23. Continuation of orders, etc. issued under enactments repealed and re-enacted.—Where any Act is repealed and re-enacted with or without modification, then, unless it is otherwise expressly provided, any appointment, notification, order, scheme, rule, form or bye-law, made or issued under the repealed Act shall, so far as it is not inconsistent with the provisions re-enacted, continue in force, and be deemed to have been made or issued under the provisions so re-enacted, unless and until it is superseded by any appointment, notification, order, scheme, rule, form or bye-law made or issued under the provisions so re-enacted."

6. When a temporary Act is allowed to expire, or when the Legislature repeals an Act without re-enacting it, it means that the Legislature considers that the law in question is no longer necessary. Therefore, it can reasonably be assumed that the Legislature intends that the law should thereafter be regarded as non-existent although its previous operation in respect of matters and transactions past and closed is not to be affected. But, when an Act that was not intended as a purely temporary measure is repealed, it would be equally reasonable to assume, unless a different intention appears, that there was no intention to affect rights and liabilities already accrued or the remedies for their enforcement. That is the rule embodied in Section 4 of the (Kerala) Interpretation and General Clauses Act (Section 6 of the General Clauses Act, 1897) which, apart from saving the past operation of a repealed statute, saves also accrued rights and liabilities as also the remedies for their enforcement. But, what happens when an Act is repealed and re-enacted, in other words when an Act is replaced by another in substantially the same terms, is altogether different. It must be regarded as the intention of the Legislature (unless, of course, it expressly states the contrary) that the law should continue in force without interruption except to the extent that it has been modified. The intention is really to amend the replaced Act so as to conform with the replacing Act—the repeal and re-enactment is no more than a convenient device for achieving this object where the changes are numerous. (We are thinking only of an express and deliberate replacement—the presumption of an intention to merely amend might not be so readily available in the case of the unconscious displacement of one law by another of superior force). That being so, it should follow that the intention of the Legislature could only be that things done under the replaced Act should be deemed to have been done under the replacing Act and that proceedings commenced under the replaced Act should be continued under the replacing Act. Hence the rule of construction embodied in Section 23 of the (Kerala) Interpretation and General Clauses Act which can be displaced only by express provision to the contrary whereas that in Section 4 can be displaced by the mere appearance of a different intention. And it should be of no consequence by what name you call the process by which the operation of the replaced Act is notionally determined—we say notionally because, in truth, the replaced Act continues in force without interruption except to the extent that it has not been re-enacted—whether you call it a repeal, a cessation or a suspension.

7. We might perhaps mention that it is not disputed that the Kerala Act confers jurisdiction on the very authorities as the replaced Acts did. Nor is it claimed that "a different intention appears" in the Kerala Act within the meaning of Section 4 of the (Kerala) Interpretation and General Clauses Act or that it "otherwise expressly provides" within the meaning of Section 23. And we might add that if that question arose we do not think we would have had much difficulty in holding that the right conferred on the appropriate Government by sub-sec. (3) of Section 6 of the Central Act to acquire the land concerned in manner thereafter appearing, in other words, for the amount of compensation fixed by the award, a right akin to a right of pre-emption or that conferred by an agreement to buy, is an accrued right.

8. This we think should suffice to surmount the two impediments which the petitioners herein would place in the way of practical good sense. The first impediment is founded on the definition of the word, "Act" in Section 2 of the (Kerala) Interpretation and General Clauses Act:

2. Definitions. — In this Act, and in all enactments now in force or passed after the commencement of this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context—

(3) Act. — "Act" shall mean a Proclamation or Act of Travancore or Cochin, an Act or Ordinance of Travancore-Cochin, an Act passed by the Legislature of the State of Kerala, an Ordinance promulgated by the Governor under Article 213 of the Constitution, or where with respect to the State of Travancore-Cochin or Kerala the power to make laws is vested in the President or other authority under sub-clause (a) of Clause (1) of Article 357 of the Constitution, any law made in exercise of such power.

It is pointed out that, while the Travancore and Cochin Acts are included in this definition of "Act", the Central Act is not, and that, therefore, Section 23 which opens with the words "Where any Act is repealed and re-enacted with or without modification" cannot apply to the repeal and re-enactment (assuming there was that) of the Central Act. But it could not possibly have been the intention of the Legislature that while proceedings begun under the Travancore and Cochin Acts could be continued under the Kerala Act, proceedings begun under the Central Act could not be so continued but must be begun afresh. This is a result which in its practical consequences could well be characterised as absurd, and, therefore, we think that, in the context of Section 23 of the (Kerala) Interpretation and General Clauses Act the word, "Act" must be read as meaning any Act which the Kerala Legislature has the power to replace. The definition given in Section 2 (3), in so far as it excludes the Central Act would be repugnant to the subject and context of Section 23.

9. The other impediment is based on the observation in Zaverbhai v. State of Bombay, AIR 1954 SC 752 at p. 756 to the effect that a State Legislature has not the power to repeal an existing law on a concurrent subject and that Parliament itself is given this power only by the proviso to Clause (2) of Article 254 of the Constitution. Therefore, it is said, that, whatever Section 62 of the Kerala Act might say, none of the Acts which it replaced was in fact repealed, all of them being existing laws in the concurrent field. At best it can only be said that the assent of the President having been given to the Kerala Act, it prevails over the Acts it replaced by virtue of the provisions of Clause (2) of Article 254 of the Constitution. The replaced Acts might have ceased to be in force—that indeed is what Section 62 of the Kerala Act says with reference to the Central Act—but they have only been eclipsed or suspended. They have not been repealed within the meaning of Section 23 of the (Kerala) Interpretation and General Clauses Act.

10. This contention, we think, can be met in the same way as we have met the first. Whether what has happened is strictly speaking a repeal or not, in the context of Section 23 of the (Kerala) Interpretation and General Clauses Act the word, "repeal" must be regarded as wide enough to include the supersession, at any rate the deliberate and conscious supersession, of one Act by another Act—as we have already remarked, in the case of a replacement, it does not matter what you (or the replacing Act) call the process by which the operation of the replaced Act is notionally determined. Authority for this proposition can be found in State of Orissa v. M. A. Tulloch and Co., AIR 1964 SC 1284 and in Ekambarappa v. E. P. T. Officer, AIR 1967 SC 1541 which lay down that when one Act ceases to have effect by reason of the enactment of another, the former Act is repealed within the meaning of Section 6 of the General Clauses Act, 1897. If that be a repeal within the meaning of Section 6 of that Act it should a fortiori be a repeal within the meaning of Section 24, in other words, within the meaning of Section 23 of the (Kerala) Interpretation and General Clauses Act.

11. For the "Collector" it is contended that the observation in AIR 1954 SC 752 is but a casual observation and our attention has been drawn to what has been said in Saraswathi Amma v. Bhaskara Menon, 1960 Ker LT 1227 = (AIR 1961 Ker 151) and in Zoolficar Ali v. Official Trustee, (1967) 69 Bom LR 326. Also to the commentary by Seervai.* It is said that the power to amend or repeal a law stems from the power to make; indeed an amendment or a repeal is itself a law. That power is conferred on the Legislatures in India not by Article 25 of the Constitution but by Article 246 read with Article 245. Article 254 only provides for a reconciliation of conflicting laws made by Parliament and by a State Legislature in the concurrent field, and the proviso to Clause (2) of the Article presupposes the existence of a power in Parliament to repeal any law in the concurrent field and only says, by way of abundant caution, that the power remains notwithstanding that a State law in that field has received the assent of the President and therefore prevails over an existing law or a law previously made by the Parliament regarding the same matter. Where two Legislatures are given concurrent powers regarding a matter, each has the power to repeal a law made by the other. Art. 254 only regulates the consequences of the exercise of this power in order to avoid manifestly undesirable results. And, so far as existing laws, including existing laws in the concurrent field, are concerned, Art. 37 speaks of their supersession by a competent Legislature—the State Legislature would be a competent Legislature—as a repeal.

12. So runs the argument. It is also pointed out that the observation in question was based on an observation by Lord Watson in Attorney-General for Ontario v. Attorney-General for the Dominion, 1891 AC 348 made, it is said, not in the context of two Legislatures exercising concurrent powers but of one Legislature exercising power in respect of a matter within the province of another.

13. There is one other observation of the Supreme Court on which some reliance has been placed by the petitioners. That occurs in Harish Chandra v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1965 SC 932 at p. 938 and seems to be to the effect that the principle underlying Section 24 of the General Clauses Act cannot be extended to cases where that section does not in terms apply. This it is contended on behalf of the "Collector" was made not in the context of a Legislature expressly and deliberately replacing an Act by another similar in character, but in the context of a subordinate legislation made by one authority being displaced by a subordinate legislation made by another. The observation must be confined to its context; if it is given a wider application it would be contrary to what was held in AIR 1964 SC 1284.

14. In the view we have taken regarding the ambit of the word "repeal" in Section 23 of the (Kerala) Interpretation and General Clauses Act, neither observation of the Supreme Court affects our conclusion. The words, "repeal and re-enactment" are wide enough to cover what has happened here and we are applying the section itself, not extending the principle underlying it. Therefore we do not feel called upon to consider whether the observations in question are, as it is contended they are, mere casual observations not laying down the law.

*Constitutional law of India by Seervai 1969 Edn. Paragraphs 5.15 & 5.16 and Page 5-7.

15. In Writ Appeal No. 625 of 1969 the acquisition was on behalf of a registered society (and therefore a company within the meaning of the Central Act as also of the Kerala Act) and was for the purpose of running an educational institution. The proceedings were commenced under the Central Act, and, in view of what we have said, we hold that they can be continued, as was done, under the provisions of the Kerala Act. However, the learned single Judge who heard the writ petition brought by the owner of the land (a person who, we might observe, brought it in the course of the proceedings for acquisition, encouraged by the circumstance that similar petitions brought by other persons had been admitted and stay of proceedings granted) following the Division Bench ruling in 1969 Ker LJ 389 as he was bound to do, allowed the petition and quashed the proceedings purported to have been taken under the Kerala Act. In the light of our holding we allow this appeal by the "Collector" and dismiss the writ petition with costs both here and before the Single Judge.

16. We might perhaps add that the other contentions raised before the learned Single Judge, namely, that Section 17 of the Central Act was wrongly applied and that the consent under Section 40 (1) was wrongly given in the absence of a report by the Collector under Section 5-A, have been rightly repelled by the learned Single Judge in the light of the provisions of Section 17 as amended by Madras Act XXI of 1948 and in the light of the provisions of Section 40 itself. Indeed nothing has been said before us to suggest that he was wrong.

17. In O. P. No. 5201 of 1968, the land acquisition proceedings were commenced under the Cochin Act, and, after its replacement by the Kerala Act, have been continued under the Kerala Act. They have been rightly so continued and we dismiss this petition but make no order as to costs.

18. The petitioner in this petition has the complaint that orders passed by this Court in a previous writ petition filed by him have been disobeyed by the respondents. But a writ petition is not a means of enforcing previous orders of the Court or of dealing with such disobedience.

Order accordingly.

Limitation Act (1963), Article 61 — Invalid transfer by Karnavan of equity of redemption in tarwad property to mortgagee in possession — Possession by mortgagee becomes adverse to tarwad — Suit for redemption barred after 12 years — (Travancore-Ezhava Act (3 of 1100 M. E.) S. 21) — (Travancore Nayar Act (2 of 1100 M. E.) Section 25).

Per Full Bench:

The sale of tarwad property by the karnavan of the tarwad to a mortgagee in possession alters the character of the latter's possession so as to include within its scope of interest of the mortgagor tarwad with the result that, (notwithstanding that the sale was an invalid sale not binding on the tarwad), a suit for redemption would be barred after twelve years of such altered possession. AIR 1962 Ker 164 (FB), Approved; AIR 1963 SC 70, Distinguished. Case law Ref. (Para 2)

Per Raman Nayar, C. J. and P. Govindan Nair, J.:—

It has always been recognized that the karnavan of a tarwad effectively and completely represents the tarwad in dealings with the outside world. When he deals with tarwad property it is as if all the members of the tarwad (all being sui juris) had joined in the transaction. Statutes like Section 21 of the Travancore-Ezhava Act and Section 25 of the Travancore Nayar Act recognize this, for they pre-suppose that the karnavan, and (short of every member of the tarwad joining the transaction, all being sui juris) the karnavan alone, has the capacity to deal with the tarwad property. These statutes only place curbs on the exercise of this power by the karnavan but do not affect his inherent capacity. If he breaks the rules, he acts in excess of authority and not with lack of inherent capacity that is why the transaction he so effects is voidable and not void. (Para 4)

As the karnavan has the capacity to represent the tarwad in its dealings with the outside world, it follows that he has the capacity to consent to a possessory mortgagee so changing the character of his possession as to comprise within its scope the equity of redemption as well, i.e., to put him in possession of the equity of redemption. And, if the transaction by which this is done is not effective to convey title to the mortgagee, then the possession of the equity of redemption by the mortgagee becomes adverse to the tarwad. Case law Ref. (Para 6)

Per Mathew, J., (agreeing):—

Whatever might be the relevancy of the concept of adverse possession of equity of redemption as an intangible right in the case of a third party claiming adversely to the mortgagor by receiving rent or michavaram from the mortgagee in possession under a claim of right, it is doubtful whether a mortgagee in possession to whom an invalid sale of the property was executed by the mortgagor, should show that he has been in adverse possession of the intangible right of the equity of redemption vesting in the mortgagor as a separate right in order to prescribe for title to the full interest of the property. What happens is only that the mortgagee being in exclusive physical control of the property with the limited animus to possess as a mortgagee enlarges his animus to possess the full interest in the property with the consent of the mortgagor, implied in the agreement to terminate the mortgage, and to hold the property as owner. P. C. Chacko, for Appellant; M/s. C. K. Sivasankara Panicker and P. G. P. Panicker, for Respondents.

RAMAN NAYAR, C. J. (on behalf of himself and P. Govindan Nair, J.):— In Mathew v. Ayyappankutty, 1962 Ker LT 61 = (AIR 1962 Ker 164) (FB), a Full Bench of this Court held that the sale of tarwad property by the karnavan of the tarwad to a mortgagee in possession alters the character of the latter's possession so as to include within its scope the interest of the mortgagor tarwad with the result that, notwithstanding that the sale was an invalid sale not binding on the tarwad, a suit for redemption would be barred after twelve years of such altered possession. That is precisely the case here. It was in 1926 that the karnavan of the tarwad to which the property in suit belonged sold the property to the 1st defendant mortgagee who was in possession. The sale was invalid for want of the written consent of all the other adult members of the tarwad as required by Section 21 of the Travancore Ezhava Act by which the tarwad was governed and which had come into force a few months before the sale — only the senior anandaravan had given his written consent by subscribing to the sale deed and there were admittedly two other adult members of the tarwad at the time. It was only in 1952 twenty five years later, that the plaintiff brought his suit for redemption on the strength of a purchase a few months earlier from the then surviving members of the tarwad.

It is not disputed that if 1962 Ker L 61 = (AIR 1962 Ker 164) (FB) was rightly decided, the learned Single Judge who heard the second appeal from which this appeal has been preferred was right in setting aside the decree for redemption passed by the lower appellate Court and restoring the decree of the trial Court dismissing the suit. But the Division Bench which heard this appeal in the first instance thought that the decision in 1962 Ker LT 61 = (AIR 1962 Ker 164) (FB) required reconsideration in the light of the decision in Padma Vithoba v. Mohd. Multani, AIR 1963 SC 70 and has in that view, referred the case to a Full Bench. That is how the case has come up before us.

2. With great respect we think that 1962 Ker LT 61 = (AIR 1962 Ker 164) (FB) was rightly decided and we are able to see nothing in AIR 1963 SC 70 (which has been distinguished by the learned Single Judge) that calls for a reconsideration thereof.

3. When an interest is carved out of property, as, for example, by the grant of a mortgage or a lease or other restricted interest therein, two distinct and separate interests come into being, each by itself a distinct subject of property which can be the subject-matter of independent possession. (See Khirajmal v. Daim, (1905) ILR 32 Cal 296 at pp. 311 and 312 (PC)). True, in the case of a possessory mortgage, the mortgagee is in possession of the tangible property. But that means no more than that he is in possession of the mortgage interest; the mortgagor owner continues in possession of what remains after the transfer effected by the mortgage, namely, what is usually and conveniently called the equity of redemption just as the landlord continues in possession of the reversion notwithstanding that the tenant is in possession of the tangible property.

That is why a person who obtains possession of tangible property under an invalid lease or mortgage prescribes only for a tenant's or mortgagee's title as the case may be. He is regarded as in possession of only that interest in the property to which his animus is directed — the owner is regarded as in possession of the rest, namely, the reversion, or the equity of redemption; and that again is why, generally speaking, a trespasser on tangible property is regarded as in possession of only that interest therein that the person entitled to present possession thereof has — a person trespassing on property in hands of the owner of a restricted interest therein entitling him to present possession thereof, is regarded as in possession only of that restricted interest and not of the whole. He prescribes only for the restricted interest and not for full ownership.

At the same time, it is settled law — AIR 1963 SC 70 is itself sufficient authority for the proposition — that where, by a sale or other transaction, the mortgagor consents to the possessory mortgagee being in possession not merely of the mortgage interest but also of the equity of redemption, he, in effect, delivers possession of the equity of redemption to the mortgagee so that thereafter the possession of the tangible property by the mortgagee involves possession not merely of the mortgage interest but of the equity of redemption as well. And, if the transaction does not effect a valid transfer of title to the equity of redemption, the mortgagee's possession thereof would be adverse to the mortgagor and, by remaining in possession beyond the statutory period, he would prescribe title thereto. The same result would follow in the case of a landlord selling the reversion to the tenant in possession of the tangible property.

What the Supreme Court emphasized in AIR 1963 SC 70 was that the consent necessary to put the possessory mortgagee in possession of the equity of redemption as well so as to prescribe for title thereto, must be by a person competent to give consent, not by a person like a minor who has not the capacity to do so. The question then is not so much whether the transaction by which the consent is given is void or voidable — even a void transaction like a written unregistered sale can put the mortgagee in adverse possession of the equity of redemption: nor even whether the person effecting the transaction had the capacity to do so; but whether he had the capacity to give consent.

4. It has always been recognized that the karnavan of a tarwad effectively and completely represents the tarwad in dealings with the outside world. When he deals with tarwad property it is as if all the members of the tarwad (all being sui juris) had joined in the transaction. Statutes like section 21 of the Travancore-Ezhava Act and Section 25 of the Travancore Nayar Act recognize this, for they pre-suppose that the karnavan, and (short of every member of the tarwad joining the transaction, all being sui juris) the karnavan alone, has the capacity to deal with the tarwad property. These statutes only place curbs on the exercise of this power by the karnavan but do not affect his inherent capacity. If he breaks the rules, he acts in excess of authority, not with lack of inherent capacity — that is why the transaction he so effects is only voidable and not void.

5. This much we think is clear from a plain reading of Section 21 of the Travancore-Ezhava Act:

“21. Sale or mortgage with possession or lease for more than twelve years. — Except for consideration and Tarwad necessity and with the written consent of all the major members of the tarwad, no karnavan or other managing member shall sell Tarwad immovable property, or mortgage it with possession for a period of more than twelve years, or lease it for a period of more than twelve years”.

As we have said it pre-supposes that the karnavan has the capacity to sell the property of the tarwad.

6. If the karnavan has the capacity to represent the tarwad in its dealings with the outside world, it follows that he has the capacity to consent to a possessory mortgagee so changing the character of his possession as to comprise within its scope the equity of redemption as well, in other words, to put him in possession of the equity of redemption. And, if the transaction by which this is done is not effective to convey title to the mortgagee, then the possession of the equity of redemption by the mortgagee becomes adverse to the tarwad.

7. We affirm the decision of the learned Single Judge and dismiss this appeal by the plaintiff with costs.

MATHEW, J.:— 8. In (1905) ILR 32 Cal 296 (PC) the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council observed:

“Their Lordships are satisfied that the possession has been that of the mortgagee throughout, and the question at issue is exclusively one between mortgagor and mortgagee. As between them neither exclusive possession by the mortgagee for any length of time short of the statutory period of 60 years, nor any acquiescence by the mortgagor not amounting to a release of the equity of redemption will be a bar or defence to a suit for redemption if the parties are otherwise entitled to redeem.”

On the basis of these observations the High Court of Madras in Ariyaputhira v. Muthukomaraswami, ILR 37 Mad 423 = (AIR 1914 Mad 489), held that where a person's possession commenced as an usufructuary mortgagee, and subsequently the mortgagor sold the equity of redemption to him, but the sale proved abortive, (for want of registration) and the mortgagee thereafter continued in possession as absolute owner under the purported sale, the possession of the mortgagee must be referred to his possession as mortgagee and cannot in law be deemed as possession as owner adverse to the mortgagor. Sadasiva Iyer, J., on behalf of the Bench said:

“If the original mortgagee continued to hold possession as mortgagee owing to the alleged sale . . . . . (of the equity of redemption) being invalid and ineffective to convey to him the ownership in the equity of redemption, . . . . . he cannot by merely asserting possession as owner under the invalid sale convert his possession as mortgagee into possession as owner even granting that the mortgagor knew and acquiesced in his assertion."

The Privy Council decision in Khiairajmal v. Daim, (1905) ILR 32 Cal 296 (PC) does not seem to extend beyond this, namely, that a mortgagee cannot by his adverse assertion acquire title to the property mortgaged even if the mortgagor knowing such assertion acquiesced in it unless such acquiescence amounts in some way or other to a release of the equity of redemption. The Privy Council, no doubt, said that mere acquiescence by the mortgagor would not be enough to convert the possession of a mortgagee as mortgagee into possession as owner. But where a change in the character of possession of the mortgagee is brought about by an agreement between the mortgagor and the mortgagee the case would be different. Whereas neither assertion by itself nor assertion with acquiescence is sufficient to alter the nature of the mortgagee's possession, the consent of the mortgagor implied in an agreement between the mortgagor and the mortgagee that the mortgagee may hold the property as owner would be sufficient to alter the character of the possession of the mortgagee. In other words, the mortgagor, if sui juris, will be competent to agree to treat the mortgage as terminated and the mortgagee's possession thereafter as that of an owner; in such a case the possession of the mortgagee would become adverse to the mortgagor.

The decision in ILR 37 Mad 423 = (AIR 1914 Mad 489) has been dissented from in Kandasami Pillai v. Chinnappa, ILR 44 Mad 253 = (AIR 1921 Mad 82). The decision of the Supreme Court in AIR 1963 SC 70 is clear that it is by virtue of the change in the animus of the mortgagee as a consequence of the consent of the mortgagor implied in the purported sale of the property, that the possession of the mortgagee becomes adverse.

9. The interest which resides in the mortgagor before foreclosure is generally described as equity of redemption, an expression borrowed from the English law. The expression would suggest that the interest of the mortgagor is a bare equity, something different from what we call ownership. But we know that this is not so, for, the ownership continues with the mortgagor notwithstanding the mortgage, the mortgagee acquiring by virtue of the mortgage only a jus in re aliena. The introduction of the expression into our system was regretted by Dr. Rasbehari Ghose. He said:

"I have been induced to make these observations, not because I have any wish to be hypercritical, but simply because I know of instances in which the whole discussion has been materially coloured by notions, which would scarcely have suggested themselves to any lawyer, if the argument had not been conducted in the technical language of the English law". (See 'Law of Mortgages in India' by R. Ghose, 5th Edn. Vol. I, page 210.)

The right to redeem in Section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act is not the same thing as 'equity of redemption'. In India a host of people besides the mortgagor can redeem. (See Section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act). When a property is mortgaged for a second time by the mortgagor some people would say that the equity of redemption has been mortgaged. This may be a proper way of talking under the English system of the law of mortgage, but is not so in this country. It is the property and not the 'right to redeem' that is mortgaged. The 'property subject to a mortgage' and the 'right to redeem' are not really the same thing. The latter is the right to get back the property on repayment of the mortgage money, and the former, is the property itself, with a liability to discharge a prior mortgage. If what the mortgagor retains after the creation of a mortgage, be the property itself but subject to a liability to make good a loan, it is clear that the mortgagor would be entitled to transfer what he retains, viz., the property. If the ownership remains with the mortgagor, why speak of his possessing merely an equity of redemption?

10. Ownership denotes the relation between a person and an object forming the subject-matter of his ownership. It consists of a complex of rights all of which are rights in rem being good against the whole world and not merely against specific persons. Pollock in his 'First Book of Jurisprudence,' 5th Edn., at page 179 says:

"We must not suppose that all the powers of an owner need be exercisable at once or immediately; he may remain owner though he has parted with some of them for a time. He may for a time even part with his whole powers of use and enjoyment and suspend his power of disposal, provided that he reserves for himself or his successors the right of ultimately reclaiming the thing and being restored to his power."

Salmond in his Book on Jurisprudence, 12th Edn., at page 250 says:

"Nevertheless to speak as if what is owned is always a right runs counter to law and legal usage. It is natural to talk of owning land and chattels, and this usage serves to mark the special relationship existing in such cases between the owner and the material object owned."

(See also 'Elements of Jurisprudence', 13th Edn., page 209 by Holland, and 'Elements of Law', 6th Edn., page 159 by Markby). If the ownership remains with the mortgagor, and what he owns is a thing in law, I am not sure whether there is any justification in treating the thing as intangible. In the Full Bench decision in Sohan Lal v. Mohan Lal, ILR 50 All 956 = (AIR 1923 All 726) (FB), Mukerji, J., observed:

"In the case of a simple mortgage the mortgagor retains possession; in the case of a usufructuary mortgage he parts with possession. In either case he is the mortgagor and, one would expect, his interest is the same. We cannot therefore say that in the case of a simple mortgage, the mortgagor being in possession, his interest is a tangible immovable property, while in the case of an usufructuary mortgage the mortgagor's interest is an intangible property, because he is out of possession. Yet, in some cases it has been decided that such is the case. In my opinion, on principle, there can be no distinction made between the two cases of simple and usufructuary mortgages."

In the same case Kendall, J., after referring to the following observations of the Madras High Court in Ramaswami Pattar v. Chinnan Asari, (1901) ILR 24 Mad 449,

"The equity of redemption in a usufructuary mortgage is only an intangible thing like a reversion . . . . . and it can be transferred by sale only by a registered instrument and not by delivery of the property" observed:

"This view is supported by a reference to Williams on 'Real Property'. With all respect to the learned Judges who expressed this opinion, I would remark that in English law "what is generally understood by the term mortgage is a conveyance of land or other property as security for the payment of money", and the mortgagee has been held to be in law the owner of the mortgaged property".

Sulaiman, Ag. C. J., took a different view. The majority view has been followed in Pheku Mian v. Syed Ali, ILR 15 Pat 772 = (AIR 1937 Pat 178), Venkatasubamma v. Subbayya, AIR 1964 Andh Pra 21, Tukaram v. Atmaram, AIR 1939 Bom 31 and Bhanwarlal v. Dhulilal, ILR (1958) 8 Raj 572 = (AIR 1959 Raj 218).

II. The possession of the property mortgaged is delivered or contracted to be delivered to the mortgagee in an usufructuary mortgage. (See Section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act). It is the possession of the property mortgaged that is delivered or contracted to be delivered, and not the possession of any restricted interest in the property. The mortgagee gets the property under his exclusive physical control. But his animus is to possess the property not as full owner but only for the purpose of taking the usufructs and appropriating them in accordance with the stipulations in the mortgage deed. In other words, although the mortgagee has exclusive physical control of the property, his animus is to possess it only as mortgagee. The mortgagor having lost possession of the property by the mortgage, when he later on sells the equity of redemption to the mortgagee, what he really sells is the property. If the sale is ineffective to convey the property for any reason other than want of capacity of the mortgagor, the consent of the mortgagor implied in the agreement of sale which precedes the sale will terminate the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee, and operate as a permission to the mortgagee to hold the property as owner.

The principle is analogous to the one underlying the concept of traditio brevi manu, that is, by virtue of the agreement, the mortgagee who is in physical control of the property with a limited animus to possess it as mortgagee is permitted to hold it as owner. What happens is only a change in the animus of the mortgagee by virtue of the consent implied in the purported sale. If by the agreement, the mortgagee's right in the property came to an end, the mortgagor would become entitled to possession at once, and if the mortgagor does not enter into possession, the mortgagee's possession would become adverse to the mortgagor. Sulaiman, Ag. C. J., said in ILR 50 All 986 = (AIR 1928 All 726) (FB).

"The case, however, is different where a change in the character of the possession is brought about by an agreement between the parties or with their express consent, as distinguished from a mere acquiescence. I do not see why, if both parties agree and intend that from a particular date the possession of the mortgagee over the property should cease to be that of a mortgagee and be adverse as against the mortgagor, such a change cannot be recognised or be effectual."

It is fictitious to talk of a delivery of possession of an intangible right like the equity of redemption. Incorporeal possession of a right by a person other than the owner of the right means the de facto exercise by the person of the de jure right inhering in the owner. In the case of coporeal possession, one must actually enjoy or exercise the right in order to possess it.

"But there is a sense in which possession of a right necessarily involves the exercise of the right in question. In this sense I can be said to possess a right where I exercise a claim as if it were a right. There may be no right in reality; and when there is a right, it may be vested in some other person, and not in the possessor. If I possess a way over another's land, it may or may not be a right of way; and even if it is a right of way, it may be owned by some else, though possessed by me." (See 'Salmond on Jurisprudence', 12th Edn., pages 291, 292.)

12. Whatever might be the relevancy of the concept of adverse possession of equity of redemption as an intangible right in the case of a third party claiming adversely to the mortgagor by receiving rent or michavaram from the mortgagee in possession under a claim of right, I am not sure that a mortgagee in possession to whom an invalid sale of the property was executed by the mortgagor, should show that he has been in adverse possession of the intangible right of the equity of redemption vesting in the mortga-

gor as a separate right in order to prescribe for title to the full interest of the property. I think, what happens is only that the mortgagee gains in exclusive physical control of the property with the limited animus to possess as a mortgagee enlarges his animus to possess the full interest in the property with the consent of the mortgagor, implied in the agreement to terminate the mortgage, and to hold the property as owner.

I agree with My Lord the Chief Justice that 1962 Ker LT 61 = (AIR 1962 Ker 164) (FB) was correctly decided, and would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Second Appeal No. 280 of 1966, D/- 16-1-1970

Evidence Act (1872), Section 114 — Presumption that possession goes with title — Applies to all kinds of land.

The presumption that possession goes with title is not limited to particular kinds of cases where proof of actual possession is impossible on account of the nature of land such as boundary land, forest land or submerged land. The presumption applies to all kinds of land and where the plaintiff proved his title but not any act of possession and the defendant did not prove possession except at some intervals within 12 years of suit, the presumption that possession follows title will come into play. S. Bhoothalinga Iyer, for Appellant.

JUDGMENT:— This appeal is in a suit for recovery of landed property with incidental reliefs. The Munsif dismissed the suit finding the plaintiff to have failed to prove possession with herself or her predecessor within 12 years of the suit. The Subordinate Judge, on appeal, decreed the suit holding her to have given sufficient evidence to show her possession within 12 years prior to the suit. Hence this second appeal by the 1st defendant.

2. Though the finding of the Subordinate Judge that "there is sufficient evidence to show that the plaintiff has been in possession within 12 years prior to the date of the suit" was sufficient for decreeing the suit, he has cited Vaidhyathanaswamy v. Lakshmi Amma, 1962 Ker LT 577 and observed "if the oral evidence on both sides is to be treated as equally unsatisfactory, the case should have been decided on the basis of the presumption arising from title". Counsel for appellant challenged that proposition, and canvassed its reconsideration. Counsel is not prepared to deny existence of a legal presumption of possession going along with title, but urges that such presumption would arise only in cases where proof of actual possession is impossible on account of the nature of the property as a forest land or a submerged land. To me it appears that if there exists a presumption of law that possession goes with title it must apply to all kinds of land. That legal presumption cannot be limited to lands of particular kinds any more than the legal presumption of paternity under Section 112, Evidence Act, can be limited to people of particular communities.

3. The evidence of a legal presumption that possession goes along with title cannot now be seriously doubted. It was ruled by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council as early as in 1873 in Runjeet Ram Panday v. Goburdhun Ram Panday, (1873) 20 WR 25 at p. 30 (PC).

"Now the ordinary presumption would be that possession went with the title. That presumption cannot, of course, be of any avail in the presence of clear evidence to the contrary; .....

4. The function of a presumption in law is stated in Salmond on Jurisprudence, 12th Edn., page 73, thus:

"This discordance between law and fact may come about in more ways than one. Its most frequent cause is the establishment of legal presumptions, whereby one fact is recognised by law as sufficient proof of another fact, whether it is in truth sufficient for that purpose or not. Such legal presumptions — Præsumptiones juris — are of two kinds, being either conclusive or rebuttable. A presumption of the first kind, sometimes called a præsumptio juris et de jure, constrains the Courts to infer the existence of one fact from the existence of another, even though this inference could be proved to be false. A presumption of the second kind requires the Courts to draw such an inference even though there is no sufficient evidence to support it, provided only that there is no sufficient evidence to establish the contrary inference."

Proof of title is the condition when only the presumption of possession can come to play and when it thus comes to play it requires the Court to find possession with the legal owner unless there is sufficient evidence before it to find contrariwise. It follows that if neither party has adduced any evidence as to possession, then the presumption stands uncontroverted and must govern decision on possession.

5. The above proposition appears well affirmed in the decision of the Supreme Court in Kashi Bai v. Sudha Rani Ghose, AIR 1958 SC 434, which concerned a suit for recovery of landed property after fixation of intermediate boundary where there was no proof of the plaintiff's possession, and all the evidence was that in the period 1917 to 1945 the defendant, the neighbouring owner, had been in possession and enjoyment of the land, by working a coal mine therein, in the years 1917/1918, 1923 to 1926, 1931 to 1933, 1939 to 1944 to date of suit in 1945. Title to the land was found with the plaintiff. The Supreme Court observed that during the intervals that the defendant did not show physical possession with himself, possession must be held to have reverted to the owner, and therefore the plaintiff has to succeed. The facts of the case and the inference drawn thereon, which are material for understanding the decision, are at paragraphs 4 and 7 of the judgment, which may be quoted with advantage here.

"(4) On 24th March, 1945 Brojendra Nath Ghose, Vishwa Nath Prasad and Nagendra Nath Bose respondents 1-3 as plaintiffs 1-3 brought a suit (Suit No. 16 of 1945) against Sreemathi Kashi Bai, defendant 1, now appellant and against Manilal Beeharlal Sengvi defendant 2 now respondent 10 for fixation of the intermediate boundary and for possession of the area trespassed upon by the defendants and for compensation for coal illegally removed by the latter and also for an injunction. They alleged that the defendants had wrongfully taken possession of the area in dispute shown in the map attached to the plaint and had illegally removed coal from their mine. The defendants in their written statement of 29th June, 1945, denied the allegations made by the plaintiffs. They pleaded that the area in dispute was acquired by Nanji Khongarji and Lira Raja and had been worked by them and they had been in sole, exclusive, uninterrupted and undisturbed possession of the area openly to the knowledge of the plaintiffs in that suit and had therefore acquired title by adverse possession.

The claim of ownership which they had set up as a result of acquisition from Bennett and Bellwood was negatived by the Courts below and is no longer in dispute before us, the sole point that survives being one of adverse possession.

(7) On behalf of the appellant the learned Attorney-General submitted that the carrying on of the mining operations in the area in dispute even though intermittent as found by the Courts below could only lead to one inference that the possession of the area as well as of the mine was of the appellant and as she had prescribed for the requisite period of 12 years, her possession had matured into ownership by adverse possession. In our opinion the operations carried on by the appellant were inconsistent with the continuous, open and hostile possession or with the assertion of hostile title for the prescribed period of 12 years necessary to constitute adverse possession. It was contended that for the purpose of adverse possession in regard to a coal mine it was not necessary that it should have been worked for 12 years continuously and it was sufficient if the appellant had carried on mining operations for a period of 12 years even with long stoppages as in the instant case. But we are unable to accept this contention. Even though it may not be necessary for the purpose of establishing adverse possession over a coal mining area to carry on mining operation continuously for a period of 12 years, continuous possession of the mining area and the mine would be a necessary ingredient to establish adverse possession. What has been proved by the appellant is that the two inclines opened by Bennett were worked in 1917 or 1918 by the predecessor in interest of the appellant, there were no mining operations till 1923 when they were restarted and were continued till 1926. The operations ceased in 1926 and were recommenced in 1931 and carried on till 1933 when they ceased again till 1939 and whether they were carried on in 1939 or not is not quite clear but there were no operations from 1939 to 1944 when they were recommenced by the appellant. During the period when there were no mining operations no kind of possession of the appellant has been proved and thus the presumption of law is not rebutted that during the period when the operations had ceased to be carried on the possession would revert to the true owner."

The above dictum shows clearly that, when the plaintiff has proved his title but has not proved any act of possession at any time within 12 years of the suit, and the defendant has not proved possession with himself except at some intervals within 12 years of the suit, the presumption that possession follows title comes into play in aid of the titleholder. It is as if the question is not whether the plaintiff who has proved his title has proved his possession also, but whether the defendant had proved possession with himself for all the 12 years preceding the suit. In other words, the presumption acts as prima facie proof of possession of the person who has proved title to immovable property.

6. I am afraid that the contention that the presumption applies only to cases of impossibility of actual possession as with forests or submerged lands involves a fallacy. Law never insists or expects an impossible thing to be done. If, on account of the nature of the property, possession cannot be proved, it is too much to say that law expects any proof of actual possession, as would be the case when the presumption is drawn and onus is cast on the contestant to rebut it. It follows that in the case of such properties, possession is irrelevant and rights have to be adjudged only on the basis of title.

7. Counsel urged that the reversal in Ponnamm Vally v. Achuthan Unni, 1968 Ker LT 86 of my dictum in 1962 Ker LT 577 applying the presumption to cases of boundary disputes really amounts to a negation of the presumption to such and similar cases. The argument appears to have some force and merits examination. Though I have doubted in Varkey v. Joseph, 1966 Ker LT 93 the correctness of the abovesaid reversal, nothing further seems to have been said on the question, as no later pronouncement has been cited before me.

In the Limitation Act, 1908, Article 142 prescribed for a suit for recovery of immovable property a period of limitation of 12 years from date of dispossession or discontinuance of possession by the plaintiff, and Section 3 of the Act directed every suit instituted after the period of limitation to be dismissed although limitation has not been set up as a defence. On these provisions, the Courts held that the plaintiff in every suit is bound to show his suit to be within time and that Article 142 required the plaintiff in a suit for recovery of possession of land to show that he had possession of the land within 12 years of the suit. But there was nothing in the Section or the Article to indicate that, in the discharge of such onus, the plaintiff is not entitled to rely on the legal presumption that arises from proof of his title to the land. If on proof of title a legal presumption of possession with him arises, that is verily prima facie proof of possession. The boot will then be on the leg of the defendant to controvert it. This aspect appears to have been overlooked by many a learned Judge in decisions, and that, in spite of the pronouncement of the Privy Council in a suit to recover lands in Mt. Allah Rakhi v. Shah Mohammed Abdur Rahim, AIR 1934 PC 77 at p. 61 = 61 Ind App 50 that where there is no doubt that the title to the lands was in the plaintiff the onus was on the defendant to prove the adverse possession relied on. The following observation of the Privy Council in Hafiz Mohammed Fateh

"The proper test to be applied in a case of this nature is whether the predecessors of the plaintiff, for a period of 12 years or more exercised such dominion over the property in suit as to justify the inference of fact that they were in possession of the whole. It was not necessary that they should prove affirmatively that their predecessors had actually been in physical possession of every square inch of his land, but it should have been considered whether the acts of possession which had been proved would legitimately show that the predecessors of the plaintiff had enjoyed dominion over this property in the manner in which such dominion is normally exercised. Their Lordships agree that this is the correct test to apply." In my opinion, the above observation of the Privy Council applies well to a suit to settle a boundary dispute, where title to the respective lands (survey numbers) is admitted or proved. The presumption of possession following title must discharge the onus, if at all, on the plaintiff to prove his possession and therefore the decision has to rest "on title unless the defendant proves his prescriptive title by adverse possession in regard to the encroached area." (See 1962 Ker LT 577 at p. 588). It is unfortunate that the above dictum happened to be reversed in 1968 Ker LT 86. It is fortunate that Article 142 of the Limitation Act, 1908, which gave rise to decisions that ignored the presumption of possession following title, has been omitted in the new Limitation Act, 1963. However, in the light of the clear pronouncement of the Supreme Court on the operation of the presumption in AIR 1958 SC 434, cited above, I do not see any ground for reconsideration of my views expressed in 1962 Ker LT 577.

8. In the result, I accept the decision of the Subordinate Judge as right. This second appeal fails and is dismissed hereby.

Appeal dismissed.

Medical Officer on the ground that in making the appointment the Govt. had acted in violation of the Rules relating to such appointments appended to G. O. Ms. 665 dated 4-9-1953 (Kerala) cannot succeed because those rules which can be traced only to the executive power of the Government under Article 162 cannot be regarded as laws or to have the force of law. Since the Government by virtue of its powers under Article 162 read with List II, Entry 41 in the 7th Schedule is competent to create a post and to fill it by a competent person the appointment is not ultra vires. M/s. Manuel T. Paikaday and A. C. Jose, for Petitioner; M/s. S. A. Nagendran and N. N. D. Pillai, for Respondent No. 1.

MADHAVAN NAIR, J.:— This petition has been moved by a medical graduate against an Honorary Medical Officer, and is for the reliefs:

"..... to issue a writ of quo warranto against the 1st respondent, and

(i) Declare that the post that the first respondent now claims to occupy in the General Hospital at Ernakulam is vacant;

(ii) Order the ouster of the first respondent from such office and restrain him from exercising any functions or duties relating to such office;

(iii) .....
(iv) all such other consequential or ancillary reliefs as may be deemed just and necessary in the circumstances of the case; and allow this writ petition with costs".

Relief No. (iii) has been withdrawn and the State of Kerala, who was originally implicated as the 2nd respondent to this motion, has been removed from the party array by the petitioner as per C. M. P. No. 46 of 1969, which was allowed by the Court on January 8, 1969. However, we have heard the learned Advocate-General as amicus curiae in the matter.

2. The allegations in the motion, relevant to the reliefs now urged, are thus:

"..... the Government had .... declared ..... on September 24th, 1968, that the 'Part-time Honorary service is stopped altogether all over the State with effect from 1st October 1968 ..... this ending of the part-time honorary service had long since become expedient in the light of the fact that it had been started for the sole reason that at the time there were no sufficient number of qualified medical personnel available for appointment in regular Government service ..... This state of 'paucity of qualified medical personnel for appointment in Government service' however rapidly disappeared, and ..... there are already more than 140 qualified medical graduates of the State waiting for appointment and a further about 60 more such hands would be finishing their 'House Surgeoncy' this month and joining this army of unemployed medical personnel. In the face of this situation the Government can have absolutely no just cause or lawful right or legal authority to appoint any more such honorary and part-time officers in any of its hospitals or medical institutions in the State. Any such appointment if made will therefore be illegal and ultra vires of its powers under law, as well as it would be mala fide, and a manifest abuse of, or fraud on power. Nevertheless it is seen claimed by the first respondent ..... that he has again been re-appointed ..... to continue for another term as a part-time honorary medical officer in the General Hospital Ernakulam. .... Indeed, apart from the position that the Government has now on authority under law to make such appointment as has already been indicated above, any such appointment could ever be validly and honestly made only in strict accordance with the existing rules and notifications expressly laying down the procedure governing such appointments, namely the rules published as appendix to G. O. MS 665 dated 4th September, 1963, of the Health and Labour (A) Department, Government of Kerala. This has not been done in the case of the 1st respondent's alleged appointment, although he appears to be still in actual possession of the office in question. He is therefore in such possession of the office illegally and as a mere usurper; ....

The respondent has produced the Government Order dated 16-10-1963 by which he has been appointed as Honorary Medical Officer at the General Hospital, Ernakulam. It is signed by the Deputy Secretary "By order of the Governor". That order shows that only two posts of Honorary Medical Officers have been created by Government in 1968, and the respondent and another, whose appointment is not in challenge here, were appointed thereto.

3. The scope of enquiry in a motion for quo warranto has been indicated by the Supreme Court in The University of Mysore v. C. O. Govinda Rao, AIR 1965 SG 491 thus:

"..... the procedure of quo warranto confers jurisdiction and authority on the judiciary to control executive action in the matter of making appointments to public offices against the relevant statutory provisions, it also protects a citizen from being deprived of public office to which he may have a right. It would thus be seen that if these proceedings are adopted subject to the conditions recognised in that behalf, they tend to protect the public from usurpers of public office; in some cases, persons not entitled to public office may be allowed to occupy them and to continue to hold them as a result of the connivance of the executive or with its active help, and in such cases, if the jurisdiction of the Courts to issue writ of quo warranto is properly invoked, the usurper can be ousted and the person entitled to the post allowed to occupy it. It is thus clear that before a citizen can claim a writ of quo warranto, he must satisfy the Court, inter alia, that the office in question is a public office and is held by a usurper without legal authority, and that necessarily leads to the enquiry as to whether the appointment of the said alleged usurper has been made in accordance with law or not. .... In fact, in issuing the writ, the High Court has made certain observations which show that the High Court applied tests which would legitimately be applied in the case of writs of certiorari. In the judgment, it has been observed that the error in this case is undoubtedly a manifest error. That is a consideration which is more germane and relevant in a procedure for a writ of certiorari. What the High Court should have considered is whether the appointment made by the Chancellor had contravened any statutory or binding rule or ordinance. ...."

4. Quo warranto is only information as to the authority of the respondent to hold a substantive public office. When the respondent has produced in Court the Government Order appointing him to the office, the Court has only to enquire if the appointment is in violation of any statutory provision on the matter. It has been alleged by the petitioner that the respondent's appointment was not "in strict accordance with .... the rules published as Appendix to G. O. MS. 665 dated 4th September, 1963." These rules do not refer to applications being invited or entertained for appointment; but provide for recommendation by a committee for appointment as Honorary Medical Officers. The rules are published in the Kerala Gazette dated 10th September, 1963, along with G. O. MS. 665, to which it is appended, and a form of application. That G. O. invited applications in the form given for appointment as Honorary Medical Officers to be submitted before 15-9-1963 and it is stated at the bar that 99 inclusive of the present respondent were then appointed.

The question material is whether the rules appended to that G. O. detailing the terms and conditions of service of the Honorary Medical Officers are statutory Rules. Obviously, and admittedly, they are not. The contention is that the rules having been framed by the Government by virtue of its powers under Article 162 of the Constitution, must be taken to have the force of law, and therefore an appointment made without conformity therewith will entitle a writ of quo warranto.

We find little force in this argument. In G. J. Fernandez v. State of Mysore, AIR 1967 SC 1753 the Supreme Court has observed:

"Learned counsel for the appellant is unable to point out any statute under which these instructions in the Code were framed. .... But his contention is that they are rules issued under Article 162 of the Constitution. Now Article 162 provides that 'executive power of a State shall extend to the matters with respect to which the legislature of the State has power to make laws'. This Article in our opinion merely indicates the scope of the executive power of the State; it does not confer any power on the State Government to issue rules thereunder. As a matter of fact wherever the Constitution envisages issue of rules it has so provided in specific terms. We may, for example, refer to Article 309, the proviso to which lays down in specific terms that the President or the Governor of a State may make rules regulating the recruitment and the conditions of service of persons appointed to services and posts under the Union or the State. We are therefore of opinion that Article 162 does not confer any power on the State Government to frame rules and it only indicates the scope of the executive power of the State. . . . . We are therefore of opinion that instructions contained in the Code are mere administrative instructions and are not statutory rules. Therefore even if there has been any breach of such executive instructions that does not confer any right on the appellant to apply to the Court for quashing orders in breach of such instructions."

5. Counsel for petitioner contends that the Government can act and therefore appoint respondent to a public office only under a law and that therefore the Rules under which the respondent is appointed must have been intended and must be reckoned to have the force of law. In B. N. Nagarajan v. State of Mysore, AIR 1966 SC 1942 the Supreme Court has observed:

"First it is not obligatory under proviso to Article 309 to make rules of recruitment etc., before a service can be constituted or a post created or filled. . . . . Secondly, the State Government has executive power, in relation to all matters with respect to which the legislature of the State has power, to make laws. It follows from this that the State Government will have executive power in respect of List II, Entry 41, State Public Services. It was settled by this Court in Ram Jawaya Kapur v. State of Punjab, AIR 1955 SC 549, that it is not necessary that there must be a law already in existence before the executive is enabled to function and that the powers of the executive are limited merely to the carrying out of these laws. We see nothing in terms of Article 309 of the Constitution which abridges the power of the Executive to act under Article 162 of the Constitution without a law".

It is obvious that the Rules in question, which are not traced to any statute but only to the executive power under Article 162 of the Constitution, cannot be regarded as laws or to have the force of law. The allegation that the respondent's appointment is in contravention of rules having force of law has therefore to be overruled.

If the Rules have no force of law and are only administrative instructions, their violation will not sustain a writ motion under Article 226 of the Constitution. Ext. P-1 shows clearly that the Government had on October 16, 1968, sanctioned the appointment of the respondent as an Honorary Medical Officer in the General Hospital, Ernakulam. This petition is filed on 24th October, 1968, for information as to his appointment. The challenge delivered to the appointment as not warranted by law fails. As the Government by virtue of its powers under Art. 162 read with List II, Entry 41 in the VII Schedule, is competent to create a post and to fill it by a competent person, it cannot be said that the respondent's appointment is ultra vires, and this motion for a writ of quo warranto has also to fail.

6. Counsel contended that whenever a post in public service is created and filled, the Government is bound to observe the provisions of Article 16 of the Constitution and advertise an invitation for applications thereto, which has not been done in this case and therefore the respondent's appointment is illegal. Such a case has not been put forth in this petition, and therefore cannot be urged at the final hearing thereon. Vide: The Tropical Insurance Co. Ltd. v. Union of India, AIR 1955 SC 789.

Secondly, a challenge to a particular appointment as contravening Article 16 of the Constitution cannot be urged by one who was not and is not an aspirant to the post. Referring to Article 16 of the Constitution, in All India Station Masters' and Assistant Station Masters' Association v. General Manager, Central Railway, AIR 1960 SC 384 the Supreme Court has held:

"Equality of opportunity in matters of employment can be predicated only as between persons, who are either seeking the same employment or have obtained the same employment".

In Calcutta Gas Co., Ltd. v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1962 SC 1044 the Supreme Court has pointed out:

"The right that can be enforced under Article 226 also shall ordinarily be the personal or individual right of the petitioner himself, though in the case of some of the writs like habeas corpus or quo warranto this rule may have to be relaxed or modified".

The petitioner wanted an appointment and has been appointed only as a regular Medical Officer in the Health Service, and not as an Honorary Medical Officer. He cannot claim to be personally aggrieved by the respondent's appointment to a post to which he was no aspirant.

Counsel for petitioner contends that the requirement of a personal interest to sustain a writ motion does not extend to motion for quo warranto, which is the case here. We are afraid that challenge of an order under Article 16 of the Constitution cannot be heard in a motion for quo warranto: it can be heard in a motion for certiorari or prohibition. The scope of a quo warranto is very limited, namely, whether the appointment of the respondent is by a proper authority and in accordance with law if there is an express statute governing such appointment. The argument that what cannot be urged for other writs can well be urged for a writ of quo warranto, and therefore the denial of equality under Article 16 which the petitioner could not have urged in a motion for certiorari or prohibition can be urged in the present motion for a quo warranto, is not warranted by the nature of the procedure pointed out by the Supreme Court (AIR 1965 SC 491) and has to be rejected.

Counsel for petitioner cited Narayan Keshav Dandekar v. R. C. Rath, AIR 1963 Madh Pra 17 where reference has been made to a violation of Article 18 of the Constitution as a ground for issuance of a writ of quo warranto. In that case their Lordships of the Madhya Pradesh High Court have found the impugned appointment to have been made in contravention of "Section 58 of the Madhya Bharat Municipal Corporation Act," and that itself necessitated the issuance of a quo warranto. Their Lordships went further to point out other defects in the impugned appointment and observed that it violated Article 18 of the Constitution and ultimately concluded the judgment by issue of a quo warranto. In our opinion, that decision cannot be a precedent for issuance of a writ of quo warranto for mere contravention of Article 18 of the Constitution.

In Abdul Rahiman Khan v. Sadatva Tripathi, AIR 1969 SC 302 the Supreme Court has held a contract with the State not complying with Article 299 of the Constitution and therefore unenforceable against the State to be a contract disqualifying the contractor from standing for election to the legislature. That is clear precedent that what is not in conformity with provisions of the Constitution cannot be ignored for all purposes. A Government Order not conforming with Article 16 of the Constitution may be quashed by a certiorari but may be a sufficient answer to a quo warranto. Possession of a public office under a Government order is not usurpation of office, for which alone quo warranto lies, and even if the Government Order is violative of fundamental rights it will not be void, though quashable by a writ of certiorari.

7. In view of our conclusions above, it is unnecessary to refer to the other citations made by the learned advocate for the petitioner for the proposition "that an executive action like an appointment to a new office made in violation of the guarantees of equal opportunity conferred by Article 18 of the Constitution is not in accordance with law and therefore illegal and void incapable of supporting the occupation of a public office lawfully."

8. The petition is found to be without force and is hereby dismissed. We make no order as to costs on this motion.

Petition dismissed.

Madhavan Pillai, Appellant v. Mrs. Katherine M. Pillai, Respondent.

A. S. No. 108 of 1969, D/- 27-2-1970 against order of Addl. Dist. Court, Ernakulam in O. P. No. 1 of 1968.

Divorce Act (1869), Section 22 — Judicial separation — Decree for on ground of cruelty.

Where the husband deposed and proved that the wife attempted to stab him and on another occasion threatened to kill him by poisoning, that she attacked him with a bath stool at midnight and was saved by his driver, that she poured Kerosene oil on his trousers which were set fire to and thrown on him and that on one night he was locked out and compelled to go to a hotel with only the banian and underwear he was wearing:

Held the husband was entitled to a decree for judicial separation — Test laid down by Lord Pearce in Collins v. Collins, (1963) 2 All ER 968, adopted. (Para 24).

T. N. Subramonia Iyer, for Appellant; K.

Chandrasekharan, for Respondent.

KRISHNAMOORTHY IYER, J.: The husband aged 82, who is a Hindu, petitioned for judicial separation against his wife aged 48, who is a Roman Catholic Christian, on grounds of cruelty and adultery. The wife denied the allegations. The additional District Judge, Ernakulam dismissed the petition finding that the husband has not proved both the grounds. The appeal is filed against the said decision.

2. The parties were married in Delhi on the 22nd day of April, 1918 before the Registrar of Marriages under the provisions of the Christian Marriage Act. There are three daughters born to them after their marriage and they are Sudha, Geeta and Uma aged 16, 14 and 8 years.

3. At the time of marriage, the husband was Deputy Controller of Rubber in the Government of India. Towards the end of April, 1948, the wife left for her native place at Trivandrum. The husband was in Delhi till the beginning of 1949 when he was transferred to Calcutta where the wife joined him. They were residing in Calcutta as husband and wife till the end of 1951, when the husband resigned the Government job and joined Dunlop Rubber Company at Kottayam. The parties were residing in Kottayam till the middle of 1955. The office of Dunlop Rubber Company was thereafter shifted to Cochin and the parties were from 1956 residing in Ernakulam.

4. The husband's case is that from 1959 onwards the wife was conducting herself towards him with great harshness and cruelty and frequently abusing him in the coarsest and most insulting language, that she has on some occasions physically assaulted him, that on several occasions she had locked him out of the house compelling him to take residence in hotels at Ernakulam, that on account of her frequent violent outbursts he had to admit the children in St. Teresa's Convent in Ernakulam, that before the date of the petition she had left him and has been staying in Trivandrum where she is living in adultery, that her behaviour subjected to him to frequent emotional upsets which has caused an abnormal increase in his blood pressure and that it is not possible for him to endure her any more.

5. While denying the allegations of the husband, the wife stated that the husband is addicted to alcoholic drinks, he used to return home late hours in the night and abuse her and children and sometimes even beat her, that he used to stay on some nights in hotels for boozing and that the children have been admitted in the Convent to improve them in their studies. The wife would allege that the husband stayed with her in Trivandrum for three days in September, 1966 when he had sexual relationship with her.

6. In a rejoinder, the husband has denied his staying with the wife for three days in September, 1966 and stated further that normal marital life with the wife had been impossible since 1959.

7. The learned counsel for the husband fairly conceded before us that the evidence regarding the plea of adultery is very meagre and that he is withdrawing the said averment. He therefore confined his attack to the finding of the learned Judge that cruelty has not been proved.

8. Though there was some dispute in the trial court, it was agreed before us that the provisions of the Indian Divorce Act (IV of 1869) apply to the parties and the appeal was argued on that basis. Sections 22 and 23 are the relevant provisions.

9. Section 22 reads:

"No decree shall hereafter be made for a divorce a mensa et toro but the husband or wife may obtain a decree of judicial separation, on the ground of adultery, or cruelty, or desertion without reasonable excuse for two years or upwards, and such decree shall have effect of a divorce a mensa et toro under the existing law, and such other legal effect as hereinafter mentioned".

10. Section 23 reads:

"Application for judicial separation on any one of the grounds aforesaid may be made by either husband or wife by petition to the District Court or the High Court; and the Court, on being satisfied of the truth of the statements made in such petition, and that there is no legal ground why the application should not be granted, may decree judicial separation accordingly."

11. Section 7 of the Indian Divorce Act requires Courts in India to give relief subject to the provisions of the Act on the principles and rules which are as nearly as may be conformable to the principles and rules on which the English Divorce Courts for the time being act and give relief.

12. No decided case either in England or in India has ever attempted to give a comprehensive definition of the term "cruelty" in Matrimonial cases. The word is not defined in the Indian Divorce Act. The term "cruelty" is a word which should take its meaning from the context. In Jamieson v. Jamieson, 1952 AC 525 Lord Tucker in the course of his speech pointed out:

"..... Judges have always carefully refrained from attempting a comprehensive definition of cruelty for the purposes of matrimonial suits, and experience has shown the wisdom of this course. It is in my view equally undesirable—if not impossible—by judicial pronouncement to create certain categories of acts or conduct as having or lacking the nature or quality which render them capable or incapable in all circumstances of amounting to cruelty in the cases where no physical violence is averred."

Agreeing with the above passage Lord Pearce observed in Gollins v. Gollins, 1963-2 All ER 966 at p. 992:

"But cruelty is a question of fact and degree, and no legal formula can resolve its peculiar problems. It would no doubt simplify decisions in accident cases if the law evolved a legal principle that all driving over forty m. p. h. is negligent and that no driving under that speed could be negligence; but such a principle would be an evasion of the court's duty to decide the question of fact. So too with cruelty cases which depend on an even wider variety of matters than negligence cases. The particular circumstances of the home, the temperaments and emotions of both the parties and their status and their way of life, their past relationship and almost every circumstance that attends the act or conduct complained of may all be relevant."

Lord Reid in King v. King, 1952-2 All ER 584 at p 598 observed:

"I do not intend to try to define cruelty. I doubt whether any definition would apply equally well to cases where there has been physical violence and to cases of nagging, or to cases where there has been a deliberate intention to hurt and to cases where temperament and unfortunate circumstances have caused much of the trouble."

Harman, L. J., in Le Brocq v. Le Brocq, 1964-3 All ER 464 which is a decision of the Court of Appeal said:

"Counsel for the respondent husband ended his address with the words: 'Cruel' means 'cruel'. With that I agree. I think, moreover, that 'cruel' is not used in any esoteric or 'divorce court' sense of that word, but that the conduct complained of must be something which an ordinary man or a jury—I suppose this court sits as a jury—would describe as 'cruel' if the story were fully told. There need not be blows. (There is no question here now of blows). There need not be any physical force used (there can be words which would be much worse than blows with a saucepan) but there must be something as to which a jury would be able to say, when they heard it related, 'Well, that was cruel of him', before a husband can be branded with the serious charge of being cruel to his wife."

13. The whole of the law relating to legal cruelty in matrimonial cases is only Judge-made law and there has been considerable divergence of view revealed in the judgments of the Divisional Court, Court of Appeal and the House of Lords. The range of the reported decisions in cruelty cases is so large that any attempt to reconcile them will only be futile. In the recent case of Gollins v. Gollins, 1963-2 All ER 966 decided by the House of Lords the diversity of judicial opinion has been traced and it shows how uncertain the law is on the concept of legal cruelty in matrimonial cases.

14. Russell v. Russell, 1897 AC 395 with a powerful dissent took the view that to find cruelty it is necessary that the conduct complained of must be such as to cause danger to health—bodily or mental—or a reasonable apprehension thereof and the Court of Appeal in Kaslefsky v. Kaslefsky, 1950-2 All ER 398 held that the conduct on the part of the offending spouse must be in some sense aimed at or directed against the complaining spouse. But in 1963-2 All ER 966 the House of Lords though not unanimously disapproved the view in 1950-2 All ER 398 that intention to injure is necessary to establish cruelty. In the former case Lord Reid observed:

"If the conduct complained of and its consequences are so bad that the petitioner must have a remedy, then it does not matter what was the state of the respondent's mind. That I shall develop in Williams v. Williams, (1963) 2 All ER 991. In other cases the state of his mind is material and may be crucial."

Lord Pearce said in the same case:

"Allowances must always be made for temperament, and mere temperamental disharmony simpliciter is not cruelty. But if a temperament which naturally tends to unkindness or selfishness or callousness develops to a point at which its acts are cruel, whether intentionally or not, it cannot be right to say that the other spouse must endure it without relief. Nor can one helpfully say that development of character is within its own sphere if its emanations affect and cause injury to the other spouse."

The theory that law of Divorce is partly punitive and we should therefore look to criminal law for guidance is not being accepted as correct in recent times. In the course of his speech Lord Pearce in 1963-2 All ER 994 at p. 1022 said:

"I cannot accept the argument that divorce is partly punitive and should, therefore, look to the criminal law for guidance. The dissolution or permanent interruption of a union, which is in theory life-long and indissoluble, cannot be justified by any logic. But the frailties of humanity produce various situations which demand practical relief and the divorce Acts owe their origin to a merciful appreciation of that demand. Any extension of the area of relief has always been advocated on the ground that there are situations of hardship that must be, alleviated, and has been contested on the ground that to extend relief would create corresponding hardship to the other party and would weaken the important and sacred institution of matrimony. Never does an intention to punish enter into the debate; nor is an extension of the grounds of divorce ever advocated or opposed on the ground that it will extend the area of punishment of errant spouses. It is true that the divorce law of England, following the ecclesiastical law, is founded on the concept of the matrimonial offence. That concept is used to give some justification for breaking an indissoluble union against the will of the offending party. But in the Divorce Acts there is nothing that suggests an intention to punish. I do not find anything in the divorce Acts to justify a theory that the law is intended to punish. They appear to intend a practical alleviation of intolerable situations with as little hardship as may be upon the party against whom relief is sought."

On this subject A. L. Goodhart the Editor of the Law Quarterly Review has said in his Article on cruelty, desertion and insanity in Matrimonial Law, (1963) 79 Law Quarterly Review 93 at page 106:

"A century ago it may have been in accord with contemporary thought to speak of the respondent's guilt in all instances in which a marriage had so far broken down that the only solution was a divorce, but today the point of view that divorce is founded on crime or even on constructive crime, to use that misleading word, is out of date both from the legal stand point and from that of the social sciences. This does not mean that there is a failure to recognise that the breakdown of a marriage is a misfortune both for the parties themselves, and especially for the children, but it is a recognition that to deal with such a situation as if it were criminal in nature is unrealistic, and, therefore, unhelpful. It is a hindrance to, rather than a support of, the institution of marriage."

15. In Halsbury's Laws of England the concept of legal cruelty with reference to matrimonial cases is summed up in Vol. 12, 3rd Edition, page 270, paragraph 516 in the following words:

"The general rule in all questions of cruelty is that the whole matrimonial relations must be considered, and that rule is of special value when the cruelty consists not of violent acts, but of injurious reproaches, complaints, accusations or taunts. Before coming to a conclusion, the Judge must consider the impact of the personality and conduct of one spouse on the mind of the other, and all incidents and quarrels between the spouses must be weighed from that point of view. In determining what constitutes cruelty regard must be had to the circumstances of each particular case, keeping always in view the physical and mental condition of the parties, and their character and social status."

16. In this state of law, we will adopt the test laid down by Lord Pearce in 1963-2 All ER 966 as it appears to us a safe guide to understand the meaning of 'cruelty' in matrimonial cases. The learned Judge said:

"It is impossible to give a comprehensive definition of cruelty, but when reprehensible conduct or departure from the normal standards of conjugal kindness causes injury to health or an apprehension of it, it is, I think, cruelty if a reasonable person, after taking due account of the temperament and all the other particular circumstances would consider that the conduct complained of is such that this spouse should not be called on to endure it."

17. The above passage does not mean that judicial separation can be demanded for mere trivialities or incompatibility of temperament. The facts of the case should go well beyond 'the ordinary wear and tear of conjugal life', to adopt the words of Lord Asquith in Buehler v. Buehler, 1947-1 All ER 319 at p. 326. We do not think that the husband will be justified in pleading for judicial separation merely on the ground that the wife's conduct is highly irritating and exasperating to him.

18. Now we will examine the facts of the case. The husband as P. W. 1 has deposed:

(1) that the wife in 1960 and 1965 attempted to stab him. On the second occasion he sustained an injury on his finger,

(2) that the wife threatened to kill him by poisoning.

(3) that the wife attacked him with a bath stool on one mid-night in 1964 and P. W. 2 who was then his driver saved him.

(4) that on one night when he was asleep the wife poured kerosene oil on his trousers and the trousers were set fire to and thrown on him.

(5) that on one night he was locked out of the house and he was compelled to go to the Sea View Hotel in Ernakulam with only the banian and underwear he was then wearing.

Apart from the above specific acts, P. W. 1 has deposed in general terms to the reprehensible conduct of his wife which has made his life miserable.

19. As regards attempts at stabbing and the threat of poisoning there is no doubt only the uncorroborated testimony of P. W. 1. But to prove the other incidents the husband has examined P. Ws. 2 to 5. We are of the view that the evidence of P. Ws. 3 to 5 is too general to bring out any of the specific acts attributed to the wife.

20. The learned Judge has not found that the husband was addicted to alcoholic drinks or that he stayed with the wife in Trivandrum for three days in September, 1966. The counsel for the wife did not contend before us for the acceptance of those averments pleaded by his client.

21. The evidence of P. Ws. 1 and 2 is quite sufficient to grant the husband a decree for judicial separation. The learned Judge has observed:

"If the specific instances of cruelty spoken to by the petitioner's witnesses like locking out the petitioner, the throwing of burning trousers, the attempt to throw the stool and the frequent throwing of the vessels at the petitioner are taken as proved, their cumulative effect would be sufficient to substantiate the ground of cruelty."

22. P. W. 2 has been disbelieved by the learned Judge for two reasons. The first is that since he deposed that he was staying with P. W. 1 from 1957 he should have seen more incidents and he has not spoken to them. The second is that there is discrepancy between the evidence of P. W. 1 and P. W. 2. The discrepancy pointed out by the learned Judge is that while P. W. 2 said that when the wife was about to throw the bath stool he caught hold of the same and removed it while P. W. 1 said that P. W. 2 rushed in and pulled the wife down. We do not think that this discrepancy is sufficient to disbelieve P. W. 2. C. P. W. 1 the wife has admitted that P. W. 2 was in the employment of P. W. 1 from 1957 to 1964 and during this period he was staying in the same building. We have been taken through the evidence of P. Ws. 1 and 2 and we have no hesitation to believe them. The learned Judge would disbelieve P. W. 1 on the ground that in respect of several incidents spoken to by him he did not take any action against C. P. W. I. The failure to take any immediate action cannot lead to the inference that the incidents narrated are false. P. W. I was holding a responsible post in the Dunlop Rubber Company in Cochin. He cannot be expected to go about tom-tomming the strained relationship between him and his wife. The attempt must have been to wait and see whether things would not improve.

23. It is rarely possible to prove the incidents spoken to by P. W. I through stranger witnesses. After all every person has his own self-respect to be preserved. Section 23 of the Divorce Act enables the court to allow judicial separation if it is satisfied of the truth of the statements and when there is no legal ground for not granting the same. There is no provision of law that the uncorroborated evidence of the spouse should not be accepted in matrimonial cases. According to Section 134 of the Evidence Act, no particular number of witnesses are required for the proof of any fact. But in view of Section 7 of the Indian Divorce Act, the uncorroborated evidence has to be scrutinised with care and received with caution.

24. It is necessary for us to observe that the married life of the wife and the husband was far from pleasant. The husband produced Exts. P1 to P11 letters received by him from Sri Pereira who is in Malaya, who is the uncle of the wife. No doubt, he has not been examined. The learned Judge has refused to go into these letters for reasons which do not appear to be convincing. We hold on the evidence of P. Ws. 1 and 2 that the allegations spoken to by P. W. 1 have been proved. We are satisfied that P. W. 1 cannot be left alone with our sympathy but he has to be granted judicial separation. In the circumstances of this case we think it unnecessary to wait for the last straw.

25. We therefore set aside the decision of the court below and allow the appeal. We make no order as to costs.

26. The husband has undertaken before us through his counsel that he will continue to maintain the children in the same way he is doing now.

Appeal allowed.

END

follow; and (ii) if, on the other hand, the provisions of Section 16 of the Act were merely directory and the decree passed in its contravention can be given effect to unless set aside, then also this Rule was redundant. No Court can arrogate to itself, nor can a superior Court confer on an inferior Court jurisdiction not vested in it by the legislature; nor can any Court validate a decree which is a nullity by reason of lack of jurisdiction. But by this extraordinary provision contained in R. 7, the High Court has been given large and discretionary power to make a fresh decree to do substantial justice to the parties, having regard to all the facts and circumstances and the material on record before it. See (1894) ILR 21 Cal 249; (1904) ILR 27 Mad 478; AIR 1915 Cal 619 and ILR 11 Pat 690 = (AIR 1933 Pat 31). As already pointed out, this extraordinary power has for its basis the two exceptional considerations which are attached to a suit of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. The High Court is not bound under Rule 7 to make a fresh decree when the one made by the subordinate Court is without jurisdiction and the High Court may leave the matter to follow the ordinary consequences; for instance, return of the plaint for presentation to proper Court. Rule 7 merely invests the High Court with jurisdiction but not necessarily directs the ordinary consequences to follow but to make a fresh decree as it thinks fit. But it must be well understood that the expression "the High Court may make such order as it thinks fit" does not mean that the High Court validates a decree which is a nullity, or condones or cures the defect of jurisdiction. What the expression does it to confer upon the High Court the large and discretionary power to pass a fresh decree of its own on the basis of the material on record and then it is the decree of the High Court which, by its own force, becomes executable or operative and not because the defect of jurisdiction is condoned or cured. Therefore, this Rule cannot be called in aid to hold that the provisions of Section 16 are directory.

85. In our opinion, it cannot be argued that where the consequences of non-compliance with a provision excluding the jurisdiction of a Court are not specifically provided in the law, such a provision excluding jurisdiction of a Court can be treated as directory. Where jurisdiction of a Court is excluded, that is, when there is want of jurisdiction, the well known consequence is that the decree rendered by it is a nullity. This principle has been called, by their Lordships of the Supreme Court, "a fundamental principle well established". See Kiran Singh's case, AIR 1954 SC 340 (supra).

86. The conclusions we have reached may now be summed up thus:— (1) There is no practical difference between a Court of Small Causes constituted under Section 5 of the Small Cause Courts Act and a Court invested with jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court; for instance, under Section 9 of the M. P. Civil Courts Act, 1958. (2) A Court so invested with jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court is to be deemed, for the purposes of the Small Cause Courts Act and of the Code of Civil Procedure to comprise of two different Courts; (i) a Court of Small Causes with respect to the exercise of jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court; and (ii) a Court with respect to the exercise of its jurisdiction in suits not cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. (3) When there is a Court of Small Causes which has jurisdiction to try a suit, the jurisdiction of all other Courts, which otherwise had jurisdiction to try it, is excluded by Section 16 of the Small Cause Courts Act. (4) The language of Section 16 is precise, unambiguous, emphatic and mandatory. (5) There is no difference between a Court which never had jurisdiction but it is excluded by a legislative provision. In either case, there is want of jurisdiction. And, the decree which is passed by a Court without jurisdiction is a nullity. Such a decree cannot be executed, nor can otherwise be given effect to. (6) Where jurisdiction of a Court has been excluded in respect of a specified subject-matter, no amount of acquiescence, waiver, consent, ignorance of law, inadvertence, error, bona fides, good faith, or any other consideration such (will-Ed) confer such jurisdiction on such Court. (7) When a suit is tried by a Court whose jurisdiction has been excluded, it is a case of jurisdictional want, not a mere procedural defect. A defect in the procedure is an irregularity which occurs in the course of a trial, while following a certain procedure, by a Court which has the initial jurisdiction to try it. (8) A legislative provision, which excludes jurisdiction of a Court, is necessarily imperative and cannot be treated as directory. The word "shall" in such a provision must be given its ordinary significance (that is, mandatory); it cannot be read as "may". (9) It is a fundamental principle well established that a decree passed by a Court without jurisdiction is a nullity and that its invalidity can be set up whenever and wherever it is sought to be enforced or relied upon even at the stage of execution and even in a collateral proceeding. (10) The provisions in the Small Cause Courts Act (for instance, Section 23) and those contained in any other enactment for the time being in force (for instance, Section 24, Civil P. C.; O. 46, Rr. 6 and 7, Civil P. C.; Section 15 of the M. P. Civil Courts Act) must be given effect to by virtue of the saving clause in Section 16 of the Small Cause Courts Act. (11) Under
1970 Madh Pra./17 XII G—33

O. 46, R. 7, Civil P. C., even if the High Court finds that a decree has been made by an ordinary Court in a suit cognizable by a Small Cause Court, the High Court has large and discretionary power to do substantial justice to the parties by making a fresh decree of its own, having regard to the entire facts and circumstances of the case and the material on record, and thus save the parties of the expense and botheration of a fresh trial. In doing so, the High Court does not validate a decree which is a nullity for want of jurisdiction, nor condones or cures the defect of jurisdiction. The decree which it makes in exercise of the large and discretionary powers under the Rule is a fresh one and shall operate and be given effect to by its own force.

87. I answer the reference thus:—

- (1) Where a suit of the small cause nature is instituted and tried as a regular suit by an ordinary Court in contravention of the provisions of Sec. 16 of the Small Cause Courts Act (No. 9 of 1887), the decree or order rendered in it is without jurisdiction and a nullity.
- (2) However, the provisions in the Small Cause Courts Act (for instance, Section 23) and those contained in any other enactment for the time being in force (for instance, S. 24, Civil P. C.; O. 46, R. 6 and 7, Civil P. C., Section 15 of the M. P. Civil Courts Act) must be given effect to by virtue of the saving clause in Section 16 of the Small Cause Courts Act. In these and such other cases, the decree passed by an ordinary Court is not in contravention of S. 16 of that Act.
- (3) When, by virtue of an order of the District Judge under S. 15 of the M. P. Civil Courts Act, 1958, any civil business cognizable by the District Judge and the Courts under his control is distributed among them and if because of such distribution any cases cognizable by a Court of Small Causes are assigned to ordinary Courts, then the decrees passed by the latter are not nullities; they are valid being within the saving clause of Section 16.
- (4) Once the High Court is seized of a case under O. 46, R. 7, Civil P. C., it has large and discretionary power to make such fresh decree as it may think fit, having regard to all the facts and circumstances of the case and the material on record, even though it finds that an ordinary Court has tried a suit cognizable by a Small Cause Court; and the decree or order passed by such Court is a nullity, being without jurisdiction. Such a decree made by the High Court is a fresh one and is execut-able and given effect to by its own force, not because it validates, cures or condones the nullity.

TARE, J.: 88. Although, originally I proposed to concur with the opinion of my brother, Naik, J., on going through the opinion of my brother, Shiv Dayal, J., I think it necessary to express my own opinion by giving reasons as to why agreeing with the conclusion of Naik, J. and some observations of Shiv Dayal, J. I am unable to agree with certain observations made by my learned brothers in their separate opinions.

89. At the outset it may be observed that the present suit was not at all a suit triable by a Court of Small Causes, nor could it be said to be a suit of the nature of small causes, as has been rightly observed by Naik, J. in the concluding portion of his opinion. As, however, a reference was made by the learned Single Judge to this Full Bench probably without recording a finding whether the present suit was triable by a regular Court or by a Small Cause Court, it is necessary for the Full Bench to answer the reference and record its opinion, as the two Division Bench decisions of this Court in 1968 Jab LJ 566 = (AIR 1969 Madh Pra 56) and in 1968 Jab LJ 583 = (AIR 1969 Madh Pra 44) have created a lot of confusion and the decrees passed by the regular Courts in numerous cases have been rendered null and void on account of those two decisions.

90. The controversy arose initially when S. B. Sen, J. in Mukund v. Firm Kashilal, Civil Revn. No. 178 of 1965, D/-29-9-1965 (MP) expressed the view that a decree passed in contravention of Section 16 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, was a nullity, which could be challenged in execution. The contrary opinion was expressed by Krishnan, J. in Manakchand v. Rajmal, Civil Revn. No. 377 of 1965, D/-29-3-1967 (MP) wherein he expressed the opinion that the trial of a case in contravention of Section 16 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act would be a matter relating to procedure and not relating to jurisdiction. Therefore, according to Krishnan, J. the decree passed would not be a nullity and the same could not be challenged in execution proceedings, if no objection be raised during the trial of the suit. It was on account of that conflict that the question was referred by Nevaskar, J. to a larger Bench in 1968 Jab LJ 566 = (AIR 1969 Madh Pra 56) (supra) and by Singh, J. in 1968 Jab LJ 583 = (AIR 1969 Madh Pra 44) (supra), and the Division Bench in both those cases, presided over by Dixit, C. J. and S. B. Sen, J., answered the reference by holding that such decrees would be nullities, which could be challenged not only in execution proceedings, but also in collateral proceedings, on the principle laid down by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in AIR 1954 SC 340.

91. The relevant provisions have been reproduced by my learned brothers, Naik and Shiv Dayal, JJ. in their separate opinions. Therefore, I find it unnecessary to reproduce all those provisions. Section 16 of the Act which relates to exclusion of jurisdiction of other Courts provides as follows:—

“Save as expressly provided by this Act or by any other enactment for the time being in force, a suit cognizable by a Court of Small Causes shall not be tried by any other Court having jurisdiction within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes by which the suit is triable.”

My Brother, Naik, J. has given eight reasons for holding that a trial held in contravention of the said section would not affect the initial jurisdiction of a Civil Court to try a suit of civil nature and therefore the same would not be a nullity. Therefore, Naik, J. has opined that if no objection be raised during trial, the same cannot be raised in execution proceedings and the decree can in no case be challenged in collateral proceedings and the principle laid down by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in AIR 1954 SC 340 (supra) would not be attracted. On the other hand, my brother, Shiv Dayal, J. has expressed the opinion that as Section 16 provides for the exclusive jurisdiction of Small Cause Courts thereby excluding jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts, a trial in contravention of the said section would relate to a question of jurisdiction and as the regular Court would be lacking in initial jurisdiction, its decree in contravention of the said section would be a nullity so as to attract the dictum laid down by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in AIR 1954 SC 340 (supra). My learned brothers in their separate opinions differ only to this extent; while in respect of other matters, I find practically no conflict.

92. So far as the conclusions Nos. 2 and 3 mentioned by my brother, Shiv Dayal, J. are concerned, I do not find any difficulty in agreeing with them. From the separate opinion of my brother, Naik, J., I find that he has made observations which accord with the said conclusions of Shiv Dayal, J. But the only difference between the two is regarding the conclusion No. 1 and partly conclusion No. 4, and I propose to elaborate on that.

93. At this stage I might record my dissent with the observations made by my brother, Naik, J. to the effect that the same principle would be applicable to decree of regular Courts passed in contravention of Section 16 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act as to the decrees passed by a Small Cause Court in contravention of Section 15 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. With due respect to my learned brother, I may observe that the question whether a decree passed by a Small Cause Court in contravention of Section 15 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, would be a nullity does not arise in the present case and I would reserve my opinion for some suitable occasion.

94. As regards proposition No. 1, propounded by my learned brother, Shiv Dayal, J., I may observe that Section 16 of the Act is no doubt framed in mandatory terms and on the face of it, it might suggest that the prohibition against trial of a suit of the nature of small causes by a regular Court would be absolute. If that be the interpretation, I would have no hesitation in holding that a decree passed in contravention of Section 16 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act would be a nullity.

95. But what prevents me from coming to that conclusion and instead persuades me in agreeing with the view expressed by my learned brother, Naik, J., is that Section 16 of the Act has made a provision for a saving clause. The Division Bench in 1968 Jab LJ 566 = (AIR 1969 Madh Pra 56) (supra) and 1968 Jab LJ 583 = (AIR 1969 Madh Pra 44) (supra) expressed its opinion without examining the implication and scope of the saving clause. If the implication and scope of the saving clause had been examined by that Division Bench in details, I am sure, the conclusion of the Division Bench would have been otherwise and in consonance with the view expressed by Naik, J. To illustrate it, I may observe that the Division Bench assumed that a trial of a suit of small cause nature by a regular Court would be in contravention of Section 16 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. With due respect to the learned Judges constituting the said Division Bench, I may observe that it is not every trial that would be in contravention of Section 16 of the Act. A trial which is covered by the saving clause under Section 16 of the Act would be perfectly valid and to that extent I am in full agreement with the view expressed by my learned brother, Shiv Dayal, J. Further, I feel that the view as expressed in the said two Division Bench cases needs to be overruled by this Full Bench and accordingly agreeing with my brother, Naik, J., I would overrule the said two Division Bench decisions.

96. If we examine the scope of the saving clause of Section 16 of the Act, it would encompass cases which are mentioned in Section 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure; in Section 24(4) of the Code of Civil Procedure, in O. 46, R. 6, Civil P. C., in O. 46, R. 7, Civil P. C., in Section 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and also in Section 15 of the M. P. Civil Courts Act, 1958.

97. These provisions have been elaborately scrutinised and examined by learned brothers, Naik and Shiv Dayal, J.J. However, Section 15 of the M. P. Civil Courts Act, 1958, has an overriding effect over the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure and the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. It may be relevant to reproduce the said Section, which is as follows:

"S. 15. Power to distribute business.—Notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 (5 of 1908), or the law relating to Courts of Small Causes, in force for the time being in any area, the District Judge may, by order in writing direct that any civil business cognizable by it and the Courts under its control shall be distributed among those Courts in such manner, as he thinks fit.

Provided that, except in so far as it may affect the exclusive jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes, or of a Court invested with the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes, a direction given under this section shall not empower any Court to exercise powers or deal with business beyond the limits of its proper jurisdiction."

Therefore, it is open to a District Judge to send a case of Small cause nature for trial by a regular Court, notwithstanding the provisions of Section 16 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and if such a trial is held by a regular Court, it will not be vitiated, nor can that decree be attacked as a nullity. Of course, according to the proviso to the Section, the Court to which the case is sent for trial should not lack in inherent jurisdiction to try a case of that kind and it must not be beyond the limits of its proper jurisdiction. In that event if the trial is not vitiated, Section 102, Civil P. C. will be attracted, with the result that there will be one appeal under S. 96 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but there will be no second appeal and the appellate decision, at the most, would be revisable by the High Court under Section 115, Civil P. C. Such a trial would be regularised by the saving clause contained in Section 16 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act.

98. Section 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act also provides for return of the plaint for presentation to a regular Court, where a question of title to immovable property or other title is involved, which a Small Cause Court cannot adjudicate upon. The trial of such a question by the regular Court would also be valid by virtue of the saving clause in Section 16 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act.

99. Furtheron Section 24(4) of the Code of Civil Procedure empowers the High Court or the District Court to transfer a case from a Small Cause Court to regular Court. But the only provision is that for the purposes of such a suit, the transferee Court will also be deemed to be a Court of Small Causes.

100. Order 46, Rule 6, Civil P. C. provides for a reference by a regular Court or by a Small Cause Court to the High Court, where that Court is in doubt whether the suit is cognizable by a Court of Small Causes or is not so cognizable. Such a reference has undoubtedly to be made before the delivery of judgment. In that event the High Court can resolve the doubt and can order the trial of the case by a particular Court. A similar reference is provided for by R. 7, O. 46, Civil P. C. by subordinate Court. The District Court can make a reference to the High Court and on such reference, the High Court can pass an appropriate order. As has been pointed out by my learned brother, Shiv Dayal, J., the decree passed by the subordinate Court cannot be treated to be a nullity, because the High Court has not been given the power to validate a nullity, but only to pass an appropriate order as in the circumstances of a case may appear to the High Court to be just and proper. All these instances which come within the ambit of the saving clause of Section 16 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, would make the decree valid. In my opinion, these are the eventualities in which the trial of a case would be saved by the saving clause and the trial in such cases, at least, cannot be said to be a nullity. I may further observe that if the matter comes to the High Court either on appeal or in revision, the matter can be set right in exercise of appellate or revisional powers. There is no bar to that course being adopted. In my opinion, it would be a matter relating to procedure only, as has been suggested by my learned brother, Naik, J. Under Section 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a Civil Court has the jurisdiction to try all causes of civil nature and as such it would have jurisdiction to try even a small cause suit or a suit of a small cause nature, but for the provisions of Section 16 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, which, however, has provided for a very comprehensive saving clause so as to include many categories of cases, and moreover, Section 15 of the M. P. Civil Courts Act, 1958 having an overriding effect over the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure and the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, the trial of a case in contravention of Section 16 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, can, in my opinion, not be said to be vitiated so as to be treated as trial without jurisdiction and to render the decree passed in such a trial an utter nullity. For this reason, I would agree with the view expressed by my learned brother, Naik, J. with due respect to my learned brother, Shiv Dayal, J. with whom

I am unable to agree with respect to conclusion No. 1 and conclusion No. 4 (partly) mentioned in the concluding portion of his opinion.

101. Therefore, I would answer the reference by agreeing with the view expressed by Naik, J. on the question referred to this Full Bench.

ORDER

102. In accordance with the opinion of the majority, it is held that the decisions of the Division Bench of this Court in 1968 Jab LJ 566 = (AIR 1969 Madh Pra 56) and 1968 Jab LJ 583 = (AIR 1969 Madh Pra 44) do not lay down the correct law and are, therefore, hereby overruled. In our opinion, where a suit of a small cause nature is instituted and tried as a regular suit in contravention of the provisions of Section 16 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, the judgment so rendered in it is one which is not without jurisdiction and, therefore, not a nullity.

and labour of author — Copyright Act (1957), Section 13.

Neither original thought nor original record is essential for a literary work to be original under Section 1, Schedule I of the 1914 Act. The real test in adjudging the originality of a work is whether it involved any skill, labour and knowledge of author. The originality in writing of a successful text book in a subject like arithmetic lies upon the skill of the author. The amount of originality may be small, but the extent of his thought, skill and labour may be tremendous and it is that which is protected by law. AIR 1924 PC 75, Foll. (Paras 11, 12)

(C) Copyright Act (1914), S. 5, Sch. I — Assignment of copyright — Instrument in writing — Court has to give effect to actual bargain unless words therein do not convey correct intention of parties. (Para 16)

(D) Copyright Act (1914), Sch. I, S. 5 — Assignment of copyright — Whether benami — Tests for determination.

The onus of establishing a transaction to be benami is on the person who asserts to it. This cannot be a matter of presumption and has not only to be averred in the pleadings but also must be proved by legal evidence. In absence of evidence, the apparent title prevails. The real criterion in cases of benami transactions is to consider the source of funds for the acquisition, motive, possession of property, custody of title-deeds etc. If in the nature of things, there is no scope for applying these tests, the burden of proving the transaction to be benami would be very much greater. In matters of assignment of copyright the decision of the Court must rest not on mere suspicion but only on legal evidence, including testimony of witnesses. AIR 1965 SC 1364 & AIR 1949 FC 88 & (1866-67) 11 Mob I A 28 (PC), Rel. on. (Para 18)

(E) Copyright Act (1914), Sch. I, S. 5 — Agreement between author and publisher — Copyright whether vests in publisher or he is only a licensee — Determination of — Copyright Act (1957), S. 18.

In the case of agreement between author and publishers, particularly as regards publishing agreement the most important point to determine is whether any copyright is to be vested in the publisher or whether a licence only is intended. In the former case, the publisher will enjoy the full legal title to the copyright and will alone be entitled to enforce the right against third parties. In the case of a licence which in a publishing agreement will normally be an exclusive licence, the grant is subject to certain conditions and on their non-fulfilment, the licence is capable of being revoked. (Para 21)

AIR 1970 MADHYA PRADESH 261 (V 57 C 46)

K. L. PANDEY AND A. P. SEN, JJ.

M/s. Mishra Bandhu Karyalaya and others, Appellants v. Shivratanlal Koshal, Respondent.

First Appeal No. 83 of 1964, D/- 29-4-1969 against decree of Vth Addl. Dist. J., Jabalpur, D/- 31-8-1964.

(A) Copyright Act (1914), Sch. 1, S. 1 — Copyright Act (1957), Ss. 13, 45 — Acquiring copyright in a book — Difference between two Acts — Under 1957 Act registration is a condition.

There was no provision for registration of copyright under the 1914 Act. A person had an inherent copyright in an original composition or compilation without registering it. AIR 1927 Mad 981, Rel. on. (Para 10)

Under the Act of 1957, the registration of the book with the Registrar of Copyrights is a condition for acquiring copyright with respect to it. A copyright in a book now is secured only if it is an original compilation and has been duly registered according to provisions of 1957 Act. Once it is so registered the author is deemed to acquire property right in it. The right arising from the registration of the book can be the subject-matter of civil or criminal remedy, so that, without it the author can have no rights nor remedies though his work may be original one. (Para 9)

(B) Copyright Act (1914), S. 1, Sch. 1 — Original work — Tests — Originality in text books on arithmetic lies in skill

(F) Copyright Act (1914), Ss. 1, 2 and Sch. I — Infringement of copyright — Tests to determine — Copyright Act (1957), Ss. 13, 51.

The laws of copyright do not protect ideas, but they deal with the particular expression of ideas. It is always possible to arrive at the same result from independent sources. The compiler of a work in which absolute originality is of necessity excluded is entitled, without exposing himself to a charge of piracy, to make use of preceding works upon the subject, where he bestows such mental labour upon what he has taken, and subjects it to such revision and correction as to produce an original result. The question whether there has been an infringement of copyright depends on whether a colourable imitation has been made. Whether the work complained of is or is not a colourable imitation of another, is essentially a question of fact and the burden of proving that fact is undoubtedly on the person accepting it. Case law discussed. (Paras 31, 32)

(G) Contract Act (1872), Ss. 39, 73 — Copyright Act (1957), S. 55 — Agreement between author and publisher — Breach in respect of payment of royalties and rendition of accounts — Discharge by breach can be implied — Remedy after discharge is only for damages.

The breach of the fundamental obligation created by the contract is a cause of discharge of a contract. It may, indeed, be said, in general that any breach which prevents substantial performance is a cause of discharge. Whether performance is substantially prevented or only partially affected is, of course, a question that depends upon the circumstances of each case. To bring this principle into operation, the intention of a party not to proceed further with the contract need not be expressly stated. It may be inferred from his acts or omissions. But repudiation of a contract is a serious matter not to be found or inferred. (Paras 40, 41)

However a contract cannot be terminated unilaterally. A contract is not automatically discharged by breach but it only gives the injured party an option to treat the contract as at an end. (Para 42)

In a publishing agreement between the author and publisher the non-rendition of yearly accounts of royalties and the non-payment of the royalties which had accrued on sales, are breaches of the fundamental obligation as regards payment of royalty created by the contract, which entitles the author to treat the contract as discharged by breach. (Para 45)

The renunciation of a contract may take place either before its performance is due, or during the performance of the contract itself. Where the publishers had made it impossible by their own conduct for the contract to go on; and, there was no other alternative left to the author than to treat the contract as at an end, by the acceptance of their repudiation as discharging it, they were absolved or discharged from any further performance thereof. (Para 45)

When there is a termination of a publishing contract occasioned by a breach of the fundamental obligations created by acceptance of the breach by the author in his notice of termination, he cannot fall back upon its terms for claiming any benefit like royalty on sale for the subsequent period, his right is only to sue for damages. (Para 47)

(H) Copyright Act (1914), Sch. 1, Ss. 6 and 7 — Damages under are cumulative.

Damages for infringement under Section 6 and damages for conversion under Section 7 are cumulative but not alternative, and care must be taken to see that the damages awarded under the respective sections do not overlap. Case law discussed. (Para 49)

- A. P. SEN, J.:— This is an appeal brought by the defendant No. 1, M/s. Mishrabandhu Karyalaya, Jabalpur and its partners, from the Judgment and decree of the 5th Additional District Judge, Jabalpur, dated 31st August 1964, decreeing against them, the plaintiff Sheoratanlal Koshal's claim (A) for recovery of Rupees 15,307.04 paise with interest @ 6% per annum thereon from the date of suit, i.e., from 1st January 1963 till realisation, due on account of the arrears of royalty payable to him on the sales effected upto the end of December 1959 of the book entitled 'Sara! Middle School Ank Ganeet', written by his son-in-law Maniram Vishwakarma, the copyright of which had been assigned to him; (B) for rendition of account of the sales effected by them of the book in question and other allied publications thereof, as per the Hyderabad Syllabus or otherwise, during the years 1960, 61, 62 and until the date of accounting, so as to ascertain the amount of royalty which had accrued thereon and become payable to him @ 15% of the sale proceeds; (C) for interest @ 6% per annum on the amount of royalties due each year, payable from 1st January of the following year; (D) for declaring that they do not have any right, title and interest in the book in question, or, in any other publication thereof, as per the Hyderabad Syllabus, and that the plaintiff had the sole right to such publications; and (E) for perpetually restraining them from printing or publishing the book entitled 'Sara! Middle School Ank Ganeet', as originally published, or, in any of its revised or amended forms according to the Hyderabad Syllabus or otherwise.
2. The relevant facts giving rise to this appeal, are these. Under Exception 2 to S. R. 2 below Fundamental Rule 47, the Director of Public Instruction Madhya Pradesh under Memo. No. 4257/S dated 9th November 1951 (Ex. P-1), had permitted the aforesaid Maniram Vishwakarma, Assistant Master, Government Multipurpose Higher Secondary School, Jabalpur, (hereinafter referred to as the "author") to undertake the work of writing a textbook on Arithmetic (in four parts) for use in Cls. V to VIII, subject to the conditions, namely, that (i) he retained no interest in the sale of copyright, (ii) he disposed of the manuscript in lump sum not exceeding Rs. 1,500/-, and (iii) his legitimate work did not suffer on that account. In terms of that order, the author having written such a book on Arithmetic, effected an outright sale of its copyright in favour of his father-in-law Sheoratanlal Koshal, (hereinafter referred to as the "plaintiff"), in consideration of a payment of Rs. 1,200/- for such assignment under the terms of an agreement dated 9th March 1962 (Ex. P-4), executed between them, whereby the plaintiff became the assignee of the copyright having been conveyed all rights therein, including the rights of its publication, realisation of profits accruing therefrom and the right to royalty on all its sales, etc.

The defendant No. 1, M/s. Mishrabandhu Karyalaya, Jabalpur, a firm of printers and publishers, through Basant Kumar Mishra the defendant No. 3, a member of that firm who also happened to be in management of its business along with Jagdish Prasad Mishra the defendant No. 2, entered into a publishing agreement dated 13th March 1952 (Ex. P-5) with the plaintiff. That agreement granted to the defendants a right to publish the work in question, on the following conditions: (i) the right of publication was transferred to them in lieu of their paying to the plaintiff a royalty at 15% of all their sales, (Clause 1), (ii) an account of royalty had to be made annually, in the month of December each year, (clause 2), and (iii) the plaintiff was entitled to inspect the account of sales of the work in question effected by the defendants, (clause 3), (iv) the plaintiff had to get the book suitably altered to bring it in conformity with the syllabus in Arithmetic of any other State if prescribed in course of its studies, and for this he was not to be separately remunerated, (clause 4), (v) if any alteration in the syllabus was effected in the State of Madhya Pradesh, he was to have the book suitably altered by the author himself and the defendants, in that event, had to print its amended edition also on the aforesaid terms failing which he would be entitled to have it printed elsewhere (clause 6).

3. We regret to find that the defendants who claim to be publishers of some repute have throughout betrayed in this case a lack of business integrity by not adhering to their contractual obligations for personal gain. After having acquired the sole and exclusive right of publishing the work which has become a prescribed text-book in different States and, therefore, a source of considerable profit to them, the defendants have ever since displayed a callous indifference to fulfil their part of the contract in several ways, viz., (i) in submission or rendition of Yearly accounts of royalties @ 15% of total sales as required to be furnished, in the month of December of each year, and (ii) in payment of such royalty on the sales, annually, as stipulated. After persistent demands, the defendants eventually rendered on 16th April 1960 an account (i) of the royalties which had accrued due up to the end of December 1959, and (ii) of the stock-in-trade in their hands as on 26th January 1960, whereby they unequivocally acknowledged their liability to pay Rs. 15,790.46 paise. Towards this, they only paid Rs. 2,000 on 18th April 1960, still leaving a balance of Rs. 13,790.40 paise in arrears. Apart from their admitted failure in making payment of Rs. 13,790.40 paise, the defendants have also failed to render an yearly account of the royalties, on sales effected in all the following years, nor have they paid the royalties which have become due thereon, i.e. for the entire period after the year 1959.

The plaintiff had by his 1st notice dated 27th February 1961 (Ex. P-27), called upon the defendants to render an account of the royalty which had become due for the year 1960, with a request for its payment, together with the arrears of royalties up-to-date within a week, failing which he threatened to take legal action for its recovery. Despite that notice, the defendants did not comply with the demand for payment of the amounts that had become due. The plaintiff, by his 2nd notice dated 25th April 1961 (Ex. P-28), pointed out that they had persistently failed to pay the royalties accrued due during the earlier years which were in arrears. The plaintiff further complained that they had also, in breach of the agreement between the parties, published another text-book on the subject called 'Purva Madhyamik Ank Ganeeet' (in three parts) for use in the very same classes for which they had already undertaken to publish and sell the 'Sarat Middle School Ank Ganeeet' and being interested in promoting the sales of that book in the market, had been acting in a manner detrimental to his interests. Therefore, by the same notice, the plaintiff revoked and terminated the publishing licence which he had created in their favour.

4. The plaintiff averred that by the agreement dated 13th March 1952 (Ex. P-5), he had not assigned the copyright in the book in favour of the defendants, but had merely created a licence authorising them to print, publish and sell copies thereof which however stands revoked as a result of his notice dated 15th April 1961 (Ex. P-28), and that after the revocation of that licence, the defendants had no right to pirate that work as originally published or in any other manner as they liked, nor had they any right to appropriate to themselves the profits accruing from its sales. That profits have been earned by the defendants from such sales is an 'irrefutable fact which is unmistakably clear from the facts on record which speak for themselves. The book 'Saras Middle School Anand Ganesh' was first published in or about 1952 and since then there were later editions of this work. Till about the years 1957-58, that book was in four parts; thereafter, it appeared in the Mahakoshal region in three parts, with the introduction of a unified syllabus; while it still appears in four parts in the old Vidarbha region as before. After publication of the first and subsequent editions, the book has been sold by the defendants ever since the year 1952. It appears that they have also, without reference to the plaintiff, had the book revised to bring it in conformity with the Hyderabad syllabus, and it has in that revised form been sold in the State of Andhra Pradesh.

Apart from this, they further published a "1962 edition" for use in Madhya Pradesh, after having it adapted to the metric system which has now been introduced in the course of studies under the instruction of the Director of Public Instruction, Madhya Pradesh issued to the Heads of all Educational Institutions. That revised edition of the original work was brought out by the defendants without reference to the plaintiff or the author who had a right to revise it. In Schedules 'A' and 'B' annexed to the plaint, the plaintiff had particularised the large number of mistakes which have crept in the "1962 edition" published by the defendants.

5. The defendants in denial of this claim, have raised different pleas in their written statement. First of all, they allege that the author was the real owner or beneficiary under the agreement dated 13th March 1952, (Ex. P-5); that they had directly entered into that agreement with him; and that the plaintiff was only a benamidar at whose instance a suit of this nature would not lie; that the name of the plaintiff had been nominally entered in that deed at the instance of the author himself who being in Government service did not want to figure in the transaction. In other words, they alleged that the plaintiff was neither a party to the real agreement which they had with the author nor did he ever come into the picture at the time of settlement of its terms; that the publication of the book was not in pursuance of the alleged agreement as set up by the plaintiff, but was in furtherance of a contract with the author himself; that there was no privity of contract between the parties, and that, therefore, the question of performance of any of the terms of the alleged agreement did not arise.

To sum up, the contentions of the defendants were: firstly, that they never had rendered any account to the plaintiff as regards the royalty of the book in question; that the real fact was that the statements of accounts rendered on 16th April 1960 covering the period upto the end of December 1959 were delivered to the author but to retain a benami character of the transaction, as was mutually agreed upon, the name of the plaintiff had been nominally inserted therein; secondly, that there was no concluded contract which could be the foundation of a suit because the alleged agreement had yet to be finalised which was only of a tentative nature; thirdly, that they did not admit any liability for payment of Rs. 15,790.46 paise, as alleged; fourthly, that there being no privity of contract between the parties, there was no question of any breach of contract nor of rendition of accounts between them; fifthly, that there was no breach of the original contract with the author as he had been asked to bring the book in conformity with the changed syllabus after introduction of the metric system in academic session 1961-62; that he, on the contrary, neglected to carry out the required alterations in the book and, as a result, they were requested to get the book revised by one L. C. Jain, a lecturer of the Mahakoshal Mahavidyalaya, Jabalpur; that the inaccuracies, therein, if any, were not intentional or deliberate and had been rectified in the later editions; sixthly, that the agreement in question resulted in an absolute assignment of the copyright, and was not a mere licence to publish on certain terms; seventhly, that they had requested the author for a revision in the rate of royalties looking to the rise in cost of raw materials, and he agreed to their proposal by reducing the rate of royalty to 12.15 per cent, by his letter dated 16th April 1960 (Ex. D-6), and while effecting this revision, he had taken away the original agreement; the benami nature of the transaction, however, was retained by continuing the transaction in the name of the plaintiff; lastly, that the alleged agreement was for a consideration forbidden by law and, was therefore, legally not enforceable, besides being opposed to public policy and was, therefore, void and unenforceable under Section 23 of the Contract Act. Even otherwise, they alone had the right to print and publish the book in question, but in breach of that agreement, the author had given it for publication to M/s. Narbada Book Depot, Jabalpur, in the year 1960, and since then that concern was selling the book in the market, to their great detriment and in violation of their copyright in the work. For this, the defendants asserted "that they had reserved their right to sue for damages separately", but apparently no such suit has so far been filed. They had, instead, launched a prosecution against both the author

Maniram Vishwakarma and his assignee the plaintiff-Sheoratanlal Koshal, for alleged infringement of their copyright, which, however, ended in their acquittal.

6. The learned Judge has decreed the plaintiff's claim. His findings are that (i) the plaintiff has purchased the copyright in the book 'Sara! Middle School Ank Ganee' from the author Maniram Vishwakarma, for a cash consideration of Rs 1,200/-, under the agreement dated 9th March 1952 (Ex. P-4); (2) the agreement was neither forbidden by law, nor opposed to public policy under Section 23 of the Contract Act, as the assignment of his rights was with the permission of the Director of Public Instruction; (3) there was a concluded contract between the plaintiff-Sheoratanlal and M/s. Mishrabandhu Karvalaya, through its managing partner Basant Kumar Mishra, on the terms embodied in the agreement dated 13th March 1952 (Ex. P-5); (4) that document was not merely a tentative draft, but represented the terms and conditions on which the defendant-firm was granted the sole and exclusive right of publication of the book in question; (5) on a true construction of the agreement in question, there was no assignment of any copyright in favour of the defendant firm but only a licence which was revocable on the breach of any of its conditions; (6) the defendant-firm had rendered an account on 16th April 1960, acknowledging its liability to pay Rs. 15,790.46 paise towards the arrears of royalty upto the end of the year 1959 and of the stocks-in-trade as on 26th January 1960; (7) by virtue of the copyright in his favour, the plaintiff became the owner of the book, and not a mere benamidar of the author, Maniram Vishwakarma and was, therefore, entitled not only to recover the amount of Rupees 13,790.46 paise remaining due, but also to rendition of accounts and to the grant of a perpetual injunction. Accordingly, the learned Judge has decreed the entire claim in suit.

7. Before the Copyright Act, 1957 (Act No 14 of 1957) was enacted by Parliament, the existing law relating to copyright in India, i.e., its statutory basis, was the British Parliamentary legislation to be found in the Imperial Copyright Act, 1911 (1 and 2 Geo. V, Ch. 46) as modified by the Indian Copyright Act, 1914 (Act No. 3 of 1914). Apart from the fact that the Imperial Act did not fit in with the changed constitutional status of India, it was necessary to enact an independent self-contained law on the subject of copyright in the light of growing public consciousness of the rights and obligations of authors and in the light of experience gained in the working of the law as in force during the last forty years. New and advanced means of communications like broadcasting, litho-photography, etc., also called for certain amendments in the existing law, apart from making therein provision for the due fulfilment of international obligations in the field of copyright which India might accept. That was the object with which the Copyright Act, 1957, was enacted, and it attempted a complete revision of the law of copyright which appeared to be inevitable due to the changed circumstances.

8. We are, however, concerned with the state of things prevalent prior to 21st January, 1958, when the Copyright Act, 1957 (Act No 14 of 1957), was brought into force. The law then in force was the Imperial Copyright Act, 1911 (1 and 2 Geo. V, Ch. 46) which, with slight modification, was made applicable to this Country by the Indian Copyright Act (Act No. 3 of 1914). The Imperial Copyright Act, 1911, either as operating proprio vigore or as applied by the Indian Copyright Act, 1914, was "a law in force in the territory of India immediately before the commencement of the Constitution", and it, therefore, continued to be in force as the law of the land by virtue of Art. 372 (1) of the Constitution. We consider the following passage in Copinger and Skone James on Copyright, 9th Edn., pp 428-9, as describing the position correctly:

"The United Kingdom Copyright Act, 1911, extended to India as part of His Majesty's dominions, but certain modifications were introduced by the Indian Copyright Act, 1914 (No. 3 of 1914). The effect of Section 18 of the Indian Independence Act, 1947 (10 & 11 Geo. VI, C. 30) appeared to be that copyright protection both in India and with respect to works originating there remained unchanged." For a fuller discussion of this subject, see the decision of the Madras High Court in M/s. Blackwood and Sons Ltd. v. A. N. Parasuraman, AIR 1959 Mad 410.

9. Under the law then prevalent i.e., according to the provisions of the earlier enactments, the first owner of the copyright is the author and his right of assignment is dealt with in Section 5(2) and (3) of the Indian Copyright Act, 1914. We believe the law on that aspect still remains the same with some modifications, even under the new Copyright Act, 1957. The only change that is relevant for our purposes is, that under the old law, the non-registration of the copyright had not the effect of entailing the dismissal of an action in respect of infringement of copyright commenced when the Act of 1914 was in force see, Balantrapu Venkata Rao v. Valluri Padmanabha Raju, ILR 51 Mad 180 = (AIR 1927 Mad 931) Wallace, J., in that case, followed the view expressed in N V. Savory Ltd. v. World of Golf Ltd., 1914-2 Ch 566, under the allied Fine Arts Copyright Act, that mere failure to register does not deprive an artist of his copyright. That appears to us to be a correct and reasonable view. The Indian Copyright Act, 1914, had nowhere made any provision for the registration of copyrights. Under the Copyright Act, 1957, it appears that under Sections 13 and 45, the registration of book with the Registrar of Copyrights, is a condition for acquiring copyright with respect to it. A plain reading of the several provisions of the Act, leaves no doubt in our minds that a copyright in a book now is only secured if it is an original compilation and has been duly registered according to the provisions of the 1957 Act. Once it is so registered, the author is deemed to acquire property rights in the book. The right arising from the registration of the book can be the subject-matter of civil or criminal remedy, so that, without it the author can have, no rights, nor remedies in spite of the fact that his work is an original one. We are, however, concerned with the state of law prevalent under the Imperial Copyright Act, 1911, enacted by the British Parliament, subject to such modifications as stated in the Indian Copyright Act, 1914. It is necessary for us to deal with this aspect because the learned counsel for the appellants, during the course of his arguments, obliquely suggested that the copyright of the book in question "Saral Middle School Ank Ganeet" not being registered, neither the author nor his assignee had any kind of right or remedy. The whole object of this discussion is to remove that misconception.

10. Under the law relating to copyright then prevalent, to which we have already referred, viz., the Imperial Copyright Act, 1911, as adopted or modified to suit Indian conditions by the Indian Copyright Act, 1914, a person had an inherent copyright in an original composition or compilation without the necessity of its registration. Under the English enactment (Sections 1 and 2) copyright may subsist subject to the provisions of the Act "in every original literary, dramatic, musical artistic work."

11. While we are dealing with this aspect, it is also necessary for us to dispel the doubt expressed by the learned counsel for the appellants that no copyright can be had in respect of a textbook on arithmetic like 'Saral Middle School Ank Ganeet', because it would necessarily be, in a different form, compilation of certain arithmetical problems originated by others. We are clearly of the view that the assumption of the learned counsel is wholly unfounded. Neither original thought nor original research is essential for a literary work to be original under Section 1, Schedule I, of the Indian Copyright Act, 1914. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Macmillan and Co. v. K. and J. Cooper, AIR 1924 PC 75, while interpreting Section 2 of the Imperial Copyright Act, 1911, had stated:

"The word 'original' does not mean that the work must be the expression of original or inventive thought. Copyright Acts are not concerned with the origin of ideas, but with the expression of thought; and in the case of 'literary work' with the expression of thought in print or writing. The originality which is required relates to the expression of the thought; but the Act does not require that the expression must be in an original or novel form, but that the work must not be copied from another work—that it should originate from the author."

12. The real test in adjudging the originality of a work is whether it involved any skill, labour and knowledge of the author and that being fulfilled, he would be 'protected by law', and no one else was permitted to steal or appropriate to himself the result of his labour, skill and learning. As their Lordships have most appropriately stated, the provision of Section 2 of the Imperial Copyright Act was based on the moral principle resting on the Eighth Commandment, 'Thou shalt not steal'. Apart from this, the originality in writing of a successful text-book in a subject like arithmetic lies upon the skill of the author. Some authors have not the art or the necessary skill to make a compilation nor are all compilations of the same nature or quality. That is the reason why one dictionary, gazetteer, grammar, map, almanac, encyclopedia, guide-book, etc., would sell and not the others. There lies the skill of the author of the work which brings to him commercial success. The contention that no originality can be claimed in such works can, therefore, hardly be accepted. For instance, a reference to the Shorter Oxford Dictionary or the Webster's New International Dictionary would plainly show the difference in treatment of the same words in contrasting ways. In Copinger and James on the Law of Copyright, 9th Edn., pp. 148-49, the law has been summarised as follows:

"In the case of compilations such as dictionaries, gazetteers, maps, arithmetics, almanacs, encyclopedias and guide books, new publications dealing with similar subject-matter must of necessity resemble existing publications, and the defence of 'common source' is frequently made where the new publication is alleged to constitute an infringement of an earlier one." Thus, it is clearly recognised that all such books are capable of having a copyright in them. In text-books on arithmetic or books of the above description, the amount of originality of the author may be small, but the extent of his thought, skill and labour may be tremendous, and it is that which is protected by law. We are, therefore, of the view that the book 'Saral

'Middle School Ank Gancet' will certainly be an "original work", within the meaning of the English Copyright Act as applied to British India, and, therefore, the author and/or his assignee not only had or has a copyright therein but also had the right to enter into a publishing contract of any kind in respect thereof.

13. In this case we are concerned with the simplest type of literary copyright, namely, the right to print, publish and sell copies of the particular book in question, and in the case of a simple text-book on arithmetic, no complications as regards any dramatic or film rights can possibly arise. In determining the question whether a particular agreement relating to this was an absolute assignment or a mere licence, the effect of the opinion of Viscount Sumner delivered in the House of Lords in Messenger v. British Broadcasting Co. Ltd., 1929 AC 151 (HL) seems to be that one has to look on the real meaning of an agreement rather than the particular, in that case unfortunate, choice of words of the parties. In other words, the real meaning of an agreement rather than the mere choice of words has to be looked into in deciding whether there was a complete or partial assignment of the copyright or a mere licence to print, publish and sell copies of the work in question. We would now refer to the contentions raised at the Bar.

14. The learned counsel for the appellants has assailed the decree under appeal on the following grounds:

- (1) The plaintiff being merely a benamidar was not entitled to sue for any of the reliefs asked for, since there was no privity of contract between the parties;
- (2) The document dated 13th March 1952 (Ex. P-5) was simply a "tentative draft" and not a "concluded contract" between the parties. At any rate, it was a "unilateral" document, executed by the plaintiff, and the mere addition of the word 'approved' by Basant Kumar Mishra, a partner of the defendant-firm could not mean its acceptance, and, therefore, the matter was still at the stage of negotiation between parties which had not matured into an enforceable contract;
- (3) Alternatively, on a plain reading of the said agreement, the copyright of the book had itself been transferred in favour of the defendant-firm and not merely a licence to publish on conditions; and, at any rate, it was an irrevocable licence which would not be terminated by notice;
- (4) The failure of the author to revise the book in question was itself a breach of covenant which disentitled him or his assignee from claiming any equitable relief, for rendition of accounts, or, for grant of an injunction;

- (5) Having himself terminated the contract by his notice dated 25th April 1961 (Ex. P-28), the plaintiff could not fall back on its terms, for claiming any royalty for the period subsequent thereto; and his claim, if any, was to sue for damages; and
- (6) The claim for recovery of Rupees 13,790 46 paise, the alleged amount due, as per the Statements of account dated 16th April 1960 (Exs. P-6 to P-8), was barred by limitation.

None of these contentions is really well founded and they must all be rejected for reasons we shall presently state.

15. As to the first, the contention that the plaintiff Sheoratanlal Koshal was a benamidar of the author Maniram Vishwakarma and not the real owner of the copyright can hardly be accepted. The allegation in the written-statement that the author, being a Government servant, could not openly engage himself in any kind of business which yielded profit to him without permission of the Director of Public Instruction, or, that securing of such permission, besides entailing endless enquiries by Government, was also by no means easy, or that the author, being a Government servant, was precluded under the Government Servants Conduct Rules from effecting any assignment of his rights and had, therefore, nominally utilised the name of his father-in-law namely the plaintiff Sheoratanlal Koshal, stands falsified by the plea inserted by way of amendment showing that such permission to the author was duly accorded by the Director of Public Instruction to undertake the work of writing in four parts a text book on arithmetic for use in Cls. V to VIII by his Memorandum No. 4237/F dated 9th November 1951 (Ex. P-1).

Now, when a plea of this nature is raised, the onus probandi to substantiate the transaction to be benami must necessarily be on the person making the allegation, and it has to be established by strictest evidence. The defendants had, therefore, the burden of proving by cogent and convincing evidence that the alleged assignment of copyright in favour of the plaintiff was a colourable or fictitious transaction intended to defeat any provision of law. We, however, find no justification for this assumption. Indeed, there was no occasion for the author Maniram Vishwakarma to have adopted any device of this kind because he had been permitted by the Director of Public Instruction himself not only to undertake the work of writing a text book on arithmetic but also to make an outright sale of his copyright for a lump sum payment under Exception 2 to S.R. 2 below Fundamental Rule 47. In pursuance thereof, he duly assigned his rights therein.

16. The Court's duty is to give effect to the actual bargain of the parties according to their intention, and when the transaction is in writing, the intention of the parties has to be gathered from the actual words used in the instrument unless they are such as not to convey their intention correctly. In Copinger and Skone James on Copyright, 9th edition, P. 376, the different forms in which such agreements in common use partake are set out thus:

"Agreements between authors and publishers fall roughly into four classes, namely:—

- (1) outright sales of copyright in consideration of a single payment;
- (2) licences for a period on royalty terms;
- (3) profit-sharing agreements; and
- (4) publication on commission, no rights in the work being vested in the publishers."

Under the terms of the agreement dated 9th March 1952 (Ex. P-4) between the parties, the author Maniram Vishwakarma had parted with 'all his rights' in lieu of the payment of a price. For a correct interpretation of that contract, we must primarily look to document itself. It reads:

"This agreement is made this day 9th of March 1952 between Shri Maniram Vishwakarma son of Shri Nanhebbhai Vishwakarma resident of Jabalpur (hereinafter for the sake of brevity referred to as the 'Author') of the one part and Shri Sheoratanlal Koshal son of Shri B. L. Koshal resident of Mandla (hereinafter for the sake of brevity referred to as the 'publisher') of the other part.

Whereas the author has written a book on Arithmetic for the Middle Classes in four parts, the manuscript of which is ready and fit for publication. And whereas the publisher is desirous of starting publications and the author is willing to entrust the publication thereof to the said publisher.

That the publisher shall pay Rs. 1200/- (one thousand and two hundred only) in all to the author for the said four parts of the books.

That the publisher shall print or cause the said books to be printed in four volumes to be used for middle classes. The books may be named by the publisher according to his choice.

The books may be published by the publisher himself or he may in his discretion transfer his publishing rights to some one else. For the publication of the said books for the said sum of Rs. 1200/- (one thousand and two hundred only), the author conveys all rights to Sheoratanlal.

The author has received Rs. 500/- (Five hundred only) today and has handed over the manuscript to the publisher. The balance of the sum amounting to Rs. 700/- (Seven hundred only) shall be paid to the author within a period of three months by the said publisher.

The publisher will have a right to get the work revised, translated or rewritten by the author if and when necessity arises on account of change of syllabus or any other like reason and, in the event, will be liable to reimburse the author suitably. In the event of the author refusing to rewrite or revise the work, the publisher will be at liberty to get it suitably rewritten and revised by someone else. However, when the work is rewritten or revised by someone else, the publisher will be liable to safeguard and maintain the high standard and prestige of the work done by the author.

The publisher shall not act in any way which may be detrimental to the interest of the books or their reputation and the rights of the publisher will be liable to be forfeited in case the publisher acts in a manner detrimental to the interest or reputation of the books.

That the author hereby declares and assures the publisher that the book written by him is his sole work and would not infringe the copyright of another.

M. R. Vishwakarma, Author.
Sheoratanlal,
Publisher."

Apart from the words 'the author conveys all his rights', the other terms are clearly indicative that the agreement between the parties was of the first category, i.e., it was an agreement for an outright sale of the copyright without reservation of any kind by the author in respect of any right whatever in himself. The plaintiff had, therefore, full legal title to the copyright and as a logical consequence thereof, he also had acquired the right to enter into a publishing contract like the agreement dated 13th March 1952 (Ex. P-5) with the defendants. A fortiori, the plaintiff had a right to sue then in his own name for his royalties thereunder and for the other consequential reliefs flowing from his legal ownership in the work, i.e., the right to an account of profits, which is only an equitable remedy incidental to the right of injunction, if there was any infringement of his copyright and, upon that event, also of recovering the infringing copies, if any, which were pirated from the work in question.

17. From a perusal of the terms appearing in the agreement taken as a whole and particularly the operative portion thereof, we find that the executant had unequivocally and in categorical language "assigned" his copyright. The recitals of the document are plain enough and the terms are susceptible of no other construction than this that the author Maniram Vishwakarma had made an outright sale of his copyright in favour of the plaintiff Sheoratanlal Koshal in consideration of payment of Rs. 1,200/- for the making of such assignment. The contention is not that the arrangement so arrived at was either forbidden by law or was against public policy and, therefore, void and unenforceable under Section 23 of the Contract Act. The submission is that the plaintiff had no right to sue, being a mere benamidar.

As already stated, we find that the author having been permitted under Exception 2 to SR 2 below Fundamental Rule 47 to undertake the work in question provided he assigns all his rights, there was no occasion for him to enter into a colourable transaction to defeat any provision of law. We may incidentally mention that although the defendants had pleaded that the agreement in question was for a consideration which was forbidden by law and opposed to public policy and, therefore, was not enforceable under Section 23 of the Contract Act and had raised this issue in the Court below, the learned counsel appearing on their behalf has abandoned that stand, and no provision either in the General Book Circulars or in the Government Servants Conduct Rules were brought to our notice to suggest that such contract would be legally invalid. On the contrary, Exception 2 to SR. 2 below Fundamental Rule 47 not only permits a Government servant to be the author of a book but also enables him to assign his rights under certain conditions.

18. Even otherwise, the onus of establishing a transaction to be benami is on the person who asserts it. This cannot be a matter of presumption and has not only to be averred in the pleadings but also must be proved by legal evidence. In absence of evidence, the apparent title prevails. See, Smt. Surasabaini Debi v. Phanindra Mohan Majumdar, AIR 1965 SC 1364. Normally, the proof of a transaction being benami rests not only on direct evidence but also on the relevant circumstances. In absence of any direct proof, the circumstantial evidence may sometime clinch the issue. The real criterion in cases of benami transactions is to consider the source of funds for the acquisition, motive, possession of property, custody of title-deeds, etc. See Sreemanchunder Dey v. Gopaul Chunder Chuckerburty, (1866-67) 11 Moo Ind App 28 (PC) and Gangadara Ayyar v. Subramania Sastri, AIR 1949 FC 88.

In Gangadara Ayyar's case, AIR 1949 FC 88 (supra), their Lordships of the Federal Court have stated that source of money for the acquisition of property is an important test, but unfortunately in a case like the present, that is of no avail. Even if it were, we have the testimony of P.W. 2 Sheoratanlal Koshal and P.W. 6 Maniram Vishwakarma that the transaction was real and the assignment of copyright was effected on payment of Rs. 1,200/- If in the nature of things, there is no scope for applying these tests, the burden of proving the transaction to be benami would be very much greater. In matters of this description the decision of the Court must rest not on mere suspicion but only on legal evidence, including testimony of witnesses. On the reasonable probabilities and legal inferences arising from the proved or admitted facts in the case, we are satisfied that the alleged benami nature of the transaction is not established, and, therefore, the apparent title must prevail. Having dealt with the plaintiff as the owner of copyright and having derived benefits of a contract with him, the defendants are really precluded from contending that the real title resides elsewhere. Such an estoppel necessarily arises by reason of their privity of contract.

19-20. Next, the question is whether the parties were still at the stage of negotiations and, therefore, the agreement dated 13th March 1952 (Ex. P-5) had not matured into an enforceable contract. The argument is that the document Ex. P-5, on which the suit is based, is merely a 'tentative draft' of an agreement and did not represent a 'concluded contract' between the parties. Alternatively, it is suggested that it was a 'unilateral document' executed by the plaintiff alone, and the mere addition of the word 'approved' by Basant Kumar Mishra, defendant No. 3, would not mean its acceptance by defendant No. 1 M/s Mishrabandhu Karyalaya (After considering the evidence, the Court held that the agreement dated 13th March 1952 (Ex. P-5) truly represented a concluded contract between the parties.)

21. Coming to the third contention raised by the learned counsel, we are satisfied that it is wholly devoid of substance. In dealing with arrangements between authors and publishers, particularly as regards publishing agreements, Copinger and Skone James indicate that no formalities are required, stating:

"Contracts between authors and publishers are not, as in some countries, regulated by any special law, but their validity, construction and enforcement depend upon the ordinary rules of law governing contracts relating to dealings with personal property. In practice, such arrangements vary, through many gradations of formality, from an oral or implied licence to publish a single article to a full-length publishing agreement. It is the informal agreement leaving many essential terms to implication that most often renders difficult the determination of the respective rights of the parties." (p. 375).

According to the learned authors, writing is essential when there is an assignment of copyright or an exclusive licence to publish. As already stated, such agreements form into four distinct categories. We are, however, not left to any implications to ascertain the nature of the right that came into existence, because the terms of the agreement between the parties are embodied in a writing dated 13th March 1952 (Ex. P-5). In the case of such formal agreements, the most important point to determine is whether any copyright is to be vested in the publisher or whether a licence only is intended. In the former case, the publisher will enjoy the full legal title to the copyright and will alone be entitled to enforce the right against third parties. In the case of a licence which in a publishing agreement will normally be an exclusive licence, the grant is subject to certain conditions and on their non-fulfilment, the licence is capable of being revoked. We have no manner of doubt that the real arrangement between the parties was that the copyright in the work belonged to the plaintiff Sheoratanlal and the defendants' firm M/s. Mishrabandhu Karyalaya was given an exclusive licence to publish it on certain conditions. The position would have been entirely different if the plaintiff had assigned his copyright and stipulated for payment on royalty terms. In that event, the rights of the parties would have been worked out in the light of the decision in Barkar v. Stickney, 1919-1 KB 121. In that context, Copinger and Skone James state at p. 379:—

"It seems fairly clear that as the law now stands, an author, who has entered into a publishing agreement in which the copyright is assigned to the publisher on royalty terms, has no right of action for the royalties against an assign of the publisher. Authors, therefore, should keep the copyright themselves and assign no more than a right to publish conditional upon royalties being paid and only assignable if they are provided for."

That, however, is not the case, because the plaintiff had not assigned his copyright on royalty terms but merely entered into a publishing agreement with M/s. Mishrabandhu Karyalaya for retaining in himself the copyright and conferred on them the right to publish the work on payment of certain royalty. The matter depends on the construction of the terms of the agreement dated 13th March 1952 (Ex. P-5), which reads:

"मैं शिवरतनलाल कोशल, मंडला का निवासी हूँ मैंने जो अंक-गणित की पुस्तक जिसका नाम आदर्श अंक-

गणित है और जो कि मि. स्कूल की कक्षाओं के लिए चार भागों में लिखी गई है। उक्त पुस्तक के लेखक श्री. मनीराम विद्वकर्मा से सर्वाधिकार सहित खरीद ली है, उस पुस्तक के प्रकाशन का अधिकार मैं जबलपुर के मिश्र बन्धु कार्यालय को निम्नाल्लिखित शर्तों पर देता हूँ कि—

(१) मिश्र बन्धु कार्यालय से मुझे विकी हुई प्रतियाँ के मूल्य पर १५ प्रतिशत (पन्द्रह प्रतिशत) रायल्टी मिला करेगी।

(२) रायल्टी का हिसाब प्रतिवर्ष दिसम्बर के माह में हुआ करेगा।

(३) मुझे अथवा मेरे द्वारा नियुक्त व्यक्ति को इस पुस्तक के हिसाब-किताब देखने का पूर्ण अधिकार रहेगा।

(४) यदि इस पुस्तक को अन्य किसी प्रांत के पाठ्यक्रम के अनुरूप बनाने में किसी प्रकार के संशोधन की आवश्यकता होगी तो मैं पुस्तक के मूल लेखक से वह कार्य निःशुल्क करा दूंगा।

(५) यदि मिश्र बन्धु कार्यालय इस पुस्तक के अनुवाद को अन्य किसी भाषा में प्रकाशित करना चाहेंगा तो उन्हें इन्हीं शर्तों पर उसके प्रकाशन का अधिकार रहेगा। यदि मिश्र बन्धु कार्यालय अनुवाद प्रकाशित न करें तो मुझे किसी अन्य प्रकाशक से प्रकाशित कराने का पूर्ण अधिकार रहेगा। उस दशा में अन्य प्रकाशन मिश्र बन्धु कार्यालय को विकी हुई प्रतियाँ पर १ प्रतिशत (एक प्रतिशत) रायल्टी देगा।

(६) यदि मध्य प्रदेश के मिडिल स्कूल की कक्षाओं के इस विषय के पाठ्यक्रम में कोई परिवर्तन होगा तो मैं लेखक से इस पुस्तक का संशोधन पूरा करा दूंगा जिसे मिश्र बन्धु कार्यालय को इन्हीं शर्तों पर छापना होगा; अन्यथा मैं उसे किसी दूसरे प्रकाशक के द्वारा छापवाने में पूर्ण स्वतंत्र रहूंगा।

(७) मिश्र बन्धु कार्यालय इस पुस्तक का प्रकाशन आज से तीन माह के भीतर कराने का प्रबन्ध करेंगे और मूल ५०० रुपये एडवान्स रायल्टी के बतौर देंगे जो कि मेरे रायल्टी के हफ्ते में २ बराबर बराबर हिस्सों में दो वर्षों में कट दिया जायेगा।

(८) मैं इस पुस्तक का कॉपी संस्करण न ता छापा और न छपाऊंगा। मैं इस पुस्तक की भाषा और विषय का संक्षेप में बरके किसी दूसरे से प्रकाशित न कराऊंगा और न स्वयं करूंगा।

(९) पूर्वोक्त कार्यालय के संग्रह को विषय की रक्षा करते हुए इस पुस्तक में संशोधन और परिवर्तन करने का पूर्ण अधिकार रहेगा। मैं विश्वास दिलाता हूँ कि इस पुस्तक के प्रकाशन में कोई विषय ऐसा नहीं लिया गया

22. As a matter of construction of the words used by the parties, the agreement really intended a licence only and not an absolute or partial assignment of the copyright, that is to say, it was a publishing agreement with a printers' firm on the usual term of payment of a certain percentage of royalty to the owner of the copyright, and, therefore, the defendant firm M/s Mishrabandhu Karyalaya acquired no right in the copyright itself but only an exclusive licence to publish. In Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd Edn., Vol. 8, Paras. 743, and 758 the effect of such agreements has been stated thus:

"A licence may be for a term of years or for a definite period, in which case, in the absence of anything to the contrary in the contract, the publisher will not be restrained from selling, after the expiration of the time specified in the agreement, copies printed during that period. Warne v. Routledge (1874) LR 18 Eq. 497 and Howitt v. Hall (1862) 6 LT 348. Where under an agreement between an author and his publisher a licence is conferred on the publisher without limitation to any definite period, and where payment to the author is by royalties or by a share in the profits, the licence, although exclusive so long as it exists, is revocable; and the author can restrain the publication of any edition subsequent to the notice of revocation. Reade v. Bentley, (1838) 4 K and J 656 and (1874) 18 Eq 497 (supra)," (at p. 408).

"In the case of agreements between authors and publishers, or theatrical producers, it is often difficult to distinguish between a sole and exclusive licence and an assignment of copyright. Where the agreement between the author and his publisher contains no express terms as to the copyright, if the consideration is payment to the author of royalties or a share of the profits instead of a sum of money paid down, the inference is that the copyright is not assigned, but that a sole and exclusive licence is concerned upon the publisher. Hole v. Bradbury, 1879-12 Ch D 886 at p. 895, per Fry, J.; Re. Jude's Musical Compositions 1907-1 Ch 651 (CA); Stevens v. Benning, 1855-6 De Gm and G 223 and Commr. of Inland Revenue v. Longmans Green and Co. Ltd., (1932) Macg Cop Cas (1928-35) 345," (at p. 414). Applying these principles to the agreement in question, we are clearly of the view that the aforesaid agreement dated 13th March 1952 (Ex. P-5) created a licence in favour of the defendant firm M/s. Mishrabandhu Karyalaya, who thereupon acquired the benefits of a publishing agreement subject to their fulfilling the terms and conditions contained therein. We are fortified in this conclusion by the following observations in Copinger and Skone James on Copyright, 9th Edn., at p. 384:

"But wherever there are continuous obligations on the part of the publisher—for instance, the payment of royalties to the author—the tendency of the courts is to construe the agreement as conferring upon the publisher a conditional licence to publish rather than as giving him an equitable title to the copyright."

It seems to follow from these that upon non-fulfilment of any of the terms which are essential to the contract itself, the licence was capable of being terminated by reasonable notice.

23-28. Fourthly, the learned counsel for the appellant is not right in urging that there was failure on the part of the author to revise the work in question in terms of clauses 4 and 6 of the agreement set out above, and that there was, therefore, a breach of the covenants contained therein which disentitled him or his assignee from claiming any equitable relief for rendition of accounts or for the grant of an injunction. (After considering the evidence, the judgment proceeded.) In dealing with the question of breach, the learned Judge held that the defendant firm M/s. Mishrabandhu Karyalaya had committed breach of the agreement (i) in not getting the book revised through the plaintiff by the author according to the metric system, (ii) in not having the 1952 edition altered and corrected by the author and that it contained numerous mistakes and inaccuracies which were not there in the work as originally published, and (iii) in not rendering to the plaintiff regular accounts of the royalties payable to him under the agreement and in non-payment of the royalty which has fallen due thereunder for the years in question. We are fully in accord with these findings reached by the learned Judge for the reasons advanced and would, therefore, hold that there was no breach of clauses 4 and 6 of the contract by the plaintiff. On the contrary, agreeing with the learned Judge, we would further hold that the defendants themselves had committed breach of the various covenants contained therein, particularly in regard to (i) submission and rendition of the yearly accounts of royalties in the month of December each year; (ii) their failure to pay Rs. 13,790.46, the balance of royalties which had admittedly accrued due upto the end of December 1959, and of royalties which had and have fallen due for the years subsequent thereto (clause 1), upto the date of institution of suit and thereafter; (iii) the revision of the book by a person other than the author, and the taking out its altered or revised editions, without reference to the plaintiff to whom the copyright therein belonged (Clauses 4 and 6); and (iv) by the pirating of the work in the open market by its publication and sale, after revocation of the licence by the plaintiff's notice dated 15th April 1961 (Ex. P-28). These were breaches of essential terms of the contract itself, which per se would entitle the plaintiff to treat the contract to have come to an end.

29. However, before dealing with that aspect, we would like to add that the learned Judge has also been right in arriving at his other conclusion, viz., that the publication of a rival text-book 'Purva Madhyamik Ank Ganeet' by the defendants, was not in contravention of the agreement between the parties, and, therefore, its publication and sale could not be prevented. That is so, far a two-fold reason, namely— (i) there was no restrictive covenant in the agreement prohibiting the defendants from engaging into a competitive trade, and (ii) the publication of an elementary text-book on a subject like Arithmetic which must of necessity, be drawn from a "common source" available to all, cannot be treated to be in contravention of a publishing agreement like the one with which we are dealing at present. In Halsbury's Laws of England, IIIrd Edn., Vol. 8, Para 760, the law is stated thus:

"A publisher on royalty terms is entitled to publish a competing book, and an agreement not to do anything to injure the author's right to royalties will not be implied: Cescinsky v. Routledge (George) and Sons, Ltd. (1916) 2 KB 325 at p. 329 per Rowlatt, J."

30. The case of Mathewson v. Stochdale, 1806-12 Ves 270 is instructive. In that case, the dispute was as regards a certain list which was maintained in the India House and had been published by the plaintiff. It was alleged that the defendant had copied that list and thereby infringed the plaintiff's copyright. The Court, however, held that all human events were equally open to all who wished to add to or improve the materials, already collected by others, thus making an original work, and no man could monopolise such a subject. The judgment goes on to say that every man may take what is useful from the original work, improve, add to and give to the public the whole, comprising the original work, with the additions and improvements made by him and in such a case, there is no invasion of any right. But a copy, much less a servile copy, of a work cannot be allowed to stand. In Hanfstaengl v. W. H. Smith and Son, (1905) 1 Ch 519, the definition of a 'copy' was adopted from an earlier decision which runs as follows:

"A copy is that which comes so near to the original as to give every person seeing it the idea created by the original," and then follows a passage from the House of Lords' case in Franz Hanfstaengl v. H. R. Baines and Co., 1895 AC 20, to the following effect:

"The question may be solved by taking each of the works to be compared as a whole and determining whether there is not merely a similarity or resemblance in some leading feature or in certain of the details, but whether keeping in view the idea and general effect created by the original, there is such a degree of similarity as would lend one to say that the alleged infringement is a copy on reproduction of the original."

In Jarrold v. Haywood, 1870-18 WR 279, the dispute was in respect of certain scientific books that the plaintiffs pleaded that his books were the result of his individual labour and skill. The principle enunciated therein, was as follows:

"If any part of a work complained of is a transcript of another work or with colourful additions and variations and prepared without any real independent literary labour such portion of the work is piratical. But it is impossible to establish a charge of piracy when it is necessary to track mere passage and lines through hundreds of pages or when the authors of a work challenged as piratical have honestly applied their labour to various sources of information available." It would thus appear that a 'copy' is that which comes so near the original as to suggest the original to the mind of the reader. The dictum of Kekewich, J., in 1908-1 Ch 519 (supra) has throughout been followed and applied in India. See, Sitanath Basak v. Mohini Mohan Singh, 34 Cal WN 540 = (AIR 1931 Cal 233), Mohendra Chandra Nath Ghosh v. Emperor, AIR 1928 Cal 359, Kartar Singh v. Ladha Singh, AIR 1934 Lah 777 and Gopal Das v. Jagannath Prasad, ILR (1938) All 370 = (AIR 1938 All 266).

31. Applying these principles to the present case, we are unable to find any material showing that the "Purva Madhyamik Ank Ganeet" published by the defendants, was a copy or a colourful imitation of the 'Sara Middle School Ank Ganit' written by the author. Suffice to say, the laws of copyright do not protect ideas, but they deal with the particular expression of ideas. It is always possible to arrive at the same result from independent sources. The rule appears to be settled that the compiler of a work in which absolute originality is of necessity excluded is entitled, without exposing himself to a charge of piracy, to make use of preceding works upon the subject, where he bestows such mental labour upon what he has taken, and subjects it to such revision and correction as to produce an original result. See, Spiers v. Brown, 1858-6 WR 352, Reade v. Lacy, (1861) 128 RR 508 and Hotten v. Arthur, (1863) 136 RR 249, cited by Barnet and Ganga Nath JJ., in ILR (1938) All 370 = (AIR 1938 All 266) (supra).

32. In Sita Nath Basak's case, 34 Cal WN 540 = (AIR 1931 Cal 233) the Calcutta High Court expressed its opinion that in this class of cases, the Court should be reluctant to sit as experts and to decide the question of infringement of copyright without the aid of expert evidence. That view was followed with approval by the Allahabad High Court in ILR (1938) All 370 = (AIR 1938 All 266) (supra). The learned counsel for the respondent has not attacked this part of the judgment under appeal, and there appears to us no evidence on record which would justify any finding of the kind that the book in question was a colourful imitation of the other, merely because there was similarity in treatment. Unless there is a minute scrutiny of alleged similarities and dis-similarities and extensive and lengthy comparison, no conclusion to that effect is possible. It is not only proper but essential that the issue of this kind should be tried with the aid of experts who should be appointed Commissioners to investigate and report on similarities. As already stated, neither has any such comparative material been placed on the record from which we could arrive at a conclusion, nor were any arguments addressed to us on this aspect. The question whether there has been an infringement of copyright depends on whether a colourable imitation has been made. Whether the work complained of is or is not a colourable imitation of another, is essentially a question of fact and the burden of proving that fact was undoubtedly on the plaintiff who has led no evidence. The learned Judge has, therefore, rightly held this against the plaintiff.

33. Even otherwise, that decision of his as regard "Purva Madhyamik Ank Ganit", is unassailable on principle. Similarity may be a point in issue in this class of cases, but mere similarity in treatment is not enough. See, 34 Cal WN 540 = (AIR 1931 Cal 233) (supra). That is so, because the sameness of a thing delineated does not necessarily also produce a similarity in delineation. The mere resemblance of a work by itself, is not an evidence of piracy, when the subject dealt with is common. Any fair dealing with a work has always been kept out of the mischief of the Copyright Act, particularly if the books are based on material which is common property.

Accordingly, the Calcutta High Court in Moulvi Umar Ali v. Juan Ranjan Mitra, (1935) 39 Cal WN 949, while dealing with a book on Elementary Geography, stated that the author of the work complained of, was at liberty to draw upon common sources of information available to all. The test, therefore, is not the resemblance of a few passages here and there, but the general impression that is left in one's mind which is of the essence, and must be regarded as the relevant criterion in determining whether a colourable imitation has been produced. When a question of this nature arises, the Court has, therefore, to keep in mind both the external and internal features of the two books. By "external feature" is meant the get-up and the overall scope of the publication. By "internal feature" is meant the general lay-out of the subject-matter; the manner of its treatment and the amount of material contained in the book in question. See, S. K. Dutt v. Law Book Co., ILR (1954) 1 All 289 = (AIR 1954 All 570). That depends upon the degree of resemblance which makes one a mere slavish copy of another. The workable test of what constitutes a copy or colourable imitation which emerges from the authorities cited by us earlier appears to be this, that in order to constitute the infringement of a copyright, there should be "direct or indirect use" of the aforesaid features of the plaintiff's work in which copyright in him subsists. There is nothing to show that that test is fulfilled in this case.

31. Equally unacceptable is the next contention, namely, that the plaintiff having himself terminated the contract by his notice dated 25th April 1961 (Ex. P-28), could not fall back on its terms, for claiming any royalty for the period subsequent thereto, and that his claim, if any, was to sue for damages. That notice of revocation reads, thus:

"For the reasons stated in paras 3 and 4 above my client does not intend to keep the publishing rights with you any further and the grant of publishing right to you in respect of the Saral Middle School Ankanit (all parts according to old syllabus as well as new or unified syllabus) as per agreement dated 13-3-52 is hereby withdrawn, revoked and terminated. My client shall now convey the publishing rights to other persons as-

ording to his choice and you are hereby asked not to print and publish any fresh issue or edition of the aforesaid books, after receipt of this notice. The existing copies may however be sold off or handed over to my client.

Please, therefore, take notice that you shall not hereafter publish or undertake reprinting or do any other act in that behalf in pursuance of the aforesaid agreement which stands cancelled with regard to the above referred books. You are also asked within seven days from the receipt of this notice to give a detailed account of the said books which have been printed, sold, as well as now in stock with you."

The reasons stated therein earlier were: (i) the defendants' failure to pay royalty at 15% on sales every year; (ii) the non-payment of past arrears of royalties amounting to more than Rs. 15,000/- still remaining outstanding, which they had not paid in spite of repeated demands; (iii) their publication of another book in Arithmetic "Purva Madhyamik Ank Ganeet" (in three parts) contrary to the understanding between the parties and despite protests, and (iv) being interested in promoting sales of that book, the defendants had made it impracticable for the publishing rights to remain with them any longer. To this notice, the defendants replied, by thier lawyer's letter dated 28th June 1961 (Ex. P-32), to the following effect:

"It is true that a written agreement was entered into on 13-3-52 between my clients and Shri Maniram Vishwakarma of Jabalpur (who happens to be your son-in-law) according to which my clients obtained absolute permanent irrevocable copyrights for publication and sale of "Saral Middle School Ank Ganit" (all parts). You are aware that the original document of agreement was given to the author Shri Maniram Vishwakarma on his request and a copy thereof was retained for records by my clients.

According to this agreement the only rights which Shri Maniram wanted and he did receive was that he shall be entitled to a royalty at the rate of 15% on the sale of the aforesaid books which would be revised if and when necessary according to the changing circumstances. Shri Maniram was further given a choice of assigning his rights of Royalty in the books aforesaid to any person whom he might nominate in order to save his position as a Government servant. This he has already done by appointing you his assignee on and from 5-10-54 by a written intimation sent to my clients in this behalf.

Please note that you cannot assign publishing rights of the books under reference to any person because their copyrights have absolutely and permanently vested in my client ever since 13-3-52 agreement.

x x x x

My clients reiterate that absolute rights of publication and sale of books under reference rest in my client. The books would be published as usual and amount of Royalty shall be paid to you or any other person whom Shri Maniram might nominate in future according to the new terms contained in your letter dated 16-4-60 reference to which has already been made above.

Please, therefore, note that you or anybody else including Shri Maniram have absolutely no right of publication and sale of books concerned."

35. In other words, although the defendants were in breach of the contract, they signified their unwillingness to accept its rescission, wrongfully asserted a title to the copyright in themselves which was adverse to that of the plaintiff and thereafter admittedly continued the publication and sale of "Saral Middle School Ank Ganeet" under the terms of the agreement dated 13th March 1952, along with their own "Purva Madhyamik Ank Ganeet". Incidentally, the plaintiff after having revoked that agreement on account of the breach of its terms by the defendants-firm, M/s. Mishra Bandhu Karyalaya, rightly had the book "Saral Middle School Ank Ganeet" published by M/s. Narbada Book Depot, Jabalpur, another firm of printers and publishers here in mitigation of damages.

That the plaintiff was entitled to enter into such an arrangement has not been questioned before us nor has his right to the rendition of accounts of royalty payable in respect of sales of "Saral Middle School Ank Ganeet" upto 25th April, 1961, the date of revocation of the publishing agreement, been challenged.

36. Indeed, the right of the owner of a copyright to an account of the royalties or profits, as the case may be, accruing from the sales of the book when he has not parted with his copyright, is well settled. The reason for this is that a publishing agreement between an author (or his assignee) and a publisher establishes a fiduciary relationship between the parties, and the former is, therefore, entitled to an account from the publishers. For this purpose, the publisher must produce all books and documents necessary for the proper vouching of the accounts; he is not entitled to charge the author (or his assignee) at a higher rate for the expenses of printing paper, etc., than he himself actually pays; and must give the author the benefit of all trade commissions and discounts See, Copinger and Skone James on Copyright, 9th Edn., p. 389. That would necessarily be so in a profit-sharing agreement, when the parties enter into a joint adventure like the one in (1858) 4 K and J 658, where both parties had equally taken upon themselves the whole expense and risk of bringing out a publication, by the way of a joint adventure, or a partnership. Even in such a case, the copyright therein does not vest in the publisher but belongs to the author, although the publication of it is on terms that the author and publisher would have an equal share of profits.

37. In a publishing agreement like the present one (Ex. P-5), by which the plaintiff created only a licence to print, publish and sell copies of the book in question in favour of the defendants-firm, M/s. Mishra Bandhu Karyalaya, the right to the rendition of a true account of the sales on which the royalties are payable, exists in the very nature of things. As licencees, they would have to account for the royalties earned by the plaintiff who was the owner of the copyright. However, the parties have not left this to implication, but have expressly made a provision to that effect in Clauses 1, 2 and 3 of the agreement upon a plain construction of which, we must hold that the plaintiff was clearly entitled to a rendition of accounts. Even otherwise, the principle indisputably is, that a licensor generally has (i) the right to an account of all the sales effected by the licensee during the period during which the licence had subsisted even after revocation of the licence, and also (ii) the right to an inspection of all the accounts of sales as maintained by the licensee for that period, for the purpose of quantifying royalties payable during the entire period of the licence, i.e., for the purpose of arriving at the true figure of final royalty payable to him under the agreement. See, Anglo-American Asphalt Co. Ltd. v. Crowley Russell and Co. Ltd., 1945-2 All ER 324, and there is no reason why that principle should not equally be applicable to a licence created in favour of a printer's firm with a view to determine the amount of royalty payable in respect thereof.

38. We are, however, digressing from the real point in issue, namely, as to the rights of the plaintiff, if any, to receive any royalty for the period subsequent to the revocation of licence or to a rendition of accounts of such royalty in respect of that period, i.e., after the licence had been terminated by his notice. It is urged that upon failure of the defendants to render an account of the royalty earned in December each year and on their admitted failure to pay any royalties which now are in arrears, there was a breach on their part of the essential terms which were so vital that they go to the very root of the contract and the plaintiff, accordingly, had rightly treated the contract as discharged by breach, but after a termination of that contract by the notice dated 25th April 1961 (Ex. P-28) his only remedy for the period subsequent was to sue for damages for alleged infringement of his copyright and not for a claim for an account of royalties. While we agree that after revocation of the licence, the plaintiff's remedy was for damages for the period subsequent and not for royalty, nevertheless, the claim in respect of that period in substance is one for damages. The reason for this decision of ours follows hereafter.

39. The answer to this problem is to be found in certain leading principles of the law of contract in the English common law which may be taken as well settled. Breach of contract always entitles the injured party to bring an action for damages. It may also entitle him to treat the contract as discharged, but he can only treat it as discharged on proving that the breach is either of the entire contract or of some term which is so vital that it goes to the root of the contract. The breach must be such as to show that the party in default has repudiated his obligations under the contract. Before the time for performance arrives a party to the contract may declare his intention of not performing the contract. This is called a repudiation of contract or an anticipatory breach. In such a case, the other party is not bound to wait until the actual time for performance arrives; he may immediately treat the contract as discharged and sue for damages. In the case of the repudiation of part of the contract, it is a question of construction whether the part repudiated is so vital as to entitle the other party to treat the whole contract as discharged. However, repudiation by one party does not of itself discharge the contract. The contract is only discharged when the repudiation is accepted by the other party. If the repudiation is not accepted, the contract remains in existence. The party in default may then change his mind and proceed with performance. See, Anson's Principles of the Law of Contract, 22nd Edn., Pp 437 et seq; Cheshire and Fifoot's Law of Contract, 6th Edn., Pp 505-6; Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd Edn., paras 274 and 334 at Pp 160-1 and 203.

40. In Halsbury's Laws of England, the principles are enunciated thus:

- "(i) One of the modes in which a contract may be discharged is by breach, where the promisor has failed to perform his promise and the other party elects to treat them at an end.
- (ii) Where one of parties repudiates the contract by showing that he does not intend to perform it, the other party is entitled to sue him for breach of the contract and is absolved from further performance of his part of the contract and if he elects to do this the party in default is not entitled to an opportunity of changing his mind. In such a case, the contract is completely determined, and the party in default cannot insist upon the performance by the other party even of a stipulation which is collateral to the main purpose of the contract.

(iii) In order to amount to repudiation, there must be conduct showing clearly an intention not to fulfil the contract."

41. A fortiori, the breach of the fundamental obligation created by the contract is a cause of discharge. It may, indeed, be said, in general that any breach which prevents substantial performance is a cause of discharge. Whether performance is substantially prevented or only partially affected is, of course, a question that depends upon the circumstances of each case. But the general principle is, in the words of Lord Blackburn in Hersey Steel and Iron Co. v. Naylor Benzon and Co., 1884-9 AC 434; thus:

"Where there is a contract which is to be performed in future, if one of the parties has said to the other in effect, 'if you go on and perform your side of the contract I will not perform mine', that in effect amounts to saying, 'I will not perform the contract'. In that case the other party may say 'you have given me distinct notice that you will not perform the contract. I will not wait until you have broken it, but I will treat you as having put an end to the contract, and if necessary I will sue you for damages, but at all events I will not go on with the contract.'" To bring this principle into operation, the intention of a party not to proceed further with the contract need not be expressly stated. It may be inferred from his acts or omissions. But "repudiation of a contract is a serious matter not to be found or inferred". Smyth (Rose T.) and Co. Ltd. v. T. D. Bailey, Son and Co., 1940-3 All ER 60 at p. 71, per Lord Wright, and the question whether the inference is justified is one of fact dependent upon the nature of the default and the circumstances in which it was made.

42. It must be observed, however, that a contract cannot be terminated unilaterally. Therefore, if one party commits a breach sufficiently serious to constitute a discharge, this does not automatically abrogate the mutual obligations, but merely gives the other party an option either to ignore the breach and to insist upon performance when due, or to accept the repudiation and treat himself as free from further liability. If he adopts the latter course, he can sue for damages forthwith, whether the time for performance is due or not, but if he refuses to regard the contract as discharged, he presents the guilty party with an opportunity to re-consider his attitude. It thus follows that a contract is not automatically discharged by breach but it only gives the injured party an option to treat the contract as at an end. Dealing with the case where a party has refused to proceed further with performance, Lord Simon in Heyman v. Darwins, Ltd., 1942 AC 356 at p. 361, described the position of the other party as follows:

"He may, notwithstanding the so-called repudiation, insist on holding his co-contractor to the bargain and continue to tender due performance on his part. In that event, the co-contractor has the opportunity of withdrawing from his false position, and, even if he does not, may escape ultimate liability because of some supervening event not due to his own fault which excuses or puts an end to further performance ..... Alternatively, the other party may rescind the contract, or (as it is sometimes expressed) 'accept the repudiation', by so acting as to make plain that, in view of the wrongful action of the party who was repudiated, he claims to treat the contract as at an end, in which case he can sue at once for damages."

43. These English common law principles are merely re-stated in Section 39 and the other allied sections of the Indian Contract Act, 1872. The right to rescission of a contract under Section 39, arises when the other party fails to perform the contract in its entirety. It reads:

"39. When a party to a contract has refused to perform, or disabled himself from performing, his promise in its entirety, the promisee may put an end to the contract, unless he has signified by words or conduct, his acquiescence in its continuance." In terms of this section, the renunciation must be absolute. In A. C. Moitra's Contract Act, 2nd Edn., p. 282, the law is stated thus:

"The term 'in its entirety' has been the subject of much judicial discussion, and it is sometimes very difficult to say when the promisor may be said to have refused to perform, or disabled himself from performing, his promise 'in its entirety'. A contract may contain several terms some of which may be subsidiary or ancillary to the main terms which the parties had as their object at the time entering into the agreement. It cannot be said that a breach of every term of a contract, e.g., as to time of delivery and as to time of payment, or even a breach in a material particular, gives the promisee the right of rescission when the breach does not relate to the substance of the promise taken as a whole. To constitute repudiation it must be shown that the party to the contract made it quite plain his intention not to perform the contract. In cases of this sort, where the question is whether the one party is set free by the action of the other, the real matter for consideration is whether the acts or conduct of the one do not amount to an intimation of an intention to abandon and altogether to refuse performance of the contract, and in order to give rise to a right of action immediately on the renunciation, the renunciation must relate at least to so vital a part of the contract as goes to the root of it. It is not, therefore, every breach but breach of an essential term of a contract alone by one party that entitles the other to repudiate the contract; the breach of non-essential terms entitles the other party to damages only."

44. While interpreting Section 39 of the Contract Act, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has in Murkhdhar Chatterjee v. International Film and Co., AIR 1943 PC 34 stated:

"The language employed by the Act presents certain problems of construction. When one party to a contract has refused to perform his obligation thereunder so as to give rise to a right in the other party to put an end to the contract, is the later a person at whose option the contract is voidable, and if he does put an end to the contract, does he rescind a voidable contract?"

XX XX XX
In a case within Section 39 the party who rightly 'puts an end to' or 'rescinds' the contract is entitled to damages for the defaulting party's breach. In this sense the contract has not ceased to be 'enforceable by law'. On the other hand, neither party is any longer bound to perform his promise—indeed an offer to do so, if made by either party, could properly be rejected by the other.

XX XX XX
The election of the party rescinding, as Cotton L. J. once put it in Johnstone v. Milling, 1886-16 QBD 460 at p. 470: 'relieves the other party from any further obligation under the contract and enables both parties to make arrangements for the future on the footing that the contract has been once for all broken and is at an end.'

45. Applying these principles to the present controversy, we have no manner of doubt that the non-remission of yearly accounts of royalties and the non-payment of the royalties which had accrued on sales, were breaches of the fundamental obligation as regards payment of royalty created by the contract in question, which entitled the plaintiff to treat the contract as discharged by breach. As already stated, repudiation or disclaimer occurs where one of the contracting parties evinces an intention not to go on with the contract. Such intention on the part of the defendants was sufficiently evinced by their conduct to not paying the amounts of royalties which have fallen in arrears, not rendering any accounts in respect thereof, for all the years in question, and also in asserting to themselves a title hostile to the plaintiff by falsely claiming in their notice dated 28th June 1961 (Ex. P-32) that they had acquired ownership in the copyright under a direct assignment from the author and that in the alternative, the copyright had been transferred to them under the agreement dated 13th March 1952 (Ex. P-5).

In other words, the defendants had acted in a manner so as to lead a reasonable person to the irresistible conclusion that they did not intend to fulfil their part of the contract. Now, the renunciation of a contract may take place either before its performance is due, or, during the performance of the contract itself. In the present case, the defendants had made it impossible by their own conduct for the contract to go on; and, there was no other alternative left to the plaintiff than to treat the contract as at an end, by the acceptance of their repudiation as discharging it, which absolved or discharged him from any further performance thereof. It is needless for us to stress that the rendition of accounts of the royalty earned @ 15% of the sales during the year, annually in the month of December of each year, and the payment of such royalties were the fundamental obligations of the contract, i.e., the "hard core" or the primary obligations, upon the breach of which, the contract itself would necessarily come to an end.

46. We regret to say that some of the authorities cited at the Bar have hardly any relevance to the question in controversy. A few of them may, however, be worth noticing. In Century Spg and Mfg. Co. Ltd. v. M/s. Motilal Dhariwal, 1966 MPLJ 659 = (AIR 1966 Madh Pra 313), this Court stated that a novation of contract under S. 62 of the Contract Act requires an agreement for rescission, in the context of a substitution of the original contract by a new contract where the promisee before its breach had gratuitously released the promisor from the obligation to perform his original promise. Now, a contract may be discharged, at any time, before breach by a new agreement made by the parties. Such new agreement may simply rescind the original contract or alter its terms and substitute a new contract in its place. In order to discharge the original contract, it is not necessary that the new agreement should have been performed, as is generally required for accord and satisfaction. For a discharge of the original contract, the new agreement must, however, possess all the attributes which are requisite to constitute a valid contract. A substituted agreement may operate as a waiver of the obligations imposed by the original contract or as a defence to a claim arising therefrom. The decision is, therefore, inapplicable to the present case.

In Tan Ah Boon v. State of Johore, AIR 1936 PC 236, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council had, while dealing with a claim for damages for the breach of an alleged contract, stated that a plaintiff could not succeed unless he avers and proves that he had performed or was at all times ready to perform his part of the contract. We can hardly see how this citation helps the learned counsel unless he wants to rely on it in furtherance of his submission that the plaintiff's only remedy after a termination of the contract lay in damages and he himself being in breach, that part of his claim must fail. As we have already held, the plaintiff was not in breach. On the contrary, the defendants themselves had committed quite a few breaches of the contract in question. The decision of the Privy Council in Tan Ah Boon's case, AIR 1936 PC 236 (Supra), therefore, is equally of no avail.

Similarly, although General Billposting Co. v. Atkinson, 1909 AC 118 and O'Neil v. Armstrong, (1895) 2 QB 418 relate to the rights of a party who accepts the discharge of a contract by the acceptance of its breach, the decisions there actually turned on the law of master and servant; and in reality they turned on their own facts. In General Billposting Co.'s case (1909) AC 118 (supra), it was held that a promise in restraint of trade, made by a servant, is dependent upon the obligation of the master to employ and pay him, in accordance with the contract of service, and therefore, if he was wrongfully dismissed, he was instantaneously discharged from the obligation of the restraint. In O'Neil's case, 1895-2 QB 418 (supra), a seaman had been employed, at an agreed wage, by the Captain of a torpedo-boat which was built in England for the Japanese Government and was on its voyage from England to Japan flying the Japanese flag; the Captain of that vessel was, incidentally, an officer in the Japanese Navy. While the vessel was on its voyage, the Japanese Government declared war against China which, besides making the voyage dangerous, also made it illegal under the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870, for the plaintiff to serve on board the ship which, flying the Japanese flag became a ship of war. The plaintiff, being warned on these matters, left the vessel at Aden, and thereafter, brought an action to recover the whole of the agreed wages for the entire voyage from England to Japan. Having regard to these circumstances the Court of Appeal held that the seaman was entitled to leave the vessel at Aden, and to sue for the full amount of his agreed wages for the voyage. We are unable to appreciate how these decisions apply to the present controversy.

47. The law is as has been stated by us in paras 38 et seq., of this judgment. In that view of the law, the question that arises is when there is a termination of a publishing contract occasioned by a breach of the fundamental obligations created by acceptance of the breach by the plaintiff in his notice of termination, whether he could fall back upon its terms for claiming any benefit like royalty on sale for the subsequent period, or, whether his right is only to sue for damages. We feel it is not necessary for us in this case to go into the wider question, namely, whether the injured party after acceptance of the breach of a contract can rely on its terms of "keep it alive" for his own benefit, i.e., for enforcing his rights thereunder against the party in breach. Suffice to say, that after revocation of the licence to print, publish and sell copies of the book "Saral Middle School Ank Ganeet" created in their favour, the injurious publication and sale of that book by the defendants thereafter, in spite of the plaintiff's notice of the termination dated 25th April 1961 (Ex. P-28), clearly constituted an infringement of his copyright therein, and the plaintiff's remedy was to sue for aggravated or exemplary damages.

48. In substance and essence, the plaintiff's claim for that period is for recovery of damages @ 15% of the sale proceeds. Although the plaintiff has in paragraph 14(c) claimed rendition of accounts of the sales from the year 1960 onwards for purposes of computation of royalty @ 15% of the total sales and interest @ 6% per annum from 1st January 1961, having regard to the revocation of licence w.e.f. 25th April 1961 that claim must be regarded as a claim for damages @ 15% of the sale proceeds which the plaintiff treats as the loss of his business profits he has actually suffered. An action for damages is only one method whereby a plaintiff may seek redress; he will frequently apply for an injunction and, if granted, this can affect the amount of recoverable damages, since prospective loss may have been thereby largely eliminated. More important in relation to damages, is the plaintiff's equitable remedy by way of an account of profits. This remedy is alternative to the action for damages, and is to be preferred by a plaintiff where the defendant has made more profit out of the infringement than the plaintiff has lost. See, Mayne and McGregor on Damages, 12th Edn. p. 794. The award of damages for infringement of a copyright, therefore, follows on the same lines as damages in an action for infringement of trade-mark or for passing off. The principal head of damages is the loss of business profits caused by the defendant's infraction of his copyright. We, accordingly, are of the view that the quantum of damages ordinarily claimable, in respect of a period after the revocation of a licence would be the loss of business profits. The plaintiff in such a case need not fall back on the royalty clause, i.e., try to keep alive the contract for enforcing his right to royalty thereunder. Nevertheless, nothing prevents a plaintiff from relying on the rate of royalty provided therein and he may adopt the "lost royalty profits" (in this case, 15% of the sale proceeds), as the basis for calculation of his loss. Even otherwise, the measure of damages under the Law of Copyright on the termination of such an agreement, is the "loss of profits" which the plaintiff might otherwise have made. See Copinger and Skone James on Copyright, 9th Edn. p. 204. In the present case, the plaintiff has chosen to value this loss w.e.f. 25th April 1961 @ 15% of the total sales, and we find no reason to interfere with that part of the claim.

49. Before parting with this aspect of the case, we think it desirable to state that though the remedies given by Section 6 of the Imperial Copyright Act of 1911, are not alternative to those given by Section 7, yet when the owner of a copyright obtains damages under Section 6, it often happens that he can recover nothing further in respect of damages under Section 7. Where the amount of damages awarded under Section 6 covers the price of permission to publish the work in question, the author is not entitled to damages also under Section 7. See, Copinger and Skone James on Copyright, p. 207-8. Also, Sutherland Publishing Co. v. Caxton Publishing Co., 1939 AC 178. Thus, damages for infringement under Section 6 and damages for conversion under Section 7 are cumulative but not alternative, and care must be taken to see that the damages awarded under the respective sections do not overlap. The latter point is explained by Green, L. J. in Sutherland Publishing Co. v. Caxton Publishing Co., 1936 Ch 323 at p. 342 as follows:

"As an example of what I mean by overlapping let me take the following case. The owner of a copyright in a book proves that, whereas if it had not been for the infringement he could have sold 1,000 copies, he has only been able to sell 500, the infringer having printed and sold 500 copies. It is obvious that as the possible market for the book is limited to 1,000 copies, if the damages for infringement under Section 6 are fixed on the basis that the copyright owner would have sold 1,000 copies but for the infringement, and at the same time the value of the 500 copies sold by the infringer is fixed for the purposes of Section 7 at the amount for which they were sold, the result will be that the copyright owner will have recovered damages on the footing that there was an available market for 1,500 copies only. If he had sold 1,000 copies there would have been no market for the 500 copies made by the infringer, which would accordingly have had no value. Conversely, if the 500 copies sold by the infringer were worth what they were sold for this could only be so on the basis that the copyright owner was only going to sell 500. In such a case it appears to me that to award to the copyright owner damages for infringement based on his inability to sell 500 copies and at the same time to award him damages based on the sale price of the 500 copies sold by the infringer would not be permissible."

The judgment of the Court of Appeal on this point was affirmed in the House of Lords. These decisions have throughout been followed in India. See W. B. Yeats v. Eric Dickinson, AIR 1938 Lah 173; Dharam Dutt Dhawan v. Ram Lal, AIR 1957 Punj 161 and Associated Publishers v. K. Bachyan, AIR 1961 Mad 114.

50. Lastly, the contention that the claim for recovery of Rs. 13,790.46 paise towards the arrears of royalty due upto the end of 1959, was barred by limitation was eventually not pressed by the learned counsel for the appellant because there is no merit in it. That part of the claim arises as a result of the rendition of accounts by the defendants, as per their statements of account dated 16th April 1964, (Exs. P-6, P-7 and P-8), whereby they acknowledged their liability to pay Rs. 15,760.46 paise towards the royalty for that period and the value of the stock-in-trade in their hands as on 26th January 1960. Towards this, the defendants have only paid Rupees 2,000/- on 18th April 1960, which left a sum of Rs. 13,760.46 paise in arrears. The present suit for the recovery of that amount was brought on 1st January 1963, within 3 years from the date of rendition of account, i.e., well within the period prescribed under the residuary Art. 120 of the Limitation Act, 1908 which alone applies to that part of the claim.

51. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The judgment and decree of the 5th Additional District Judge, Jabalpur, are upheld. Counsel's fee, as per the Schedule or certificate, whichever is less.

Appeal dismissed.

BISHAMBHAR DAYAL, C. J.

AND SHIV DAYAL, J.

Smt. Krishnabai Babulal Mishra, Appellant v. Smt. Laxmibai, Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 740 of 1965, D/- 30-3-1970 decided by Division Bench on Order of Reference made by Bhawe J., D/- 26-11-1969.

GN/GN/D67/70/YPB/T

Houses and Rents — M. P. Accommodation Control Act (41 of 1961), Sections 13(6), 12 — Suit for eviction — Striking out of the defence — Effect — S. A. No. 940 of 1965, D/- 3-3-1969 (M. P.) Overruled.

The effect of the striking out of the defence under Section 13(6) is that the suit thereafter proceeds ex parte to the extent that it relates to Section 12. The written statement, so far as it relates to plaintiff averments concerning Sec. 12 is overlooked, the defendant-tenant is precluded from cross-examining the plaintiff-landlord or his witnesses and he is also precluded from producing any evidence on any question relating to the Act. The plaintiff's burden to establish at least one of the grounds under Section 12 becomes light. However, the effect is not to confer any additional right on the plaintiff or to make the provisions of Section 12 inapplicable to the suit. The plaintiff has still to establish that he is entitled to a decree for eviction (a) under general law and (b) also under the Act. In spite of his defence having been struck out, the defendant can still contest the suit as regards (a), although it will proceed ex parte as regards (b). Second Appeal No. 940 of 1965, D/- 3-3-1969 (M. P.), Overruled. (Para 12)

If the defence is struck out in the appellate Court, the appellate Court will still have to see whether on the plaintiff's evidence produced in trial Court, a ground under Section 12 has been made out. The defendant will be heard on that point to the limited extent of showing that the plaintiff's evidence is not enough to prove any ground under Section 12 but his written statement and evidence on that aspect of the case will not be considered. (Para 12)

 R. K. Pandey, for Appellant; P. R. Padhye, for Respondent.

SHIV DAYAL, J.:— This reference has been made by Bhawe, J. in the following circumstances. The appellant brought a suit against the respondent for ejection under Section 12 of the M. P. Accommodation Control Act, 1961, (hereinafter called the Act), on the ground that the suit accommodation had become unsafe for human residence, unless extensive repairs were effected; that the suit accommodation was required for the use of some relations of the plaintiff; that the defendant had sublet the suit premises; and that the defendant had caused substantial damage to the premises let out. The suit was resisted by the defendant.

The trial Court dismissed it holding that not one of those grounds was made out.

2. The plaintiff appealed. At her instance, the first appellate Court struck out the respondent's defence under Section 13(6) of the Act. However, the first appellate Court dismissed the plaintiff's appeal because she had not established any one of the grounds under Section 12 of the Act. The plaintiff then preferred this second appeal.

3. When this second appeal was placed for hearing before a learned single Judge, learned counsel for the defendant urged that the lower appellate Court was in error in striking out the defence. This contention was rejected by the learned single Judge. Then the question which arose for his consideration was whether the burden of proving one of the grounds under Section 12 of the Act still remained on the plaintiff notwithstanding the defence having been struck out. A decision of another learned Judge, in Mst. Hajara Begum v. Guljar Khan, S. A. No. 940 of 1965, D/- 3-3-1969 (M. P.), was cited before the learned single Judge, where the learned Judge in the cited case, had observed as follows:—

"Under the ordinary law, a tenancy is a matter of contract between a landlord and his tenant and is governed by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, with the result that a landlord is entitled to evict his tenant after determining his tenancy in accordance with the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. Section 12 of the Madhya Pradesh Accommodation Control Act, however, puts statutory restrictions on the rights of the landlord in the matter of eviction of tenants by providing that 'notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any other law or contract, no suit shall be filed in any civil Court against a tenant for his eviction from any accommodation except on one or more of the following grounds' which are then enumerated in clauses (a) to (p) of the Act. But Section 13 at the same time casts certain duties and obligations on the tenant if he wants to get the benefit of these statutory restrictions against eviction. The intention of the Legislature thus appears to be that tenants who do not comply with the provisions of Section 13, cannot get any statutory protection against eviction granted by the Act and cannot therefore claim that the plaintiff landlord cannot evict them unless he has complied with the provisions of Section 12 of the Act. The statutory immunity, from eviction which has been enacted in Section 12 of the Act for the benefit of the tenant is not available to him and the suit becomes in fact a simple suit governed by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act whereunder the landlord can evict his tenant after determining his tenancy in accordance with the provisions of that Act.

As the only defences of the defendant tenant against his eviction were those which were provided by the Act and which were now not available to him, the suit of the plaintiff landlord must be decreed with costs."

Since the referring Judge, did not agree with the other learned Judge in the above observations, he has referred the following questions for being decided by a Division Bench:—

"(1) Whether the effect of striking out the defence under Section 13(6) of the M. P. Accommodation Control Act, 1961, is to take out the case from the ambit of that Act, and to render that suit as one governed by the Transfer of Property Act alone?

(2) Whether the effect is only to preclude the tenant from adducing positive evidence to show that none of the grounds are made out but the burden of making out a prima facie case of the existence of the grounds still remaining on the plaintiff?"

4. Under the general law, the legal relations between the landlord and tenant are governed by the contract of tenancy between them. The law relating to the landlord's right to eject the tenant and the tenant's liability of being ejected is to be found in the Transfer of Property Act.

5. The Accommodation Control Act is a special enactment conferring certain special rights and imposing certain special obligations upon the landlords and tenants. One of the objects of this special enactment is to regulate and control the eviction of tenants. Section 12 is the pivot. Under the Transfer of Property Act, once the tenancy is determined according to Section 111, the lessee is bound to put the lessor into possession of the property. The landlord acquires right to possession under Section 108(q) of the Transfer of Property Act, but Section 12 of the Accommodation Control Act then steps in. It imposes a restriction on the right of the landlord to eject his tenant, except on one or more of the grounds enumerated in it. Sub-section (1) of Section 12 reads thus:—

"12. Restriction on eviction of tenants.—

(1) Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any other law or contract, no suit shall be filed in any Civil Court against a tenant for his eviction from any accommodation except on one or more of the following grounds only, namely:—,....."

6. It is thus quite clear that the landlord, in order to entitle him to a decree for eviction, must prove: (1) that the contractual tenancy of the demised premises has been validly determined having regard to the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act and the contract between the parties; and (2) at least one of the grounds enumerated in Section 12 exists. If either of these two is not proved, a decree for eviction cannot be passed. Both these factors are sine qua non for a decree for eviction.

7. Section 13 of the Act imposes an obligation on the tenant to deposit in Court or pay to the landlord all arrears of rent and also to go on so depositing or paying rent throughout the pendency of the suit within the time prescribed in the two parts of that section. Sub-section (6) of Section 13 then lays down the consequences of non-compliance with the requirements of section. It runs thus:—

"13(6) If tenant fails to deposit or pay any amount as required by this section, the Court may order the defence against eviction to be struck out and shall proceed with the hearing of the suit."

Two things are abundantly clear from the language of sub-section (6). The first is that the defence against eviction, which is struck out is the defence against eviction of the tenant under Section 12 of the Act. Such striking out of the defence does not debar the tenant from taking any defence to which he is entitled under the Transfer of Property Act. Notwithstanding such striking out of the defence he can still show, for instance, that there is no relationship of landlord and tenant between him and the plaintiff, or that the lease was not determined as required by Section 111 of the Transfer of Property Act, so that during the subsistence of the lease he cannot be ejected. This was also the view taken in Premdas v. Laxmi Narayan, 1964 MPLJ 190.

8. The second consequence is that when the tenant's defence is struck out under Section 13(6), he loses his right to be heard on the question whether there exists a ground under Section 12 of the Act. This means that his written statement, so far as it relates to plaint averments concerning Section 12, will be ignored and overlooked by the Court; he cannot cross-examine witnesses produced by the plaintiff, and he cannot produce his own evidence in rebuttal. In effect, therefore, the suit or proceeding is to be treated ex parte so far as the question of Section 12 is concerned.

9. However, it is elementary that the plaintiff, in order to be entitled to a decree, must plead and prove the "cause of action", that is, the bundle of facts which will entitle him to a decree. We have already pointed out from the language of Section 12 of the Act that the existence of one of the grounds under that Section is essential before a decree for eviction can be passed. This is the force of the words "no suit shall be filed ..... except on one or more of the following grounds only." It is incontestable that the plaintiff will have to make out a ground under Section 12 even where the defendant does not enter appearance at all or does not file any written statement.

10. It is wrong to think that the grounds enumerated in Section 12 are grounds of defence; indeed, they are grounds to constitute a cause of action for the plaintiff to sue for ejection. There is nothing in the language of Sec. 13(6) of the Act to exclude the application of Section 12 to a suit as a consequence of the striking out of the defence. If that had been the intention of the framers of the law, then the section would have been so worded, and after the words "may order defence against eviction to be struck out and shall proceed with the hearing of the suit", there would have been found the following words:—

"and shall proceed with the hearing of the suit without entering into an enquiry whether any ground under Section 12 exists."

The section, as it stands today, merely enjoins the Court "to proceed with the hearing of the suit". The only meaning of this expression is that the Court shall proceed with the hearing of the suit according to law. To put it differently, a decree shall be passed, if the plaintiff proves the cause of action on which the suit is based; otherwise, it will be dismissed.

11. On the above analysis, it must be said that as a consequence of the striking out of the defence under Section 13(6) of the Act, the plaintiff is placed in the same position as if the suit proceeds ex parte in the absence of the defendant. The striking out of the defence does not confer any additional right on the plaintiff, nor is he relieved of his burden, which he has to discharge in order to be entitled to an ex parte decree against the tenant. In every event he has to satisfy the Court that he is entitled to eviction under the general law as well as under the special law, that is, Section 12 of the Act. It is a different matter that when the defence is struck out and the second part of his case is to be treated as ex parte, his burden becomes light.

12. In the result, we answer the reference thus:—

- (1) The effect of the striking out of the defence under Section 13(6) of the M. P. Accommodation Control Act, 1961, is that the suit thereafter proceeds ex parte to the extent that it relates to Section 12 of the Act. The written statement, so far as it relates to plaintiff averments concerning Section 12 is overlooked, the defendant is precluded from cross-examining the plaintiff or his witnesses and he is also precluded from producing any evidence on any question relating to the Accommodation Control Act. The plaintiff's burden to establish at least one of the grounds under Section 12 of the Act becomes light.

- (2) However, the effect of the striking out of the defence under Sec. 13(6) is not to confer any additional right on the plaintiff or to make the provisions of Section 12 inapplicable to the suit. The plaintiff has still to establish that he is entitled to a decree for eviction (a) under the general law; and (b) also under the Accommodation Control Act. And, in spite of his defence having been struck out under Section 13(6), the defendant can still contest the suit as regards (a), although it will proceed ex parte as regards (b).
- (3) If the defence is struck out under Section 13(6) in the appellate Court, the appellate Court will still have to see whether on the plaintiff's evidence produced in the trial Court, a ground under Section 12 has been made out. The defendant will be heard on that point to the limited extent of showing that the plaintiff's evidence is not enough to prove any ground under Section 12, but his written statement and the evidence on that aspect of the case will not be considered.

Reference answered accordingly.

Easements Act (1882), S. 15 — Easement against Government— 60 years rule applicable to easement against Government is not applicable to easements over bhumiswami lands.

One particular incident of the tenure is significant. Under the Madhya Bharat Tenancy Act the pakka tenant while entitled to a certain degree of permanency could not sell his holding without the permission of Government conveyed by the Suba. That has now disappeared and a bhumiswami can sell his holding to whomsoever he likes subject to certain limitations of ceiling on the side of the purchaser without taking government sanction. In other words, the ownership of government in respect of bhumiswami tenancy is very remote and tenuous.

KRISHNAN, J.:— In this reference the question to be answered by us is this: Whether in the event of the owner of a bhumiswami agricultural holding claiming a right of easement on a continuous holding which is also held in bhumiswami rights, the easement materializes on peaceful, uninterrupted and continuous usage for 20 years as provided in the main body of Section 15 of the Indian Easements Act, or whether on the ground that the land "belongs" to government, it should be for a period of 60 years under the old Limitation Act and 30 years under the present one, as provided in the last clause of the same section?

2. There are two other questions which arise in the same second appeal, first, one of fact, whether actually the claimant to the easement has proved such usage for a period of over 30 years; the second, one of law, whether, in view of the amendment of the Indian Limitation Act, even on the theory that this land "belongs" to the government, the period would be only 30 and not 60 years. This would depend upon the applicability or otherwise of the "savings" in S. 31 (b). We do not feel called upon to say anything about these two questions which are entirely within the competence of the Single Bench to which the case shall be returned with an answer to the first question already set out.

3. The facts necessary for our purposes are simple and are practically common grounds except for the duration mentioned in connection with the question of fact. The parties to the suit hold contiguous holdings namely, plot No 101 in the village Nogawa, Tahsil Depalpur of area 0.40 acres owned by the plaintiff. Adjacent to it are two fields Nos. 104 & 105, the first belonging to defendants 1 to 3 and the second to defendant No. 4. By "belonging to" or "owned by" with reference to these three plots is meant that all these persons have a bhumiswami right on the respective plots owned by them. The plaintiff's case is that he has got a right of easement for passage over the plots 104 and 105 to his own plot 101. He has claimed to have exercised it for a long time and wants this right to be declared. In addition he wants the defendants to be restrained by a permanent injunction from interfering with his (plaintiff's) exercise of the right of easement over the respective plot numbers. The lower appellate Court has found as a fact that the plaintiff had been exercising his right of passage over the fields of the defendants peacefully and without interruption for a continuous period between 30 and 35 years. The trial Court itself has dismissed the suit giving reasons which are slightly different from those given by the lower appellate Court; but it is sufficient for our purpose to concentrate our attention on the appellate decision. Holding that the last clause of Section 15 of the Indian Easements Act was applicable to this case and that the Indian Limitation Act as it stood at the time of the filing of the suit was applicable, the lower Court held that in the absence of 60 years' continuous and uninterrupted use the easement could not be declared. In this it was guided by the ruling of another Single Bench of this High Court reported in Rawaji v. Keshav, 1963 Jab LJ 1039 = (AIR 1963 Madh Pra. 202).

4. The solution of this problem centres round the phrase "belongs to government". Courts have said that this "belonging" should be contemporaneous with the suit. Of that of course there is no difficulty. The real difficulty is of the degree of the "belonging", because it is a very common happening that property which belongs ultimately to the Government, also belongs in a more or less limited measure to other persons. If we lay emphasis upon a very remote ultimate belonging to government practically every piece of land would be in the ownership of government at least in our country where according to the ancient theory all land belongs to Government. On the other hand, if we restrict the meaning of the word "belonging" every derivative or limited owner would become the owner for the purposes of allowing an easement to grow by grant or by prescription. The line has therefore to be drawn somewhere. An idea of the degree of belonging to the Government or to a limited owner holding under government can be developed for the purposes of the application of Section 15 as the case may be, the general rule of 20 years, or the special rule of the period of limitation against Government as indicated in the last clause.

5. There is a certain quantity of case law and as the circumstances of each case are distinctive they do not have any cast-iron principle rigorously applicable; but all the same, a general conception of where to draw the line between "belonging to government" and "belonging to somebody else" can be gathered. The two cases on which the learned Single Bench relied in 1962 Jab LJ 1039 = (AIR 1963 Madh Pra 202) (supra) are — Municipal Board, Pilibhit v. Khalil-ul-Rahman, AIR 1929 All 382 and Chinnaswami Goundan v. Bala-sundara Mudaliar, AIR 1934 Mad 575. In the Allahabad case the land clearly belonged to government but being situated in a municipal area in the U. P. it was under the control of the Municipality under the U. P. Municipality Act in the manner common all over our country. Even the Municipal Board could not create the easement because—

"a Bye-law, passed by the Board and sanctioned by the Government, signifying the intention to let out the spaces at the sides of roads to hawkers, does not create Board's ownership to those sides but merely extends its power of user, the ownership being already created by Section 116, Municipalities Act of 1916, or a similar provision in the previous Act." It was a clear case of the land belonging to government in a very real sense, with the Municipal Board exercising control for certain limited purposes. In the Madras case the land belonged to the government but was in the actual occupancy of the trustees or the sewaks of a temple. The rights, if any, of the temple were very precarious and the most the Court could hold was that the temple was not a trespasser. On that view of course the land belonged to the government in a very real sense and not merely in a sense of a very remote ultimate ownership. Naturally, therefore, the 60 year rule contained in the last clause of Section 15 of the Easements Act was applied.

6. At the other extreme we have the position in Nagaretha Mudaliar v. Sami Pillai, AIR 1936 Mad 682. In that case both the properties, that is, the dominant as well as the servient belonged to raiyatwari tenants. Certainly they held under government and in theory the land ultimately belonged to government. Unlike the zamindari land there is absolutely no doubt in the ultimate governmental ownership of the raiyatwari lands. All the same the raiyatwari tenants were also owners in a very real sense, and the theory of the land belonging to government while true in principle was of very remote practical application. Accordingly, the High Court held—

"Even though raiyatwari land is held by several tenants under the Government, one tenant can acquire title by prescription or lost grant against another, for the estate of raiyatwari proprietor is an estate in the soil and possession is with him though the property may be said to be in the Government. The estate of a raiyatwari proprietor is also heritable and alienable. He has a sufficient estate to support a grant of an easement. He would be a "capable grantor" as understood in English law for the application of the doctrine of lost grant."

It may be noted even here that the position of the bhumiswami under the Madhya Pradesh Land Revenue Code is in no way different from the raiyatwari tenants in Madras and similar raiyatwari settlement areas. In both areas the land does ultimately belong to government and what the occupier pays can, in principle, be described as rent and not revenue. Still without going into any academic discussion on the abstruse concepts of government ownership and of the raiyats' ownership, it can be asserted in regard to bhumiswami what the Madras High Court has said about the raiyatwari tenant.

7. The pakka tenant under the Madhya Bharat Land Revenue and Tenancy Act had very real rights; but they do not come up to the level of the raiyatwari tenants or of the bhumiswamis after 1959. One particular incident of the tenure is significant. Under the Madhya Bharat Tenancy Act the pakka tenant while entitled to a certain degree of permanency could not sell his holding without the permission of government conveyed by the Suba. That has now disappeared and a bhumiswami can sell his holding to whomsoever he likes subject to certain limitations of ceiling on the side of the purchaser without taking government sanction. In other words, while the application of the 60 years rule to a servient tenement which is a pakka tenancy under the Madhya Bharat law can be justified on the view that the ownership of government is still very real, the same cannot be said of the bhumiswami tenancy where the Government's ownership is very remote and tenuous.

8. In this connection the remarks made by the Division Bench of this Court in Ramlali v. Bhaganti, 1968 Jab LJ 706 = (AIR 1968 Madh Pra 247) are of some interest:

"A Bhumiswami or Bhumidhari pays land revenue and not rent. Chapter XII of the Code also contains provisions for the transfer of Bhumiswami or Bhumiddhari rights, partition of Bhumiswami and Bhumidhari holdings when there are more than one tenure-holders, etc. It is worthy of note that tenancy rights are dealt with separately by the Code in Chapter XIV thereof. That Chapter also contains Sections 168 and 172 which deal with the devolution of rights of an ordinary tenant and an occupancy tenant. Those rights also pass on the death of a tenant in accordance with personal law. All these provisions read together show that Bhumiswamis and Bhumidharis who hold land directly from the State and pay land revenue to the State like owners of land are not tenants; they have permanent rights in the land which are not taken away by the Government except in certain cases."

The language would indicate that the Court has rejected totally the doctrine of Government ownership even as an ultimate possibility and has veered round to the theory of occupier's ownership. The doctrine of the occupier's ownership of a very extensive kind with the ultimate governmental ownership in the remote background would have led precisely to the same results; yet the language used by the Court shows how much it had been impressed with the extent and the reality of the ownership of the bhumiswami. To maintain in such a situation that the land still "belongs" to the government in the sense in which the words "belongs to" have been used in the last clause of Section 15 of the Easements Act, is to ignore the real implication of bhumiswami tenancy.

9. We would, therefore, hold that under the present law which gives very extensive rights to the bhumiswami and reduces to a remote theoretical possibility the "belonging to government" it would not be correct to apply the last clause of Section 15 to easements over bhumiswami lands. The general rule should be applied. We would answer the reference accordingly.

10. In view of this it is unnecessary for us to examine whether there is any conflict between Sections 8 and 11 on the one hand and the last clause of Section 15 of the Easements Act on the other. We can easily reconcile all these sections by holding that while Section 11 gives certain powers to a limited owner of land other than government owned land, these powers are denied to the limited owner when the ultimate owner is government. But it is unnecessary for our purposes to develop any further on this.

11. As already indicated we are leaving the other questions in this case to be answered by the referring Single Bench.

Question answered accordingly.

NAIK, J.:— This is a reference under sub-section (1) of Section 66 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Act') at the instance of the Commissioner of Income-tax. The questions referred to us for decision are:

- (1) "Whether, on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the overhead expenses under the heads of Salaries and Travelling expenses of general staff, General charges, Legal expenses, postage, registration fee, etc., Directors' fees and travelling expenses and Managing Agents' office allowance incurred by the assessee could be apportioned between agricultural and business activities of the company and were not admissible as deductions in their entirety in computing the income of the company?"
- (2) "Whether, on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the overhead expenses under the heads Salaries of general staff, Provident fund, Directorial expenses, Managing Agents' office allowance and Managing Agents' commission on net profit incurred by the assessee company could be apportioned between agricultural and business activities of the company and were not admissible as deductions in their entirety in computing the income of the company?"

The first question relates to the assessment year 1956-57 and the second to the assessment year 1957-58.

2. The facts relevant for our purpose, as appearing in the statement of the case, are as follows:

The assessee is a public limited company carrying on business in the manufacture and sale of sugar. The activities of the company are composite. It manufactures sugar. It also owns large farms where sugar-cane is grown, which is used by it in its manufacture of sugar.

3. During the course of assessment proceedings for the assessment year 1956-57 (the account year being the year ending on 30-9-1955), the assessee claimed deductions in respect of the following items:

- "(1) Salaries and travelling expenses of general staff.
- (2) General charges.
- (3) Provident fund for agricultural staff.
- (4) Legal expenses, postage, registration fee, etc.
- (5) Directors' fees and travelling expenses.
- (6) Managing Agents' office allowances."

Similarly, in respect of the assessment year 1957-58 (the account year being the year ending on 30-9-1956), it claimed deductions in respect of the following items:—

- "(1) Salaries of general staff.
- (2) Provident fund contributions.
- (3) Company's contribution to Provident fund pertaining to staff and workers of Estate Department.
- (4) Expenditure on repairs and maintenance of agricultural buildings.
- (5) Registration, insurance and taxes on tractors and trailers.
- (6) Directorial expenses.
- (7) Managing Agent's office allowances.
- (8) Managing Agents' commission on net profits."

4. The controversy between the Department and the assessee related to the aforesaid items. The assessee claimed full deductions in respect of the aforesaid items. But, according to the Income-tax Officer, as only part of the expenses incurred in respect of the aforesaid items was attributable to agricultural activities of the assessee and as income from agricultural activities was exempt from income-tax, that part of the expenses could alone be excluded. The Income-tax Officer accordingly disallowed a portion of the expenditure on an estimate basis.

5. On appeal by the assessee, the Appellate Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax, relying on a decision of the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal in M/s. Maharashtra Sugar Mills Ltd. Bombay v. In- come-tax Officer, Companies Circle 1(2), Bombay (which decision has since been approved by the Bombay High Court in Commr. of Income-tax, Bombay City 1 v. Maharashtra Sugar Mills Ltd., (1968) 68 ITR 512 (Bom), allowed the appeal holding, inter alia, that the remuneration paid to the Managing Agents, Directors' fees, Auditors' fees, etc. could not be apportioned as relating partly to the business of manufacturing sugar carried on by the assessee and partly to its agricultural activities and directed that the whole of it be allowed as deduction in computing the income of the assessee.

6. On further appeal to the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal, the orders of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner were confirmed.

7. The Commissioner of Income-tax therefore, prayed that the case be stated to the High Court for its decision on the two questions aforesaid which arose out of the orders of the Tribunal in respect of the two assessments for the years 1956-57 and 1957-58 respectively.

8. The learned counsel for the Commissioner contends that the judgment in the Bombay case in (1968) 68 ITR 512 (Bom), has not been correctly decided and required reconsideration. He reiterated before us all the arguments which were urged on behalf of the Department before the Bombay High Court and which, in our opinion, have been rightly answered in that judgment. The learned Judges of the Division Bench of the Bombay High Court have held that where there is only one business of the assessee, namely, the manufacture of sugar (and not of cultivation of sugar-cane) the expenditure which the assessee incurs for that business has to be allowed to the assessee under Section 10(2) (xv) of the Act, being "any expenditure.....not being in the nature of capital expenditure or personal expenses of the assessee, laid out or expended wholly and exclusively the purpose of such business, profession or vocation". They have then examined whether Rule 23 of the Indian Income-tax Rules, 1922 (which have been framed under Section 59 of the Act), which, so far as relevant for our purpose, is in the following terms:

"In the case of income which is partially agricultural income as defined in Section 2 and partially income chargeable to income-tax under the head 'Business', in determining that part which is chargeable to income-tax the market value of any agricultural produce which has been raised by the assessee or received by him as rent in kind and which has been utilised as raw material in such business or the sale receipts of which are included in the accounts of the business shall be deducted, and no further deduction shall be made in respect of any expenditure incurred by the assessee as a cultivator or receiver of rent in kind".

It could be said to be a statutory provision which would take the case out of the provisions of Section 10(2) (xv) of the Act, and have held that there were three reasons why it would not. In the first place, the words 'further deduction' occurring in the latter part of the rule refer to deductions of an expenditure relating to the agricultural activity of the assessee, and as Managing Agents are not normally appointed by a cultivator, expenditure on Managing Agents can hardly be said to be expenditure incurred by an assessee as a cultivator. Secondly, the words 'further deduction' have been used with reference to the definition of 'agricultural income' in Section 2(1) of the Act; and as that definition emphasises the process ordinarily employed by a cultivator in raising crops and contemplates all the processes up to the stage of sale of those crops, the expression 'further deduction' is referable to the expenditure incurred by the assessee as a cultivator. Thirdly, where the rules intended that any part of the income earned from agriculture should be treated as a business income, the rule expressly says so, as a comparison with the phraseology of Rule 24, which is in the following terms:

"Income derived from the sale of tea grown and manufactured by the seller in the taxable territories shall be computed as if it were income derived from business, and 40 per cent. of such income shall be deemed to be income, profits and gains liable to tax."

amply shows. Answering the further contention that the assessee should not be allowed to claim the amount paid to the Managing Agents as a commission as an allowable expenditure, because it would give to the assessee a double exemption, it relied on the decision of the Supreme Court in Commr. of Income-tax v. Indian Bank Ltd., 56 ITR 77 = (AIR 1955 SC 1473) where it has been held that where the assessee carries on any indivisible business and a part of its profits is not liable to tax, the entire expenditure incurred for the purpose of the business should be allowed, although a part of the expenses may have been incurred for earning non-taxable profits.

9. We may further add that though the case in the Bombay High Court related to amounts paid to the Managing agents as commission, that is to say, to one species of overhead expenses of the assessee company, and our cases relate to amounts paid by the assessee not only to the Managing Agents as commission but also to Directors as fees and travelling expenses, and various other kinds of overhead expenses, such as provident fund for agricultural staff, general charges and salaries and travelling expenses to general staff, etc., the principle governing the two types of cases would be the same. In both types of cases, expenses in question, even though they were expenses partly incurred by the assessee as a cultivator, were not apportionable between the agricultural and business activities of the assessee company, provided the business of the assessee was one and indivisible.

10. In the result, we answer the reference in respect of the assessment years 1956-57 and 1957-58 respectively as follows:

- (1) That, on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the overhead expenses under the heads of Salaries and Travelling expenses of general staff, General charges, Legal expenses, postage, registration fee, etc., Director's fees and travelling expenses and Managing Agents' office allowance incurred by the assessee could not be apportioned between agricultural and business activities of the assessee company and were admissible as deductions in their entirety in computing the income of the assessee company.
- (2) That, on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the overhead expenses under the heads Salaries of general staff, Provident fund, Directorial expenses, Managing Agents' office allowances and Managing Agents' commission on net profit incurred by the assessee company could not be apportioned between agricultural and business activities of the assessee company and were admissible as deductions in their entirety in computing the income of the assessee company.

Costs of this reference shall be paid by the Commissioner. Counsel's fee Rupees 100/-.

Answer accordingly.

tion till the passing of the Councils Act in 1861 and thereafter there was divergence in the Acts passed for the cities of Madras, Calcutta and Bombay.

In the earlier decades of this century, the control of the local government over the Madras Corporation was far more stringent than in the other presidency towns. If we leave out of consideration the municipal administration of the presidency towns of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay, there was practically no attempt at Municipal legislation as regards the mofussil areas before the year 1842. It was only in 1870 that real progress was made when Lord Mayo's Government in their famous resolution introducing the system of provincial finance referred to the necessity of taking further steps to bring local interest and supervision to bear on the management of funds devoted to education, sanitation, medical charge and local public works.

The advance in local self-government was largely stimulated by the memorable resolution of 1882 on the subject issued by the Government of Lord Ripon, which laid down some common principles for the guidance of the local governments in the matter. It is not necessary to refer in detail the progress of municipalities in the districts. Thus, on account of historical reasons, there were different legislative enactments, one dealing with City Municipal Corporations, and the other with the District Municipalities. But the common feature is that the State Government retained some ultimate control over both types of institutions.

4. Kailasam, J. has held that the municipalities are not departments of the Government and that, taking into account the scheme of the Act, it appears that the municipality is given a right to appoint its own officers, subject to the provisions of Sections 12-C, 72 and 76-A of the Act. It is true that certain amount of autonomy is given to local bodies like municipalities, Corporations etc. But it is clear from the provisions of the Act that the State Government could exercise effective control over the local administration by the municipalities.

Under Section 12-C, the right of appointment of the Commissioner, the most important executive officer of the Municipality, is vested in the State Government. Under Section 72, the appointments of important officers, such as Health Officer, Engineer, Electrical Engineer and Assistant Electrical Engineer, made by the council are subject to the approval of the State Government. In fact, the State Government could itself appoint such officers under certain circumstances. Under Section 76-A of the Act, powers are given to the State Government to appoint Health officers and municipal engineers, notwithstanding anything contained in the other provisions of the Act. Under Section 36 of the Act, the State Government has power to suspend or cancel resolutions etc. made under the Act.

Under Section 73 of the Act, appointments to all posts other than those specified in Sections 12-C and 72 of the Act in cases where the pay exceeds Rs. 50 per month shall be made by the appointment committee and all other posts carrying pay less than Rs. 50 by the executive authority, subject to any rules including the rules for the representation of different communities which the State Government may make in that behalf. Thus the scheme of the Act shows that in the case of important appointments, the Government either reserved for itself the right to appoint the incumbents, or to have effective control by providing such appointments being made subject to the approval of the Government. In regard to the other employees of the Municipalities the effective control by the Government is secured by its framing rules by virtue of the specific provision contained in Section 73 of the Act and the power of superintendence exercised by appointing Inspector of Municipal Councils under Section 38(1) of the Act.

5. The main question for consideration in these writ petition appeals is whether the Act gives powers to the State Government to make the impugned Rule 7-B (5) of the Rules, relating to establishment, in other words, rules providing for revising the order of appointment made by the Appointment Committee. Section 73 of the Act itself provides that appointments to all posts by the Appointment Committee as contemplated in that section shall be subject to any rules which the State Government may make in this behalf. We see no justification for putting a narrow construction that the framing of rules contemplated by Section 73 could only relate to the manner in which the Appointment Committee could exercise its powers and not as authorising the Government to frame rules giving to itself, or to the Inspector appointed by it, powers to revise the appointment made by the Appointment Committee.

Part V of the Act deals with subsidiary legislation. Section 303(1) of the Act provides that the State Government may make rules to carry out all or any of the purposes of the Act not inconsistent therewith. Section 303(2) (r) of the Act provides that in particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power the State Government may make rules:

"as to the powers of auditors, inspecting and superintending officers and officers authorised to hold inquiries, to summon and examine witnesses and to compel the production of documents and all other matters connected with audit, inspection and superintendence." It cannot be disputed that the State Government has ample supervisory powers under the provisions of the Act and thus is clear from Sections 34 and 41 of the Act.

It is in order to effectively carry out the powers of supervision, Sec. 38(1) of the Act, provides that the State Government may appoint such officers as may be required for the purpose of inspecting or superintending the operations of all or any of the municipal councils established under the Act. If the State Government has powers to appoint the Inspector of Municipal Councils to inspect and supervise the working of the Municipality, including the Appointment Committee, we fail to see how the relevant provisions referred to above do not give sufficient jurisdiction to the State Government to frame the impugned rule.

The power of superintendence given to every High Court under Article 227 of the Constitution of India, corresponding to Section 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915 and Section 224 of the Government of India Act, 1935, over subordinate courts, has been interpreted to include judicial, as well as administrative superintendence in all matters. It is clear from the definition of superintendence in the Law Lexicon of British India by Ramanathan that the word seems properly to imply the exercise of some authority or control over the person or things subjected to oversight. Thus the Inspector of Municipal Councils who has powers of superintendence is one who has the oversight and charge of something with power of direction. It could not be disputed that if the Inspector of Municipal Councils revised the order of the appointing authority by virtue of the impugned rule, he is superintending the work of the appointing authority. It could not be said that the impugned rule goes beyond the scope of Section 73 of the Act or that it is inconsistent with the reasonable interpretation of the relevant provisions of the Act.

6. Kailasam J. has referred to Sections 85 to 96 of the City Municipal Corporation Act as containing elaborate provisions as to right of appeal, unlike Section 73 of the District Municipalities Act, and he has relied on this circumstance to find that in the absence of similar provisions in the District Municipalities Act, Section 73 cannot be construed as empowering the State Government to make rules providing for revision of the order of the appointment committee by the Inspector of Municipal Councils. As regards the City Municipal Corporation Act, the provisions relating to establishment are no doubt different from those contained in the District Municipalities Act.

But it can be accounted for on historical grounds and the existence of separate legislative enactments for the District Municipalities and the City Municipal Corporations for over several decades. But under both the Acts, the State Government has control in the matter of appointment of superior officers, like the Commissioner and certain important officers like Engineer, Health Officer etc. But in spite of the difference in the mode of treatment of establishments in the District Municipalities Act and the City Municipal Corporation Act, it is not possible to infer that the District Municipalities Act did not contemplate the Government making rules for revising the orders of the appointment committee.

7. In Nagappa Chettiar v. Annapoorndi Achi, 1941-1 Mad LJ 164 = (AIR 1941 Mad 235) (FB), a Full Bench of this Court has held that R. 8 of the Rules framed under the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act providing for appeals from the orders of the trial Courts is ultra vires the rule-making power under Section 28 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act. It is pointed out in the decision that an appeal does not lie as of right, but must be conferred by express enactment.

The circumstances under which the case arose are as follows: An application was made under Section 19 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act to scale down the debt and it was dismissed by the Sub-Court. There was no provision in the Act for an appeal against that order. But subsequently the impugned Rule 8 was passed by the Provincial Government providing for an appeal against such an order. It is pointed out in the decision that the object of the Act is to grant relief to agriculturists by providing machinery for the scaling down of their debts and that if a case falls within the Act, the court must scale down the debt in accordance with the directions embodied in the Act.

It has been held in that decision that sub-section (2) of the Section 28 enabling the Provincial Government to make rules in regard to any matter which is required to be prescribed by the Act and for removing any difficulty in giving effect to the provisions of the Act, will not empower the Provincial Government to provide the right of appeal by framing rules. The reason is that in making a rule providing for appeals the Provincial Government is not making a rule for carrying into effect the purposes of the Act. It is adding in effect something to the Act. The object of the Act is to grant relief to agriculturists by providing machinery for the scaling down of their debts and this is achieved by the court of the first instance deciding whether a case falls within or without the Act. It has been held in the decision that by providing for an appeal, the Provincial Government is not removing any difficulty in giving effect to the provisions of the Act.

This decision has been referred to and discussed in the decision, State of Madras v. Louis Dreyfus and Co. Ltd., (1955) 6 STC 318 = (AIR 1956 Mad 659) (FB). It is pointed out in this decision that the familiar principle of the decision in 1941-1 Mad LJ 164 = (AIR 1941 Mad 235) (FB) can hardly apply to a case where the language of the rule-making power is couched in different terms. The following passage in (1955) 6 STC 318 = (AIR 1956 Mad 659) (FB) which is also extracted in the judgment of Kailasam J. brings out the distinction clearly:—

"In particular we might refer to Section 19(2) (i) which enables rules to be made prescribing the duties and powers of officers appointed for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of the Act particularly in the context of the Act leaving it to the rules to constitute the hierarchy of officials to exercise powers under the Act and secondly, sub-clause (1) where power is conferred upon the Provincial Government to frame rules in respect of 'any other matter for which there is no provision or no sufficient provision in this Act and for which provision is, in the opinion of the Provincial Government, necessary for giving effect to the purposes of this Act.' These words are of the widest amplitude and, in the absence of any prohibitions or restrictions inferable from the Act itself, are apt to confer upon the Government power to constitute revisional authorities and invest them with powers in that behalf. This contention also fails and has to be rejected. We therefore hold that it was open to the Provincial Government to have framed Rule 14(2) conferring upon the Commercial Tax Officers the revisional powers that were vested in them by that provision."

In Venkayya v. Pullayya, AIR 1942 Mad 466 also the above Full Bench case has been distinguished and the test laid down by the House of Lords in Blackwood v. London Chartered Bank of Australia, (1874) 5 PC 92, at p. 108 has been followed as evident from the following passage:

"As has been pointed out by the House of Lords in (1874) 5 PC 92, at p. 108 the tests to apply in considering whether rules are within the powers of the rule-making authority under a statute are: (1) Whether the rules are reasonable and convenient for carrying the Act into full effect; (2) Whether the rules relate to matters arising under the provisions of the Act; (3) Whether they relate to matters not in the Act otherwise provided for and (4) Whether they are consistent with the provisions of the Act. The validity of a rule is to be determined not so much by ascertaining whether it confers rights or merely regulates procedure, but by determining whether the rule is in conformity with the powers conferred under the statute and whether it is consistent with the statute, reasonable and not contrary to general principles."

8. We have already pointed out that Section 73 of the Act clearly provides for the State Government making rules as regards the filling up of appointments, other than those specified in Sections 12-C and 72 of the Act. Sections 303(1) and 303(2) (r) clearly empower the State Government to make rules to carry out all or any of the purposes of the Act and in particular to define the powers of inspecting and superintending officers in respect of inspection and superintendence. The above provisions give ample powers to the State Government to frame rules to confer on Inspector of Municipal Councils jurisdiction to revise the order of the appointing authority. For the foregoing reasons, we find that Rule 7-B (5) of the Establishment Rules framed under Section 73 of the Act is not ultra vires of the powers of the State Government.

9. We, however, agree with the view of Kailasam, J. that the Inspector of Municipalities has really prejudged the case even before giving the show cause notice to the second respondent P. Murugaiyan. We have already pointed out that the appellant K. S. Ramaswami preferred an appeal to the Inspector of Municipalities. Though the appeal is not really competent, the Inspector of Municipalities has jurisdiction to call for the records on the information gained by him through the appeal petition, to peruse the same and to revise the order of appointment, after giving an opportunity to P. Murugaiyan to show cause against the proposed action. But what the Inspector of Municipalities did was to pass an order on 16-11-1967 on the appeal petition of K. Ramaswami, setting aside the order of appointment made by the Appointment Committee in favour of P. Murugaiyan without giving an opportunity to the said Murugaiyan to defend the order of appointment in his favour.

In fact, the Inspector of Municipalities has mentioned in the order that though it is not obligatory under the rules to issue a notice, yet he as Inspector has directed the appointment committee and Murugaiyan to show cause within 15 days from the date of receipt of his order dated 16-11-1967, why the appointment order in favour of P. Murugaiyan should not be cancelled. After Murugaiyan filed his objections in the form of a petition. The Inspector finally passed the order on 29-1-1968, rejecting his petition and directing his earlier order dated 16-11-

1967 to be carried out. In the first paragraph of his order dated 29-1-1968 he has specifically stated that he had allowed the appeal petition of K. S. Ramaswami and set aside the order of the appointment committee. Even in the counter affidavit filed in the writ petition, the Inspector of Municipalities has categorically stated that by his order dated 16-11-1967 he allowed the appeal petition of K. S. Ramaswami and set aside the order of the appointment committee and then issued notice to Murugaiyan to show cause why the order passed by him should not be given effect to. Thus, there can be no doubt in this case that the Inspector of Municipalities has prejudged the case of Murugaiyan and acted in total disregard of the principles of natural justice.

It is true the position would have been different if the Inspector of Municipalities had merely come to a prima facie conclusion and given an opportunity to Murugaiyan to show cause against it. In Felix Fernandez v. Integral Coach Factory, (1966) 79 Mad LW 422 a Bench of this Court has held that the Memorandum following the charge-sheet calling upon the delinquent to show cause why he should not be punished in case the charge is made out would not in anyway indicate that the cause has been prejudged. But it is clear from the facts already stated that the Inspector of Municipalities in this case had clearly prejudged the case against Murugaiyan.

10. The order of Kalliasam, J. setting aside the order of Inspector of Municipalities is, therefore, correct. But in view of our finding that the Inspector of Municipalities has powers to revise the order of the Appointment Committee, it is open to the present Inspector of Municipalities to consider the relative claims of K. S. Ramaswami and P. Murugaiyan and to revise the order of the appointment committee if he sees sufficient grounds to do so.

11. The State of Madras and K. S. Ramaswami have preferred W. A. Nos. 376 and 218 of 1968 respectively against the order on W. P. 538 of 1968. But as objection was taken that no writ appeal had been filed against W. P. 539 of 1968 in which a writ of quo warranto was prayed for by the second respondent Murugaiyan, the decision of Kalliasam, J. had become final. C. M. P. No. 18730 of 1968 has been filed to condone the delay and permit a writ appeal to be filed against the order on W. P. 539 of 1968. There can be no doubt that by oversight appellant K. S. Ramaswami failed to file a writ appeal against the order on W. P. 539 of 1968. The delay in filing the writ appeal is condoned.

12. In the result, the order of Kalliasam, J. setting aside the order of the Inspector of Municipalities is confirmed, but, as already pointed out, it is open to the present Inspector of Municipalities to exercise his jurisdiction under Rule 7-B (5) of the Rules relating to employment under the Municipal Council to revise the order of the Appointment Committee. If he sees sufficient grounds to do so. The writ appeals are ordered accordingly but in the circumstances, there will be no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

T. R. Gopalakrishnan and K. S. Varadachari, for Appellants; V. Somasundaram and P. Kothandaraman, for Respondent.

JUDGMENT:— A short but interesting question in the application of the rule against perpetuities embodied in Section 14 of the Transfer of Property Act arises for consideration in this Second Appeal. The appeal is directed against a preliminary decree for partition and separate possession of an one-fourth share in the suit properties. One Pattabirama Reddy, pursuant to a family arrangement, under the registered settlement deed Ex. A-1 dated 5-1-1931, settled the suit properties in favour of the sons of one Duraiswamy Reddy, two sons then in existence and sons that may be born subsequently. Duraiswamy Reddy was the son of Pattabirama Reddy's wife's sister and on the date of the settlement Duraiswamy Reddy had two sons, Ravana, aged two years and Sundararama, aged four months. The settlement referred to the two minor sons then in existence and provided that the father Duraiswamy Reddy shall be the guardian of the minor sons in existence and that may be born and that he shall look after them, maintain proper accounts of the income and safeguard the properties without effecting alienation.

After the end of the minority of the last son that may be born to Duraiswamy Reddy, the sons were to take the properties in equal shares. The minor son Sundararama died in 1931 itself. Subsequently about the year 1933 another son Sriramulu was born. The last son of Duraiswamy Reddy, Dasaratharama Reddiar, the plaintiff in the suit out of which the Second Appeal arises, was born in the year 1941. Notwithstanding the prohibition against alienation, Duraiswamy Reddy executed a sale deed Ex. B-2 dated 14-7-1941 on behalf of the minors of items 2 to 5 in the suit properties, in favour of one Jayalakshmi Ammal for a sum of Rs. 200. He executed on the same day another sale deed also, Ex. B-3 in her favour. Under Ex. B-1 dated 21-8-1945 Jayalakshmi Ammal sold the suit items 2 to 5 to the second defendant in the case, the present second appellant. The first defendant in the case is a purchaser of the first item under Ex. B-5 dated 5-5-1946 from Sundararaju to whom Duraiswamy Reddy had conveyed the properties under Ex. B-6 dated 30-9-1943.

Duraiswamy Reddy died in the year 1949 and his wife Seshammal died in 1951. Duraiswamy Reddy and his wife were survived by their three sons Ravana, Sriramulu and the plaintiff. The son Ravana died in the year 1950, when aged about 22. Sriramulu died in the year 1951 after just becoming a major. An earlier suit filed by the present plaintiff claiming only possession was permitted to be withdrawn by this Court in Second Appeal No. 1018 of 1955 with liberty to file a fresh suit on the same cause of action under certain terms. The suit, out of which this second appeal arises, has been filed after due compliance with the conditions laid down by this Court in S. A. No. 1018 of 1955 the plaintiff here seeking to have the sale deeds Exs. B-2, B-3 and B-6 set aside. He claimed title to and possession of the entire suit properties. The plaintiff has been given a decree only for an one-fourth share in the suit properties. Ravana had died at the age of 22 without seeking to set aside the alienation within three years of becoming a major.

So far as Sriramulu is concerned, he died within three years of attaining majority. The Courts below denied his share to the plaintiff on the ground that the right to avoid the transfer was a personal privilege of the minor. As regards the share of Sundararama which had been inherited by his mother, here again, it was held that the plaintiff could claim no part therein. The plaintiff has not preferred any second appeal or come up with any Memos of Cross-objections questioning the limitation on the share he could have in the suit properties. The Second Appeal has been filed by the alienees defendants 1 and 2 in the suit contending that the plaintiff's claim must be dismissed in toto on the ground that recognition of any interest in his favour would be a violation of the Rule against perpetuities.

2. Mr. T. P. Gopalakrishnan, learned Counsel appearing for the appellants submits that the provisions of the settlement deed are manifestly opposed to Section 14 of the Transfer of Property Act which prohibits any transfer of property that can operate to create an interest which is to take effect after the lifetime of one or more persons living at the date of such transfer and the minority of some person who shall be in existence at the expiration of that period, and to whom, if he attains full age, the interest created is to belong. The argument of Mr. T. P. Gopalakrishnan learned Counsel for the appellants based on Section 14 of the Act runs thus: Under the terms of the settlement the properties have been settled on the minors Ravana and Sundararama and other sons that may be born to Duraiswamy Reddy. Sons of Duraiswamy Reddy in existence at the time of the settlement and sons that may be born to him thereafter, take the property absolutely in equal shares on the attainment of majority of the last born son.

The effect of the disposition in the settlement deed is to vest properties even on sons that may be born to Duraiswamy Reddy after the death of the sons in existence at the time of the settlement and the minority of other sons who might be in existence at the time of their death. For instance ignoring the existence of the plaintiff for the purposes of envisaging a possibility, one cannot rule out Duraiswamy Reddy surviving Sriramulu and having a minor son after the death of Sriramulu. It is submitted that if such an event is possible, the settlement offends S. 14 of the Transfer of Property Act, and in the circumstances the operation of the settlement deed, should under Section 15 of the Act be limited to Ravana and Sundararama, persons in existence at the time of the settlement. Learned Counsel urged that the validity of the settlement must be considered in relation to the time when the document creating it takes effect and if at the relevant time there is the slightest possibility that the perpetuity period may be exceeded, the settlement is void.

It is apparent that the learned counsel in presenting the case this way, takes the lives of Ravana and Sundararama in existence at the time of the settlement and the minority of any son that may be born during their lives as the measurement of the perpetuity period.

3. In my view the arguments proceed on an erroneous assumption. It is overlooked that the persons living at the date of the settlement, whose outstanding lives may be taken into consideration in applying the perpetuity rule, need not necessarily be persons having or taking an interest under the settlement. The perpetuity period under Section 14 of the Act consists of the lifetime of one or more persons living at the time the transfer takes effect, and the further period of the minority of a person in existence at the close of the person living at the time of the transfer. For a valid settlement all that is necessary is that it must be clear even at the outset of the settlement, that the beneficiaries will necessarily be ascertained, if at all within the perpetuity period and any contingency or vesting specified by the settlement will also necessarily be satisfied within the period. It is a requisite for not offending the perpetuity rule that the identity of the beneficiary and the quantum of the beneficiary's interest are all ascertainable and ascertained within the period limited.

Section 14 of the Act however does not place any restriction as to who can be the living person whose existence can postpone the vesting. It allows the settlor to use any life for the purpose. But as has been pointed out in English text books dealing with the rule against perpetuities no life can be of the slightest use for postponing the vesting, unless they somehow restrict the period of time within which the interest under the transfer is to be capable of vesting according to the terms laid down by the settlor. Any life can help if it has something to do with the conditions appointed by the settlor for vesting of the gift.

4. In English Rule against Perpetuity, the perpetuity period consists of lives in being at the creation of the interest plus the age of majority twenty one years in gross plus the actual periods of gestation. The lives in being need not be beneficiaries or relations of the settlor; they may be selected at random. As Morris and Leach put it in their Rule Against Perpetuities, 2nd Edition at Page 62, the lives in being must be either specified in the instrument or "necessarily involved in limitations contained therein". Megarry and Wade in their Modern Law of Real Property (2nd Edn. P. 229) would state:

"that only lives in being which can be of assistance for the purposes of perpetuity rule are those which in some way or other govern the time when the gift is to vest."

In the Manual of Law on Real Property by Megarry, 2nd Edn. Page 150, the learned author gives the example of gifts by a testator to such of his descendants as are living 21 years after the death of the last survivor of the members of a given school at the testator's death. In Cheshire's Modern Real Property, 10th Edn. the position is thus stated at page 241:

"The lives in being must be designated either expressly, as in Cadell v Palmer, (1833) 1 Cl & F 372 or by implication. Lives are designated by implication only if, according to the terms of the instrument of gift, they serve to measure the time within which the vesting contingency must occur. They must form a possible part of the apparatus for determining the moment at which the interest is to vest." The learned author points out that the Settlor need not choose persons who have interests in the settled property or a connection with the family and he has full liberty of action with regard to the number of persons he may select. Even so is the rule embodied in Section 14. I see nothing in Section 14 of the Transfer of Property Act to place a restriction on the persons whose lives are to be taken to prolong the period of vesting. May be the language of the Section at the close is somewhat involved, but the section uses language in this regard without any limitation "after the lifetime of one or more person living at the date of such transfer." It may be any person or any number of persons, but the person or persons must be living at the date of such transfer. True, one must infer from the document itself the person or persons whose life has to be considered. Here it is Duraiswamy Reddy's sons that have to take. The gift is to a class and it cannot be said that, the quantum or the share in the property to be taken by each member of the class is not ascertainable within the perpetuity period.

The last of the persons to take is the last minor son of Duraiswamy Reddy. The exact share of each beneficiary would depend upon the number of male children that may be born. The settlor intends that the shares diminish in amount according to the number of the sons that may be born to Duraiswamy Reddy. But the share of each member of the class is definitely and finally ascertainable within the perpetuity period. The class closes within the perpetuity period. In the instant case the vesting is postponed utmost to the birth of the last son of Duraiswamy Reddy. Duraiswamy Reddy's lifetime is part of the apparatus for determining the moment at which the interest is to vest. A reading of the settlement deed shows that it does not look upon the lives of Ravana and Sundarama "as lives in being" for the purpose of calculating the perpetuity period. They along with the other sons that may be born have to share the property and the settlor obviously expects all the sons to be alive when the distribution and vesting in possession takes place.

Possession is postponed till the minority of the last son of Duraiswamy Reddy. Cheshire (page 242) taking a case where the testator bequeaths a fund to such of his grand-children as attain the age of twenty-one years, points out that his children who survive him are effective lives in being, since the ascertainment of the beneficiaries requires a reference to their parents. "The gift, therefore, is good, for the grand-children must all become of age within twenty-one years after the death of their parents, and the parents must, all have been born (or begotten) in the testator's life time."

5. It follows that the settlement in question does not offend the rule against perpetuities. The prohibition of Section 14 of the Transfer of Property Act is not evaded by the settlement in question. Vesting of interest has necessarily to be within the minority of a person in existence at the death of Duraiswamy Reddy.

6. In the result, the Second Appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. No leave. Appeal dismissed.

The Lakshmi Vilas Bank Ltd., Karur, Petitioner v. L. S. Pattabhi Chettiar and another, Respondents.

Writ Petn. No. 3544 of 1968, D/- 4-2-1970.

Shops and Establishments — Madras Shops and Establishments Act (36 of 1947), Section 41 (1) — Procedure under — Employer, when must follow — Employee reaching superannuation age — Procedure under Section 41(1) need not be followed,

Where an employer relieves an employee from his duties on the ground that he has reached the age of superannuation and the period of his service has come to an end, the employer is not required to follow the procedure prescribed by Section 41(1). The employer is required to follow the procedure prescribed in Section 41(1) only where the services are dispensed with for a reasonable cause or on a charge of misconduct and such dispensing with contemplates a termination of the services anterior and prior to the date on which the services would come to an end automatically, either as a result of the terms in the contract of service or as a result of a rule applicable to the service in question and not a termination.

GN/GN/D203/70/SNV/T

ORDER:— The first respondent herein was appointed as the Jewel appraiser in the Jalakandapuram Branch of the Petitioner Bank in 1960. On September 30, 1966 the petitioner herein sent a communication to the first respondent herein which stated that the first respondent herein was completing sixty years of age on 15th Purattasi, Parabhava, equivalent to October 1, 1966, and as per the Articles of the Association, he shall retire from the service of the Bank and will be relieved completely at the close of business on Saturday, the 1st October, 1966. On receipt of this communication, the first respondent herein purported to file an appeal to the second respondent herein under Section 41(2) of the Madras Shops and Establishments Act, 1947 (hereinafter referred to as the Act). In the appeal filed by the first respondent, he contended that on October 1, 1966, his services were terminated alleging that he had completed sixty years of age and the horoscope and the medical certificate furnished by the first respondent proved that the age of the first respondent was only fifty four, and hence the termination of the first respondent's service was wrongful and against the provisions of the Act. The petitioner herein filed a counter statement before the second respondent herein contending that the second respondent had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter, since discharge on retirement was not contemplated in Section 41 (1) of the Act. The further case of the petitioner was that the first respondent was asked on June 15, 1966 to produce an educational certificate to prove his age and he took time till September 20, 1966, that the first respondent was not asked to produce a medical certificate or any horoscope, that they have been produced of his own accord, that the horoscope produced by the first respondent could not be the original horoscope and was a recent one fabricated and written for the purpose and its authenticity and antiquity were both denied. The further case of the petitioner was that the horoscope and the medical certificate were not admissible forms of proof of age and the petitioner would not be bound to accept the same. The second respondent herein considered the case of the parties and passed an order on November 30, 1967 in M. S. E. Case No. 42 of 1967. The second respondent overruled the contention of the petitioner that Section 41 of the Act has no application to the retirement, and on merits, came to the conclusion that the first respondent's services had not been terminated in the manner contemplated by Section 41 of the Act. The second respondent recorded:

"As already observed, the respondent (petitioner herein) was not able to explain for having accepted horoscope and medical certificates as proof of age in respect of certain other employees and not having accepted them as satisfactory proof of age in the case of the appellant (first respondent herein). Further, no notice as required under Section 41(1) of the Madras Shops and Establishments Act has been given to the appellant before giving effect to Exhibit A-1. (the memorandum dated September 30, 1966 referred to already). I therefore hold that the termination of the appellant's services by retirement as per the order of the respondent dated 30-9-1966 (Exhibit A-1) would not be for a reasonable cause as the appellant had been retired from service without resolving the dispute regarding his age on that date. Inasmuch as there was no reasonable cause for the termination of the appellant's services by retirement and since the statutory notice was also absent, the termination of the appellant's services by retirement as per Exhibit A-1 dated 30-9-1966 is illegal. I therefore, set aside the order of termination by retirement dated 30-9-1966."

It is to quash this order of the second respondent, the present Writ Petition under Article 226 of the Constitution of India has been filed.

2. The learned counsel for the petitioner put forward two contentions in support of the Writ Petition. The first is that the appeal preferred by the first respondent to the second respondent was not maintainable since the retirement of an employee by an employer on the employee reaching the age of superannuation does not come within the scope of Section 41 of the Act. The second is that in coming to the conclusion that the first respondent's services had not been terminated lawfully, the second respondent had failed to consider very important circumstances and facts that were placed before him and that were available to him. I shall now consider these contentions in that order.

3. As far as the first contention is concerned it is necessary to refer to the language of Section 41(1) of the Act. Section 41(1) states—

"No employer shall dispense with the services of a person employed continuously for a period of not less than six months, except for a reasonable cause and without giving such person at least one month's notice or wages in lieu of such notice, provided, however, that such notice shall not be necessary where the services of such person are dispensed with on a charge of misconduct supported by satisfactory evidence recorded at an inquiry held for the purpose."

Thus, it will be seen that this section falls under two limbs, though the second limb is framed in the form of a proviso to the first limb. The first limb is that the services of the employee who had been continuously employed for a period of not less than six months cannot be dispensed with except for a reasonable cause and without giving such person at least one month's notice or wages in lieu of such notice. For the purpose of complying with the requirements of the first limb, both the conditions must be simultaneously satisfied, namely, that the dispensing with the services must be for a reasonable cause, and the employee should be given at least one month's notice or wages in lieu of such notice. As far as the second limb is concerned, it contemplates the dispensing with the services of an employee on a charge of misconduct. In such an event, the requirement of the giving of one month's notice or wages in lieu thereof, is not insisted upon. On the other hand, the statute insists that the services of such a person cannot be dispensed with on a charge of misconduct, unless an enquiry has been held and satisfactory evidence supporting the charge of misconduct had been recorded at the enquiry.

Now looking at the language of the section and the provisions contained in the two limbs, can it be said that the retirement of an employee on reaching the age of superannuation, according to the rules applicable to the employment, would come within the scope of the section? I am of the opinion that such retirement cannot come within the scope of the section. From the very nature of the language employed in Section 41(1), only a premature termination of the services of an employee can be brought within the scope of the section. When I say premature termination, I mean a termination of the services prior to the period fixed in a contract of service, if there is one, or a termination of service prior to the period fixed for retirement on reaching the age of superannuation prescribed either in a contract of service, if there is one, or in the rules or regulations governing such service. Consequently, if there is a contract of service, and the contract of service itself prescribes the period of service, the termination of the services of the employee pursuant to the expiry of such period of employment, cannot fall within the scope of Section 41(1). Equally, if there are terms in the contract of service or provisions in the rules applicable to the service providing for the retirement of the employee on reaching the age of superannuation, such a case also cannot fall within the scope of Section 41(1).

The dispensing with the services for a reasonable cause or the dispensing with the services on a charge of misconduct, both of them, contemplate a termination of the services anterior and prior to the date on which the services would come to an end automatically, either as a result of the terms in the contract of service or as a result of a rule applicable to the service in question. Consequently, where an employer relieves an employee from his duties for the reason that he had reached the age of superannuation and the period of service had come to an end, such a case cannot fall within the scope of Section 41(1) of the Act. On the other hand, the second respondent appears to have proceeded on the basis that reaching the age of superannuation will be a reasonable cause as contemplated in the first limb of Section 41(1). I am of the view that this is an erroneous one. The reasonable cause that is contemplated in Section 41(1) is with reference to a premature termination of service. Can it be contended that the retirement of a particular employee constitutes termination of his services, for a reasonable cause, and therefore, even in such an event, the employee is entitled to at least one month's notice or wages in lieu thereof?

In the case of retirement on reaching the age of superannuation, the employer and the employee know when the employee will cease to be in service, and therefore, the question of giving one month's notice or wages in lieu of such notice cannot possibly arise. The giving of one month's notice or wages in lieu thereof is generally intended to help the employee concerned during the interval before he obtains another employment. But in the case of retirement on reaching the age of superannuation, the basis for such a requirement is not present and therefore, there is no scope for any such contention, and the relieving of an employee from his duties on the basis that he retired from service on reaching the age of superannuation cannot by any stretch of imagination be said to be dispensing with the services of an employee for a reasonable cause. Hence, I am of the opinion that the conclusion of the second respondent in this behalf is erroneous, and as a matter of fact, the appeal preferred by the first respondent to the second respondent was really incompetent.

I may also mention one other feature. It may happen in a particular case; the retirement was used by the employer as a cloak for dispensing with the services of an employee where the motive for dispensing with the services is something different. In that event, a different position may possibly result, because no person will be allowed to evade the obligation imposed on him by law by having recourse to a cloak or guise under which he can take refuge in order to escape from such an obligation. The present case is not one such and while dealing with the second of the contentions, I shall refer to the facts of this case which support this conclusion of mine. Consequently, I am of the opinion that the appeal preferred by the first respondent to the second respondent under Section 41(2) of the Act is incompetent and the second respondent had no jurisdiction whatever to pass the order in question.

Normally speaking, this conclusion of mine would be sufficient to dispose of the writ petition. However, the learned counsel on both the sides argued on the merits also and invited me to give my conclusions on the second of the contentions put forward by the learned counsel for the petitioner. For the purpose of understanding and appreciating the contentions in this behalf, it is necessary to refer to one or two admitted facts. The first respondent herein sought employment under the petitioner by a letter dated February 10, 1960 which has been marked as Exhibit A-1 before the second respondent. In that letter, the first respondent has stated that he learnt that in the Trichy branch of the petitioner-bank there was a vacancy for the post of appraiser and he had been a shroff in a shroff's shop for a period of ten or twelve years and he had experience in that post, and hence he wanted the appointment and undertook to conduct himself according to the rules and regulations of the bank. In that letter, he had stated that his age would be 52 or 53 and he had studied upto VII Standard. On the same day, there was a written application given by the first respondent for the post in question. That application is also dated February 10, 1960, and has been marked as Exhibit R-2. Against the column "Date of birth and proof of age", it was stated "Parabava, Purattasi, 16th: Age 52 horoscope." It is on the basis of Exhibits R-1 and R-2, the petitioner came to the conclusion that the first respondent was born on October 1, 1906, and therefore he reached the age of sixty years on September 30, 1966.

However, even in March, 1966 itself, the petitioner sent out a circular marked as Exhibit R-7, to all its employees calling upon them to produce their Secondary School Leaving Certificate or Transfer Certificate issued by the Headmaster of the School as a proof of the date of birth of the employee concerned. This circular itself expressly stated that such particulars were required to make the file up-to-date in respect of the staff of the petitioner bank. Such a communication was sent to the first respondent also, and the first respondent after a number of reminders on August 22, 1966 wrote a letter asking one month's time to produce the necessary records to prove the age, as he had to go to the village to gather the records. Subsequently, the first respondent sent to the petitioner herein, a certificate dated September 16, 1966, granted by a Civil Surgeon, Erskine Hospital, Madurai, which has been marked as Exhibit R-3 before the second respondent, and a horoscope which has been marked as Exhibit R-4. On the basis of these two documents, the case of the first respondent was that he was born only in 1912 and therefore he had not attained the age of superannuation on October 1, 1966 as contended by the petitioner herein.

The second respondent took the view that since the petitioner accepted horoscopes and medical certificates as proof of age in respect of certain other employees, it should have accepted the horoscope as well as the medical certificate in proof of the age of the first respondent also, and in not having done so, the petitioner illegally terminated the services of the first respondent. It is in this context the learned counsel for the petitioner contends that the second respondent has completely ignored Exhibits R-1 and R-2 wherein the first respondent had given his age as 52 or 53 in 1960, and also the evidence of the first respondent before the second respondent wherein he has stated that he was aged 25 or 26 at the time of his marriage, and he was married on the 10th Avani, Sukla Year.

I am of the opinion that the contention of the petitioner in this behalf is well-founded. As I pointed out already, Exhibit R-1 was written by the first respondent himself where he had given his age as 52 or 53 on February 10, 1960. The first respondent in his evidence before the second respondent had admitted that Exhibit R-1 was written by him in his own handwriting, and he had given his age as 52 or 53. With regard to Exhibit R-2, the first respondent stated that his signature was obtained in a blank form and the particulars in the application were filled upon by the Secretary of the bank. On the face of it, this contention of the first respondent cannot be correct, though I am not deciding that question. Ex. R-3 contains a number of particulars in addition to the Tamil year, month and the date of birth of the first respondent, such as his father's name, religion, caste and sect, qualifications including educational he possessed, whether he was married and if so, how many children he had, the properties he possessed, whether he inherited the same or acquired the same, the value of the properties and the encumbrance on such properties. The case of the first respondent was that all those particulars were filled up by the Secretary to the bank without any reference whatever to the first respondent and the first respondent was not aware of any of these entries.

On the face of it, such a case is palpably false. The Secretary of the bank could not have drawn out of his fertile imagination all the particulars with regard to father's name of the first respondent, how many children he had, what was the property the first respondent possessed, whether it was inherited by him or acquired by him and whether there was any encumbrance subsisting on the property. In any event, that is a matter which the second respondent should have considered before coming to the conclusion that the petitioner's services were illegally terminated. I have already referred to the fact that in the evidence before the second respondent, the first respondent stated that he was married when he was 25 or 26 years and that his marriage took place on 10th Avani in the year Sukla. This statement will be more consistent with the first respondent having been born in Purattasi Parabhava than in Purattasi Parithapi, as has been shown in the horoscope produced by the first respondent before the second respondent.

As I pointed out already, the case of the petitioner was that the first respondent was superannuated on October 1, 1966 only on the basis of his own declaration made in Exhibits R-1 and R-2 and this fact was not all considered by the second respondent. The further case of the petitioner was that Exhibit R-3, the doctor's certificate would not be real proof of age of the first respondent and Exhibit R-4 was really a fabricated one. Here again, I am of the view that the second respondent had not considered these questions and merely proceeded on the basis that since the petitioner had accepted horoscope and medical certificates as proof of age of some of the employees of the petitioner, the petitioner was bound to accept the same as proof of age of the first respondent as well.

In this case, it is admitted that in the case of night watchmen of the petitioner, the petitioner accepted horoscope and medical certificates as proof of age of those night watchmen on the basis that they were illiterate and therefore there was no occasion for them to produce their Secondary School Leaving Certificate or Transfer Certificate as proof of the correct date of birth, and the said consideration will not apply to a person like the first respondent who was appointed as a jewel appraiser in the petitioner bank. Over and above this, the petitioner's contention is that Exhibit R-3 which is the doctor's certificate would not really constitute evidence of proof of age of the first respondent since the doctor had not stated that he arrived at the age of the first respondent as 54 years as a result of any examination conducted by him. Here again, I am of the opinion that the contention of the petitioner is well founded. The said certificate is as follows:—

"This is to certify that Sri L. S. Pattabi Chettiar has declared before me that he is aged 64 years. On the basis of his appearance and health, I am prepared to accept his declaration and state that he appears to be 54 years."

To say the least, this certificate couched in such cautious language could never be the proof of age of the first respondent. There are a number of significant features with regard to this certificate. The first thing is that the doctor who gave the certificate, though of the rank of a Civil Surgeon was merely a Reader in Paediatric Surgery, in the Madurai Medical College and Paediatric Surgeon, Erskine Hospital, Madurai. Secondly, the doctor in his certificate does not say that he examined the first respondent and as a result of such examination, come to the conclusion that the age of the first respondent was 54 years. On the other hand, the doctor clearly and categorically states that the first respondent declared before him that he was 54 years of age and that on the basis of his appearance and health, he was prepared to accept his declaration and state that he appeared to be 54 years of age. It is hardly necessary to state that such a certificate cannot really be proof of age of the first respondent.

Over and above this, I have already pointed out more than once that the second respondent had never paid any attention whatever to the fact that in Exhibit R-1 written in the hand of the first respondent, he stated that as on February 10, 1960, he was aged 52 or 53 years and that Exhibit R-2 also gave the date of birth of the first respondent as 16th Purattasi, Parabhava which would be consistent with the admitted statement of the first respondent in Ex. R-1 and that the evidence of the first respondent before the second respondent was that he was married when he was 25 or 26 years of age and the marriage took place on the 10th of Avani, Sukla. For these reasons, I am of the opinion that the conclusion of the second respondent even on merits cannot stand because he has not considered the real point put forward by the petitioner and proceeded on an erroneous assumption that the petitioner having accepted horoscopes and medical certificates as proof of age in respect of some other employees, should have accepted Exhibits R-3 and R-4 also as proof of age of the first respondent, and in not having done so, it had wrongfully terminated the services of the first respondent.

4. The learned counsel for the first respondent contended before me that in any event there was a dispute about the age of the first respondent and the petitioner could not retire the first respondent on the ground of his reaching the age of superannuation until that dispute is solved. I repeatedly asked the learned counsel for the first respondent to show me any specific statutory machinery provided for the resolution of such a dispute so that it can be contended that the petitioner could not have proceeded to retire the first respondent on the basis of his reaching the age of superannuation without having recourse to that statutory machinery provided for the resolution of the dispute as to the correct age of the first respondent. The learned counsel was not able to draw my attention to any such statutory provision and merely contended by stating that there could have been an industrial dispute with regard thereto. If so, certainly the first respondent should have raised such a dispute and should not have approached the second respondent under Section 41(2) of the Act. For these reasons, I am of the opinion that the impugned order of the second respondent cannot stand and accordingly the writ petition is allowed and the said order is quashed. There will be no order as to costs.

Petition allowed.

C. K. Venkatanarasimham for B. Shan-thakumar and A. S. Natarajan, for Appellants; The Addl. Public Prosecutor, for the State

JUDGMENT:— In this appeal accused 1 and 2 who are the appellants herein are at least entitled to the benefit of doubt on two grounds principally which will be set down by me presently. Briefly the facts are:

2. P.W. 1 employed as an Assistant Manager in Spens and Co., General Paters Road, was going along Buzullah Road, T. Nagar at about 5-40 p.m. He found accused 1 and 2 standing on the road in front of Thiru N. T. Rama Rao's bungalow. Accused 1 called him and pointing to accused 2 asked him if he liked her. Accused 2 was very attractively and glamorously dressed and made up. Accused 1 told P.W. 1 that if he paid him Rs. 25 he could have sexual intercourse with accused 2. P.W. 1 was taken aback, so he says. Accused 2 took his hand and spoke endearingly to him and asked him to pay her Rs. 25 and have sexual intercourse with her. She also pointed out to a house nearby and told him that it was hers and pointed to the currency notes visible in his Terylene shirt pocket. He claims he was upset. He promised to come back in an hour and went away. According to his evidence, some passers-by smiled. On his way, he saw a police van near the Vani mahal. P.W. 1 told P.W. 2 what had happened. P.W. 2 took Ex. P-1 from him and then P.W. 1 took him to place. When accused 1 and 2 saw the police, they went inside. The police went in and accused 1 and 2 and P.W. 1 were taken to the police station.

3. P.W. 1 further says that the Assistant Commissioner P.W. 3 examined him at 6-30 p.m. He claims his office closed at 1-30 p.m. because of the Aruvatinmoovar festival. P.W. 1 makes it appear that this romantic adventure was result of his accidentally walking in the Bazufulah Road on his return from Kodambakkam where he appears to have gone to see a friend. The entire incident occupied three minutes. P.W. 1 further says that there were two petty shops nearby. He also says that he had an idea of reporting to the police even before he saw the van. He saw the van in ten minutes of the incident. The van was in the petrol bunk near Vani Mahal. P.W. 1 wrote out Ex. P-1. The suggestion that P.W. 1 was perjuring himself for the reason that he wanted to avoid being brought to book by the inspector as a pimp was refuted by him. He admits that the inspector did not question the petty shop owners. Therefore no petty shop owner was examined.

4. P.W. 2 says that at about 5-55 p.m. P.W. 1 came to him and complained about his being solicited by accused 1 and 2. He corroborates the evidence of P.W. 1 in respect of Ex. P-1 and also in regard to the apprehension of accused 1 and 2 who were brought to the Mambalam Police Station. He claims that he was on his rounds under instructions from the Assistant Commissioner of Police (Vigilance) checking street solicitation. To him, it was suggested that P.W. 1 is a stock witness for the police or is a known pimp. He admits that he did not examine any nearby neighbours. He says that no one else complained about accused 1 and 2 before this incident.

5. P.W. 3 is the Assistant Commissioner, Vigilance. On 12-3-1968 he had authorised P.W. 2 to book cases under the Suppression of Immoral Traffic Act under Ex. P. 2. At about 7 p.m., he received information that P.W. 2 had arrested accused 1 and 2 in T. Nagar. He says he proceeded to Mambalam Police Station, took up investigation and filed charge-sheet against the accused after examining P.Ws. 1 and 2. In cross-examination P.W. 3 admits that he was in Mambalam Police Station from 5 p.m. In the light of this evidence, it is not possible to understand how P.W. 3 proceeded to Mambalam Police Station after receiving the information at 7 p.m. According to his own evidence, he was in Mambalam Police Station from 5 p.m. and when accused 1 and 2 and P.W. 1 were brought to the police station by P.W. 2, he ought to have known about their presence in the Mambalam Police Station probably even before 7 p.m. He admits he examined P.Ws. 1 and 2 and no one else. The investigation lasted till 10-30 p.m. on that date. It is suggested to P.W. 3 that he had accused 1 and 2 remanded for 15 days in order to harass them although his investigation was over by 10-30 p.m. on that date. At any rate, the material in cross-examination does not disclose what further investigation after 10-30 p.m. that night has revealed either in respect of the antecedents of the accused or their associates or their prior convictions etc.

6. P.W. 3 claims that he filed the charge-sheet against the accused. But, strangely, I find the Inspector of Police making the following endorsement on the charge-sheet in the following language wherein one reads the admission on the part of the accused that they have solicited the complainant on payment of hire charges of Rs. 25 for the night. This endorsement makes strange reading. The Inspector of Police ought to have known that after he recorded the complaint Ex. P-1, the so-called admission made to him is totally inadmissible in evidence. This betrays a certain amount of anxiety on the part of the Inspector of Police to fasten the so-called admission on the accused which is embodied as an endorsement in continuation of Ex. P-1 in the charge-sheet against accused 1 and 2.

7. The plea of the accused is a total denial. Accused 1 and 2 examined D.W. 1 for proving that the family, consisting of accused 1 and 2 and another son, make a total earning of Rs. 400 per mensem. D.W. 1 claims that he has been sending paddy and other articles besides. D.W. 1 filed in this court an affidavit swearing that accused Jayanthi is living with him as his wife under his care and protection at No. 13 Ramalingam St., Coimbatore. There is another averment in the affidavit that D.W. 1 married the second accused on 13-9-1968 at Coimbatore. In order to test the averments in the affidavit filed by K. V. Kandaswami. D.W. 1, I summoned him and examined him before this court. He admits that he married the second accused on 13-9-1968 and that he and accused 2 are living as husband and wife.

8. The question that falls for determination is whether the prosecution has brought home the guilt against accused 1 for an offence under Section 4(1) of the Suppression of Immoral Traffic in Women and Girls Act, 1956. In this context, it is necessary to analyse Section 4(1) of the Act and also Section 2(e) and (f) and also Section 8 of the said Act. Section 8 starts with the heading 'seducing or soliciting for purposes of prostitution'. In Section 8(a) and (b) the significant words 'for the purpose of prostitution' would predicate the state of affairs, or a state of things anterior in point of time to the state of things embodied in Section 4. Section 2 reads as follows:

"Prostitute means female who offers her body for promiscuous sexual intercourse for hire, whether in money or in kind."

Therefore the earnings of the prostitution are the resultant outcome of the state of things embodied in Section 8. Even accepting the entire prosecution evidence, the proof of the earnings of the prostitution of accused 2 is still lacking. There is the further ingredient which is not proved by the prosecution evidence, namely, that accused 1 knowingly lives wholly or in part on the earnings of the prostitution. The only evidence that emerges from the entire record is that D.W. 1 speaks to the fact all the three including accused 1's son are together earning Rs. 400. D.W. 1 further claims that he is sending Rs. 200 every month besides paddy and other articles. Excepting this tiny particle of evidence, the prosecution has not chosen to adduce any evidence for the purpose of proof of accused 1 living wholly or in part on the earnings of the prostitution.

9. There is also another grave defect in the charge framed by the learned III Presidency Magistrate. The charge against accused 1 reads as follows—

"That you accused 1 on 12-3-1968 at about 5-40 p. m. at Bazullah Road, Thyagarayanagar, Madras, acted as pimp for Jayanthi (accused 2) by soliciting one Subramaniam for the purpose of having sexual intercourse with the said Jayanthi and that you were living either in whole or in part on the earning of such prostitution and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 4(1) of the Suppression of Immoral Traffic in Women and Girls Act, and within my cognisance".

Immediately it becomes clear that the above mentioned charge does not mention the significant ingredient 'for hire' and the latter part of the charge mentions the earnings of such prostitution. In the absence of the words 'for hire' the charge is vitiated by a grave defect which goes to the very root of the matter for the essence of the offence is offering the body of accused 2 for promiscuous sexual intercourse for hire.

10. The learned Public Prosecutor has argued before me that in the light of the unsatisfactory evidence which fails to prove the other ingredients in Section 4(1) of the Act, it is unnecessary for me to go into the question whether this grave defect in the charge against accused 1 is an illegality or an irregularity and whether it is curable or whether it occasions failure of justice. I leave this at that.

11. I hold that the offence under Section 4(1) of the said Act against accused 1 is not proved and accused 1 is acquitted.

12. So far as the case of accused 2 is concerned, the question which I have got to determine is whether it is safe to act on the testimony of P. W. 1 in the absence of some corroboration in regard to the solicitation made by accused 2 for the purpose of prostitution.

13. The prosecution claims that P. W. 1 meeting with this adventure in Bazullah Road is rather fortuitous and that his meeting the van at Vani Mahal is another piece of accident. The date of authorisation, Ex. P.2, is 12-3-1968 and even the admission of P. W. 3 that he was in Mambalam police station till 5 p. m. is another coincidence and P. W. 3 continuing to remain at the Mambalam police station from 5 p. m. is another link in the chain of coincidences. I hesitate to find that these series of events would be the result of a combination or of fortuitous circumstance. I am left with an impression that the entire thing is the result of a pre-arranged plan. At any rate, the evidence does not necessarily negative the possible theory of a pre-planned deliberation on the part of P. Ws. 1, 2 and 3. Therefore, I am still left with the question whether I should act on the testimony of P. W. 1 in regard to the charge against accused 2. It was certainly open to the prosecution to have examined the petty shop owners in support of the testimony of P. W. 1 for the alleged incident is stated to have taken place even before the sun had set. Even P. W. 2 states that he did not examine any nearby neighbours. He does not give any convincing reasons why he did not choose to examine them. Even the investigation of P. W. 3 does not disclose the examination either of the shop owners or any nearby owners. In the absence of some other testimony lending assurance to the testimony of P. W. 1, I feel hesitant to act on the testimony of P. W. 1 alone.

14. I give the benefit of doubt to accused 2 and acquit her. The Criminal appeal is thus allowed.

Appeal allowed.

The Asst Govt Pleader, for Appellant R. B. Abdul Karim and P. B. Jammis Khan, for Respondent.

VEERASWAMI, C. J.:— The assessee, who is the common respondent, was an unlicensed dealer in hides and skins assessed to sales tax on March, 23, 1956 and his appeal therefrom had failed. Thereafter, he paid part of the tax, and, while he remained in arrears of the balance, he took out two petitions under Art. 226 of the Constitution, one in April, 1964 to forbid the Revenue from collecting the balance of the tax, and, the other in August, 1966 to quash the order dismissing his appeal. These two petitions were allowed by this Court following Hafeez Abdul Wahab & Sons v. Govt. of Madras, (1966) 17 STC 284 (Mad). In that case Srinivasan and Venkatadri, JJ., were of the view that since by the rules framed under the Madras General Sales Tax Act, 1939, relevant to the assessment year 1953-54, tanned hides and skins as one category had been taxed differently in the hands of the local tanner and in the hands of the person who imported them, either dressed or undressed, tanned and sold, the provisions were discriminatory as offending Art. 304 of the Constitution. The Revenue has come up in appeals.

2. When the appeals came up before another Division Bench, to which one of us was a party, it was felt that (1966) 17 STC 284 (Mad) required reconsideration, and, as a result, the appeals have been placed before us.

3. In order to appreciate the point at issue, it is first necessary to notice the relative statutory provisions and the rules made thereunder relevant to charge of transactions in hides and skins during the assessment year 1953-54. Section 3 of the Madras General Sales Tax Act, 1939, was the charging section. The scheme envisaged by sub-section (1) of that section was multi-point tax. Every dealer should pay for each year a tax on his total turnover for the year and the tax should be calculated at the flat rate of three pias for every rupee in the turnover. The proviso to the sub-section was added in 1949 with which we are not concerned at this moment. The scheme of multi-point tax was of course subject to the other provisions of the Act. Sub-section (2), before its amendment by Act 20 of 1954, charged

The State of Madras, represented by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner of Commercial Taxes, Madras-III, Appellant v M/s M. A. Noor Mohamed & Co. Tanners and Dealers in Hides and Skins, Chrompet Madras-44, Respondent.

Writ Appeal Nos. 204 and 99 of 1967, D/-19-11-1969

(A) Sales Tax — Madras General Sales Tax Act (9 of 1939), Sections 3 (1), 5 — Madras General Sales Tax Turnover Rules, R. 16 — Unlicensed dealer in hides and skins — During 1953-54 such dealer was liable to multipoint taxation — No case of discrimination.

As the Act and the Turnover Rules stood during the assessment period 1953-54, the consequence of not taking out a licence by a dealer in hides and skins was that he would not be entitled to the benefit of the single point scheme of taxation and would be exposed to multipoint charges. (Para 6)

When an unlicensed dealer during 1953-54 sold hides and skins which he imported, tanned and sold, his sale would attract tax under Section 3(1) itself without reference to Section 5 and the corresponding Turnover Rule 16. In such a scheme of taxation there was no room for discrimination as contemplated in Art. 304(a), Constitution of India. (1966) 17 STC 284 (Mad). Overruled. Case law discussed. (Paras 9 and 10)

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 304(a) — Tax on goods imported — Permissibility.

Article 304(a) contemplates countervailing duties being permissible in respect of imported goods and similar goods in taxing State provided they do not result in discrimination. Tax on imported goods by Art. 304(a) is permitted if similar goods manufactured or produced in the taxing State are subjected to similar tax. Case law discussed. (Para 8) in addition, in respect of certain goods specified therein, a single-point tax, also specified in the sub-section. So far as hides and skins were concerned, Section 5 made a departure from the general scheme of multi-point tax on general goods and provided that such sales of hides and skins, whether tanned or untanned, should be liable to tax, under Section 3(1) only at such single point in the series of sales by successive dealers as might be prescribed. Sub-section (1) of S. 3 directed that turnover should be determined in accordance with such rules as might be prescribed. Section 6-A, which was inserted in a substituted form by the Madras General Sales Tax (Amendment) Act, 1947, provided for cases of liability to tax of persons not observing conditions of licence. We shall refer to this section in more detail presently. The prescription contemplated by Section 5 took the form of Rule 16 of the Turnover Rules. This rule had, as it stood originally and during the relevant period, five clauses. The first said that in the case of hides and skins the tax would be payable under Section 3(1) in accordance with the rest of the clauses in the rule. Sub-rule (2) dealt with charge on sales of untanned hides or skins by licensed dealers in such goods. Under this clause tax on such sales should not be levied except at the stage at which the hides or skins were sold to a tanner in the State or sold for export outside the State. But, in the case of the former, the tax should be levied from the tanner on the amount for which the hides or skins were bought by him, and, in the case of the latter, any such untanned hides or skins which were not sold to a tanner inside the State but were exported outside the State, the tax should be levied from the dealer who was the last dealer not exempt from taxation under Section 3(3) who bought them in the State on the amount for which they were bought by him. Clause (3) was concerned with taxation on sales by licensed dealers of hides or skins which had been tanned within the State. Such sales would be exempt from taxation provided the hides or skins had been tanned in a tannery which had paid the tax leviable under the Act. If that was not so, that is to say, if tax had not been paid at the earlier stage, the sales of such hides or skins were made liable to tax at the stage of the first sale of such goods on the amount for which the sales hides and skins were made.

4. It may be seen from what we have said of Section 5 and R. 16(1) to (4), a scheme of single-point taxation had been introduced, but, confined to dealings between licensed dealers in which tax was levied in the case of untanned hides or skins at the stage of their first purchase and on the purchase value, and in the case of sales of tanned hides or skins at the stage of their sale and on the sale value, provided the goods involved in such sales had not suffered tax at their raw stage earlier.

5. Sub-rule (5) of R. 16 was to the effect that sales of hides or skins by dealers other than licensed dealers in hides or skins should, subject to the provisions of Section 3, be liable to tax on each occasion of sale. That meant that the consequence of not taking out a licence by a dealer in hides and skins was that he would not be entitled to the benefit of the single-point scheme of taxation. This sub-rule was but stating the true legal position of failure to take out a licence, and, the position would have been the same even without sub-r. (5). This is especially so because of the specific provisions of Section 6-A. According to this section, if any restrictions, or conditions prescribed under Section 5 were contravened or not observed by a dealer, or if a licence was not taken out or renewed, the sales of the dealer would be subject to charge as if Section 5 did not apply to the sales by such dealers.

6. In passing we may mention that in Syed Mohamed & Co. v. State of Andhra, (1954) 5 STC 108 = (AIR 1954 SC 314) it had been conceded for the Revenue that sub-rule (5) of R. 16 of the Turnover Rules was inconsistent with the scheme of single point taxation and was therefore, ultra vires. But the validity of this concession, which was the basis for invalidating the sub-rule in that case, was contested by the Revenue eventually in State of Madras v. Noor Mohammed & Co., (1960) 11 STC 570 = (AIR 1960 SC 1254) before the Supreme Court and successfully. The Supreme Court held that there was no inconsistency between Rule 16(5) and Section 5(vi) of the Act and that S. 5(vi) was but a concessional provision for making the sales of hides and skins liable to taxation at a single point, but that was subject to the restrictions and conditions prescribed in the rules, and, one of these was taking out a licence. It was therefore, pointed out by the Supreme Court that all that Rule 16(5) did was to emphasise the consequences of non-observance of the condition which Sections 5 (vi) and 6-A had in clear terms prescribed. It should be taken as, therefore, well settled that as the Act and the Rules stood during the assessment year 1953-54, the consequence of not taking out a licence by a dealer in hides and skins was that he would not be entitled to the benefit of the single point scheme of taxation and would be exposed to multi-point charges. Rule 16(2) to (4) were amended subsequently, but, in substance, the scheme of single-point taxation remained the same. With reference to the amended Turnover Rule 16 its validity, in the context of Art. 301 of the Constitution read with Art. 304(a) was contested with the result that in Firm A. T. B. Mehtab Majid & Co., v. State of Madras, (1963) 14 STC 355 = (AIR 1963 SC 928), the Supreme Court ruled that the provisions of Rule 16(2) discriminated between hides and skins imported from outside the State and those manufactured or produced inside the State and therefore, contravened the provisions of Art 304(a) of the Constitution of India and were invalid. The reasoning for the decision is to be found in the following observation:

"The grievance arises on account of the amount of tax levied being different on account of the existence of substantial disparity in the price of the raw hides or skins and of those hides or skins after they had been tanned, though the rate is the same under Section 3(1) (b) of the Act. If the dealer has purchased the raw hides or skin in the State, he does not pay on the sale price of the tanned hides or skins; he pays on the purchase price only. If the dealer purchases raw hides or skins from outside the State, and tans them within the State, he will be liable to pay sales tax on the sale price of the tanned hides or skins. He too will have to pay more for even though the hides and skins are tanned within the State, merely on account of his having imported the hides and skins from outside, and having not therefore, paid any tax under sub-rule (1)."

The discrimination thus found flowed from the nature of the single point scheme of taxation relating to hides and skins and on the differential quantum of turnover to which the same rate was applied, the difference arising by the accident of tanned hides and skins being imported and suffering tax on the sale turnover and sales of locally tanned goods not suffering such tax because the corresponding untanned hides or skins constituting a lesser turnover having suffered tax.

7. In Hajee Abdul Shakoor & Co. v. State of Madras, (1964) 15 STC 719 = (AIR 1964 SC 1729) the discrimination resulted from the differential in rate applied, though there was the same quantum of turnover, in the case of sales of imported and local tanned goods. This is what the Supreme Court stated:

"The rate of tax on the sale of tanned hides and skins is 2% on the purchase price of those hides and skins in the untanned condition while the rate of tax on the sale of raw hides and skins in the State during 1955 to 1957 is 3 pies per rupee. The difference in tax works out to 7/1600th of a rupee, i.e. a little less than 1/4 naya paise per rupee."

That was the discrimination which offended Art. 304(a) of the Constitution.

sessee, who is the respondent, contends that the benefit of the two decisions should be extended to his case too though he was an unlicensed dealer. The argument is that in the context of Art. 301 the restrictions on trade, commerce and intercourse among States envisaged by Article 304(a) are related to the goods without reference to anything else and that therefore, irrespective of whether a dealer in hides and skins is licensed or not, if on a survey of the generality of the flow of trade and commerce locally and in the context of inter-State transactions there is a difference in the incidence of taxation, that would suffice to invalidate the relative charging provisions as violating Art. 304(a). We are unable to accept this contention in that broad form. It is no doubt true that Art. 304(a) speaks of goods imported vis-a-vis similar goods in the taxing State. But the Article does not stop there. It contemplates countervailing duties being permissible in respect of imported and similar local goods provided they do not result in discrimination. Tax on imported goods by Art. 304(a) is permitted if similar goods manufactured or produced in the taxing State are subjected to similar tax. The implication necessarily is that not only the article is concerned with imported and similar local goods but also the incidence of taxation which would have to be ascertained with reference to the relative statutory provisions. (1963) 14 STC 355 = (AIR 1963 SC 928) and (1964) 15 STC 719 = (AIR 1964 SC 1729) were decided in the context of Turnover Rule 16 and of the Single point scheme of taxation applicable to transactions in hides and skins, dressed or undressed, imported or local. It is only in that scheme of taxation would there be any occasion for a classification between tax on purchase value and exemption at the sale point relatable to the same goods, first in the raw stage and in the second stage of sale of dressed hides and skins. It is this aspect engendered by the structure of turnover Rule 16 that gave rise to a differential in the turnover of purchase of untanned hides and skins and sale of dressed hides and skins made out of them, vis-a-vis, the turnover of imported hides and skins that were sold and, on an equalisation, after (1963) 14 STC 355 = (AIR 1963 SC 928) of the turnovers and removal of the differential in the quantum of turnover brought to charge, there remained, by reason of the language of the rule, a differential in rates which brought about a discrimination, as held in (1964) 15 STC 719 = (AIR 1964 SC 1729) between imported tanned hides and skins and locally made hides and skins, on their sale, the discrimination in either case, entirely dependant, on, as we said, a scheme of single point taxation relating to hides and skins, as noticed by us supra.

9. So far as the assessee in these appeals is concerned, on account of the fact that he was an unlicensed dealer during the assessment year in question, he would not in accordance with (1960) 11 STC 570 = (AIR 1960 SC 1254) be entitled to the benefit of the single point taxation and that would mean that his sales of hides and skins, which he imported, tanned and sold, would attract tax under Section 3(1) itself without reference to Section 5 and the corresponding Turnover Rule 16. That being the case, we are of opinion that he cannot press into service the differential treatment in taxation arising out of R. 16 and contend that, by that yard-stick, his assessments on the basis of multi-point scheme of taxation, should be quashed. In such a scheme of taxation, there will be no room whatever for discrimination, as contemplated by Art. 304(a), because of charge being levied at the point of every transaction, not merely at any prescribed stage or point. To illustrate, supposing A sold raw hides and skins to B for Rs. 100/- and C, tanned them and sold them at the value of Rs. 150/-. Suppose also that C, another dealer, who is like A or B unlicensed, imported similar quantity of untanned hides or skins, tanned them locally and sold for Rs. 150/-. In every one of these cases, under the multi-point scheme of taxation, the turnover in each case would be liable to charge. There will then be no discrimination between B and C, for, in either case, the turnover would only be Rs. 150/- and the same rate would be applied. There can be no complaint also that A suffers lesser tax on a lesser turnover while B, on a higher turnover, did at the same rate. Each of A, B, and C had been equally treated and no differential is evident neither in the quantum or in the rate applied thereto. That is the result of applying the statutory provisions relating to unlicensed dealers. We do not think that the assessee, as an unlicensed dealer, can invoke the position, under Section 5 read with Rule 16 and then plead discrimination because, in actual point of tax, the charge in respect of his turnover was under the multi-point scheme of taxation.

10. On that view, of the matter, we are, with due respect, unable to concur on that question with the view in (1966) 17 STC 284 (Mad). The appeals are therefore allowed but with no costs.

Appeals allowed.

Tax Cases Nos. 114 and 115 of 1964, D/- 5-12-1969.

(A) Income-tax Act (1922), Sections 10(4) (b) and 16(1) (b) — Read with Income-tax Rules (1922), Rule 24 — Assessee, partner of registered firm owning tea estates — Firm deriving agricultural as well as business income — Salary received by partner for services rendered to firm continue to bear same character as part of total income of firm — Forty per cent of such salary can only be taken in computation of total income of partner under Section 16(1) (b) by virtue of Rule 24 — (1964) 51 ITR 467 (Mad), Overruled.

The salary received by a partner of a firm for services rendered by him to it continue to bear for purpose of charge at his hands the same character as part of the total income of the firm which has been shared between its partners. Section 16(1) (b), consistent with Section 10(4) (b), which does not regard salary paid to a partner for his services to the firm as deductible expenditure, recognises logically that such salary is in principle but a part of his share of the profits of the firm. The total income of the firm as computed with reference to Section 10(4) (b) includes the salary paid to the partners and so too it is not separated from the share income of the partners as determined under Section 16(1) (b) and treated as springing from a different source than the share income of the partner. (Paras 2, 4)

Hence, where the assessee is a partner of a firm owning tea estates and carrying on the business of manufacture and sale of tea, in computing the total income of the assessee under Section 16(1) (b) for purposes of income-tax only forty per cent of the salary received by him from the firm would be included. What is apportioned by application of Rule 24 is the total composite income of the firm inclusive of the salary paid to the partner and it follows, therefore, that such salary is necessarily apportioned and it is only 40 per cent of the salary that can properly be taken for the purpose of computation of the total income under Section 16(1) (b). (1964) 51 ITR 467 (Mad), Overruled. Case Law Reviewed. (Para 14)

lary received by partner partakes of same character as his share of profits.

Notwithstanding the fact that a firm like an association of persons is for the purpose of assessment treated as a separate entity, it is not a legal person having a corporate character distinct from that of its members. A firm is but a compendious expression of the relationship between the partners, who, by an agreement between them, embark on a commercial venture and contribute capital or labour and share profit and loss according to mutual understanding.

(Para 5)

Salary drawn by a partner from the firm for his services rendered to it has not been treated as something different from his right to get an additional amount in the form of salary as his share of the firm's profits. As the partners continue to retain their individuality in working under the relationship, no partner can naturally be his own servant, and in this view, though the partners may stipulate that one or more for his or their share may draw salary from the firm, its payment, in reality and in the eye of law, is a mode of division of part of the firm's profits.

S. Swaminathan and Ramagopala, for Applicants; V. Balasubramaniam and J. Jayaraman, for Respondent.

VEERASWAMI, C. J.:— These are two consolidated references relating to the assessment years 1959-60 to 1961-62 in one case and to the last two years in the other. When they came up before a Division Bench to which one of us was a party, it was felt that Mathew Abraham v. Commr. of Income-tax, (1964) 51 ITR 467 (Mad) required reconsideration and they have been placed before us. The common question for decision in the references under Section 66(1) of the Indian Income-tax Act 1922, is:

"Whether the sums of Rs. 10045 in each of the two years received by Thangaveln of Rs. 7200, Rs. 10578 and Rs. 10578 received by Chidambaram in the three years from the two firms have been rightly brought to tax as (income-Ed.) from other sources under the provisions of the Income-tax Act, 1922?"

The assessee were partners in two firms — Kavukal Estates and Tuttapallam estates, which owned tea estates in the Nilgiris. In addition to their right to share the profits of the firms, the partners were, under the terms of the deed of partnership, entitled each to draw specified salaries for their services to the firms. Till the assessment years ending March 31, 1959, the total income of each firm was computed with reference to Section 10(4) (b) which was apportioned between agricultural and business income in accordance with Rule 24 of the Income-tax Rules. As the firms were registered under the provisions of the Act, the non-agricultural portion of the income was apportioned between the partners and brought to tax in their hands. For the assessment year 1959-60 the Income-tax Officer being of opinion that the income received by the assessee as salary from the firms would not constitute agricultural income but represented income from other sources, recomputed the income on that basis. As a result, the entire salaries paid to the partners were included in the total chargeable income of each of them. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax did not accept that basis, but proceeded to allow the appeals on the view that since a partner's share of the firm's profits would include any salary earned by him, only 40 per cent of such salary could be taxed in his hands. He did not agree that the immediate source of the income representing the salary was not agricultural land, but services rendered by the assessee to the firm. By the time the Tribunal disposed of the appeals (1964) 51 ITR 467 (Mad) had come, which it followed and allowed the appeals observing that the partners had nothing to do with agricultural operations, but drew the salaries for services rendered by them to the firms, and that, therefore, Rule 24 had no application to them.

2. The Division Bench in its order of reference to a Fuller Bench stated thus:

"The combined effect of Sections 10(4) (b) and 16(1) (b) and of Rule 24, as it seems to us, is an implied direction that only 40 per cent of the salary paid but increased or decreased by the share of profit or loss of the business of the firm doing the particular agricultural operation, can be charged to income-tax at the hands of the partner, notwithstanding the fact that the immediate source of the salary is the service to the firm, rather than its business. On this view, (1964) 51 ITR 467 (Mad) may require reconsideration."

We are of the view that the salary received by a partner of a firm for services rendered by him to it continues to bear, for purpose of charge at his hands the same character as part of the total income of the firm which has been shared between its partners and that the consequence of applying Rule 24 to the total income of the firm computed in accordance with Section 10(4) (b) is necessarily that only 40 per cent of the salary as referable to agricultural income can be taken as salary in computing the total income of a partner of a firm in terms of Section 16(1) (b). This view seems to us to be supported not only by the relative provisions of the Income-tax Act, but is in accord with the basic principles of the partnership law.

3. A firm, partner and partnership, says Section 2(6B), have the same meanings respectively as in the Indian Partnership Act and the expression 'partner' included a minor admitted to the benefits of the partnership. For purpose of charge of income-tax a firm like other association of persons has been treated as an entity.

4. Save for that purpose, there is nothing in S. 3 which qualifies or in any way modifies the legal position of a firm or the principles applicable to it under the Indian Partnership Act. The procedure for assessing a firm, however, varied under Section 23(5) according to whether it was registered or not. The head of the income of the firm depended on the character of its source. If the firm, as in these references, derived business income, such income should have to be computed after making the allowance permissible under Section 10(2) but subject to Section 10(4). In view of clause (b) of sub-section (4) of the Section any salary, commission or remuneration paid by a firm to any of its partners would not be entitled to deduction in the computation of the firm's income. The procedure for computing the total income of a partner of a firm is to be found in Section 16(1) (b), according to which, whether the firm has made a profit or a loss, his share shall be taken to be any salary, interest, commission or other remuneration payable to him by the firm in respect of the previous year increased or decreased respectively by his share in the balance of the profit or loss of the firm after the deduction of any interest, salary, commission or other remuneration payable to any partner in respect of the previous year. It is implicit in this provision that what constitutes the total income of a partner of a firm is his share of the profit or loss of the firm and such share, be it noted, shall be taken to be the salary received by him as well as his share of income in the balance of the profit of the firm after deduction of the salary paid to the partner. Where, however, a firm incurs a loss, the partner's share of liability in it goes to decrease his share of income by way of salary. It seems to us, therefore, that Section 16(1) (b), consistent with Section 10(4) (b), which does not regard salary paid to a partner for his services to the firm as deductible expenditure, recognises logically that such salary is in principle but a part of his share of the profits of the firm. It is because of this conception of the character of the salary received by a partner that when the firm incurs a loss, a partner's share in such loss goes to reduce his salary received from the firm and he is allowed to set off or carry forward and set off the outstanding loss in accordance with the provisions of Section 24. If a firm sustains a loss in a year the liability towards payment of salary to its partner forms part of such loss which means that the partner entitled to receive salary is also proportionately charged with the liability, in respect of it. That seems to be the rationale behind the particular manner of computation of the total income of an assessee who is a partner of a firm and the liberty given to him to set off or carry forward his share in the loss of the firm. That, we think, is also the justification for Section 10(4) (b). On this view of Section 10(4) (b) read with Section 16(1) (b), salary paid to a partner being treated as a component of his share of income in the firm, there is no reason to think that such salary has a source other than that of or different from his share in the income including the salary. The total income of the firm as computed with reference to Section 10(4) (b) includes the salary paid to the partners and so too it is not separated from the share income of the partners as determined under Section 16(1) (b) and treated as springing from a different source than the share income of the partner.

5. The statutory effect just mentioned is also in consonance with the principles of the law of partnership. Notwithstanding the fact that a firm like an association of persons is for the purpose of assessment treated as a separate entity, it is not a legal person having a corporate character distinct from that of its members. A firm is but a compendious expression of the relationship between the partners, who, by an agreement between them, embark on a commercial venture and contribute capital or labour and share profit and loss according to mutual understanding. In mercantile practice the trade seems to look upon the firm as a kind of a body distinct from its members and capable in its right of owning property and entering into dealings and creating rights and liabilities binding on the partners. But in law that clearly is not the position. The Indian Partnership Act by Section 4, defines 'partnership' as the relation between persons who have agreed to share the profits of a business carried on by all or any of them acting for all and that such persons collectively are called a firm and individually as partners. It is true that looked at from certain circumstances permitted by the provisions of the Partnership Act, a firm may have the appearance or the trappings of a continuous body possessing somewhat a corporate character. For instance, by agreement to the contrary, the death of a partner may not affect the continuity of the firm. Nevertheless, the firm is brought about by a contract and is dissolved by the will of the partners and in the making of a firm, there is nothing like incorporation. We think that this is truly the position of a firm under the provisions of the Indian Partnership Act, which is fashioned after its English counterpart. Lindley on Partnership refers to merchants and lawyers having different notions respecting the nature of a firm, the former impersonifying a firm and the latter denying it. The legal view of a firm, as stated by Lindley at p. 28 is ed the mercantile view, and actions may now, speaking generally, be brought by or against partners in the name of their firm; but speaking generally, the firm as such has no legal recognition. The law, ignoring the firm, looks to the partners composing it; any change amongst them destroys the identity of the firm; what is called the property of the firm is their property; and what are called the debts and liabilities of the firm are their debts and liabilities. In point of law, a partner may be the debtor or the creditor of his co-partners, but he cannot be either debtor or creditor of the firm of which he is himself a member, nor can he be employed by his firm, for a man cannot be his own employer."

That precisely is the legal position of a firm under the Indian Partnership Act as well. The Scottish view of the firm being a legal entity has not been adopted by it in its entirety, for the exceptional features suggesting the unitary character of a firm are confined mostly to procedural matters, as for instance, the provisions of Order XXX, C. P. Code or Order XLVIII-A of the English Rules of Practice.

6. Bhagwanji v. Alembic Chemical Works Co. Ltd., A.I.R. 1948 PC 100 to which our attention has been invited by the Revenue, no doubt, stated:—

"It is true that the Indian Partnership Act goes further than the English Partnership Act, 1890, in recognising that a firm may possess a personality distinct from the persons constituting it; the law in India in that respect being more in accordance with the law of Scotland, than what (with) that of England."

But by this observation we do not think that Sir John Beaumont, who spoke for the Judicial Committee, meant to say that a firm under the Indian law is a legal entity distinct from its partners. In fact, the further observations in the judgment make this clear, namely:—

"The Indian Act, like the English Act, avoids making a firm a corporate body enjoying the right of perpetual succession."

As a matter of fact, the rule in that case was that when all the members who entered into a partnership originally ceased to be members of the firm by death or assignment, there was no longer any privity such as to sustain the continued existence of the firm and that consequently upon the change in the membership of the firm the agreement came to an end.

7. In Dulichand Laxminarayan v. Commr. of Income-tax, Nagpur, 29 ITR 535 = (A.I.R. 1956 SC 354) the Supreme Court held that a firm was not a person and as such was not entitled to enter into a partnership with another firm or a

"The firm is not recognised by English lawyers as distinct from the members composing it. In taking partnership accounts and in administering partnership assets, courts have to some extent adopt-

Hindu undivided family or individual. It was pointed out there (at p. 540 of ITR) = (at p. 357 of AIR):—

"In some systems of law this separate personality of a firm apart from its members has received full and formal recognition as, for instance, in Scotland. That is, however, not the English common law conception of a firm. English lawyers do not recognise a firm as an entity distinct from the members composing it. Our partnership law is based on English law and we have also adopted the notions of English lawyers as regards a partnership firm."

The Supreme Court then referred to the usages relating to a firm, the provisions of Order XXX, C. P. Code and the position in taking partnership accounts and administering partnership assets and the liabilities of the firm being regarded as the liabilities of the partners in certain circumstances. The Supreme Court further observed (page 541):—

"It is clear from the foregoing discussion that the law, English as well as Indian, has, for some specific purposes, some of which are referred to above relaxed its rigid notions and extended a limited personality to a firm. Nevertheless, the general concept of a partnership, firmly established in both systems of law, still is that a firm is not an entity or 'person' in law but is merely an association of individuals and a firm name is only a collective name of those individuals who constitute the firm. In other words, a firm name is merely an expression, only a compendious mode of designating the persons who have agreed to carry on business in partnership. According to the principles of English jurisprudence, which we have adopted, for the purposes of determining legal rights 'there is no such thing as a firm known to the law' as was said by James, L. J. in Ex parte Corbett In re Shand, (1880) 14 Ch D 122, at p. 126. In these circumstances, to import the definition of the word 'person' occurring in Section 3(42) of the General Clauses Act, 1897, into Section 4 of the Indian Partnership Act, will, according to lawyers, English or Indian be totally repugnant to the subject of partnership law as they know and understand it to be."

8. It was on this view that the Supreme Court held that that firm as such was not entitled to enter into partnership with another firm or individuals.

9. That a partnership collectively known as a firm has no legal existence has again been pointed out by the Supreme Court in Naravanappa v. Bhaskar Krishnappa, AIR 1966 SC 1300 = 1966-2 SCJ 490. The actual decision in the case related to registration being unnecessary for a document recording the fact of dissolution of partnership and relinquishment of interest of a partner in a partnership asset by way of adjustment. This is on the view that the property brought into the firm by the partners became the property of the firm and what the partners, on dissolution, would be entitled to was but a share in the money representing the value of the property. In saying that the Supreme Court observed at p. 493 of 1966-2 SCJ = (at p. 1303 of AIR):—

"No doubt, since a firm has no legal existence, the partnership property will vest in all the partners and in that sense every partner has an interest in the property of the partnership. During the subsistence of the partnership, however, no partner can deal with any portion of the property as his own. Nor can he assign his interest in a specific item of the partnership property to any one. His right is to obtain such profits, if any, as fall to his share from time to time and upon the dissolution of the firm to a share in the assets of the firm which remain after satisfying the liabilities set out in CL (a) and sub-cl. (i) (ii) and (iii) of CL (b) of Section 48."

It is because of the fact that a firm is not a legal person in India it should be taken as well settled that as a necessary implication in that position, the salary drawn by a partner from the firm for his services rendered to it has not been treated as something different from his right to get an additional amount in the form of salary as his share of the firm's profits. Partnership being but merely expressive of the loose relationship between persons resulting from their agreement to venture on an enterprise and as the partners continue to retain their individuality in working under the relationship, no partner can naturally be his own servant, and in this view, though the partners may stipulate that one or more for his or their share may draw salary from the firm, its payment, in reality and in the eye of law, is a mode of division of part of the firm's profits.

10. This character of the partner's salary has been well brought out by the Australian Income-tax Law and Practice by F. C. Bock and F. F. Mannix, 1968, Edn. Vol. 3, at p. 3092. It is there stated—

"The decision of the High Court in Rose v. Federal Commissioner of Taxation, 1951-84 CLR 118 established that there is nothing in the relevant income-tax legislation to warrant treating a partnership as a distinct legal entity. A partner cannot, therefore, also be an employee of the partnership, for a man cannot be his own employer, Ellis v. Joseph Ellis and Co., (1905-1 KB 324). An agreement that one partner shall receive a 'salary' does no more than regulate the mode in which accounts are to be taken for the purpose of ascertaining the division of profits between the partners and does not affect the nature of any part of the partnership income. Ellis case, (1905-1 KB 324) (supra) per Blathews, L. J. at page 329 and see F. C. of T. v. Beville 1953-5 AITR 458 = 3 CTBR (NS) case 11. It follows that where the partnership income consists of income from property the salary is also income from property".

Not only payment of salary to a partner by the firm does no more than regulate the mode in which accounts have to be taken for the purpose of division of profits between the partners and does not affect the nature of any part of the partnership income, but the income of the partnership retains its character in the assessments of the partners. The Australian authors in this connection rightly observe that "if the partnership income is derived from more than one source, such as from a business and from Government loan interest, the income is apportioned accordingly in the individual assessment of each partner". The contention for the Revenue in the references before us that the immediate source for the partner's salary is the service and not the share in the profits of the firm cannot, therefore, be accepted.

11. This view receives support from other decided cases. In Commr. of Income-tax v. B. S. Mines Co. (1922) 1 ITC 176 (Mad) (FB) a Full Bench of this Court held with reference to the provisions of Income-tax Act, 1918, that the salaries paid to the partners of a firm were not admissible as deductions in the computation of the profits of the firm for income-tax purposes and so the partners' drawings were taxable. The entire judgment was only this:

"On the facts stated we have no hesitation in answering that the drawings of the partners, by whatever name they are described, are part of the profits and therefore, taxable."

The ratio of this case is clearly that salary drawn by partners being part of the profits, it was assessable in the hands of the partner as part of his profits, that is to say, the salary drawn by a partner from the firm was not to be regarded as emanating from a source different from that from which he derived a share of the profits. Evidently this decision had been kept in view while enacting Section 10(4) (b) and Section 16(1) (b) in the Income-tax Act 1922. Venkatadri Somappa v. Venkataswamy Chetti, 9 ITR 284 = (AIR 1941 Mad 672) pointed out that when the income of a partnership was assessed to tax under the Income-tax Act, what was really assessed was nothing less than the Income of the individual partners. In the same way, the Supreme Court in Commr. of Income-tax v. Ramniklal Kothari, 74 ITR 57 = (AIR 1969 SC 862) said that the business carried on by a firm was business carried on by the partners, that the profits of the firm were profits earned by all the partners in carrying on the business and that the share of the partner was business income in his hands for the purpose of Section 10 (1) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922. It was held that if any expenditure was incurred by the partner in earning such share that was admissible for deduction in determining the total income under Section 10 (1).

12. The principle that a partner in a partnership could not be an employee of that partnership was recognised by the Bombay High Court in Magnus v Commr. of Income-tax, 33 ITR 538 = (AIR 1951 Bom 467) and it was held that the salary and commission payable to the wife, who was one of the two partners the other being her husband, was received by her in her capacity as a partner and it, therefore, fell within the scope of Section 16 (3) (a) (i) of the Income-tax Act and should be included in the total income of her husband. The underlying principle is that the salary received by a partner from the firm is but a part of his share of the profits and has no different source by any means.

13. Agricultural income being not chargeable to income-tax where the total income derived by an assessee is composite in character as it consists of partly agricultural and partly non-agricultural income, Section 59 (2) (a) empowers the Central Board of Revenue, subject to the control of the Central Government, to make rules to prescribe the manner in which, and the procedure by which, the income, profits and gains should be arrived at in the case of incomes derived in part from agriculture and in part from business. Rule 24 of the Income-tax Rules, 1922, is to the effect that—

"Income derived from the sale of tea grown and manufactured by the seller in the taxable territories shall be computed as if it were income derived from business, and 40 per cent of such income shall be deemed to be income, profits and gains liable to tax."

14. We are not here concerned with the proviso to the rule. This rule is applied the moment the total composite income is arrived at under Sec. 10(4) (b). Once by application of Rule 24 agricultural income from tea plantations is arrived at, only the rest of the income shall be treated as from business which is chargeable to tax. Beyond this, Rule 24 has no effect. Salary paid to a partner being treated as part of the profit of the firm by disallowance of the amount, there is no warrant for the view that after applying Rule 24 to the total composite income the entire salary paid to the partner will enter into the computation under Section 16(1) (b). What is apportioned by application of Rule 24 is the total composite income of the firm inclusive of the salary paid to the partner and it follows, therefore, that such salary is necessarily apportioned and it is only 40 per cent of the salary that can properly be taken for the purpose of computation of the total income under Section 16(1) (b). (1964) 51 ITR 467 (Mad) however, held a contrary view, but, with due respect we are of opinion that it cannot be upheld as correct. In that case, the assessee was the managing partner of a firm which carried on the manufacture and sale of tea. The managing partner owned a fifth share in the partnership and was entitled, under the terms of the partnership, to a monthly allowance of Rupees 250 as salary for the services rendered by him to the firm. Jagadisan and Srinivasan, JJ. held that Rule 24 was not applicable to the monthly allowance received by the assessee, even though it was paid out of the profits and the whole of such income was assessable to income-tax, though they were prepared to say at the same time that, under Rule 24 of the Income-tax rules, only 40 per cent of the share income received by the managing partner was assessable to tax. The basis for the view held by the learned Judges was (page 471):—

"Though for purposes of computation of income his share income of the firm is clubbed along with the allowance and commission, it is obvious that the character of the receipt of the latter amounts, though related to the business, cannot be said to partake of the same character of their receipt by the firm. The assessee who is a managing partner was entitled to receive the amount not by virtue of the relationship between him and the other members of the firm as partners but by virtue of the special agreement between the partners by which his services to the partnership were agreed to be remunerated."

We are wholly unable to accept this reasoning for the reasons we have already given. As we said, the salary received by a partner from the firm cannot be regarded in anywise having a source different from that of his share of the profit of the firm he receives. Having regard to the legal position of a firm vis-a-vis its partners and Section 10(4) (b) and Section 16(1) (b) of the Income-tax Act 1922, receipt of salary by a partner, if we may reiterate, is but a mode of adjustment in his share of the firm's income. The salary of a partner and his share of the income do not emanate from two different sources, but from one and the same, which is the source of income of the firm. We hold, therefore, that Mathew Abraham v. Commissioner of Income-tax, (1964) 51 ITR 467 (Mad) was not correctly decided.

15. For the Revenue a number of decided cases, particularly, Syed Mohd. Isa v. Commr. of Income-tax, 10 ITR 267 = (AIR 1942 All 194); Habibulla v.

Commr. of Income-tax, 11 ITR 295 = (AIR 1943 PC 20); Commr. of Income-tax v. Kamakhya Narayana Singh, 16 ITR 325 = (AIR 1949 PC 1); Kameshwar Singh v. Commr. of Income-tax, 41 ITR 169 = (AIR 1961 SC 362); Commr. of Income-tax v. Kunwar Trivikram Narain Singh, 57 ITR 29 = (AIR 1965 SC 1386) and K. Simrahmul v. Commr. of Income-tax, (1967) 64 ITR 166 (Mad) have been cited to us to show that the salary received by a partner from his firm had no nexus with the estate and that its immediate source was but his service. We do not think that any useful purpose will be served by examining those cases, as the contention of the Revenue in these references based on those decisions overlooks that a partner cannot be the employee of the firm of which he is a member, that the salary paid to him is but an element of his share of its profits and that Rule 24 of the Income-tax Rules has no relevance to the source but is applied to the entire income of the firm which by disallowance includes also the salary paid to the partner.

16. We accordingly answer the common question in these references in favour of the assessee in each case with costs, counsel's fee in each case Rs. 250/-.

Answered accordingly.

In re R. V. Gopalan, Petitioner.

(A) Civil P. C. (1908), Section 115 — Revisional jurisdiction — Suit for bare declaration — No lis — Only one party (plaintiff) — Decree as prayed for obtained — Appeal not maintainable, there being no unsuccessful party — Exercise of revisional jurisdiction was justified.

(Para 4)

O. V. Baluswami, for Petitioner; The Govt. Pleader, for State.

ORDER:— This revision proceeding arises under very singular circumstances, perhaps without any parallel in the cases that have come up in revisional jurisdiction before this court. O. S. No. 400 of 1966 on the file of the learned District Munsif, Tiruchirapalli, was instituted by a plaintiff, on whose behalf Sri Baluswami has here submitted arguments before me, for a declaration that he (the plaintiff) belonged to the Tuluva Vellala community. In the affidavit, the plaintiff states that the said declaration was needed to be produced before the Public Service Commission with regard to the consideration of his claim for appointment. There was no defendant shown upon the record, and, what the learned District Munsif did, after having taken up the suit for trial, was to call for objections by a kind of proclamation viz. beat of tom-tom, in the town. No one appeared in response to this proclamation and, the suit was decreed, after examining the plaintiff on 13th April 1966. The declaration granted in the suit is a bare one to the effect that the plaintiff belonged to and was a member of a backward community viz. Tuluva Vellala community, entitled to the rights and privileges recognised in favour of that community, as a backward class.

2. It appears from the record that this matter has been taken up suo motu by this court, after receiving a report from the learned District Judge, under Section 115, Civil P. C.

3. Sri Baluswami raised an interesting argument, at the threshold, that such a revision proceeding may be without jurisdiction. He fully conceded the power of this Court to act suo motu in revisional jurisdiction. The reason alleged by him was that Section 115, Civil P. C. itself makes the point explicit that the case should be one decided by some court subordinate to this court, "and in which no appeal lies thereto". It is alleged that this was an ordinary decree in a civil suit. A regular appeal is provided for by the processual law, which fact, would bar revisional jurisdiction.

4. I have carefully considered this preliminary objection and I find it to be unsubstantial. Certainly the point would have force and weight, if there had been a decree in the suit based on a lis, viz. a controversy between two parties. When there is no lis, and there is only one party (here the plaintiff) who succeeded in obtaining the decree that he prayed for, it is indisputable that there could be no appeal, since the successful party cannot appeal, and, there is no other party who has suffered a decree. Hence, I find that the exercise of revisional jurisdiction is justified and within the law, on the peculiar and exceptional facts of this case.

5. The next point is, how such an extraordinary procedure came to be followed and how such a decree was passed. It is seen from the report of the learned District Judge, that some senior counsel did appear for the plaintiff, that the difficulty with regard to the absence of a defendant was felt, and that some authority was cited which persuaded the District Munsif to adopt this extraordinary course. As the learned Government Pleader has submitted, appearing as amicus curiae, there are no authorities upon a point of this kind. But, there is indeed, a reference in Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd Edn. Section 1610, page 747, with regard to merely declaratory judgments, which can be given "whether there be a cause of action or not" and though there is no consequential relief. But this passage has no application to the present situation. The real point here is not that the decree is only for a bare declaration without a consequential relief, such a decree would be perfectly valid, if no ancillary relief was needed for the adjudication of the claim.

But, every decree presupposes a lis, or a matter in controversy between two parties. There can be no lis when there is only a plaintiff without a defendant. Further, in the present case, it is perfectly obvious that there could have been a defendant, viz. the Director of Public Instruction, who according to the plaintiff, was responsible for a wrong entry or erroneous omission, which deprived the plaintiff of the protection afforded by his membership of a backward community. Since the plaintiff did not institute a lis, in the proper sense and there was no defendant on record, the decree is a nullity. It has accordingly to be set aside as such.

6. But, in the interest of justice, I equally direct that the plaint itself be remitted back to the trial court, and that the plaintiff be now called upon to amend the plaint, by impleading a defendant or defendants, whether the Director of Public Instruction or some other authority of the State. If, after the opportunity is given, for this purpose, the plaintiff does not choose to do so, the suit has to be dismissed or struck off as not maintainable in law. I must here make it clear that I am carefully refraining from any observation whatever, about the present status of the plaintiff as an Officer of the State service, since Sri Baluswami represents that the plaintiff was ultimately appointed by the Madras Public Service Commission. Also, I have no reason to think that there was any lack of bona fides on the part of any one concerned in this suit and the consequential decree; the error seems to be purely due to a failure to grasp the fundamental postulates of the situation. The revision is allowed accordingly. No order as to costs.

N. K. Ramaswami, for Appellant; T. R. Ramachandran and T. R. Rajagopal, for Respondent.

JUDGMENT:— The plaintiff is the appellant. He obtained a decree in O. S. 220 of 1957 against one Rajagopal Iyengar and in execution attached 32 items of properties belonging to him on 25-3-1958. Since the properties were not sold, the execution petition was dismissed on 22-12-1958 and the attachment was ordered to continue for three months. The defendant, an assignee decree-holder in S. C. 131 of 1957, brought 39 items of properties belonging to Rajagopala Iyengar to sale in E. P. 21 of 1958, attached them on 3-2-1958 and purchased on 28-1-1959, 20 out of those 39 items. He set off the purchase price against the decree amount and full satisfaction of his decree was entered and the attachment in respect of the remaining 19 items was raised and the sale was confirmed on 10-3-1959. The plaintiff then filed E. P. 217 of 1959 on 19-3-1959 and applied for attachment of the properties purchased by the defendant along with some other items. The defendant filed a claim petition and that was allowed. Thereafter the plaintiff brought the rest of the properties to sale and as there were no bidders, the execution petition was closed. Thereafter the plaintiff filed E. A. 814 of 1959 in defendant's execution petition praying for a rateable distribution from out of the assets realised by the defendant by the sale of 20 items already referred to. That petition was dismissed and the plaintiff was directed to seek his redress, if so advised in a suit under Section 73(2), C.P.C. He then filed a suit, out of which this second appeal arises.

2. The defendant's contention was that the plaintiff filed the suit in collusion with his judgment-debtor, who was his cousin, that he had knowledge of the execution petition filed by the defendant and is, therefore, not entitled to any remedy, and that in any case as his claim petition was allowed, the plaintiff had no right of suit under Section 73(2), C. P. Code. The trial court decreed the plain-tiff's suit, but the lower appellate court has reversed the judgment of the trial court and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The lower appellate court has held that the plaintiff has no right of suit under Section 73(2) C. P. Code and that such a suit would lie only when the assets which are liable to be rateably distributed are taken away by a person not entitled to receive those assets and that the defendant, a rival decree-holder, cannot fall under that category because as a decree-holder he was entitled to receive the assets as of right. On this point, the lower appellate court is clearly wrong and the learned advocate for the respondent does not seek to support the judgment of the lower appellate court on that ground.

3. The lower appellate court also took the view that the suit is the result of a collusion between the plaintiff and his judgment-debtor and, therefore, he is not entitled to any relief. There is no evidence of any collusion between the plaintiff and his judgment-debtor. It is true that he had received some moneys from the judgment-debtor out of court. But he had also brought the judgment-debtor's properties to sale once in E. P. 174 of 1958 and that execution petition was dismissed after the properties were brought to sale on two occasions only because there were no bidders. Even subsequently, he filed another execution petition, attached all the properties of the judgment-debtor and after the present defendant's claim petition was allowed, pursued his remedy against the other properties of the judgment-debtor and brought them to sale on 13-9-1959. That execution petition was closed only because there were no bidders on that day. It is not necessary in order to enable a decree-holder to claim a rateable distribution of the assets realised in execution by another decree-holder against the common judgment-debtor that he should pursue to the bitter end his remedies against the judgment-debtor's other assets before he can claim a rateable distribution from the rival decree-holder. Even if a decree-holder has realised a part of his decree amount before the rival decree-holder has filed his execution petition and realised some assets he is entitled to claim rateable distribution from the rival decree-holder in respect of the balance of the decree amount due to him.

Therefore, the fact that the plaintiff had already received some amounts from his judgment-debtor out of court does not disentitle him to claim rateable distribution of the assets realised by the defendant. Even after getting a rateable distribution of the assets realised by the rival decree-holder, it is open to the plaintiff to pursue his remedies against the other properties of the judgmentdebtor in respect of the balance that may be due to him. It is not therefore, correct to say that just because the plaintiff's E P. 217 of 1959 was closed on 13-9-1959 for want of bidders, he is not entitled to any rateable distribution from out of the assets realised by the defendant; nor would the fact that he had knowledge of the filing of the execution petition by the defendant, disentitle the plaintiff to his remedy. That point is wholly irrelevant to the decision of the question of the plaintiff's rights. Therefore, the lower appellate court is not right in thinking that because the plaintiff professed ignorance about the other properties owned by his judgment-debtor or because the defendant stated that the judgment-debtor owns a house not only in the village, but also a house worth Rs 6000 at Pudukottai, and that he also owns other landed properties that would disentitle the plaintiff to a rateable distribution. The requirements of Section 73, C. P. Code are clearly satisfied in this case. When the defendant was executing his decree and realising his amount, the execution petition of the plaintiff was pending and therefore, he is entitled to a rateable distribution. The possession of other items of properties by the judgment-debtor is wholly irrelevant to the question of the plaintiff's bona fides.

4. It is, however, urged that full satisfaction of the defendant's decree had already been entered and he is without remedy, if the plaintiff is given the right to claim the rateable distribution out of the assets realised by the defendant. This is not quite correct. It would be open to the defendant to have the order entering full satisfaction set aside on rateable distribution being ordered in favour of the plaintiff and to proceed to execute his decree for the balance due to him from out of the assets that might still be with the judgment-debtor. In any case, the fact that the full satisfaction of the defendant's decree was entered is no ground for denying the plaintiff's rights.

5. The only authority which was relied upon by the defendant was the one in Gogaram v. Kartik Chunder Singh, 9 WR 514 (Cal), where it was held that while an action will lie in the Civil Courts on behalf of one decree-holder against another for obtaining a refund of money that has been paid away to the latter under an order passed in the execution department contrary to the provisions of Section 270 of the C. P. Code, the plaintiff in such a suit would not under all circumstances be entitled to recover and there may be circumstances by which he may be equitably precluded from recovering and it will be for the court which decides the suit to determine whether having regard to all the equities between the parties, the plaintiff is entitled to recover or not. In that case, the plaintiff and the defendant were two rival decree-holders against one and the same judgment-debtor. Certain properties belonging to the judgment-debtor having been sold in execution, the plaintiff applied to have his decree satisfied, first from out of proceeds realised by the sale. This was refused and an appeal against that refusal succeeded; meantime money was paid to the defendant and the plaintiff thereupon filed a suit to obtain a refund of the sale amount upon the ground that the process of attachment taken out by him being prior in point of date to that taken by the defendant, he and not the defendant had a preferential right to the sale proceeds. It was contended that such a suit will not lie and it was in that connection that it was held that a suit would lie. The decision was rendered under the old Civil Procedure Code under which only a decree-holder who first attached the properties belonging to the judgment-debtor was to be paid the amount realised in execution and there was no provision, as in the present Section 73, for rateable distribution in favour of a person who attaches the properties subsequently even if his execution petition was pending at the same time as the other decree-holder's execution petition.

The Civil Procedure Code has subsequently been amended under which the only requirement for claiming a rateable distribution is that the execution petition by the decree-holder claiming rateable distribution should be pending at the time when the assets are realised. The decision relied upon by the respondent has, therefore, really no application to the facts of this case. But it is urged that if a person, under the law as it then prevailed, was entitled to be paid all the assets realised in execution and even in such a case there may be equities available against him, the equities should be available all the more in a case where a person is entitled only to a rateable distribution. The judgment of the Bench of the Calcutta High Court is cryptic on the point and does not say what are the equities that the Bench was thinking.

But it can still be understood on the basis that the provision of law under which a person who first attached was entitled to all the assets was very hard on the other decree-holders and therefore certain equities must be allowed. Those equities cannot prevail against the express provision of the present law which is equitable to all decree-holders. Under the express provision of Section 73, as it exists, the plaintiff is entitled to a rateable distribution of the assets realised by the defendant and there can be no question of any equities in this case. Indeed to allow the respondents to plead and to hold that he is entitled to all the assets realised in execution to the exclusion of other decree-holders would be to deny equities. In the Calcutta case again there was no clear right of suit provided and that is why they had to consider the question of equities. Under the present section, there is a clear remedy provided by way of suit. Therefore, again no question of equities can arise in this case. It follows, therefore, that the conclusion of the lower appellate court that there was collusion between the plaintiff and his judgment-debtor is wholly unsustainable as it is one arrived at by a wrong approach to the question, on the assumption that because the plaintiff has not proceeded against the other assets of his judgment-debtor he is not entitled to any remedy; and this as I have shown already is clearly wrong. It follows, therefore, that the plaintiff is entitled to succeed in his suit.

6. The second appeal is, therefore, allowed and the plaintiff's suit will stand decreed. The parties will, however, bear their own costs in this court because the defendant is placed rather in a difficult position as a result of the plaintiff's suit. Plaintiff will however get his costs in the courts below. No leave.

Appeal allowed.

Writ Petn. No. 2239 of 1966, D/- 17-6-1969.

Municipalities — Madras City Municipal Corporation Act, 1919, S. 105 — Vacancy remission — Allowable only if building is entirely vacant.

On the language of Section 105 and Section 3(4) defining "building", it must be held that the owner of a building is entitled to a remission of property tax only if the building remains wholly vacant or unlet. If any portion of the building is in occupation or let out, however the small that portion may be, then the provisions of Section 105 are not attracted. The contrary contention based on a consideration of hardship or injustice cannot be accepted. (Para 4)

G. K. Damodar Rao and S. R. Vittal, for Petitioner; T. Chengalvarayan, for Respondents.

ORDER:— The petitioner is the owner of premises No. 23 Nungambakkam High Road, Madras 34. The total area of the building with the adjacent vacant site all round is about 34 grounds, out of which the building portion alone occupies an area of about ten grounds. The entire main building of the total plinth area of about 16000 sq. ft. excepting a small area of about 1000 sq. ft. in the north-east corner of the main building was let out to the Madras Industrial Investment Corporation on a monthly rental of Rs. 1400 from 1-2-1963. The north-east corner of the building has been let out to M/s. Sarathi Films on a rental of Rs. 50 per month. But there is an out-house in the north-eastern extremity of the compound and that out-house is in the occupation of a tenant by name Kohinur Confectionary, paying a monthly rent of Rs. 50. The Madras Industrial Investment Corporation vacated the premises under its occupation on 31-1-1966 and as such the portion in its occupation has remained vacant from 1-2-1966 until 31-8-1966. During this period the petitioner was getting a rent of Rs. 100 only made up of Rs. 50 from Sarathi Films occupying a portion of the main building and Rs. 50 from Kohinur Confectionary occupying the out-house. It is under these circumstances the petitioner even on 20-1-1966, before the major portion of the main building actually fell vacant, wrote to the Revenue Officer of the Corporation of Madras about the impending vacancy and the likelihood of the main building remaining vacant and prayed for waiving the property tax for the period of vacancy. She wrote another letter on 3-3-1966. Not having any reply even to this letter, she wrote a third letter on 9-5-1966. Without sending any reply to any of these letters, the Assistant Revenue Officer by a notice dated 14-6-1966 called upon her to pay the property tax of Rs. 2,520-94 within 15 days. On 20-8-1966, an officer of the Corporation approached the petitioner with a distress warrant to distrain her goods, and chattels at the place of her residence in Gandhinagar and demanded from her payment of Rs. 5181-78 together with warrant fees. The petitioner then sent a revision petition to the Commissioner of the Corporation and according to the petitioner she has not received any reply from the Commissioner. Four days after the distress warrant by communication R. D. C. 33485/66 dated 24-8-1966, the Assistant Revenue Officer of the Corporation informed the petitioner that her request for vacancy remission could not be granted as it is only a partial vacancy. It is to quash this communication of the Assistant Revenue Officer, the present writ petition has been filed.

2. Mr. G. K. Damodar Rao, the learned counsel for the petitioner, in support of the writ petition, put forward two contentions. The first contention is that, while granting or refusing to give remission of the property tax, the authorities were acting in a quasi-judicial capacity and that no opportunity was given to the petitioner for pressing her case before any final decision was arrived at by them. The second contention is that even though the vacancy is a partial one, the petitioner is entitled to vacancy remission by virtue of Section 105 of the Madras City Municipal Corporation Act, 1919.

3. I shall take up the second contention first. Section 105(1) of the Act says:

"When any building whether ordinarily let or occupied by the owner himself has been vacant and unlet for thirty or more consecutive days in any half year, the Commissioner shall remit so much, not exceeding one-half of such portion of the tax as relates to the building only as is proportionate to the number of days during which the building was vacant and unlet in the half-year."

It is necessary to refer to the definition of the term building as contained in Section 3(4) of the Act. That definition says that 'building' includes—

"(a) a house, out-house, stable, latrine, godown, shed, hut, wall (other than a boundary wall not exceeding 8 ft. in height) and any other structure whether of masonry, bricks, mud, wood, metal or any other material whatever;

(b) a structure on wheels or simply resting on the ground without foundations; and

(c) a ship, vessel, boat, tent, van and any other structure used for human habitation or used for keeping or storing any article or goods."

It is an admitted fact that the portion occupied by M/s Sarathi Films on a monthly rental Rs 50 constitutes a portion of the main building, though only a small portion. In this context, the question arises, whether the petitioner is entitled to any vacancy remission under Section 105 of the Act in relation to the major portion of the main building vacated by the Madras Industrial Investment Corporation and remaining vacant for the relevant period. As the language of the statute stands, I am unable to accept the contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner that, notwithstanding a small portion in the main building being in the occupation of a tenant, the petitioner is entitled to vacancy remission, because the major portion of the building remained vacant. The definition of the term 'building' in the Act does not support any such contention. It is useful in this context to compare the definition of the term building occurring in the Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act 1960 and the definition of the term 'building' in the Madras City Municipal Corporation Act, 1919, extracted by me already. The definition of 'building' in the Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act, 1960, as given in Section 2(2) of the said Act is as follows:

"'building' means any building or hut or part of a building or hut, let or to be let separately for residential or non-residential purposes and includes (a) the garden, grounds and out-houses, if any, appurtenant to such buildings, hut or part of such building or hut and let or to be let along with such building or hut" (the other portions of the definition are not necessary for the purpose of this case).

4. To accept the argument of the learned counsel for the petitioner is to incorporate the definition of the term building in the Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act, 1960 into the Madras City Municipal Corporation Act, 1919, while the statute itself has not done so. Why the statute has not done so, can be easily understood from the fact that under Section 100 of the Madras City Municipal Corporation Act, 1919, property tax is payable in respect of buildings not only in the occupation of the tenants but also in the occupation of the owners. Therefore whether a building is let or not is wholly immaterial and irrelevant for the purpose of liability to pay property tax under the Madras City Municipal Corporation Act, 1919. Hence, a portion of a building is capable of being let out and has been so let out and subsequently remained vacant is wholly irrelevant for the purpose of levy of property tax under the Madras City Municipal Corporation Act, 1919 and consequently for the purpose of remission under Section 105 of the Act. Therefore, irrespective of any consideration of hardship or injustice on which great stress was laid by the learned counsel for the petitioner, on the language of Section 105 and with reference to the definition of the term 'building' occurring in Section 3(4) of the City Municipal Act, 1919, it must be held that the owner of a building is entitled to a remission of the property tax only if the building remains wholly vacant or unlet; and if any portion of the building is in occupation or let out, then the provisions of Section 105 of the Madras City Municipal Corporation Act, 1919, are not attracted and the owner of the building is not entitled to any remission. Consequently I am unable to accept the second contention of the learned counsel.

5. As far as the first contention is concerned, no doubt the Corporation authorities would have been well advised in informing the petitioner, before taking any coercive steps, that she was not entitled to any remission of the tax, and certainly the conduct of the Corporation authorities cannot be commended from any point of view. At the same time I am of the view, that no purpose will be served by giving an opportunity to the petitioner in the context of the facts of this case. With regard to the facts, it is admitted that the portion in the occupation of M/s. Sarathi Films is part of the main building, though a small part. Consequently with reference to the claim for remission under Section 105 of the Act, there is no point of fact to be enquired into or investigated for the purpose of arriving at a decision whether the petitioner is entitled to remission of property tax or not. Hence I am not satisfied that any case has been made for directing the Corporation authorities now to give an opportunity to the petitioner before taking or enforcing their decision that the petitioner is not entitled to the vacancy remission because the vacancy that occurred was only a partial vacancy. Under these circumstances the writ petition fails and is dismissed. There will be no order as to costs.

Petition dismissed.

KRISHNASWAMY REDDY, J.

S. C. C. Anthony Pillai, Petitioner v. W. R. Nedanchezian, Respondent.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 536 of 1967 and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 529 of 1967, D/-1-7-1969 against order of 8 Presidency Magistrate, Madras, D/-17-4-1967.

Penal Code (1860), Ss. 171-G, 499, 500 — Distinction between Ss. 171-G and 499 — Prosecution for offence under S. 500 — Magistrate has jurisdiction to proceed with complaint without sanction though facts of complaint disclose offence under Section 171-G for which sanction is necessary — (Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 196).

The offences under Sections 500 and 171-G, I. P. C., are separate and distinct offences. It cannot be said that the ingredients of Section 499, I. P. C., are the same as the ingredients of S. 171-G, I. P. C. The main distinction between these two sections is that under S. 171-G, I. P. C., the allegations must be false whereas under Section 499, I. P. C., even if the allegations are true, the complaint for defamation will lie unless the person who makes such defamation comes under any one of the exceptions. Section 499, I. P. C. covers a wider field. In a prosecution under Section 171-G, I. P. C., if the accused is able to show the allegations made by him are true, the matter ends there. But in a prosecution under Section 500, I. P. C., even if the accused contends it is true, it may not be a full defence for him unless he comes under any one of the Exceptions, for instance, that the statement has been made in the interests of public. Only when two offences are of the same category and the ingredients of one are found in the other, then the question of obtaining sanction for the offence for which it is necessary, would arise. Therefore, if the facts do disclose an offence under Section 500, I. P. C., the complaint is in order and the Magistrate has jurisdiction to proceed with the complaint under Section 500, I. P. C. Even apart from this, Section 500, I. P. C. provides a more deterrent sentence than what is provided under Section 171-G, I. P. C. The complainant will have the option of preferring complaint under that offence, which provides a more deterrent sentence, though the facts of such complaint may disclose an offence, for which sanction is necessary, in respect of which a lesser punishment is provided. (Para 5)

Dolia, for Petitioner; N. Sivalingam assisted by Calvin Jacob, for Public Prosecutor, for State.

ORDER:— This petition has been filed by the complainant S. C. C. Anthony Pillai against the order of the VIII Presidency Magistrate in M. P. No. 143 of 1967 in C. C. No. 898 of 1967 dismissing the complaint of defamation filed by him against the respondent on the ground that sanction under Section 196, Criminal P. C. was not obtained as the facts of the complaint disclosed an offence under Section 171-G, I. P. C.

2. The order of the VIII Presidency Magistrate is clearly wrong.

3. The petitioner was former Member of Parliament and an active Trade Union leader for about 28 years. He contested in the last General Elections from the North Madras Parliamentary Constituency for a seat in Lok Sabha. While the election campaign was going on, in the issue bearing date 17-1-1967, in the Tamil Daily "Nam Nadu", of which the respondent was the Editor, Printer and Publisher, certain allegations were made affecting the conduct and character of the petitioner, the extracts of which were filed along with the complaint. Before the complaint was filed, the petitioner issued a notice to the respondent through his counsel drawing his attention to the defamatory statements made in the said issue and claiming damages of Rs. 10,000/- for having defamed him and also asking him to withdraw the articles published in the said issue and tender unconditional apology to him, failing which criminal and civil proceedings would be taken against him for vindicating the rights of the petitioner. The respondent sent a reply notice in which he admitted the publication made in his paper, but definitely stated that there was nothing defamatory and that they were made in good faith and in the interests of the public, claiming the benefit of exception to Section 499, I. P. C.

4. Subsequently, the complaint was filed by the petitioner. The Magistrate, took the complaint on file under Sec. 500, I. P. C., and issued process to the respondent. After the petitioner was examined, the respondent filed an application stating that the allegations in the complaint would amount to an offence under Section 171-G, I. P. C., for which sanction would be necessary under Section 196, Criminal P. C. and as such sanction was not obtained, the Court had no jurisdiction to proceed with the complaint. The learned Magistrate accepted the contention of the respondent and held that the allegations would amount to an offence under Section 171-G, I. P. C., and that as no sanction was obtained as required under Section 196, Criminal P. C., he had no jurisdiction to proceed with the case.

5. The offences under Sections 500 and 171-G, I. P. C., are separate and distinct offences. It cannot be said that the ingredients of Section 499, I. P. C., are the same as the ingredients of Section 171-G, I. P. C. The main distinction between these two sections is that under Section 171-G, I. P. C., the allegations must be false whereas under S. 499, I. P. C., even if the allegations are true, the complaint for defamation will lie unless the person who makes such defamation comes under any one of the exceptions. Section 499, I. P. C. covers a wider field. In a prosecution under Section 171-G, I. P. C., if the accused is able to show the allegations made by him are true, the matter ends there. But in a prosecution under S. 500, I. P. C., as pointed out earlier, even if the accused contends it is true, it may not be a full defence for him unless he comes under any one of the Exceptions, for instance, that the statement has been made in the interests of public. Only when two offences are of the same category and the ingredients of one are found in the other, then the question of obtaining sanction for the offence for which it is necessary, would arise. Therefore, in this case, as I find that both the offences are separate and distinct offences and the facts, if true, do disclose an offence under S. 500, I.P.C., I hold that the complaint was in order and the Magistrate had jurisdiction to proceed with the complaint under Section 500, I. P. C. Even apart from this, Sec. 500, I. P. C. provides a more deterrent sentence than what is provided under Sec. 171-G, I. P. C. The complainant will have the option of preferring complaint under that offence, which provides a more deterrent sentence, though the facts of such complaint may disclose an offence, for which sanction is necessary, in respect of which a lesser punishment is provided.

6. In the result, I hold that the order of the learned Magistrate is wrong and it is, therefore, set aside. I do not order retrial in this case in view of the fact that the respondent expressed regret for the publication made in the issue, to the petitioner and the petitioner accepted the same.

7. The revision petition is accordingly ordered.

Order accordingly.

Mohamed Mansour, Appellant v. N. Abdul Cader alias Ibrahim and another, Respondents.

Special Appeals (Civil) Nos 421 and 422 of 1964 D/- 21-1-1969, from decree of Tribunal, Pondicherry D/- 14-4-1964.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 9 — Jurisdiction — Arts. 59 and 69 of Procedure Code of Pondicherry — Fraud during liquidation proceedings on Foreign Court having jurisdiction — Fraud part of affairs of firm before its liquidation — Proper forum for seeking redress is Foreign Court homologating liquidation or its successor court — Court of domicile will not exercise jurisdiction over matters which earlier were the subject of proper decision by a Foreign Court. (Para 6)

N. Arunachalam, for Appellant; V. Thyagarajan for K. Raja Aiyar, C. A. Md. Ibrahim and M. Khaja Mohideen, for Respondents.

ANANTANARAYANAN, C. J.: Though these special appeals instituted by virtue of our jurisdiction over the Tribunals at Pondicherry, involve only a short preliminary issue, the matter is not without some degree of interest. Very briefly stated, the appeals before us are by the second wife and her son of a certain Abdul Hamid (deceased) who was a partner in a firm with extensive transactions. As will be clear from the judgment of the Superior Court of appeal at Pondicherry, the action related to the alleged purchase of certain sovereigns made in May 1950, and it was established that the funds realised by this, namely, 873,000 paises, had been paid to the Saigon shop, after advance deductions in the account of the shop at Hanoi.

2. Upon the facts of this alleged claim, which was, basically, a claim that the moneys of this transaction had been fraudulently suppressed in the liquidation proceeding admittedly homologated by the Court at Hanoi, the Tribunal of First Instance (Commerce) at Pondicherry came to the conclusion that the Pondicherry Court had no jurisdiction, and that the present parties must seek further redress in the Court which homologated the liquidation proceedings at Hanoi alone.

3. Aggrieved by this judgment, the present parties preferred an appeal to the Superior Court of Appeal at Pondicherry. In the judgment of that court, the facts have been set out at some length. After stating the facts, the learned Judges of that court observed that the dispute was with regard to the transaction of purchase of sovereigns involving a considerable sum, which occurred during the existence of the company which subsequently suffered liquidation. This transaction ought to have been placed before the court seized of the liquidation proceedings, and should have formed part of the subject-matter of those proceedings. If, as contended by the present parties, there was a fraudulent concealment in that respect, the matter fell within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Tribunal at Hanoi. The Superior Court of Appeal also referred to Art. 33 of the Bye-laws of the company, which explicitly states that all disputes arising between the partners during the existence of the company, or in the course of the liquidation operations connected with the affairs of the Company, must be submitted to the Tribunal within whose jurisdiction the head office of the company is situate; here, admittedly, Hanoi. The appeal was dismissed, and these related Special Appeals have now been filed before us, one appeal from the main judgment of dismissal itself, and another from the ancillary judgment vacating the stay order in regard to garnishee proceedings obtained by the appellants.
GM/EN/C882/69/NNH/P

4. We have carefully considered the arguments of the learned counsel (Sri Arunachalam), for invoking our jurisdiction. Learned counsel sought to contend, at one stage of the arguments that it is not clear that the liquidation court at Hanoi is now functioning as a successor Tribunal to the Tribunal originally seized of the liquidation proceedings, or that it is accessible to parties. But he was unable to produce any authoritative material, on which we could accept such averments. Normally, whatever might be the political exigencies of the foreign State wherein the Court is situate, we must assume that there has been a continuity of the judicial administration unimpaired, and that the successor court if any, will exercise the same jurisdiction and recognise those matters concerning which a predecessor court might have exercised a judicial function or power. We have no reason whatever to assume that this continuity of the judicial administration has been irretrievably impaired or broken, in the present instance. The other arguments of Sri Arunachalam are briefly these. Firstly, he contends that the balance sheet filed in the liquidation court which has been produced before us, ex facie shows a fraudulent concealment in respect of the transaction relating to this purchase of sovereigns. Actually, according to him, the widow and the son had no knowledge of these transsactions for a considerable time after the death of Mr. Abdul Hamid, and they discovered the facts only after an interval of about seven years, when they promptly instituted the proceedings. These averments are denied by the respondents. But the argument of learned counsel for the appellants is that this fraud, which is ex facie evident, will clothe us with the requisite jurisdiction to investigate the matter, though the liquidation proceedings were completed before the Hanoi court. The second argument is that, conceivably, Arts. 59 and 69 of the Code Procedure Civile, which was the statute then being applied to this matter by the Court at Pondicherry, will justify the interpretation that we have the necessary jurisdiction.

5. We have carefully examined both these arguments and we are quite unable to accept them. As regards the first argument, it is clearly fallacious, for it amounts to an invitation to exercise our jurisdiction by assuming the facts, when the facts themselves have been denied. We must here record it as the contention or defence of the respondents that, according to their case, there was no fraud or fraudulent concealment. The relevant facts were taken note of in the liquidation proceedings, or were available for scrutiny in the record, and must therefore be held to have been adjudicated upon in the course of the homologation. We are quite unable to see how we can first proceed into controverted facts of that nature, assuming our jurisdiction, and then exercise a jurisdiction which clearly we do not possess. The argument has therefore, to be repelled.

6. As regards Arts. 59 and 69 of the Procedure Code of Pondicherry, a scrutiny of these articles (translated text) shows that they relate only to the ordinary exercise of jurisdiction, by a court of the domicile of the defendant so long as the 'commercial societies' are in existence. The present argument of Sri Arunachalam is that rule may not apply, where the societies have ceased to exist. Such an argument could conceivably have some force, if the proceeding relates to transactions which arose subsequent to the liquidation, as between the erstwhile partners. But, in the present case, the transactions were admittedly part of the affairs of the firm which went into liquidation before the liquidation proceedings, and were comprised, or should have been comprised, in the accounts and records of the firm, which were the subject of scrutiny by the court of liquidation. If a fraud had been practised on that court, as averred, obviously the parties aggrieved by the fraud would have to seek redress in that court, for reopening the liquidation proceedings, and getting the necessary relief. We find from the Commentary of Dallaz that this is the proper interpretation of Arts. 59 and 69, and that those Articles do not justify any view that the court of domicile will exercise a jurisdiction over matters which were the subject of proper decision earlier by a Foreign court. We must reiterate that we have no means whatever for assuming that the court at Hanoi is inaccessible, that it does not function as a successor court or that its decision cannot be exercised. We must also record that it is the specific case of the respondents that the court of Hanoi possesses the necessary jurisdiction. If for any reason the appellants seek redress in that court, and find that the court is not accessible by reasonable means or efforts, or that no recognition can be obtained in that court with regard to proceedings of a predecessor Tribunal of this character, then it will be time enough for the appellants to initiate fresh steps for such legal remedies as they are advised to pursue, and as may be available in law, including Private International Law.

7. With these remarks in clarification, the special appeals are dismissed. No order as to costs.

8. We desire to record that the first appellant does not press the appeals and hence, that, as far as he is concerned, both the appeals are dismissed as not pressed by him.

C M. P. 8462 to 8465 and 10730 and 10731 of 1966 are ordered.

Appeals dismissed.

ORDER:— Mr. Fyze Mahmood, appearing for accused 1 and 3 in this revision petition argues that the contraband in this case, namely, M Os Nos. 1 to 7 contained brandy is not proved in the court of the trial Magistrate, although the appellate Court has acted upon the report of analysis by the Assistant Director and Assistant Chemical Examiner to Government for Excise and Prohibition. The appellate Court has erred in acting on this document without giving opportunity to the accused to cross-examine the concerned witness on the relevant report. The appellate court proceeded on the footing that M Os. 1 to 7 contained brandy, a prohibited liquor. This has got to be proved by the author of the analysis report by giving evidence and marking the said document. This infirmity alone vitiates the conviction of the petitioners. I set aside the conviction of the petitioners and the sentences imposed on them and direct retrial of the case. It is open to the petitioners at the conclusion of their retrial to raise their contentions both on facts and law for their acquittal.

L. Nandakumar Singh, for Petitioner; S. Somorendra Singh, for Respondent.

ORDER: This revision petition by Subedar Major Birakumar Singh is directed against the order dated 29th February, 1968 by which Shri H. Jugeswar Singh, Munsiff III, Imphal, rejected his application for amendment of the plaint. It is contended that the Munsiff had gone wrong in not permitting the petitioner to amend the plaint.

2. The suit out of which this revision petition arises had been instituted by the petitioner in his capacity as President of Manipur Rifles Ex-servicemen's Colony, hereinafter called the Association, and permission of the Court was secured in terms of Order 1 Rule 8 of the Civil Procedure Code. The prayer made in the suit was for eviction of the defendant-respondent S. Mera Singh from a piece of land described in the schedule appended to the plaint. It was alleged in Para 1 of the plaint that the members of the Association had chosen the plaintiff Birakumar Singh to file the suit in representative capacity since they had all common interest in the subject-matter of the suit. In the next para it was pleaded that the Manipur Government settled 300 bighas of paddy land at Saiton under patta No. 55/229 B. T. to the Association in the year 1954 and that since then the members of the Association had been in possession of that land against payment of revenue to the Government.

By the amendment application the plaintiff wanted to substitute Paras Nos. 1 and 2 of the plaint on the plea that "through inadvertence certain facts have not been incorporated in the plaint" and on the assertion "that the proposed amendment will not change the character of the suit." In substance, what plaintiff wanted to state in the proposed Para No. 1 of the plaint was that in or about the year 1953 some members of the Manipur Rifles formed an Association under the name and style of "Manipur Rifles Ex-servicemen's Association" with the object of looking after the affairs of the employees of the Manipur Rifles after their retirement from service, that the plaintiff is the President of the said Association, and that the members had selected him for filing the suit in a representative capacity. And in the proposed para 2 of the plaint the plaintiff wanted to allege that the Association after its constitution moved the Government of Manipur for settlement of some land with it for the use of the members of the Association on their retirement, that the Government consequently settled 300 bighas of land at Saiton under patta No. 55/229 B. T. in favour of the Association and delivered possession to them, and that Association had been holding and possessing that land in the nature of trust for the members of the Association and the Association had been paying revenue to the Government regularly. Another fact which was meant to be stated in the proposed para 2 of the plaint was that the entire piece of land measuring 300 bighas is known as "Manipur Rifles Ex-servicemen's Colony".

3. The learned Munsiff rejected the prayer for amendment on the following grounds:

(a) That in the original plaint it was stated that Ex-servicemen's Colony at Saiton had come into existence before the land was allotted by the Government, while in the proposed amendment it was stated that the Colony came into being after the land had been settled;

(b) That according to the title of the suit the Ex-servicemen's Colony is situate at Imphal, that according to the proposed amendment it is located at Saiton, and that no amendment of the title of the plaint had been asked for along with the amendment of paras Nos. 1 and 2 of the plaint; and

(c) that in view of the amendments sought the character of the suit would be changed.

4. Shri L. Nandakumar Singh urged vehemently for the petitioner that the trial Court had rejected the prayer for amendment without appreciating its nature or comprehending the principles that govern the applications made under Order 6, Rule 17 of the Code. He submitted further that it was wrong for the Munsiff to hold that the proposed amendments would change the character of the suit. I think this criticism is completely valid and wholly justified. The suit had been filed by the Association through its representative for eviction of S. Mera Singh, a trespasser, from a piece of land belonging to the Association. This basic structure of the suit would remain unchanged even if the amendments are allowed. The amendments only narrate the history of the Association and details of acquisition by it of the land measuring 300 bighas from the Government of Manipur. I think the learned Munsiff completely went out of his way in rejecting the prayer for amendment.

5. In a recent decision reported in A. K. Gupta v. Damodar Valley Corporation, AIR 1967 SC 98, the Supreme Court observed that the general rule governing the amendments of the pleadings is that a party is not allowed by amendment to set up a "new case" or a "new cause of action", particularly when a suit on new case or cause of action is barred by time. But it is also well recognised, the Supreme Court observed further, that where the amendment does not constitute the addition of a new cause of action or raise a different case, but amounts to no more than a different or additional approach to the same facts, the amendment will be allowed even after the expiry of the statutory period of limitation. The principal reasons that have led to this rule, the Supreme Court emphasised, are, first, that the object of Courts and rules of procedure is to decide the rights of the parties and not to punish them for their mistakes, and, secondly, that a party is strictly not entitled to rely on the statute of limitation when what is sought to be brought in by the amendment can be said in substance to be already in the pleading sought to be amended. The expressions "cause of action" and "new case" were also defined by the Supreme Court in the same judgment. The expression "cause of action", it was held, in the present context does not mean "every fact which it is material to be proved to entitle the plaintiff to succeed", for if it were so, no material fact could ever be amended or added. Therefore, it was pointed out the expression for the purpose of amendment only means, "a new claim made on a new basis constituted by new facts". The expression "new case" was defined to mean "new set of ideas".

6. Applying the aforementioned principles governing the amendment of the pleadings, I see no escape from the conclusion that by the proposed amendments in the instant case neither a new case would be set up nor a new cause of action introduced. The amendments only relate to most preliminary or elementary matters and the basic structure of the suit would not be affected by them. The suit as at present is, I may repeat, for the eviction of the defendant from a land which is claimed to be the property of the Association, and it shall continue to be so even after the amendments are introduced.

The amendments, in other words, would have no material bearing either on the real matters in controversy or on the final outcome of the dispute.

7. As a result, I allow the petition and direct the trial Court to permit the Association to amend paras 1 and 2 of the plaint in the manner prayed for. The plaintiff may also amend the title of the suit if he feels so inclined. I allow him permission to do so. The plaintiff shall get costs from the respondent. Advocates' fee Rs. 16/-.

Petition allowed.

Md. Hasamad Mia, Petitioner v. The State (Union Territory of Manipur). Respondent.

Criminal Misc. Appln. No. 42 of 1970, D/-15-7-1970.

(A) Constitution of India, Arts. 134(1) (c) and 136(1) — Point of law not argued before High Court — Cannot be raised for first time before Supreme Court in appeal under Art. 134(1) (c) though it can be raised in appeal under Art. 136(1) — High Court cannot grant certificate for urging the point not argued before it. (Para 6)

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 134(1) (c) — Leave to appeal — Power to grant Certificate — Nature and exercise of.

The matter of issuing certificate is within the discretion of the High Court. The power to grant certificate has to be exercised after considering what difficult questions of law or principle are involved in the case which require further consideration by the Supreme Court. The High Court would be justified in issuing the Certificate only if some "substantial question of law or principle" is involved for consideration on the part of the Supreme Court. But certificate cannot be granted only for the reason that the Supreme Court may assess whether the penalty of death or the alternative sentence of life imprisonment was the proper sentence to pass in a particular case. Case law discussed. (Paras 4, 7)

- A. Nilamani Singh, for Petitioner.

ORDER:— This is an application by Md. Hasamad Mia, condemned to death, under sub-clause (c) of Cl. (1) of Art. 134 of the Constitution for a certificate that the present case is a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court. In the application as originally presented through the Jail only questions of fact bearing on the appreciation of evidence led in the case were relied upon in support of the prayer for the certificate. However, after this Court had appointed Shri A. Nilamani Singh, Advocate, as amicus curiae, to help the Court in deciding the application that Advocate presented a new set of grounds in justification of that prayer. Since it was stated at the bar that the original application had not been prepared by the prisoner with competent legal aid, I have decided to take into consideration the supplementary grounds while adjudging the merits of the application for certificate. In the supplementary grounds a question of law raised is that the learned Sessions Judge had not taken the statements made by the prosecution witnesses before the Committing Magistrate, and which statements are in contradiction to their averments made at the trial, as constituting substantive piece of evidence.

2. Relying on the principles enunciated in State of Bihar v. Ram Naresh Pandey, AIR 1957 SC 389; Jumman v. State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 469; Nand Lal Misra v. Kanhaiya Lal Misra, AIR 1960 SC 882 and Alembic Chemical Works Co., Ltd. v.

Workmen, AIR 1961 SC 647, Shri Nilamani Singh strenuously canvassed for the applicant that it is open to an aggrieved party to pray for certificate if he has a point of law to urge before the Supreme Court even though that point had not been agitated before the High Court when the appeal was argued. Undoubtedly, the Supreme Court held in the cases cited that a pure point of law can be permitted to be argued before it even if it had not been urged before the High Court. However, that view was taken and subsequently reiterated by the Supreme Court only in respect of appeals instituted on special leave granted under Art. 136(1) of the Constitution. But I think the analogy of Art. 136(1) cannot be legitimately availed of for interpreting sub-clause (c) of Article 134(1).

Clause (1) of Art. 136 enacts that notwithstanding anything contained in Chapter IV, Part V, of the Constitution, the Supreme Court may, in its discretion, grant special leave to appeal from any judgment, decree, determination, sentence or order in any cause or matter passed or made by any Court or tribunal in the territory of India. Sub-clause (c) of Article 134(1), on the other hand, provides that an appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court from any judgment, final order or sentence in a criminal proceeding of a High Court in the territory of India if the High Court "certifies that the case is a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court." Obviously, the Supreme Court is given a completely free hand in granting special leave to appeal under Art. 136 of the Constitution, while the High Court can issue the certificate under Cl. (c) of Art. 134 (1) if "the case is a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court." Moreover, the exact scope of the two constitutional provisions has been almost precisely defined by the Supreme Court in a large number of judicial pronouncements made by it, and this Court is bound in terms of Art. 141 of the Constitution by the interpretation placed by the Supreme Court on those provisions.

As early as in October 1954, the Supreme Court held in the case of Dhakeswari Cotton Mills Ltd. v. Commr. of Income-tax West Bengal, AIR 1955 SC 65, that it is not possible to define with any precision the limitations on the exercise of the discretionary jurisdiction vested in the Supreme Court by the constitutional provision made in Art. 136, that the limitations, whatever they be, are implicit in the nature and character of the power itself, that it being an exceptional and over-riding power, naturally it has to be exercised sparingly and with caution and only in special and extraordinary situations, and that beyond that it is not possible to fetter the exercise of this power by any formula or rule. The Supreme Court observed further that all that can be said is that the Constitution having trusted the wisdom and good sense of the Judges of the Supreme Court in this matter, that itself is a sufficient safeguard and guarantee that the power will only be used to advance the cause of justice, and that its exercise will be governed by well-established principles which govern the exercise of overriding constitutional powers.

Another pertinent proposition laid in that case was that it is "plain that when the Court reaches the conclusion that a person has been dealt with arbitrarily or that a Court or Tribunal has not given a fair deal to a litigant, then no technical hurdles of any kind like the finality of finding of facts or otherwise can stand in the way of the exercise of this special power because the whole intent and purpose of the article is that it is the duty of the Supreme Court to see that injustice is not perpetuated or perpetrated by decisions of Courts and tribunals because certain laws have made the decisions of those Courts or tribunals final and conclusive."

3. It follows from these observations that the powers given by Art 136 are in the nature of special or residuary powers which are exercisable outside the purview of the ordinary law relating to appeals, and in cases where needs of justice demand interference by the Supreme Court of the land. The Article is worded in the widest possible terms and it apparently vests in the Supreme Court a plenary jurisdiction in the matter of entertaining and hearing appeals, by grant of special leave, against any kind of judgment or order made by a Court or tribunal in any cause or matter and the powers could be exercised in spite of the specific provisions for appeal contained in the Constitution or other laws. Tersely put, the Constitution does not for the best of reasons choose to fetter or circumscribe the powers exercisable under Art. 136(1) in any way. That there is real and palpable difference in the scope of Art 136(1) and sub-clause (c) of Art. 134 (1) was made clear by the Supreme Court in the case of Babu v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1965 SC 1467, where it was held that under Art. 134(1) (c) the Supreme Court has not been made an ordinary Court of Criminal Appeal and the High Courts should not by the certificates attempt to create a jurisdiction which was not intended, that the High Courts should, therefore, exercise their discretion sparingly and with care, that the certificate should not be granted to afford another hearing on facts unless there is some error of a fundamental character, and that the High Court "should not overlook that there is a further remedy by way of special leave which may be invoked in cases where the certificate is refused."

These observations of the Supreme Court leave no room for doubt on the point that the circumstances which should weigh with the High Court in issuing the certificate under Art. 134(1) (c) are fundamentally different from those which may influence the Supreme Court in granting special leave to appeal under Art. 136(1) in exercise of its unfettered authority to exercise judicial superintendence over the Courts and tribunals in the realm. It was held in the case of Bharat Bank Ltd. v. Employees of Bharat Bank Ltd., AIR 1950 SC 188, that the opening non obstante clause of Art 136 emphasised the fact that the power there conferred overrode the limitations contained in the previous Articles on the Court's power to entertain appeals. As the word "final" is not used in Art 136(1) to qualify the words "Judgment, Orders, etc.", the Supreme Court has power in appropriate cases to grant special leave even in respect of interlocutory orders, which obviously cannot be done by the High Court under Art 134 (1) (c).

Consequently, I have no difficulty in repelling the contention of Shri Nilaman Singh that since the Supreme Court can permit a pure question of law to be argued while hearing an appeal instituted on special leave granted under Art. 136 (1), the High Court is bound to grant a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c) once a question of law is said to arise for determination.

4. This takes me to determine what principles should be kept in view while deciding a prayer made for a certificate under Art. 134(1). The sub-clause (c) is worded: "If the High Court certifies that the case is a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court." Apparently, the matter of issuing certificate is within the discretion of the High Court. It was, however, held in the case of Baladin v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1956 SC 181, that the word "certifies" is a strong word and that it indicates that the High Court must bring its mind to bear on the question and, as in all cases of judicial orders and certificates, the reasons for the order must be apparent on the face of the order itself. The Supreme Court, it was emphasised, must be in a position to know, first, that the High Court has applied its mind to the matter and not acted mechanically, and, secondly, exactly what the High Court's difficulty is and exactly what question of outstanding difficulty or importance the High Court feels the Supreme Court ought to settle.

Another relevant observation made in the same case was that a certificate cannot be granted under Cl. (c) if the High Court is in doubt about the facts and that if there is doubt in the minds of the Judges about the facts, their duty is to acquit. The Judges cannot convict, the Supreme Court pointed out, and then issue a certi-ificate because they cannot make up their minds about the facts. It is abundantly clear from these observations of the Supreme Court that the grant of a certificate under Cl. (c) is not a matter of course and that the power has to be exercised after considering what difficult questions of law or principle are involved in the case which require further consideration at the hands of the Supreme Court. In the case of AIR 1965 SC 1467, the Supreme Court held that the power which is granted to the High Court is no doubt discretionary but in view of the word "certifies" it is clear that such power must be exercised with great circumspection, sparingly, and only in a case which is really fit for appeal.

It was observed further that the Constitution does not contemplate a criminal jurisdiction for the Supreme Court except in the two cases covered by sub-clauses (a) and (b) of Article 134 (1) which provide for appeals as of right and that consequently the High Court before it certifies the case must be satisfied that it involves some substantial question of law or principle. It has been pointed out more than once by the Supreme Court that it is not an ordinary Court of Criminal Appeal and that the High Court should not by issuing certificate attempt to create a jurisdiction which was not intended. AIR 1956 SC 411, Sunder Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, is an authority for the proposition that ordinarily in a case which does not involve a substantial question of law or principle in an affirming judgment the High Court would not be justified in granting a certificate under sub-clause (c) of Article 134 (1) of the Constitution. Therefore, the conclusion that follows is that this Court would be justified in issuing the certificate only if some "substantial question of law or principle" is involved for consideration on the part of the Supreme Court.

5. I have mentioned above that in the original application for certificate only questions relating to the appreciation of evidence were raised. However, it is settled beyond dispute that ordinarily the Supreme Court will not convert itself into a third Court of fact in criminal cases. Hence, I do not see any valid justification for the prayer to issue a certificate for reappraisal of the facts on the part of the Supreme Court with the object of determining whether the charge of murder had been clearly brought home to the applicant on the basis of the material on record. A perusal of this Court's judgment dated 6-2-1970 would bring out that not much of argument was raised on the question of the guilt of the accused. The only point seriously debated in the Court was whether the capital sentence was justified under the circumstances proved in the case. In an application for certificate under sub-clause (c) the High Court is solely concerned with the question whether on the judgment given by it any question of law or principle arises requiring an authoritative interpretation by the Supreme Court. Since the question of conviction was not challenged in a serious manner when the present case was argued in this Court, I cannot persuade myself to grant the certificate on the footing that there was not enough of material to justify the verdict of guilty.

6. The question of law raised in the supplementary grounds was not pressed when the appeal was argued, nor it had even been mentioned in the grounds of appeal in the manner it is now sought to be raised. The only relevant ground stated in the memorandum of appeal was that the trial Court "gave undue credence to the witnesses though they had given contradictory and inconsistent statements before the Police, Committing Magistrate and the Court of Session." The point now emphasised is that "the evidence given under Chapter VIII in the Committing Magistrate's Court has not been treated as substantive evidence to contradict and discredit the prosecution witnesses in the Sessions Court by reason of the non-compliance with Section 288, Criminal P. C." The two points, one raised in the memorandum of appeal and the other set out in the supplementary grounds, are of completely different nature. Therefore, the latter point can properly be described as a point taken for the first time in the application for certificate.

However, it is the settled practice of the Supreme Court that normally it will not allow a new point to be raised before it for the first time. Reference in this connection is invited to the case of Narayandas v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1959 SC 1118; Sudhansusekhar v. State of Orissa, AIR 1961 SC 196 and Bhagwati Saran v. State of U. P., AIR 1961 SC 928. The High Court of Bombay held in the case of Jairam v. State of Bombay, AIR 1954 Bom 206, that in an application for leave to appeal to Supreme Court, a new point the decision of which would depend upon the questions of fact which were not placed before the High Court whose order is sought to be appealed, cannot be allowed to be raised for the first time. Therefore, the legal point mentioned in the supplementary grounds for the first time cannot be raised before the Supreme Court for the first time. Nor do I think that that point is of any substantial importance. The verdict of guilty having not been seriously challenged in this Court, it may be presumed that the point now sought to be raised has been adopted only to strengthen the case for a certificate. However, no Court can permit itself to be dodged in that manner.

7. The last point which requires determination is whether the certificate can be granted on the basis that the proper sentence to award in the case was one of imprisonment for life and not the capital penalty. In the supplementary grounds it is admitted that "in principle the question of awarding sentence.....is a matter of discretion of the Trial and Confirming Courts and there are no hard and fast rules for the exercise of such discretion....." Apart from that admission we have the authoritative pronouncement of the Supreme Court in the case of State of Maharashtra v. Mayer Hans George, AIR 1965 SC 722, that "It is the settled rule of the Supreme Court that it would not interfere with the sentence passed by the Courts below unless there is an illegality in it or the same involves any question of principle." Consequently, I am reluctant to grant certificate only for the reason that the Supreme Court may assess whether the penalty of death or the alternative sentence of life imprisonment was the proper sentence to pass in the present case.

8. No other point was argued in support of the prayer for certificate.

9. As a result, the application fails and is dismissed.

Application dismissed.

JUDGMENT:— In this Execution First Appeal the legality and the validity of order dated 8th of January 1969 passed by Shri M. C. Roy, Subordinate Judge, Manipur, by which he accepted the objections of the respondents under Sec. 47 of the Civil P. C., hereinafter called the Code, against the execution application filed by the appellants is challenged.

2. The facts bearing on the appeal are not much in dispute. On 21-3-1968 the present appellants petitioned the Registrar of the Co-operative Societies, Manipur, for arbitration between themselves and the respondents herein respecting the dispute arising out of an agreement dated 17-8-1967. That agreement was made between the appellants Y. Amudombi Singh and Ch. Ibohal Singh, respectively the Chairman and the Secretary of the Managing Committee of Kharungpat Lamjaokhong Khong Ahanbi Fishing Co-operative Society Limited, hereinafter called the Society, and the respondents. The agreement was in regard to the enjoyment of the sub-fishery called Soirel forming part of Kharungpat Fishery No. 164 for the period 1-4-1967 to 31-3-1968. The reliefs claimed were for the recovery of balance lease-money, immediate cessation by the respondents of the enjoyment of the sub-fishery and vacating the possession thereof and for future mesne profits. The claim made on behalf of the Society was resisted on various grounds. By his award dated 24-7-1968 the Registrar decreed a sum of Rs. 4,950/- in favour of the Society and directed that the amount should be paid by the respondents within two months. The respondents were ordered, in addition, to cease enjoying the sub-fishery forthwith and to deliver the vacant possession thereof to the Society.

On the basis of that award the decree-holders made an execution application in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Manipur, praying for delivery of possession of the sub-fishery. That prayer was opposed by the judgment-debtors (the respondents of this appeal) who filed objections under Section 47 read with Section 151 of the Code. They pleaded that the Registrar had no jurisdiction to make an award respecting immovable property and that the appropriate authority to which the decree-holders could approach for securing vacant possession of the fishery was either the Deputy Commissioner or the Sub-Deputy Collector of the area concerned. The decree-holders, in their reply, controverted the validity of the legal objections raised by the judgment-debtors.

3. The only point debated before the executing Court, as revealed by para 6 of the order under appeal, was whether the part of the award "regarding cessation of the enjoyment of Soirel sub-fishery and vacating its possession by the judgment-debtors be (is?) executable or not."

The learned Subordinate Judge held that the Registrar lacked jurisdiction to decide a dispute respecting title to or right over any immovable property, such as, sub-fishery, that the Registrar had been moved for giving the award not by the Society but by its Chairman and the Secretary, that the latter had no authority to do so in view of Section 85 of the Assam Co-operative Societies Act, 1949, hereinafter referred to as the Act, as extended to Manipur, and that on account of these two legal defects the award made by the Registrar respecting the sub-fishery is unexecutable. In para 8 of the order the Subordinate Judge happened to observe, obviously unintentionally that "In view of above finding and decision it is to be held that the decree as passed by the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, is without jurisdiction and as such a nullity, which cannot be acted upon in execution." It may be recalled that the only point canvassed before the executing Court on behalf of the judgment-debtors was that the part of the award in regard to the delivery of possession of the sub-fishery to the decree-holders was invalid and that it was never the case of the judgment-debtors that the award was also invalid respecting the sum of Rs. 4,950/- decreed against them.

4. Aggrieved by the order of the Subordinate Judge the decree-holders came up in appeal to this Court.

5. It was commonly admitted by the parties' counsel during the course of arguments that the judgment-debtors had relinquished the possession of the sub-fishery in favour of the decree-holders after the impugned order was made by the executing Court and that as such there was no live dispute between the parties respecting that part of the decree. However, Shri Manisana Singh, representing the decree-holders, submitted that since the Subordinate Judge had held in para 8 of his order that the whole of the decree was a nullity, it was necessary that this Court should give its verdict on that point to obviate any further dispute regarding the executability of the money-part of the decree. Shri Y. Imo Singh, appearing for the judgment-debtors, did not join issue with Shri Manisana Singh on that point and I think he was right in adopting that stand.

6. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the decree to be a nullity on the double finding that the suit before the Registrar had been filed not by the Society but by its Chairman and the Secretary and that was in violation of Section 85 of the Act and Order 29, Rule 1 of the Code, and, secondly, that in terms of Sections 63, 64 and 82 of the Act the Registrar has jurisdiction only to decide disputes relating to "financial matters and recovery of dues" and that he has no jurisdiction "to decide the question regarding the title or right over immovables as, for instance, the sub-fishery in the present case." Shri Manisana Singh vehemently criticised these findings of the Subordinate Judge. He submitted that an executing Court cannot go behind the decree and that it must take the decree as it stands and execute the same. Shri Manisana Singh was however fair enough to concede that there is one exception to the broad proposition propounded by him, it being that if the Court which passed the decree lacked inherent jurisdiction respecting the matter in dispute then the decree shall be a nullity and the judgment-debtors entitled to raise an objection even before the executing Court. Shri Y. Imo Singh, opposite counsel, urged equally forcefully that it is open to the judgment-debtors to raise an objection in the executing Court if the decree suffers from any legal or other infirmities besides the lack of inherent jurisdiction in the Court passing the decree respecting the subject-matter of dispute. Shri Y. Imo Singh, however, could not cite any authority to support that proposition. He undertook at the conclusion of the arguments to send some authorities to the Court after bringing the same to the notice of Shri Manisana Singh, but he failed to do so. Therefore, I am left to decide the fate of the appeal on the basis of arguments addressed in open Court.

7. Shri Manisana Singh cited two Supreme Court authorities reported in AIR 1954 SC 340, Kiran Singh v. Chaman Paswan, and AIR 1962 SC 199, Hira Lal v. Kali Nath, to support his proposition set out above. The two authorities lay down identical principle though in the case of Kiran Singh, AIR 1954 SC 340 the matter was examined in detail in the context of Section 21 of the Code and Section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act. It was held in the case of Hira Lal, AIR 1962 SC 199 that it is well settled that the objection as to local jurisdiction of a Court does not stand on the same footing as an objection to the competence of a Court to try a case. Competence of a Court to try a case goes to the very root of the jurisdiction, and where it is lacking, it is a case of inherent lack of jurisdiction. On the other hand, it was added, an objection as to the local jurisdiction of a Court can be waived and that principle has been given a statutory recognition by enactments like Section 21 of the Code.

The validity of a decree can be challenged in execution proceedings, the Supreme Court observed, only on the ground that the Court which passed the decree was lacking in inherent jurisdiction in the sense that it could not have seized of the case because the subject-matter was wholly foreign to its jurisdiction or that the defendant was dead at the time the suit had been instituted or decree passed, or some such other ground which could have the effect of rendering the Court entirely lacking in jurisdiction in respect of the subject-matter of the suit or over the parties to it. As a matter of fact, Shri Imo Singh also placed reliance on these two authorities of the Supreme Court but he was unable to indicate how they helped him in establishing the proposition canvassed by him. The underlined word 'only' used by the Supreme Court clinches the issue. The decree can be assailed at the execution stage only on the footing that the Court which passed it lacked inherent jurisdiction either in regard to the subject-matter or over the parties arrayed before it.

8. An objection bearing on the question of jurisdiction can possibly fall in three categories, namely, pecuniary, territorial, or in respect of the subject-matter of the dispute, Section 21 of the Code enacts that no objection as to the place of suing shall be allowed by any appellate or revisional Court unless such objection was taken in the Court of first instance at the earliest possible opportunity and in all cases where issues are settled at or before such settlement, and unless there has been a consequent failure of justice. Section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act provides that notwithstanding anything contained in Section 578 of the Code (now Section 99) an objection that a Court which had no jurisdiction over a suit or appeal had exercised it by reason of overvaluation or undervaluation, should not be entertained by an appellate Court, except as provided in the section. These two statutory provisions were thoroughly examined by the Supreme Court in the case of Kiran Singh, AIR 1954 SC 340 and the proposition enunciated was that a decree passed by a Court without jurisdiction is a nullity, and that its invalidity can be set up whenever and wherever it is sought to be enforced or relied upon and even at the stage of execution or even in collateral proceedings, but where the defect in jurisdiction is of a kind which falls within the saving provisions of Section 21 of the Code or Section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act, it cannot be raised except in the manner and subject to the conditions mentioned therein. By this method of elimination as pointed by the High Court, we are led to the conclusion that at the execution stage only an objection relating to the inherent lack of jurisdiction in the Court passing the decree can be raised and none else. This is exactly what was held by the Supreme Court in the case of Hira Lal, AIR 1962 SC 199 (supra).

9. It is in the light of the aforementioned principles of law that I proceed to determine the validity or otherwise of the decree made by the Registrar. Section 63 of the Act provides that any dispute touching business of a registered society, other than a dispute regarding disciplinary action taken by a society against an employee of the society, or of the liquidator of a society shall be referred to the Registrar for decision if the parties thereto are from among the categories mentioned therein. Shri Y. Imo Singh did not contest the proposition that a dispute between a Society and its members can be referred for arbitration to the Registrar. His only contention was that a dispute relating to immovable property cannot be referred to the Registrar in terms of Section 63.

However, on plain reading of the Section it is not possible to accept that contention. The section very unequivocally provides that any dispute touching business of a registered society shall be referred to the Registrar. In other words if the dispute is touching the business of the Society and it is between the parties listed in the section, there is no alternative but to refer the same to the arbitration of the Registrar as is made clear by the verb 'shall' used in the section. Therefore, the decision whether a dispute can be referred to the Registrar under Section 63 will not depend on the fact whether it relates to money transaction or immovable property, but will rest on the fact whether that dispute is "touching business of the registered Society." A particular Society may legitimately undertake the business of dealing in immovable properties or running of cinema houses. In reference to such business, a dispute may and can arise between the Society and members thereof respecting immovable properties. If so, then in terms of Section 63 of the Act it would be open to the Society to refer such a dispute to the Registrar.

The section does not provide in terms that the dispute contemplated by it must relate to financial transactions. Therefore, I cannot subscribe to the view taken by the executing Court in the impugned order and which has been urged by Shri Imo Singh in this Court. Hence, I repel the contention that the Registrar could not have given an award in regard to the sub-fishery in dispute. In other words, the Registrar did not lack inherent jurisdiction in giving the award about the sub-fishery.

10. I may also refer in brief to the second point on which the learned Subordinate Judge rested his conclusion that the decree was a nullity. That point is that the submission of the dispute to the Registrar for arbitration had been made not in the name of the Society but in the names of its Chairman and the Secretary. I have gone through the relevant application made to the Registrar for that purpose. It is marked Ext. A/1. It clearly indicates that the dispute referred to the Arbitration was one which had cropped up between the Society on the one hand and the judgment-debtors on the other.

It is correct that the application was made in the names of the Chairman and the Secretary representing the Managing Committee of the Society but in doing so the Society only complied with the requirements of the form No. V prescribed by Rule No. 61 of the Manipur Co-operative Societies Rules, 1959. The form No. V does not envisage that the application to Registrar should be made in the name of the Society. According to that form, the application has to be signed inter alia by the Chairman and the Secretary and this was done. It is also mentioned in the application that the two signatories had been authorised by resolution No. 1 dated 6-3-1968 of the Managing Committee of the Society to make the application. Hence, I can find no fault with that application. Moreover, the manner in which an application is made or a plaint is filed relates to a matter of form and not of substance. If the application or the plaint suffers from any such defect, the aggrieved party must raise an objection before whom the proceedings are initiated or before the appellant or revisional authority. Such an objection cannot be raised in the executing Court for the first time because it does not fall in the category of an objection indicating lack of inherent jurisdiction by the forum seized of the case.

If the contention of Shri Imo Singh were to prevail, there would be no end to litigation even with the final decision in a suit or proceeding. That is a situation which cannot be contemplated with equanimity. All disputes, legal or factual, barring the one relating to inherent lack of jurisdiction, must be considered as concluded after they have been disposed of by competent authorities and have assumed finality by passage of time. In this view of the legal position, the second point relied upon by the Subordinate Judge in support of his finding is also without substance.

10A. Before I conclude a brief reference may be made to Section 85 of the Code (Act?) and Rule 1 of Order XXIX of the Code. Section 85 declares that every registered Society shall be deemed to be a body corporate and it shall have power, inter alia, to institute and defend suits and other legal proceedings. The section does not enjoin that the suit must of necessity be filed in the name of the Society. Section 100 of the Act authorises the Chief Commissioner to make rules "to carry out the purpose and objects of the Act, and Rule 61 of the Rules formulated by him prescribes the form (No. V) in which reference of a dispute shall be made to the Registrar. That form was adopted by the appellants in making the reference. Therefore, I cannot discern any violation of Section 85 of the Act. Likewise, the provisions of Rule 1 of Order XXIX do not appear to have been infringed. That Rule enacts that in suits by or against a corporation, any pleading may be signed and verified on behalf of the corporation by the Secretary or by any director or other principal officer of the corporation who is able to depose to the facts of the case. Apparently, the Rule relates to signing and verification of the pleadings and does not embrace the subject in whose name the suit should be brought on behalf of the corporation. Indeed, the marginal note of the Rule "Subscription and verification of pleading" makes the legislative intentment pretty clear and puts the matter beyond the pale of controversy. Moreover, the Rule is permissive and not of mandatory nature. Hence, neither of the two provisions cited by Shri Imo Singh is of any help to him.

11. As a result of the conclusions recorded above, I accept the appeal on holding that the award given by the Registrar is perfectly valid and executable. The order made by the Subordinate Judge is quashed. Taking all the circumstances into consideration, I leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court as also in the executing Court respecting the objections filed by the judgment-debtors.

Appeal allowed.

Misc. Civil Appeal No. 6 of 1969, D/- 15-7-1970 against Order of Second Sub. J. Manipur, D/- 8-9-1968.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 80 — Expression "any act purporting to be done by such public officer" — Expression refers to past as well as future acts of public officer — AIR 1961 Guj 85 & AIR 1960 Pat 530, Dissented from.

The expression "any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity" used in Section 80 can surely include past as well as future acts of the public officer concerned. If the Legislature actually meant Section 80 to cover only past acts of public officers then the relevant words in the section would have read something like: "any act purported to have been done by such public officer in his official capacity". JUDGMENT:— This Misc. Civil Appeal by the Union of India, the Chief Commissioner, Manipur, the Deputy Commissioner, Manipur, and the Sub-Deputy Collector, Imphal West, is directed against the order dated 8-9-1969 by which the Subordinate Judge, Manipur, issued temporary injunction restraining them, at the instance of the plaintiffs-respondents of Smt No. 48 of 1969, from executing against the latter the orders dated 4-5-1959 (passed by the Deputy Commissioner) and 4-8-1969 (made by the Chief Commissioner), or taking action pursuant to notices dated 19-8-1969 issued by the Sub-deputy Collector, Imphal West, calling upon them (Plaintiffs-respondents) to vacate the plots in dispute by dismantling the buildings standing thereon.

2. The facts of the suit brought by the plaintiffs, briefly summarised, are that they had constructed some buildings on plots bearing C. S. Dag Nos. 758 to 763, measuring .15 acres in all, as lessees and had been in possession thereof for a long time. The Deputy Commissioner, Manipur, made an order on 4-5-1959 directing that the plaintiffs should be evicted from the possession of those plots by dismantling the buildings constructed by them. The plaintiffs having felt aggrieved challenged the validity of that order by filing Revenue Appeal No. 26 of 1959 in the Court of the Chief Commissioner. That appeal was dismissed on 4-8-1969, almost 10 years after it was instituted. After the dismissal of that appeal, the Sub-deputy Collector issued notices to the plaintiffs on 19-8-1969 intimating them that they shall be evicted from the plots on 25th or 26th or 28th or 30th of August 1969. It appears that a part of the buildings was dismantled by the plaintiffs after the receipt of notices dated 19th August and the land underneath vacated. However, apprehending that part dismantling of the buildings and partial surrender of the land would not meet the requirements of the notices dated 19-8-1969, the plaintiffs filed a suit on 23-8-1969, claiming the relief of permanent injunction restraining the defendants from executing the orders dated 4-5-1959 and 4-8-1969 or giving effect to the notices dated 19-8-1969. Along with the plaint of the suit, the plaintiffs filed an application under Rules 1, 2 and 3 of Order XXXIX, Civil Procedure Code, hereinafter called the Code, claiming temporary injunction until the disposal of the suit. That prayer having been allowed by the trial Court by order dated 8-9-1969, the defendants have come up in appeal to assail the validity thereof.

3. The fate of this appeal will depend on reply to the question whether the suit of the nature instituted by the plaintiffs is maintainable without first giving notice enjoined by Section 80 of the Code. That section provides in substance that no suit shall be instituted against the Government or against a public officer in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity until the expiration of two months next after notice in writing has been delivered to, or left at the office of, the Government or the public officer. The dispute between the parties' counsel centred around the true meaning of the expression "any act" used in Section 80. Shri Imo Singh urged for the plaintiffs-respondents that the word "act" of that expression means and connotes a past act and not an act threatened to be done but not yet done. Shri Ibotombi Singh, representing the defendants-appellants, submitted, on the other hand, that the terms of Section 80 are of imperative nature and admit of no exceptions or implications. In other words, his contention was that the Section takes in acts both past and future. Shri Imo Singh placed reliance on AIR 1960 Pat 530, State of Bihar v. Raghunandan Singh, in support of his contention, whereas Shri Ibotombi Singh cited AIR 1927 PC 176, Bhagchand v. Secy. of States for India, AIR 1960 SC 1309, State of Madras v. C. P. Agencies, AIR 1957 Andh Pra 675, State of Madras v. Chitturi Venkata, and AIR 1959 All 675, Smt. Abida Begum v. Rent Control and Eviction Officer, to shore up his submission. He also invited the attention of this Court to the latest authority of the Supreme Court bearing on the scope of Section 80 which is reported in AIR 1969 SC 227, Amalgamated Electricity Co. v. Municipal Committee. After examining the rival contentions in the light of the authorities relied upon in support thereof, I have reached the conclusion that the stand taken by Shri Ibotombi Singh appears to be more sound and in accord with the letter and spirit of Section 80 of the Code and so it must prevail.

4. The Privy Council held in the case of Bhagchand, AIR 1927 PC 176 (supra) that Section 80 is to be strictly complied with and that it is applicable to all forms of action and all kinds of relief including that of injunction. This view of the Privy Council was approved by the Supreme Court in the case reported in AIR 1960 SC 1309. The Supreme Court held therein that Section 80 is express, explicit and mandatory and admits of no implications or exceptions, and that object of the Section is manifestly to give the Government or the public officer concerned sufficient notice of the case which is proposed to be brought against it or him so that it or he may consider the position and decide for itself or himself whether the claim of the plaintiff should be accepted or resisted. It was observed further that in order to enable the Government or the public officer to arrive at a decision it is necessary that it or he should be informed of the nature of the suit proposed to be filed against it or him and the facts on which the claim is founded and the precise reliefs asked for. It is apparent that it is in the context of this object of Section 80 and on the plain reading of its phraseology that the expression "any act" has to be interpreted.

5. Firstly, I would like to discuss the merits of the suit on the basis of interpretation of the expression "any act" as canvassed by Shri Imo Singh. I have reproduced above the salient allegations made in the plaint and the nature of the relief sought. The plaintiffs have assailed the validity of the orders dated 4-5-1959 and 4-8-1969 and also prayed that the defendants be restrained from executing those orders. Both the orders, it is obvious, had been made before the suit was filed on 23-8-1969. The notices which were issued by the Sub-deputy Collector were in compliance with the direction given in the order made by the Deputy Commissioner on 4-5-1959 which was subsequently confirmed by the Chief Commissioner on 4-8-1969. Therefore, on the pleadings of the plaintiffs themselves it is manifest that it is not a threatened act in future mentioned in the notices dated 19-8-1969 which alone is the subject of dispute, but two previous orders of which that threatened act, if I may so, is the offspring which are really in question. The facts of the instant case, I believe are on all fours identical with the case of Bhagchand which the Privy Council happened to decide in 1927. I reproduce a part of the first para of the Privy Council's judgment to illustrate the point. That part of the para runs as under:

"In this action forty-eight plaintiffs joined in suing the Secretary of State for India and the Collector and District Magistrate of Nasik for two kinds of relief: (a) a declaration that certain official notices and orders were ultra vires and invalid, and (b) an injunction permanently restraining all executive action thereunder. Unless the right to the first relief was made out, the prayer for the second necessarily failed. The suit was begun less than two months after notice of the intention to bring it had been given to the respondents."

Likewise, in our case unless the order made by the Deputy Commissioner on 4-5-1959, as confirmed by the Chief Commissioner on 4-8-1969, is declared invalid, the notices issued by the Sub-deputy Collector on 19-8-1969 will hold good. Therefore, assuming that the expression "any act" relates to acts done in past and does not embrace the acts threatened to be done in future, the plaint filed by the plaintiffs shall have to be rejected for want of notice under Section 80 of the Code.

6. However, since elaborate arguments had been addressed at the bar respecting the true import of the expression "any act" used in Section 80, I deem it necessary to express my opinion as to which of the two rival contentions is sound in law. In the case of Bhagchand the Privy Council repelled the contention that any additional words should or can be read into Section 80 to find out its exact scope. The precise point that arose for determination before the Privy Council was whether Section 80 includes within its ambit suits for injunction. The Privy Council gave the reply in the affirmative because on its plain reading no variety of suits were excluded. The Privy Council emphatically observed that the section "is applicable to all forms of action and to all kinds of relief". The Privy Council appears to be of the opinion that if any exceptions were contemplated by the Legislature some suitable words would have been used by it to give practical shape to that intention. As an instance of such an exception, I may cite the proviso to Section 233 of the Ajmer Merwara Municipality Regulation. The main body of that section respecting suits against public officials is an exact reproduction of Section 80 of the Code. The proviso to the section enacts that nothing in the section shall apply to any suit instituted under Section 54 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877. It looks reasonable to assume that if the Central Legislature meant to graft any exception of the nature contained in the proviso to Section 233 of the Municipality Regulation just mentioned, to Section 80 of the Code, it would have done so quite easily. Therefore, according to the accepted principles of interpretation of statutes there is no justification for reading more than what is evident from the plain words used in Section 80 of the Code. The expression "any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity" used in Section 80 can surely include past as well as future acts of the public officer concerned. If the Legislature actually meant Section 80 to cover only past acts of public officers then the relevant words in the section would have read something like: "any act purported to have been done by such public officer in his official capacity." Therefore, the contention canvassed on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents looks to be without substance and so has to be negated.

7. There appears to be some judicial conflict on the precise import of the word "act" used in Section 80. It was held in the case of Bai Jilekhabai v. Competent Officer, AIR 1961 Guj 85, that the words "purporting to be done by such public officer" in Section 80 of the Code refer to some act already done by the public officer. Likewise, it was held by the Patna High Court in the case of AIR 1960 Pat 530, that the true meaning and the correct interpretation of the words "in respect of any act purporting to be done" occurring in Section 80 is that they cover only a past act and do not include a future act. It was stated further that S. 80, as such, comes into play only when the suit begun is in respect of past acts, completed, or begun but incomplete, and that it does not apply to future or threatened acts. It may be mentioned that whereas the Gujarat High Court relied upon the Privy Council case of Bhagchand in support of its conclusion reproduced above, the Patna High Court distinguished that case on facts and so obviously it did not draw any help therefrom to strengthen its own view. The Lahore High Court, however, relied upon the same Privy Council decision in support of the view that Section 80 applies to suits which relate to mandatory injunctions in respect of the acts which have already been performed as well as suits in which prohibitory injunctions in respect of threatened acts are asked for, vide AIR 1946 Lah 247, Subedar Shingara Singh v. Brigadier Callaghan. The reason given by the Lahore High Court in support of its view is that "since protection was by statute intended by the Legislature to be given to the Crown or its public officers to make amends for the act if they would care so to do or for taking legal advice before deciding their course of action in regard to an action which had already been taken or to a contemplated action, it could not be taken away simply because a plaintiff considered that he would suffer an irreparable injury or because he chose to add a prayer for an injunction in his suit." This view of the Lahore High Court was shared by the High Court of Madhya Bharat in the case of Babulal v. State, AIR 1955 Madh Bha 75, and that of Andhra Pradesh in the case of AIR 1957 Andh Pra 675. I am inclined to agree, if I may say so with respect, with the view taken by the High Courts of Lahore, Madhya Bharat and Andhra Pradesh. That view has the advantage that it is not in conflict with the plain wording of the section, and, in addition, it serves the object with which Section 80 was enacted inasmuch as the Government and public officers can get an opportunity to re-assess the situation and settle the dispute with the potential plaintiff, if they so desire, before they are dragged to the Court, and it also draws support from the Privy Council decision in the case of Bhagchand. It can bear repetition to state that the Privy Council held in that case that Section 80 is to be strictly complied with and that it is applicable to all forms of action and all kinds of relief. These words of the Privy Council are of such wide amplitude as to encompass suits brought against public officers to restrain them from executing the threatened acts. The public officers, it looks highly desirable, must be afforded an opportunity to examine the advisability of dispute being taken to a Court of law in respect of acts they have got to do as in respect of acts already done by them. Therefore, the view expressed by the Lahore, Madhya Bharat and Andhra Pradesh High Courts looks to be more practical and in accord with the phraseology as well as the object of Section 80 and so has to be preferred.

8. Before parting with the case I would like to point out that Section 80 refers to, firstly, suits against the Government, and, in the second place, to suits against the public officers. In terms of the section, no suit against the Government can be instituted until the notice of the nature and the duration mentioned therein is given. In other words, if the suit is to be filed against the Government the notice is a sine qua non, irrespective of the fact what is the nature of the suit. However, if the suit has to be filed against a public officer then one of the essential conditions is that the suit should be "in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity." Since in the present suit the Union of India is a party, therefore the suit against it is altogether incompetent because of want of notice under Section 80. In this respect I invite attention to the latest pronouncement of the Supreme Court in the case of Amalgamated Electricity Co., AIR 1969 SC 227 (supra) wherein it was held that so far as suits against the Government are concerned, they cannot be validly instituted without giving a notice as required by Section 80 of the Code.

9. If the suit instituted by the plaintiffs-respondents cannot proceed, as held above, in the absence of a notice under Section 80 of the Code, the trial Court could not have accepted their prayer for temporary injunction because one of the essential conditions for granting that relief is that the plaintiff should have a prima facie good case. Since the suit instituted by the plaintiffs cannot proceed for the legal lacuna mentioned, it cannot be contended that the plaintiffs have a prima facie good case for trial.

10. In the result, I allow the appeal and on setting aside the order dated 8-9-1969 of the trial Court I reject the application for temporary injunction made by the plaintiffs. The appellants shall also get the costs of this appeal. Advocate's fee Rs. 32/-.

Appeal allowed.

Limitation Act (1963), Arts. 64 and 65 — Possession of co-owners — Ouster of co-heir by adverse possession — Proof.

The test to determine if there is ouster of one co-owner by another is to see if the co-owner in possession has openly and unequivocally and to the knowledge of the other owners denied the title of the latter to the property. Until the ouster in that sense is established the co-owner is in possession on behalf of all the co-owners. The burden of making out ouster is on the person claiming lawful title of a co-heir by adverse possession. AIR 1957 SC 314 & AIR 1956 SC 548, Rel. on. (Para 7)

JUDGMENT:— This second appeal by the plaintiffs is directed against the judgment and decree dated 10-6-1968 by which the Additional District Judge Shri P. N. Roy dismissed with costs their first appeal arising out of the trial Court's decree, dated 9th of November 1966, dismissing with costs their suit for possession by partition of one half share in the ingkhol (homestead) bearing patta No. 85/51-I.W.

2. The following pedigree table will help in appreciating the facts of the case: (For pedigree table see page 94)

According to the allegations set out in the plaint the ingkhol in dispute was the ownership of Angousana Singh and on his death it was inherited equally by his two sons Atonsana Singh and Sanatomba Singh. Since Sanatomba Singh happened to be minor at the time of the death of his father, the ingkhol was mutated solely in the name of Atonsana Singh in the year 1908-09 subject, it was alleged, to the understanding that Sanatomba Singh's name shall also be incorporated in the revenue records no sooner he attained majority. However, before that understanding could take practical shape, the two brothers (Atonsana Singh and Sanatomba Singh) died. It was further alleged that firstly Sanatomba Singh and after his death his two sons, the plaintiffs, enjoyed joint possession of the ingkhol along with Atonsana Singh and Priyakumar Singh. The plaintiff's as well as their father's possession, it was added, was confined to the northern one half of the ingkhol where they used to grow vegetables, while the defendant No. 1 and his father had built a house in the southern half of the ingkhol. This arrangement by which the descendants of Angousana Singh had been jointly owning and possessing the ingkhol was disturbed by Priyakumar Singh after he managed to secure the mutation of the ingkhol in his own name in the year 1960. The plaintiffs challenged the validity of that mutation by appropriate proceedings before the Revenue Authorities but they failed to get the same reversed with the consequence that they were forced to file the suit resulting in the instant second appeal.

3. Another fact mentioned in the plaint was that the plaintiff's father Sanatomba Singh had purchased another ingkhol, bearing patta No. 85/52-1 W, with his own money on the adjacent north of the ingkhol in dispute. This fact was stated in the plaint probably to forestall the plea of defendant No. 1 that ingkhol No. 85/52 had been inherited by the family from Angousana Singh.

4. Priyakumar Singh alone resisted the suit, the other defendants having been proceeded against ex parte. He admitted the correctness of the pedigree table given above. In substance, his defence was that the two ingkhols covered by patta Nos. 85/51 and 85/52 were the ownership of their grand-father Angousana Singh, that on the death of the latter the ingkhol under patta No. 85/51 was inherited by his father Atonsana Singh while the other ingkhol was inherited by his uncle Sanatomba Singh, that right from the date of the death of Angousana Singh the plaintiffs or their father had never enjoyed the possession of the ingkhol in dispute, and that as such their suit was barred by time. In the alternative he pleaded that he had acquired ownership of the entire ingkhol by prescriptive title. Quite a few other technical and legal objections were also adopted by the defendant No. 1.

5. The trial Court settled the following issues between the parties:

- (1) Whether R. K. Sanatomba Singh, the father of the plaintiffs, and R. K. Atonsana Singh had jointly inherited the ingkhol under patta No. 85/51 1 W. T., each having equal interest in it, from their deceased father R. K. Angousana Singh?

- (2) Whether the plaintiffs and the defendant No. 1 are the joint owners of the suit land under patta No. 85/51 by right of inheritance? And have they been continuing to possess the suit land jointly, the defendant No. 1 by constructing a house in the southern portion and the plaintiff by growing vegetables, etc. in the northern portion of the suit land?
- (3) Whether the ingkhol under patta 85/52 1 W. T. was the heritable share of R. K. Sanatomba Singh, or whether he got the same by purchase which was the heritable share of R. K. Angousana Singh?
- (4) Was R. K. Sanatomba Singh a minor in 1908-1909, and as such the entire land under patta No. 85/51 was recorded in the name of the elder brother R. K. Atonsana Singh above?
- (5) Is the suit maintainable in the present form?
- (6) Is the suit bad for defect of parties?
- (7) Is the suit barred by limitation?
- (8) Are the plaintiffs entitled to the reliefs as claimed?

Issue No. 1 was decided by the trial Court against the plaintiffs by a process of reasoning which is not quite intelligible. It was held that the ingkhol was owned by Angousana Singh, it had been inherited equally by his two sons, that since Sanatomba Singh permitted the ingkhol to be entered in the name of Atonsana Singh he must be deemed to have acquiesced in the complete ownership of the latter and also to have waived his own right therein, that as a consequence of acquiescence and waiver of the two brothers Atonsana Singh and Sanatomba Singh had not jointly inherited the ingkhol, and that as such the plaintiff had no right therein. The finding given on issue No. 2 was that the plaintiffs had never enjoyed the joint possession of the ingkhol and so their suit merited dismissal. The contention of defendant No. 1 that the ingkhol bearing patta No. 85/52 was also the ownership of Angousana Singh his grandfather, was negatived while deciding issue No. 3, the finding being that the ingkhol had been purchased exclusively by the father of the plaintiffs in the name of their mother.

The issue was consequently decided against the defendant No. 1. Issues Nos. 4 and 7 were found against the plaintiffs while issues Nos. 5 and 7 against defendant No. 1. In the result the suit of the plaintiffs was dismissed with costs.

6. The learned Additional District Judge expressed the opinion, while dismissing of the appeal, that the only question that arose for decision before him was, to quote his own words, "whether the plaintiffs or their father were in joint possession with the defendant No. 1 or his father since the year 1908" — vide para 11 of the judgment. In the preceding para 10 he happened to observe that "The plaintiffs could get their shares in the suit land if they were in possession over the suit land since the year 1908-1909." Shri B. B. Sen, representing the plaintiffs-appellants, vehemently criticised the approach of the learned Additional District Judge to the entire case. He submitted that since it had been held by the trial Court that the ingkhol in question had been inherited by Atonsana Singh and Sanatomba Singh from their father Angousana Singh, a finding which was not challenged by defendant No. 1, the learned Additional District Judge should have considered Atonsana Singh and Sanatomba Singh as tenants-in-common of the ingkhol and presumed, as required by well settled principles of law, that they were in joint possession of the land although Atonsana Singh may alone have been in occupation thereof, until, if at all, there had been ouster of Sanatomba Singh from the enjoyment of ingkhol either at the hands of his brother Atonsana Singh or the latter's son Priyakumar Singh. Shri Sen submitted further, on the basis of the premises just stated, that the fate of the appeal before the Additional District Judge rested not on the point whether the plaintiffs' suit was within time but on the plea raised by the contesting defendant that he had acquired ownership of one half share in the ingkhol, which once belonged to the plaintiffs' father Sanatomba Singh, by adverse possession. Shri T. Bhubon Singh, appearing for Priyakumar Singh, urged equally forcefully, on the other hand, that before the plaintiffs could succeed in the case it was obligatory on them to establish that they had come to the Court within time and as such the learned Additional District Judge had rightly posed the question for decision as mentioned in paras 10 and 11 of his judgment. I think the submissions made by Shri Sen appear to be sound in law and so must prevail. It may be appropriately mentioned that in the short concluding para No. 20 of his judgment the learned Additional District Judge took note of and then made a passing reference to the argument raised before him on behalf of the plaintiffs that the possession of one co-sharer is presumed in law to be the possession on behalf of all the co-sharers. It was admitted before him that the parties were governed by Dayabhaga system of Hindu Law in the matters of succession and inheritance. On this latter basis the Additional District Judge held, while dealing with that argument, that on the death of Angousana Singh his two sons would be merely co-owners of the land in dispute, that the plaintiffs had not been in possession of that land for a long time, and that consequently "even if they had any right or title in the disputed land it has been extinguished by lapse of time."

7. The principles bearing on the nature of possession of one co-owner vis-a-vis the other co-owners and when the possession of one co-owner becomes adverse to the other co-owners were clearly enunciated by the Supreme Court in the case of P. Lakshmi Reddy v. L. Lakshmi Reddy, AIR 1957 SC 314. It was held in that case that "it is well settled that in order to establish adverse possession of one co-heir as against another it is not enough to show that one out of them is in sole possession and enjoyment of the profits of the properties", and that "Ouster of the non-possessing co-heir by the co-heir in possession who claims his possession to be adverse, should be made out". The Supreme Court emphasised further that "the possession of one co-heir is considered in law, as possession of all the co-heirs", and that "when one co-heir is found to be in possession of the properties it is presumed to be on the basis of joint title." It was further observed that "The co-heir in possession cannot render his possession adverse to the other co-heir, not in possession, merely by any secret hostile animus on his own part in derogation of the other co-heirs' title." Another two propositions laid down by the Supreme Court in the same case were: (1) "It is a settled rule of law that as between co-heirs there must be evidence of open assertion of hostile title, coupled with exclusive possession and enjoyment by one of them, to the knowledge of the other so as to constitute ouster", and (2) that "The burden of making out ouster is on the person claiming to displace the lawful title of a co-heir by his adverse possession." The Supreme Court had held earlier in the case of Mohd. Baqar v. Naim-un-Nisa Bibi, AIR 1956 SC 548, that since "under the law possession of one co-sharer is possession of all co-sharers, it cannot be adverse to them, unless there is a denial of their right to their knowledge by the person in possession, and exclusion and ouster following thereon for the statutory period." It would follow from these principles that the test to determine if there is ouster of one co-owner by another is to see if the co-owner in possession has openly and unequivocally and to the knowledge of the other owners denied the title of the latter to the property. Until the ouster in that sense is established, the co-owner in possession must be presumed to be in possession on behalf of all the co-owners. Therefore, the two Courts below were not justified in the present case in deciding the fate of the suit only on the footing that it was barred by time. After the Courts had found that the plaintiffs' father and his brother Atonsana Singh had inherited the ingkhol in dispute in equal shares on the demise of their father Angousana Singh and that the plaintiffs had inherited the estate of their father Sanatomba Singh, they were bound in law to presume the possession of the plaintiffs over the ingkhol in virtue of the fact that the physical possession was admittedly firstly with Atonsana Singh and after his death with the defendant No. 1 Priyakumar Singh each of whom was a co-owner in the ingkhol. In that context the proper course for the Courts to adopt was to find out if either the plaintiffs' father or after his death the plaintiffs had been ousted from the enjoyment of the property and that ouster had lasted for 12 years. This obviously has not been done. It will be noticed that though defendant No. 1 had adopted the plea of prescriptive title, the trial Court had not cared to formulate any issue in that respect, and that possibly accounts for considerable prejudice caused to the plaintiffs.

8. The learned counsel for the parties agreed at the bar that this Court should set aside the judgment and decree of the Additional District Judge and remand the case to him for fresh decision in the light of the observations made above. However, I have decided to adopt a somewhat different course. I think a specific issue bearing on the plea of adverse possession should be settled between the parties and the case remanded to the trial Court for fresh decision after allowing the parties to lead evidence on that issue. Hence, I allow the appeal, set aside the judgments and decrees of the two Courts below, and remand the case to the trial Court on framing the following additional issue, bearing No. 7A:

Whether the defendant No. 1 had acquired ownership of the land pertaining to ingkhol under patta No. 85/51-L. W. by adverse possession lasting for the statutory period? Onus on defendant No. 1. The trial Court will give reasonable opportunity to the plaintiffs and defendant No. 1 for leading evidence in support and rebuttal of this additional issue and then decide the suit anew after taking the entire evidence into consideration. I leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court as also in the Court of the Additional District Judge.

purposes, viz., relief of the poor, education and medical relief. When a purpose appears to fall within one of the first three above categories, the court will assume it to be for the benefit of the community and charitable unless the contrary is shown. In the case of new or unfamiliar categories of purposes which fall under the 4th category viz., the advancement of any other object of general public utility, the question whether or not the purpose is for the benefit of the community has to be considered by the court as to whether it is for a charitable purpose. In regard to the residuary head of charitable purpose, the Parliament has restricted the scope of that head by providing that in order to fall under the residuary head of 'general public utility' it should not involve the carrying on of any activity for profit. A business undertaking is an activity for profit. Where a business undertaking is held under a trust and the object of the trust provides for carrying on of the business undertaking, it involves the carrying on of any activity for profit and therefore ceases to be a charitable purpose under the Act. The Parliament has deliberately added the restrictive words 'not involving the carrying on of any activity for profit' which qualify the residuary head of charitable purpose and effect has to be given to the same. The restrictive clause does not apply to trusts created for the purpose of relief of the poor, education and medical relief. Where the trust is for the first three purposes, income derived from a business undertaking held under trust is exempt from taxation; but where a trust is for an object of general public utility and a business undertaking is held under the trust, it involves the carrying on of a commercial activity for profit and such a case ceases to be trust for charitable purposes under the Act. When Sections 11 and Section 2 (15) of the Act are so construed, there ceases to be any conflict between sub-sections (1) (a) and (4) of Section 11 of the Act. We are also unable to accede to the argument of Sri Kolsh that the word 'profit' in Section 2 (15) has to be understood as 'private profit'. If that was the intention, the Parliament need not have made any changes in the definition of 'charitable purpose'. As the old definition stood, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council had held that the words 'any other object of general public utility' exclude the object of private gain, such as an undertaking for commercial profit. We have to give effect to the deliberate words used by the Parliament in Section 2 (15).

17. In the instant case, the main object of the Trust is supplying the Kannada speaking people with an organ of educated public opinion. The statement of income and expenditure of the Trust shows that the income of the Trust is largely from the newspaper undertaking. Carrying out the Trust necessarily involves the commercial activity of running a newspaper organisation which in our opinion is not a charitable purpose as defined under the Act.

18. It was pointed out by the learned counsel for the assessee that the object of the Trust was 'education'. Reliance was placed on Clause (2) of the Trust deed which states that the object of the Trust shall be to educate the people of India in general and of Karnataka in particular.

19. In re: The Trustees of the Tribune, (1939) 7 ITR 415 = (AIR 1939 PC 208), the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council rejected the contention that the object of the trust was for the purpose of education. We are unable to see as to how the instant case is different from the Tribune Trust case where the Judicial Committee was of the opinion that the object of the trust may fairly be described as the object of supplying the province with an organ of educated public opinion. The trust deed in the instant case provides for its object the supplying of an organ of educated public opinion to the Kannada speaking people. It was contended by Sri Naidu the learned counsel for the Commissioner, that the assessee is not entitled to raise this question as no such question was referred for our opinion. It is seen from the statement of the case, that the assessee sought the reference of the question whether the Tribunal erred in coming to the conclusion that the main object of the trust could not be put in the category of 'education'. The Tribunal while referring the question set out earlier was of the opinion, that it would cover all aspects of disputes raised by both the parties. In our opinion, the assessee is entitled to urge in the reference that the object of the Trust is 'education'. Though newspapers have an educative value, advancement of education results only indirectly. Advancement of education resulting indirectly, in our opinion, does not come under the head of 'education'.

20. For the above reasons, our answer to the question of law referred to is in the negative and in favour of the Department. In the circumstances of the case, there will be no order as to costs.

Answer in negative.

(A) Essential Commodities Act (1955), Section 3 — Mysore Foodgrains (Wholesale) Dealers Licensing Order (1964) — Condition No. 2 (a) in Form B of the wholesale licence, is invalid in so far as it prohibits a wholesale dealer from purchasing foodgrains at places other than those specified in such licence for carrying on business. (Para 22)

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 19 (1) (g) and (6) — Right to carry on business — Condition No. 2 (a) in Form-B of the wholesale licence, is invalid in so far as it prohibits a wholesale dealer from purchasing foodgrains at places other than those specified in such licence for carrying on business. (Para 22)

(C) Essential Commodities Act (1955), Section 3 — Mysore Foodgrains (Wholesale) Dealers Licensing Order (1964) — Mysore Foodgrains (Retail) Dealers Licensing Order 1964 — No criteria for determining what transactions are speculative — Condition No. 7 (i) in the licence is void on account of vagueness and uncertainty. (Para 27)

(D) Constitution of India, Art. 14 — Equality before law — Condition 7 of Mysore Foodgrains Wholesale Licence and retail Licence — No criteria for determining what transactions are speculative — Condition No. 7 (i) in the licence is void on account of vagueness and uncertainty. (Para 27)

(E) Essential Commodities Act (1955), Section 3 — Mysore Foodgrains (Wholesale) Dealers Licensing Order (1964) — Condition No. 9 in Licence of Form B is reasonable. (Para 34)

Having regard to the necessity for preventing hoarding and cornering of foodgrains and sending them outside the State, the prohibition against a wholesale dealer selling foodgrains to another wholesale dealer in the State except under a permit, cannot be said to be an unreasonable restriction. (Para 34)

(F) Constitution of India, Art. 19 (1) (g) and (6) — Right to carry on business — Condition No. 9 in Licence as prescribed by Mysore Foodgrains Licensing Order, 1964, is reasonable. (Para 34)

(G) Essential Commodities Act (1955), Section 3 — Mysore Foodgrains (Wholesale) Dealers Licensing Order (1964) — Mysore Foodgrains (Retail) Dealers Licensing Order 1964 — The restrictions imposed by Conditions Nos. 3, 4 and 10, of the wholesale and retail licences, are not unreasonable restrictions. (Para 34)

Unless dealers maintain daily accounts of stocks and strike the closing stock balance each day, issue receipts or invoices and submit periodical returns, proper enforcement of the provisions of the Licensing Orders and conditions of the licences, would not be possible. (Para 44)

(H) Constitution of India, Art. 19 (1) (g) and (6) — Right to carry on business — Conditions 3, 4 and 10 of wholesale and retail licences under Licensing Orders, 1964 of Mysore are not unreasonable restrictions. (Para 44)

(I) Essential Commodities Act (1955), Section 3 — Mysore Foodgrains (Wholesale) Dealers Licensing Order (1964) — Mysore Foodgrains (Retail) Dealers Licensing Order, 1964 — Clause 11 (d) violates Article 19 of Constitution. (Para 55)

Sub-clause (d) of Clause 11 of both the Licensing Orders, which empowers search and seizure even without the safeguard that the Enforcement Officer should have reason to believe or suspect contravention of the provisions of the Licensing Orders or the conditions of licence, cannot but be regarded as being arbitrary, unguided and uncontrolled and violative of the fundamental rights of dealers under Article 19 of the Constitution to carry on trade and to hold property. (Para 55)

(J) Constitution of India, Art. 19 (1) (g) and (6) — Clause 11 (d) of Licensing Orders of Mysore, 1964 are arbitrary, unguided and uncontrolled and violative of Article 19. (Para 55)

(K) Essential Commodities Act (1955), Section 3 — Mysore Foodgrains (Wholesale) Dealers Licensing Order, 1964 — Mysore Foodgrains (Retail) Dealers Licensing Order 1964 — The power of search under sub-clause (b) of Clause 11 of both these Orders, is valid. (Para 55)

(L) Constitution of India, Art. 19 (1) (g) and (6) — Power of search under Cl. 11 (b) of Licensing Orders of Mysore of 1964 is valid. (Para 55)

ORDER: The petitioners are wholesale and/or retail dealers in foodgrains in Mysore State. In these petitions under Article 226 of the Constitution, they have assailed the constitutionality of certain provisions of—

(i) The Mysore Foodgrains (Wholesale) Dealers Licensing Order, 1961 (hereinafter referred to as the Wholesale Licensing Order); and

(ii) The Mysore Foodgrains (Retail) Dealers Licensing Order, 1964 (hereinafter referred to as the Retail Licensing Order).

2. These two Orders were made by the Government of Mysore in exercise of the powers conferred by Section 3 of the Essential Commodities Act, 1955 (hereinafter referred to as the Act), and delegated by the Central Government to the State Government under Section 5 of the Act.

3. Before dealing with the contentions of the petitioners, it is useful to set out the salient features of these two orders.

4. Sub-clause (e) of Cl. 2 of the wholesale Licensing Order defines the term 'Wholesale dealer' as a person engaged in the business of purchase, sale or storage for sale, of any one of the foodgrains in quantity of ten quintals or more at any one time or in quantity of twenty-five quintals or more, of all foodgrains taken together. Persons engaged in the business of sale of foodgrains to consumers only, the Food Corporation of India and Commission Agents who do not hold stocks, are excluded from this definition of wholesale dealer.

5. Sub-clause (e) of clause 2 of the Retail Licencing Order defines the term 'Retail dealer' as a person engaged in the business of sale of foodgrains to consumers only and who keeps for such sale at any one time ten quintals or more of any one foodgrains or twenty-five quintals or more of all foodgrains taken together.

6. Clause 3 of each of these two Orders, provides that no person shall carry on business as a wholesale or retail dealer respectively except under and in accordance with the terms and conditions of a licence issued in this behalf by the licencing authority.

7. Clause 4 of each of these Orders, provides that every application for a licence or renewal thereof, shall be made in the prescribed form i. e., Form-A, and that every licensee issued or renewed shall be in the prescribed form i. e. Form-B.

8. Clause 8 of each of these Orders provides that no holder of a licence shall contravene any of the terms or conditions of the licence and that if such holder or his agent or servant or any other person acting on his behalf, contravenes the said terms or conditions, then, without prejudice to any other action that may be taken against him, his licence may be cancelled or suspended by order in writing of the licencing authority.

9. Clause 11 of each of these Orders empowers calling the production of books of accounts and documents, for entry, inspection, search and seizure. We shall set out later that clause.

10. Form-B in Schedule II to each of these two Orders, contains the terms and conditions subject to which a licence is issued under the respective Order and many of these terms and conditions are common in both categories of licences.

11. Though several contentions had been raised in the petitioners' affidavits in support of their petitions, at the stage of hearing of these petitions, Mr. K. N. Jagadisha Sastry, learned counsel for the petitioners, advanced only the following contentions:

(i) Exclusion of dealers whose transactions or stocks are below certain minimum quantity, from the purview of these two Orders, is discriminatory and violative of Article 14 of the Constitution.

(ii) Conditions No. 2 (a) of the Wholesale Licence, imposes an unreasonable restriction on the freedom of dealers to purchase foodgrains;

(iii) Condition No. 7 of both Wholesale and Retail Licences purporting to prohibit transactions in a speculative manner, is vague and uncertain and imposes an unreasonable restriction on the freedom of trade;

(iv) The prohibition under Condition No. 9, of the Wholesale Licence, against sale of foodgrains to a person other than a retail dealer, imposes unreasonable restriction on the freedom of trade of wholesale dealers;

(v) Conditions Nos. 3, 4 and 10 of Wholesale as well as retail licences, which require licensee to maintain stock registers of daily accounts and to submit returns and to issue receipts and invoices, impose needless, excessive and unreasonable restrictions; and

(vi) Clause 11 of both the Orders, confers unguided, uncontrolled and arbitrary powers of search and seizure and hence that Clause is unconstitutional.

We shall now deal with these contentions.

12. Mr. Jagadisha Sastry submitted that dealers who keep for sale, at any one time, less than ten quintals of any one foodgrain and less than twenty-five quintals of all foodgrains taken together, do not come within the definition of either 'Wholesale Dealer' or 'Retail Dealer', and are totally outside the purview of these two Licencing Orders. Mr. Jagadisha Sastry argued that the classification of dealers, based on the quantity of foodgrains held by them at any one particular point of time, has no rational relation to the object sought to be achieved by these two Licencing Orders, and hence these two Orders are discriminatory and violative of Article 14 of the Constitution. Elaborating this argument, Mr. Jagadisha Sastry said that it is possible that a dealer who keeps less than ten quintals of any one kind of foodgrains at any one time, may still have a large turn-over, while a dealer who keeps more than ten quintals at any one time, may have a smaller turnover and that the quantity of stock held by a dealer at any one time, cannot be a measure of the size or volume of business of a dealer.

13. Ordinarily bigger dealers hold bigger stocks and smaller dealers hold smaller stocks. The maximum stocks of foodgrains held by a dealer at any one time, is a rough and ready index of the size of a dealer. Hence, it cannot be said that the criterion of maximum stock held by a dealer at any one time, is irrelevant to classify dealers as petty dealers and bigger dealers.

14. It is well settled that every law need not have universal applicability to all persons who are not by nature, attainment or circumstances in the same position. Legislation enacted for the achievement of a particular object need not be all embracing; the Legislature is free to recognise degrees of harm and may confine its restrictions to those cases where the need is deemed to be the clearest.

15. A dealer who keeps at any one time, less than ten quintals of any one foodgrain or less than twenty-five quintals of all foodgrains taken together, will generally be a petty dealer in foodgrains. The dangers of hoarding and creating artificial scarcity of foodgrains, may be less from them than from bigger dealers. Moreover, it will be difficult for such petty dealers to apply for licences and for their renewal, to maintain accounts, to issue receipts or invoices and to submit returns. Having regard to these factors, it cannot be said to be unreasonable to exempt such petty dealers from applicability of these two Licencing Orders.

16. Clause (a) of Condition No. 2 of the Wholesale Licence (in Form-B), reads:

2 (a) The licensee shall carry on the afore-said business at the following places;

.....
17. Mr Jagadisha Sastry submitted that a wholesale dealer has generally to purchase foodgrains from growers spread over a large part of the State or from millers who purchase foodgrains from growers and sell the same after milling, that it would not reasonably be practicable for a wholesale dealer to specify, at the time of applying for licence, all the places at which he may have to buy foodgrains from growers or such millers, and that if he buys foodgrains at any place not specified in Condition No. 2 (a) of the licence he will be contravening the conditions of the licence. Mr. Jagadisha Sastry added that it would be practically impossible for a wholesale dealer to know in advance from which growers he may buy foodgrains and to specify at the time of applying for renewal thereof, the places at which such purchases may have to be made by him.

18. But the learned Government Pleader submitted that the places of business referred to in Condition No. 2 (a) of the wholesale licence, have been understood by the authorities as referring only to places where a wholesale dealer sells foodgrains and not to places where he purchases foodgrains. On the other hand, it was stated by Mr. Jagadisha Sastry that in some places the authorities have found fault with wholesale dealers for purchasing foodgrains at places not mentioned in Condition No. 2 (a) of their Licences.

19. Whatever may be understanding of the meaning of the term, 'place of business', by the authorities, it is clear that in the case of a wholesale dealer, his activity of purchasing foodgrains is as much a part of his business as the activity of selling foodgrains. Without purchasing foodgrains he cannot sell them. Hence, the term, 'the place of business', refers as much to the place where he purchases, as to the place where he sells.

20. We think Mr. Jagadisha Sastry is right in contending that the restriction that a wholesale dealer should purchase foodgrains only at the places specified in the licence for stocking and selling, would make it very difficult for him to secure foodgrains required for his business of selling.

21. When a wholesale dealer is required (under Condition No. 3) to show in his stock register, the places from which he purchases foodgrains and when even a miller has to obtain a permit (under Condition No. 9 (3)) to sell foodgrains to a wholesale dealer, we are unable to see what necessity there is for the restriction that a wholesale dealer should not buy foodgrains at places other than those specified in his licence for carrying on business. The State has also not filed any counter-affidavit explaining why such restriction is necessary.

22. It is well settled, a legislation has to strike a proper balance between the freedom guaranteed under Article 19 (1) (g) and the social control permitted by Clause (6) of Article 19. A restriction which is arbitrary or of an excessive nature beyond what is required in the interest of the general public, cannot be said to contain the quality of reasonableness and does not come within the protection of clause (6) of Article 19. Hence, we hold that Condition No. 2 (a) in Form-B of the wholesale licence, is invalid in so far as it prohibits a wholesale dealer from purchasing foodgrains at places other than those specified in such licence for carrying on business.

23. Clause (i) of Condition No. 7 of both the wholesale and retail licences (in Form-B) reads:

7. The licensee shall not—

(i) enter into any transaction involving purchase, sale or storage for sale of foodgrains in a speculative manner, prejudicial to the maintenance and easy availability of supplies of foodgrains in the market.

24. Neither the word, 'speculation', nor the word, 'speculative', has been defined in the Act or in either of two Licencing Orders. According to the Shorter Oxford Dictionary, the word, 'speculate', means to engage in buying and selling of commodities or effects in order to profit by rise or fall in market.

25. It is, no doubt, undesirable that dealers should either buy or sell foodgrains not for the normal purpose of furthering distribution thereof but merely to take advantage of anticipated rise or fall in prices thereof. The aforesaid condition may, no doubt, embody a laudable moral injunction to dealers. But the question is how to find out whether any buying or selling by a dealer, is not in the course of normal trade but merely for the purpose of making profit by anticipated rise or fall in price. Even a bona fide trade transaction carries with it an element of risk on account of rise or fall in prices, whether anticipated or not.

26. The learned Government Pleader did not dispute that it is extremely difficult, if not impossible, to find out which transaction of a dealer, is normal and bona fide and which transaction, is speculative. However, he said that the existence of this condition is desirable because it warns a dealer as to what he ought not to do. The learned Government Pleader added that, at any rate, the said condition is harmless.

27. On the other hand, Mr. Jagadisha Sastry argued that such a vague condition in the licence, will subject dealers to needless uncertainty and harassment by the authorities. We think the criticism of Mr. Jagadisha Sastry is well founded. In the absence of specified criteria for determining what transactions are speculative, the Condition No. 7 (i) in the licence must be held to be void on account of vagueness of uncertainty.

28. The relevant part of Condition No. 9 of the Wholesale Licence, reads:

9. The licensee shall not sell foodgrains to any person other than a person registered with him as a retail dealer (including himself if he also sells in retail);

Provided that—

(1) The licensee may sell at wholesale rates direct to consumers who purchase in bulk a bag of one quintal or more....

(2) x x x x x x x x

(3) The licensing authority may permit a wholesale dealer to sell foodgrains to another licensed wholesale dealer in the State.

x x x x x x x x

29. Thus, a wholesale dealer is prohibited from selling foodgrains to another wholesale dealer except under a permit issued by the licensing authority.

30. Mr. Jagadisha Sastry argued that the need to obtain a permit on every occasion when a wholesale dealer wants to sell foodgrains to another wholesale dealer, causes unnecessary delay and trouble and imposes an unreasonable restriction on the freedom to sell foodgrains. Mr. Jagadisha Sastry also said that a wholesale dealer in rice, very often purchases it from a miller who is also regarded as a wholesale dealer and that every time a miller wants to sell rice to a wholesale dealer who is not a miller, Condition No. 9 (3) requires the former to apply to the licensing authority for a permit.

31. Apart from sales of rice by a miller to a wholesale dealer who is not a miller, ordinarily, there appears to be no necessity for a wholesale dealer selling foodgrains to another wholesale dealer. When there is shortage of foodgrains, it is desirable that there should be free and quick flow of foodgrains from growers or importers to consumers without passing through too many intermediaries. Sales by one wholesale dealer to another may cause delay in foodgrains reaching ultimate consumers and there will also be danger of speculative buying and selling, and concerning (cornering—Ed.) of foodgrains by some wholesale dealers in anticipation of rise in prices. If in any special circumstances a wholesale dealer finds it necessary to sell foodgrains to another wholesale dealer, he can apply to the licensing authority for a permit for the same, explaining the reason therefor.

32. Even when a miller wants to sell rice to wholesale dealers who are not millers, it should not be difficult for him to obtain permits from the licensing authority. Unless such sales are prohibited except under permits, it will be, difficult for the authorities to keep track of movement of foodgrains.

33. But Mr. Jagadisha Sastry submitted that every wholesale dealer has to maintain a stock register showing, inter alia, from which he purchases goods and to whom he sells goods and the quantities of such purchase and sale, and hence there is no need for the authorities prohibiting sales between wholesale dealers. But mere maintenance of stock registers by dealers, may not be sufficient to keep track of movement of foodgrains from dealers to dealers and to prevent hoarding or cornering of foodgrains, or sending them outside the State.

34. Having regard to the necessity for preventing hoarding and cornering of foodgrains and sending them outside the State, the prohibition against a wholesale dealer selling foodgrains to another wholesale dealer in the State except under a permit, cannot be said to be an unreasonable restriction.

35. Condition No. 3 of the wholesale as well as retail licenses, requires that the licensee shall except when specially exempted by the State Government or by the licensing authority in this behalf, maintain a register of daily accounts for each of the foodgrains he has been licensed to deal showing correctly—

- (a) the opening stock on each day;
- (b) the quantities received on each day showing the place from where and the source from which received;
- (c) the quantities delivered or otherwise removed on each day showing the places of destination; and
- (d) the closing stock on each day.

36. The licensee is also required to complete his stock accounts for each day on the day to which they relate, unless prevented by reasonable cause, the burden of proving which, shall be upon him.

37. Condition No. 4 of both the wholesale and the retail licenses, requires the licensee (except when specially exempted by the State Government or by a duly authorised officer) to submit to the concerned licensing authority a true return, in Form 'C' (contained in Schedule II to each of the Licensing Orders), of the stocks, receipts and deliveries of each of the foodgrains. Such return shall be fortnightly, in the case of a wholesale dealer and monthly, in the case of a retail dealer. Such return shall be sent within 5 days after the close of the fortnight or within 10 days after the close of the month, as the case may be.

38. Condition No. 10 of both the wholesale licence and the retail licence, requires the licensee (except when specially exempted by the Government or by a duly authorised officer), to issue to every customer a correct receipt or invoice, as the case may be, giving certain particulars of himself and of the purchaser, the date of the transaction, the price per quintal and the total amount charged. The licensee is required to keep duplicates of such receipt or invoice to be available for inspection by the authorities.

39. Mr Jagadhisha Sastry contended that the aforesaid conditions requiring maintenance of stock register, submission of returns and issue of receipts and invoices, constitute excessive unnecessary and unreasonable restrictions and that the requirements of those conditions are unworkable and impossible of performance.

40. Mr Jagadhisha Sastry complained that it would be very difficult for a dealer to complete his stock accounts for each day on that day itself because he might receive goods in lorries just at the close of the day and that it would not be practicable to enter into stock register the particulars of the quantities so received and to close the stock account on that day itself. Mr Jagadhisha Sastry added that likewise a dealer may effect a very large number of sales on a day and that it would not be practicable to enter in the stock register all the particulars of the quantities delivered on that day and to close the stock accounts on that day itself.

41. Ordinarily, it should not be difficult for a dealer to enter in his stock register the aforesaid particulars of goods received and goods sold and to strike the balance of stock at the close of each day. Even if his transactions are very numerous, he should see that each day the transactions are closed sometime before the close of his working hours of that day so that he will have sufficient interval of time to make necessary entries in the stock register and to strike the closing balance of stock on that day. If in an unusual situation he is not able to do so, Clause (2) of Condition No. 3 protects him if he establishes that he was prevented by reasonable cause from making such entries and striking the stock balance for that day. Hence, it cannot be said that the requirement of Condition No. 3 is an unreasonable restriction.

42. We are unable to see how the requirement (under Condition No. 10) that dealers should issue receipts or invoices and keep duplicates thereof for inspection, can be said to be an unreasonable restriction. Petty dealers are outside the purview of these Licensing Orders. Even under the provisions of the Sales Tax Act, dealers who have a taxable turnover, have to issue such receipts or invoices.

43. The requirement (under Condition No. 4) that dealers should submit periodical returns to the authorities, also cannot be said to impose any excessive burden on them (dealers).

44. Unless dealers maintain daily accounts of stocks and strike the closing stock balance each day, issue receipts or invoices and submit periodical returns, proper enforcement of the provisions of the Licensing Orders and conditions of the licences, would not be possible. We have no hesitation in holding that the restrictions imposed by Conditions Nos. 3, 4 and 10, of the wholesale and retail licences, are not unreasonable restrictions.

45. We shall now deal with Clause II of both the Licensing Orders empowering entry, search and seizures.

46. In W P No 3876 of 1968 and connected petitioners we considered the validity of the corresponding provision i.e., Cl 8, in the Mysore Essential Commodities (other than Foodstuffs) (Maintenance of Accounts, Display of Prices and Stocks) (Second) Order, 1967 (hereinafter referred to as the Non-edible Essential Commodities Control Order). There we held that the powers of entry and search under Clause 8 of that Order, are valid. But we held that the power of seizure under that clause, is valid only when such seizure is made by an enforcement Officer who is also a Police Officer and not when such seizure is by an Enforcement Officer who is not a Police Officer.

47-48. The circumstances which inclined us to the view that such seizure by an Enforcement Officer other than a Police Officer, is invalid, were briefly as follows:—

Clause 8 is silent as to what an Enforcement Officer is required to do after seizing the articles mentioned in that Clause. It is not provided therein that he should produce such articles before a Magistrate or any higher authority within any particular time or return them to persons from whom they are seized. Nor is there any provision regulating the custody of such articles. But where seizure is made by a Police Officer who has been appointed as Enforcement Officer, provisions of Section 523 of the Code of Criminal Procedure are attracted. If he seizes any articles under Clause 8, he has to report the same to a Magistrate under that section and such property will be regulated by judicial orders of such Magistrate. The owner of such property can approach the Magistrate for their return if there is any unreasonable delay in placing a charge-sheet for any offence in connection with the alleged commission of which they were seized. But the provisions of Section 523, Criminal Procedure Code, are not attracted where such seizure is made by an Enforcement Officer who is not a Police Officer. If after such seizure he takes no further steps, the owner of those articles will be deprived of the use thereof, they will be exposed to deterioration, decay or loss of value. Such owner has no remedy under the Act or the Non-edible Essential Commodities Control Order. Such was our view in the aforesaid petitions.

49. When we rendered our decision in W. P. No. 3876 of 1968 and connected petitions, we had over-looked the amendment of Section 6-A of the Act by the Essential Commodities (Second Amendment) Act, 1967 (hereinafter referred to as the Second Amendment Act). Section 6-A, as it stood before such amendment, provided that where any foodgrains, edible oil seeds or edible oils are seized in pursuance of an order made under Section 3 in relation thereto, they may be produced without unreasonable delay before the Collector of the District or the Presidency Town in which the foodgrains, edible oilseeds or edible oils are seized and whether or not a prosecution is instituted for the contravention of that order, may order confiscation of foodgrains, edible oil seeds or edible oils. By the Second Amendment Act, the words 'foodgrains, edible oilseeds or edible oils', occurring in Section 6-A, have been substituted by the words, 'essential commodity'. It is not necessary here to say what our decision in W. P. No. 3876 of 1968 and connected petitions, would have been if the amendment had been brought to our notice and we had considered the effect thereof.

50. Though Clause 11 of the Wholesale Licensing Order and the Retail Licensing Order as well as Clause 8 of the Non-edible Essential Commodities Control Order, provide, for entry, search and seizure there is material difference in the language of said Cl. 11 and that of said Clause 8. We have set out both these Clauses hereunder:

Clause 11 of Wholesale and Retail Licensing Order.

Clause 8 of the Non-edible Essential Commodities Control Order.

11. Powers of entry, search and seizure, etc.—

(1) The licensing authority or any other officer authorised by the State Government in this behalf, may with such assistance, if any as he thinks fit,—

(a) require the owner, occupier or any other person in charge of any place, premises, vehicles, or vessels in which he has reason to believe that any contravention of the provisions of this Order or of the Conditions of any licence issued thereunder has been, is being, or is about to be committed to produce any book, accounts, or other documents showing transactions relating to such contraventions;

(c) take or cause to be taken, extracts from or copies, of any documents showing transactions relating to such contraventions which are produced before him;

(d) search, seize and remove stocks of foodgrains and the animals, vehicles, or other conveyances used in carrying the said foodgrains in contravention of the provisions of this Order, or of the conditions of the licences issued thereunder and thereafter take or authorise the taking of all measures necessary for securing the production of stocks of foodgrains and the animals, vehicles, vessels or other conveyances so seized, in a Court and for their safe custody pending such production.

(2) The provisions of Sections 102 and 103 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (Central Act 5 of 1898) relating to search and seizure shall so far as may be, apply to searches and seizures under this clause.

8. Power of entry, search and seizure.—

(1) The Enforcement Officer may with a view to securing compliance with this Order, or to satisfy himself that the provisions of this Order have not been contravened—

(a) enter into or search any premises, vehicles, vessels, or other conveyances in which he has reason to believe that contravention of this Order has been, is being, or is about to be committed;

(b) seize the stock of essential commodities along with the packages, coverings or receptacles in which such essential commodity is found and the animals, vehicles, vessels or other conveyances used in carrying such essential commodity in respect of which the officer has reason to believe that a contravention of this Order has been, is being, or is about to be committed.

(2) The provisions of Sections 102 and 103 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (Central Act 5 of 1898) relating to search and seizure shall, so far as may be, apply to searches and seizures under this clause.

51. In the said Clause 8, the words, "with a view to securing compliance with this order, or to satisfying himself that the provisions of this order have not been contravened, occur in the opening part of that Clause and hence govern sub-clauses (a) and (b) of that clause. Thus, the power of entry, search and seizure can be exercised by an Enforcement Officer only for the aforesaid purpose and such power is not an unguided, unregulated, unconditional or unqualified one.

52. But, in Clause 11 of the Wholesale and Retail Licensing Order, the words, "has reason to believe that any contravention of the provisions of this Order or of the conditions of any licence issued thereunder has been, is being, or is about to be committed do not occur in the opening part of that Clause, but occur only in sub-clauses (a) and (b) and not in sub-clause (d) which provides for search and seizure. In sub-cl (d) the words "in contravention of the provisions of this Order, or of the conditions of the licence issued thereunder" relate only to the words, "animals, vehicles or vessels or other conveyances used in carrying of the said foodgrains", but not the words, "stock of foodgrains" which also may be seized.

53. The resultant position is that the power to search any premises in which foodgrains may be stored, and the power to seize and remove stocks of foodgrains, are not regulated by any guiding principle and are not controlled by any conditions like the Enforcement Officer having reason to believe that any contravention of the provisions of the respective licence has been, is being or is about to be committed. Thus, the power, of search, seizure and removal in regard to stocks of foodgrains is unguided, uncontrolled and unqualified. There is no check on the exercise of such power by an Enforcement Officer. Thus, the powers conferred by Clause 11 are so wide as to enable the Enforcement Officer to seize stocks of foodgrains, even without the least suspicion of there being any contravention of any of the provisions of the Orders or the licence.

54. No doubt, sub-clause (2) of Clause 11 provides that the provisions of Sections 102 and 103 of the Code of Criminal Procedure relating to search and seizure shall, so far as may be, apply to searches and seizures under Clause 11 also. The only safeguards available under Sections 102 and 103, Criminal Procedure Code are:

- (i) The search shall be made in the presence of two or more respective (respectable — Ed) inhabitants of the locality in which the place to be searched is situate;
- (ii) A list of all things seized in the course of such search and the places in which they are respectively found, shall be prepared and signed by the said witnesses; and

- (iii) A copy of list of things taken possession of, shall be delivered to the person searched or the occupant of the place searched.

55. But these safeguards are only in regard to the manner in which search and seizure should be conducted and not in regard to the conditions precedent for exercising the powers of search and seizure. These safeguards do not afford any protection against the licensing authority or an authorised officer searching any premises and seizing stocks of foodgrains without any reasonable cause. Sub-clause (d) of Clause 11 of both the Licensing Orders, which empowers search and seizure even without the safeguard that the Enforcement Officer should have reason to believe or suspect contravention of the provisions of the Licensing Orders or the conditions of licence, cannot (but—Ed) be regarded as being arbitrary, unguided and uncontrolled and violative of the fundamental rights of dealers under Art. 19 of the Constitution to carry on trade and to hold property. But the power of search under sub-cl (h) of Clause 11, does not suffer from such infirmity, as such power can be exercised only when the Enforcement Officer has reason to believe that there has been any contravention of the provisions of the Orders or the conditions of the licence.

56. To sum, up we hold that:

- (i) Condition No. 2 (a) of the Wholesale Licence, is invalid in so far as it operates to prohibit a licensee from purchasing foodgrains at places other than those specified in the licence as places of his business;
- (ii) Condition No. 7 (i) of the Wholesale and the Retail Licence, is invalid;
- (iii) Sub-clause (d) of Clause 11 of both the Wholesale Licensing Order and the Retail Licensing Order, is invalid to the extent it empowers search of premises and seizure of stocks of foodgrains; and
- (iv) The power of search under sub-cl. (b) of Clause 11 of both these Orders, is valid.

57. Clause 11 of the Wholesale Licensing Order and Clause 11 of the Retail Licensing Order, and Conditions Nos. 2 (a) of the Wholesale Licence and 7 (i) of the Wholesale Licence and the Retail Licence, are quashed only to the extent stated above.

58. As the petitioners have succeeded only partially, we direct parties to bear their own costs.

Order accordingly.

(A) T. P. Act (1882), Section 108, Cl. (o) — Lease of premises for residential purposes to businessman — Carrying on some business work during spare time in small portion of premises without running a shop — User not inconsistent with purpose of lease.

Even though a house is taken for residential purpose by a professional man it does not prevent him from carrying on some professional work in the house during spare time. Some occupation and profit-making activities by such person in a small portion of the house unostentatiously and without running a shop or causing any nuisance do not amount to conversion of a residential premises into a non-residential one. P. Ganapathy Bhat, for Petitioner; K. Balakrishna Rao, for Respondent.

ORDER: The petitioner before this Court is the landlord. Petitioner filed a petition under Section 21 (1) (b), (c) and (d) of the Mysore Rent Control Act of 1961 (hereinafter referred to as the Act) against the respondent-tenant and prayed that because the tenant had contravened said provisions, the tenant is liable to be evicted from the said premises. The trial Court held that the petitioner has made out the contravention of the provisions of sub-clauses (b) and (d) of Section 21 (1) of the Act and passed an order of eviction. The appeal filed by the tenant was allowed by the learned District Judge of South Kanara. The learned District Judge held that the petitioner has not made out the contravention of provisions of sub-cls. (b) and (d) of Section 21 (1) and allowed the appeal. In this revision petition, the petitioner challenges the said order passed by the learned District Judge.

2. Shri Ganapathy Bhat, learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the petitioner has contended that the learned District Judge has not considered the evidence of all the witnesses examined on behalf of the petitioner. It is also stressed that the learned District Judge had not adverted to the admissions made by the respondent and his witnesses. If the evidence of the petitioner's witnesses and the admissions made by the respondent are taken into consideration, he submits, there cannot be any doubt that the respondent was carrying on tailoring business in the premises let out to him for residential purposes. He argues that the petitioner has clearly made out contravention of Clause (o) of Section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act and undoubtedly the premises have been used for a purpose other than that for which it was leased. It is also contended, if tailoring work is carried on in a residential premises late in the night it will cause nuisance to the neighbours and the petitioner had also made out a case under Section 21 (1) (d) of the Act. Shri Ganapathy Bhat has relied on (1953) 2 Mad LJ 625 = (AIR 1954 Mad 514); (1964) 2 Mad LJ 288; (1959) 2 Mad LJ 240; AIR 1952 Trav-Co 290 in support of his contentions.

3. Shri Balakrishna Rao, learned counsel appearing on behalf of the respondent has supported the order passed by the learned District Judge. He has stressed the fact that in the quit notice (Ex. A.1) given by the petitioner dated 25th April, 1966, the petitioner has nowhere referred to the respondent carrying on tailoring business in the said premises nor had the petitioner referred to the nuisance caused by the respondent when carrying on tailoring business in his residential premises. This is an important circumstance to be borne in mind in judging evidence let in by the petitioner and the lower appellate court has considered this important factor when deciding the points at issue. It is also argued by the learned counsel for the respondent that if in a premises let out to the respondent, for residence a portion of that premises is used for carrying on business, it will not violate the provisions of clause (o) of Section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act. The learned District Judge has accepted the version of the respondent that the respondent had also been carrying on the work of a tailor in his residence for a number of years. The learned counsel has strongly relied on (1919) 1 Mad LJ 74 = (AIR 1919 Mad 785) and (1959) 2 Mad LJ 240 and 1911 (2) All ER 167 in support of his said contention. It is also contended that quit notice should have been issued to the respondent bringing to his knowledge the alleged breach, as the case of the petitioner was that there was a breach of contract under Section 105, sub-clause (c) of the Transfer of Property Act. It is argued that it is obligatory to bring to the knowledge of the other party the breach committed before the petitioner-landlord claims re-entry. It is contended that the lower appellate court has considered all the material evidence in the case. The lower appellate court did not consider P. W. 5's evidence as it was not material. This non-consideration of P. W. 5's evidence does not in any way cause injustice to the parties. It is also argued that it is open to this court under Section 50 of the Act to go into the entire evidence and arrive at its own conclusion. In support of this proposition reliance is placed on 1969 (1) SCWR 1142. It is urged that the conclusions arrived at by the appellate court are correct, and no case is made out calling for interference in revision with orders passed by the learned District Judge.

4. The important question for consideration in this case is, if in a premises leased out for residential purposes to a professional man, the said person carries on some professional work in his residence, whether he will be violating sub-clause (c) of Section 108. In Jugraj Jain v. Ambikapathi Pillai, (1959) 2 Mad LJ 240 this question has been considered by the Madras High Court. It has been laid down in the said decision as follows:—

"Even though a house is taken for purely residential purposes, some occupation and profit-making activities by the resident therein, in a small portion unostentatiously and without running a shop or causing any nuisance, are inevitable and permissible in these days of complex civilization."

"The third contention of Mr. Inamdar was that even regarding the premises let out for purely residential purposes, a reasonable portion could be used for occupational and profit-making purposes provided there was no conversion of the residential premises to non-residential premises, and no nuisance was caused, and it is unobstructive and quiet affair not involving the running of a shop or the gathering of crowds. As laid down by me in Krishna Nair v. Valliammal approved by a Full Bench of this Court in (1919) 1 Mad LJ 74 = (AIR 1919 Mad 785) a premises must be deemed to be taken and used for 'residential purposes' though a portion of the premises may be used for making appalam when people are not sleeping there and used for sleeping purposes when appalam are not made there."

In the said decision it has been pointed out: "a lawyer may advise his clients in a room of his house; a doctor may give consultation to his clients in a room of his house; an astrologer may give his predictions to his clients in a room of his house, a barber may have his select and urgent clients in a room of his house; a papadam maker can make papadam in a room of his house; provided the portions so used form only a fraction of the entire premises and does not alter the nature of the premises from residential to non-residential purpose."

5. Shri Balakrishna Rao has also strongly relied on a decision of the English Court Vickery v. Martin, (1914) 2 All ER 167. In the said decision the observations made by Lord Greene M. R., in Hicks v. Snook, (1928) 93 JP 55 is quoted and it is to this effect:

"To that case the Court of Appeal held that as he was dwelling in the house and had a right to dwell in the house, the house was a dwelling-house, and the fact that besides being a dwelling house part of it was used for business premises did not prevent it being a dwelling house to which the Act applied."

In 1944-2 All ER 167 the tenant had taken the premises for residential purpose but she made use of a portion of the said residential house as a sort of boarding house taking in paying guests. At page 170, His Lordship has observed as follows:—

"Here, as I have said, this house is unquestionably in my opinion a dwelling house. On the facts, it was impossible to hold otherwise. It was a house in which this lady lives. She had the exclusive part use of it. It is her home. She has her husband to come and live there when he is available, and her children, and it is hers exclusively subject to such licences as she may from time to time grant to such persons as come as lodgers, or guests, in the house. Subject to that . . . . . it is her home and her house, and there she lives. If the judge's judgment is to be read as saying this is not a dwelling house then, in my opinion, there was no justification on the evidence for so holding."

6. I will now examine the evidence in the instant case. P. W. 2 examined on behalf of the petitioner has stated that the respondent is a tailor and the respondent is doing tailoring work for the last six months inside his house itself. Some of his customers come to his house. P. W. 3 has also similarly stated that the respondent was doing tailoring work in his house since about seven months. He has also stated that, respondent is getting customers to his house. P. W. 5 has also stated that the respondent was doing tailoring work in his house since eight months. The respondent does his tailoring work during night times and he (P. W. 5.) does not get sleep due to noise caused by the work. Nowhere the witnesses have stated that the respondent has converted the house into a tailoring shop. There is no evidence to show that the respondent had put up any board in the house nor do the witnesses say that the respondent was carrying on the profession of tailoring in this house. It is no doubt true that the learned District Judge has not made any specific reference to the evidence of P. W. 5. But as pointed out by me, the evidence of this witness is similar to that of the other witnesses examined on behalf of the petitioner so far as this question is concerned, and all that they have stated is that the respondent was doing tailoring work in his house.

7. The case of the respondent is that for the past 20 years since he has been residing in the said premises, he has been doing some tailoring work in his house during his spare time. In his counter stated, even when he was carrying on tailoring work in his shop, he was having a machine in his house to enable him to do some tailoring work in his house also. He has stated for the last 18 years he had been doing so in the said premises, to the full knowledge of the landlord and other neighbours. In his evidence also, he has stated that he had been carrying on tailoring work in his house for a number of years. He has also stated that he has closed the shop in 1966 at Pintos Gate as his eye sight was failing. He has stated that he was not doing tailoring work in his house but his son does it from 7 a. m. to 8 a. m. only. It is no doubt true, as pointed out by Shri Ganapathy Bhat, that in cross-examination, respondent has stated that all his customers come to his house after he has closed the shop. But in the very next sentence he has stated that his customers were coming to his house even when he had the shop. The two witnesses examined on behalf of the respondent, R. W. 1 and R. W. 2, have also stated that respondent has been doing tailoring work in his house for about 20 years.

8. It is clear from the evidence referred to above, the respondent was doing tailoring work in his house in his spare time. The evidence discloses that he has been doing so for about 18 to 20 years. There is no evidence before the court to show that the respondent had shifted his shop after the closure of his shop at Pintos Gate to his house, and was carrying on the tailoring business in his residential house. As already stated, no witness has stated that the respondent has put up a board in his residential house, or made any structural alterations. From what has been stated above, it is clear that the principle laid down in the two Madras decisions referred to above applies to the facts of the instant case. Even though a house is taken for residential purpose, it does not prevent the person from carrying on his profession in the said premises during his spare time as has been pointed out by Madras High Court. Simply because a lawyer meets his clients in his house and transacts some legal work, or a doctor sees some patients in his house, a residential house is not converted into a non-residential one. It is also to be borne in mind that it is not disputed that the respondent and his family members were residing in the said premises. The fact that they were incidentally carrying on tailoring work in the house does not amount to conversion of a residential premises into a non-residential one. The learned District Judge, after discussing the evidence has rightly come to the conclusion that in his opinion, the ground of user for purposes, other than that for which it has been leased out, is not made out and the provisions of clause (o) of Section 108, of Transfer of Property Act, have not been violated in the instant case.

9. The next question for consideration is, whether there has been contravention of sub-clause (d) of Section 21 of the Act. It may at once be mentioned that there is absolutely no mention in the quit notice issued by the petitioner that the carrying on of the tailoring business has been a nuisance or annoyance to the neighbours. If really, the respondent was carrying on the work of tailoring late in the night and it was disturbing the petitioner and the neighbours, one would have expected petitioner to mention it specifically in the quit notice issued by her dated 25th April, 1966. Though some of the witnesses examined on behalf of the petitioner have stated that they could not get sleep because he was carrying on the work late in the night, the evidence discloses that they are interested witnesses and much weight cannot be attached to their evidence. I agree with the learned District Judge, that it is not possible to accept the contention that the sound of a sewing machine constitutes by itself a nuisance. The learned District Judge is right in coming to the conclusion that the petitioner has not made out that the respondent had contravened provisions of sub-clause (d) of Section 21 of the Act.

10. In the result, there is no merit in this revision petition and the same is dismissed with costs.

Petition dismissed.

Partnership Act (1932), Section 69 (2) — Suit by firm against third party — Proof, that persons suing are partners — Modes of.

The two requirements which must be fulfilled before a suit can be instituted to enforce a contractual right by the firm or on behalf of the firm are (1) that the firm is a registered one and (2) that the persons suing are or have been shown in the Register of Firms as partners. The suit would be wholly incompetent if either of these conditions is not fulfilled. AIR 1909 Cuj 178, Rel. on. (Para 10)

The second condition really consists of two alternatives and it is enough if one of them is fulfilled. Those alternatives are (1) that the persons suing must establish that they are partners or (2) that they are persons whose names are shown in the Register of Firms as partners. The second alternative requires production of the Register or a certified copy thereof. Oral evidence would not be allowed. But there is no bar to prove the first alternative by adducing evidence other than production of Register or its certified copy. Oral evidence can be used to prove that persons suing are partners. P. Vasudeva Aithal, for Petitioners; U. L. Narayana Rao, for Respondents.

ORDER: This is a revision petition filed by the original defendants 2 and 3 against the decree passed by the II Additional Civil Judge, Mangalore, in Small Cause Suit No. 387 of 1963 under Section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act.

2. It is the plaintiff's case that M/s. Panchamal Vasudev Canapath Kamath and Bros. is a registered partnership firm. The suit has been filed by the firm and in the name of the firm by its partner Sri Panchamal Vasudev Kamath. The case of the plaintiff is that defendants 1 to 3 who were doing business in the name and style of "National Trading Co. Bmdr Mangalore" purchased from the plaintiff goods worth Rs. 4,077-87 P. on credit on 6-10-1960. The defendants having paid only a sum of Rs. 2,400 they are, according to the plaintiff, liable to pay the balance of Rs. 1,677-87 P. and interest thereon.

3. Defendant No. 1 denied his liability by contending that he was never a partner of 'National Trading Company' and that he had no dealings in any capacity with the plaintiff. The lower Court accepting the case of defendant no. 1 has dismissed the suit as against defendant no. 1. That part of the decree has not been challenged by the plaintiff and hence the same has become final.

4. Defendants 2 and 3 resisted the suit on various grounds. Defendants 2 and 3 have averred that they were not the partners having any business dealings with the plaintiff, they denied the suit transaction and the liability arising therefrom. They further denied that the plaintiff is a Registered firm or that Sri Panchamal Vasudev Kamath is a partner of the firm entitled to represent the alleged firm. They, therefore, contended that the suit is not maintainable in view of Section 69 (2) of the Indian Partnership Act.

S. The learned Civil Judge framed the following points for determination in the suit:

(i) Whether the suit is maintainable in view of the provisions of Section 69 (2) of the Indian Partnership Act; and

(ii) Whether the amount claimed by the plaintiff is payable by the defendants?

6. In view of the production of the acknowledgement of Registration, Ex. A-1, by the plaintiff, defendants 2 and 3 did not press their contention that the plaintiff was not a Registered firm on the date of suit. The defendants however contended that the suit is not maintainable as the plaintiff has not produced the extract of the Register of Firms showing Sri Panchamal Vasudev Kamath as a partner of the firm on the date of suit as required by Section 69 (2) of the Indian Partnership Act.

The learned Civil Judge held that under Section 69 (2), it is not incumbent upon the plaintiff-firm to produce the extract of Register of firms showing the names of the partners. He held that production of a certificate showing the registration of the firm is sufficient. He held that Ex. A.1 established that the plaintiff is a registered firm. He further held that Sri Panchamal Vasudev Kamath is a partner of the firm on the basis of the sworn testimony of Sri Panchamal which has not at all been challenged in cross-examination by any of the defendants. After analysing the evidence placed by the parties the learned Civil Judge came to the conclusion that defendants 2 and 3 are liable to the plaintiff to the extent of Rs. 1,986-09 P. and interest on Rs. 1,677-87 at 6% p. a. from 3-10-1963. The learned Civil Judge passed a decree accordingly against defendants 2 and 3 only on 11-10-1966, in the above referred Small Cause Suit No. 387 of 1963.

7. It is the correctness of the aforesaid decree that is challenged by defendants 2 and 3 in this revision petition filed under Section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act.

8. Sri P. Basudev Aithal, the learned counsel for the petitioner contended that the suit ought to have been dismissed by the trial court as the mandatory requirements of Section 69 (2) of the Indian Partnership Act have not been fulfilled on the ground that the plaintiff has not produced the extract of Register of firms showing Sri Panchamal Vasudev Kamath as a partner of the plaintiff firm. The learned counsel contends that Section 69 (2) is mandatory and that as there is non-compliance with the same, the suit ought to be dismissed. The two mandatory requirements of Section 69 (2) according to the learned counsel are:

(1) That the firm is a registered one:

(2) that the persons suing are or have been shown in the Register of Firms as partners in the firm.

The learned counsel for the petitioners does not dispute that the suit has been instituted by the firm to enforce a right arising from a contract against a third party. He also does not dispute that the firm is a registered one. He conceded that the provisions of Order 30, Rule 1 of the Civil P. C. have been complied with. The learned counsel for the petitioners urges that the suit ought to be dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff has not produced an extract of the Register of firms showing Sri Panchamal as a partner of the firm on the date of suit.

9. Section 69 (2) on which reliance is placed by the petitioner's counsel reads as follows:

"No suit to enforce a right arising from a contract shall be instituted in any Court by or on behalf of a firm against any third party unless the firm is registered and the persons suing are or have been shown in the Register of Firms as Partners in the Firm."

10. This provision specifically bars the institution of a suit by or on behalf of a firm to enforce a right arising from a contract makes (unless?) the conditions specified in Section 69 (2) are satisfied. The use of the expression "No suit ..... shall be instituted in any court...." clearly indicates the intention of the Legislature to make this provision mandatory. The two requirements which must be fulfilled before a suit can be instituted to enforce a contractual right by the firm or on behalf of the firm are: (1) that the firm is a registered one and (2) that the persons suing are or have been shown in the register of firms as partners of the firm. As these are the conditions for the institution of the suit, the relevant date with respect to which these conditions must be satisfied is the date of the institution of the suit. On the date of the institution of the suit, the firm must be a registered one and the persons suing must either be partners or persons whose names are shown in the register of firms as partners. Both the conditions are mandatory and must be fulfilled. The suit would be wholly incompetent if either of these conditions is not fulfilled. The learned counsel for the petitioners invited my attention to a decision of the Gujarat High Court reported in Bharat Sarvodaya Mills Co. Ltd. v. M/s. Mohatta Brothers A Firm, AIR 1969 Guj 178. The view taken by their Lordships of the Gujarat High Court in this behalf accords with the view I have taken above. I therefore respectfully agree with the said decision.

11. The learned counsel for the petitioners contends that the second condition mentioned in Section 69 (2) has not been satisfied in this case as admittedly the respondent has not produced the extract from the Register of firms showing Sri Panchamal Vasudev Kamath as a partner of the firm. Dealing with this aspect of the matter, this is what the learned Civil Judge has observed in this case:

"In view of the case law cited by the learned advocate for the plaintiff, I hold that the suit is maintainable even though the extract of Register of firms showing the partners has not been filed by the plaintiff as Ex. A.1 clearly shows that the plaintiff is a registered firm and P. W. 1 has stated on oath that he is a partner of that firm and he has not been cross-examined by any of the defendants regarding the fact of his being a partner of the plaintiff firm."

The learned counsel for the petitioners fairly conceded that there is no cross-examination whatsoever of P. W. 1 challenging the sworn statement of P. W. 1 that he is a partner of the plaintiff firm. P. W. 1 is no other than Sri Panchamal Vasudev Kamath.

The learned counsel also fairly conceded that barring the averment in the written statement there is no other evidence to indicate that Sri Panchamal Vasudev Kamath was not a partner of the plaintiff firm on the date of suit. But the learned counsel for the petitioners urges that the second condition cannot be satisfied by any evidence other than the extract of the register of firms. He further contends that as no such extract has been produced in this case, the second condition which is a mandatory condition has not been fulfilled in this case.

He therefore contends that the suit ought to be dismissed. In support of his contention, the learned counsel for the petitioners relied on a decision of the Nagpur High Court reported in Kapurchand Bhagaji Firm v. Laxman Trimbak, AIR 1952 Nag 57. The relevant portion of the aforesaid decision on which reliance was placed by the learned counsel for the petitioners is extracted below:

There can be no doubt that the Register of Firms is a public document and the requirements of Section 69 (2) are complied with by producing a certified copy of an entry from this register. The primary evidence of a document is the document produced for the inspection of the Court and secondary evidence means and includes certified copies given under Section 76 of the Evidence Act. Under Section 64 of that Act documents must be proved by primary evidence except in cases mentioned in Sec 65. Under Section 65 (e) a certified copy of a public document but no other kind of secondary evidence is admissible to prove the original.

It will thus be clear that the evidence of P. W. 1 is not admissible as secondary evidence to prove the fact of registration. It is not enough to prove that the firm was registered but it must also be proved that the persons suing are or have been shown in the Register of Firms as partners of the firm. There is no evidence that the three partners have been shown in the Register of Firms. That fact could be proved only by producing a copy of the entry from the Register of Firms. The lower Court thus fell into error in relying on the evidence of P. W. 1 and holding that the requirements of Sec 69 (2) of the Partnership Act were satisfied. The plaintiff's suit should have been dismissed on this ground.

This decision no doubt supports the case of the petitioners. I agree with the view expressed by Justice Deo that the only evidence that can be produced to prove that the persons suing have been shown in the Register of Firms as partners in the firm is the relevant register of firms or a certified copy of the same. I also agree that oral evidence cannot be adduced to prove that the names of the persons suing have been shown in the register of Firms as partners in the firm. But with great respect, I do not agree with the view that oral evidence cannot at all be adduced to prove the second condition. The second condition really consists of two alternatives and it is enough if one of them is fulfilled. The second condition of Sec. 69 (2) reads as follows.

"... and the persons suing are or have been shown in the Register of firms as partners in the firm."

12. It is clear from this provision that there are two alternatives available in the second condition. The persons suing may establish either that they are partners on the date of suit or that they are persons whose names are shown in the register of firms as partners in the firm. As already observed, the second alternative, namely, the fact that the names of the persons suing have been shown in the Register of firms as partners of the firm can be established either by producing relevant Register of firms or a certified copy of the same and not by adducing oral evidence. But there is no legal bar to prove the first alternative, namely, that the persons suing are partners of the firm by adducing evidence other than the register of firms or its certified copy. It appears that pointed attention of the court has not been invited to the first alternative of the second condition in above referred case decided by the Nagpur High Court. In my opinion the persons suing must either in fact be partners on the date of suit or must be persons whose names are shown as on the date of suit in the Register of Firms as partners of the firm. Even if the names of the partners suing have not yet been entered in the Register of firms, they can still institute the suit by proving that they are in fact partners of the firm on the date of suit. That can only be proved by evidence other than the Register of firms. I therefore respectfully disagree with the view taken by Justice Deo in the decision reported in AIR 1952 Nag 57. In my opinion, oral evidence other than the Register of Firms or its extract can be adduced to prove that the persons suing are partners of the firm as on the date of suit.

13. In the present case, P. W. 1 Sri Panchamil has stated on oath that he is the partner of the plaintiff firm. There is no cross examination of this witness on this point. Barring a general averment in the written statement of the defendants, there is no other material to doubt the testimony of P. W. 1. The learned Civil Judge has therefore rightly believed P. W. 1 and held that Sri Panchamil is a partner of the firm. Consequently, both the conditions specified in Section 69 (2) have been satisfied in this case. The contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner that the suit is not maintainable must therefore fail.

14. The learned Civil Judge has after appreciating the evidence on record decreed the suit. The learned counsel for the petitioners has not been able to invite my attention to any infirmities in the judgment of the lower court in this behalf. I do not find any grounds to interfere with the decree passed by the lower court.

15. For the reasons stated above, this revision petition is dismissed with costs.

Revision dismissed.

NARAYANA PAI, J.: The petitioner who was working as a civilian motor transport driver attached to the Airforce Station at Yelahanka, was served with a notice dated 11-11-1968, issued by the Officer Commanding the Station, under Rule 5 (1) (a) of the Central Services (Temporary Service) Rules, 1965, terminating his services with effect from the date of expiry of a period of one month from the date of service or tender of the notice. The petitioner impugns the validity of the said notice, and contends that it is illegal as well as violative of his fundamental rights under the Constitution and that therefore, it should be quashed by the issue of an appropriate writ.

2. That the petitioner was entertained as a temporary Government servant is an admitted fact. It is also admitted that though he had completed four and a half years of service at the time of notice was issued, he had not been invested with the status of a quasi-permanent Government servant. Although it is a minimum qualification for such a status to complete three years of service, it is well established that unless an express order is made declaring such a status, no temporary Government servant acquires quasi-permanency of service. Hence the petitioner has to be considered only as a temporary Government servant and his rights, if any, allegedly violated by the impugned notice have also to be ascertained on that basis.

3. The rule under which the impugned notice was issued, reads:—

“5. (1) (a) The services of a temporary Government servant who is not in quasi-permanent service shall be liable to termination at any time by a notice in writing given either by the Government servant to the appointing authority, or by the appointing authority to the Government servant.”

The rest of the Rule is not relevant.

4. The impugned notice reads as follows: “In pursuance of sub-rule (1) of Rule 5 of the Central Civil Services (Temporary Service) Rules, 1965, I hereby give notice to Shri Varghese George that his service shall stand terminated with effect from the date of expiry of a period of one month the date on which this notice is served, or as the case may be, tendered to him.”

5. The arguments in support of the prayer for the issue of a writ are only two,— (1) that though the notice purports to be one of termination of service under Rule 5 (1) (a) of the Rules, it is only a cloak for actual punishment of dismissal without giving an opportunity to the petitioner to defend himself against such proposed action; (2) that it violates his fundamental right under Article 16 because, twenty seven persons who were appointed subsequent to himself and therefore juniors to him, had been retained in service.

6. On both these matters, the law is now well settled by the rulings of the Supreme Court. Hence, no discussion of principles is called for. On the first point, all the cases bearing thereon have been discussed by the Supreme Court in the case of State of Punjab v. Sukh Raj, AIR 1968 SC 1089 and the general effect thereof summarised in paragraph 16 of the Judgment is as follows:—

1. The services of a temporary servant or a probationer can be terminated under the rules of his employment and such termination without anything more would not attract the operation of Article 311 of the Constitution.

2. The circumstances preceding or attendant on the order of termination of service have to be examined in each case, the motive behind it being immaterial.

3. If the order visits the public servant with any evil consequences or casts an aspersion against his character or integrity, it must be considered to be one by way of punishment, no matter whether he was a mere probationer or a temporary servant.

4. An order of termination of service in unexceptionable form preceded by an enquiry— “enquiry launched by the superior authorities only to ascertain whether the public servant should be retained in service, does not attract the operation of Article 311 of the Constitution.

5. If there be a full scale departmental enquiry envisaged by Article 311, i. e., an Enquiry Officer is appointed, a charge sheet submitted, explanation called for and considered, any order of termination of service made thereafter will attract the operation of the said article.

7. Now, in this case, if one reads only the notice, no exception whatever can be taken to it. It does not even say, as was stated in a similar case considered by the Supreme Court in Jagdish Mitter v. Union of India, AIR 1964 SC 449 that the petitioner is an undesirable person. The argument strongly pressed on behalf of the petitioner before us, however, is that in the counter affidavit filed on behalf of the respondent, certain previous instances of misconduct or misdemeanour on his part have been set out resulting in punishment by way of warning or censure having been imposed and also a statement that action to terminate his service under Rule 5 (1) (a) was decided upon after he became incorrigible. These circumstances, according to the argument, must be regarded as giving quite a different complexion to the notice which on the face of it, may appear perfectly innocent or innocuous. It is difficult to accept this contention, because, so far as the previous cases of misdemeanour or misconduct are concerned, they had already terminated by the imposition of warning or censure by way of punishment. At the time the notice was issued, it is not the case that there was any enquiry pending in which a finding of guilt had been recorded against him. If there had been any such finding, then the issue of a notice may be logically connected therewith and termination regarded as punishment. In the case of Sukh Raj, AIR 1968 SC 1039 referred to above, there was, in fact, such an enquiry instituted by the issue of a charge-sheet and followed by the receipt of explanation from the delinquent, but, no further steps were taken. In those circumstances, the Supreme Court held that there was no occasion to apply the principles stated in the previous cases of Madan Gopal v. State of Punjab, AIR 1963 SC 531 or AIR 1964 SC 449.

8. Another ruling of the Supreme Court which answers these contentions as well as the second contention of the petitioner is, the unreported case of Union of India v. Prem Prakash Midha, Civil Appeal No. 865 of 1968, D/- 14-8-1969 = (reported in AIR 1969 NSC 155). In that case, there was only a formal notice under Rule 5 (1) of the same type as in the present case without any adverse remark against the Government servant, and the Supreme Court held that such a notice cannot be regarded as amounting to any type of punishment or even a stigma. Regarding the availability of Article 16 in cases of this type, this is what their Lordships state in that decision.

"The District Court also held that when the service of the respondent was terminated and officers junior to him were retained in service, the respondent was denied equal opportunity to public service under Art. 16 of the Constitution. But there is nothing in Article 16 of the Constitution which supports the view expressed by the learned District Judge. By Article 16 all citizens are entitled to equality of opportunity in matters relating to employment or appointment to any office under the State. By merely terminating the employment of the respondent, the respondent was not denied of equal opportunity to hold public service. Under Article 16 of Constitution, it is not one of the fundamental rights that a person who is an employee of the State shall be entitled to continue in service and that his employment shall not be terminated so long as persons junior to him remain in service."

9. Reliance however, was placed on a previous ruling of a Bench of this Court in Doddiah v. State of Mysore, 1967-2 Mys LJ 100 = (AIR 1967 Mys 223). In that case, a portion of the observation contained in the decision of the Supreme Court in Champaklal Chimanlal Shah v. Union of India, AIR 1964 SC 1854 was extracted and it was held that the retrenchment of some persons while retaining juniors in service was discriminatory and violative of Article 16. The portion of the observation relied upon was,—

".... This is not a case where services of a temporary employee are being retrenched because of the abolition of a post. In such a case a question may arise as to who should be retrenched when one out of the several posts is being retrenched in an office. In those circumstances, qualification and length of service of those holding similar temporary posts may be relevant in considering whether the retrenchment of a particular employee was as a result of discrimination....."

But the decision of the Supreme Court itself in Champaklal Chimanlal's case, AIR 1964 SC 1854 did not lay down the broad proposition that termination of services of even temporary Government servant while retaining a person junior to him in service amounts to contravention of Article 16 (1) of the Constitution as the head-note of the report in Doddiah's case, 1967-2 Mys LJ 100 = (AIR 1967 Mys 223) does. What the Supreme Court held was:—

"..... This Rule (Rule 5 (1) (a) which we are now concerned) is being attacked on the ground that it is hit by Article 16 which provides that 'there shall be equality of opportunity for all citizens in matters relating to employment or appointment to any office under the State'. We have not been able to understand how this rule can possibly be hit by Article 16, which provides for equality of opportunity. These Rules show that there are two classes of employees namely, (i) permanent employees, and (ii) temporary employees; the latter being divided into two sub-clauses (a) quasi-permanent, and (b) temporary. It is well recognised that the Government may have to employ temporary servants to satisfy the needs of the particular contingency and such employment would be perfectly legitimate. There can also be no doubt, if such a class of temporary servants could be recruited that there would be nothing discriminatory or violative of equal opportunity if the conditions of service of such servants are different in some respects from those of permanent employees. Further we see no denial of equal opportunity if out of the class of temporary employees some are made quasi-permanent depending on length of service and their suitability in all other respects for permanent employment eventually and thus assimilated to permanent employees. It has been urged on behalf of the respondent that Article 16 in any case will not apply to matters relating to termination of service. We do not think it necessary for present purposes to decide whether Article 16 would apply to rules relating to termination of service. We shall assume for the purposes of this appeal that Article 16 will apply even in the case of rules relating to termination of services. But we fail to see how the rule which applies to one class of Government Servants in the matter of termination but does not apply to the other two classes can be said to violate equality of opportunity provided in Article 16. The classification of Government servants into these classes is reasonable and differences in the matter of termination of service between these classes cannot be said to be discriminatory in the circumstances. ....

In view of this clear declaration of the law both in Champaklal's case, AIR 1964 SC 1854 as well as in the latest unreported case in C. A. 865 of 1966 = (reported in AIR 1969 NSC 155) we do not think it is right to regard the decision of this Court in Doddiah's case, 1967-2 Mys LJ 100 = (AIR 1967 SC 223) as an authority for the proposition set out in its headnote. The decision in that case turns upon the facts of that case namely, that there was sufficient material to hold that a certain number of persons out of the same class were discriminated against in favour of certain other persons in the same class. That is certainly not the position in this case in which we are concerned with the right or wrong of the termination of the services of a temporary servant in accordance with the Rule 5 (1), directly governing the position.

10. This writ petition therefore, fails and is dismissed.

(A) Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 488 — Maintenance proceedings — Summary nature — Marriage — Standard of proof — Not so high as in prosecution for bigamy or under Divorce Act — Opinion expressed by conduct of persons having special means of knowledge is sufficient — (Evidence Act (1872), Section 50).

Proceedings under S. 488, Cr. P. C. are summary in nature, meant to prevent vagrancy. The standard of proof of marriage in proceedings under the Section need not be so high as required in prosecutions for bigamy or proceedings under the Divorce Act. Thus, even opinion expressed by conduct of persons who had special means of knowledge on the subject may suffice to prove the fact of marriage in a proceeding under the Section. The proviso to Sec. 50, Evidence Act which does not refer to proceedings under Sec. 488 only says that such opinion shall not be sufficient to prove marriage in proceedings under the Divorce Act or in prosecutions under the Indian Penal Code for bigamy, etc. AIR 1953 Orissa 10 & 1967 Mad LJ (Cri) 311 (Ker), Rel. on; AIR 1965 SC 1564, Dist. (B) Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 489 (2) — Finality of finding as to relationship of husband and wife — Subsequent Civil Court decision — Effect — Magistrate can cancel or vary order.

Even though the Criminal Court may come to the conclusion in a proceeding under Section 488, Criminal Procedure Code that the parties are husband and wife, if a Civil Court gives a different finding on the point, the Criminal Court should alter its finding. (Para 12)

(C) Evidence Act (1872), Section 114 — Marriage — Presumption from continuous and long cohabitation — Rebuttable.

Continuous cohabitation of a man and a woman as husband and wife and their treatment as such for a number of years may raise the presumption of marriage. But the presumption which may be drawn from long cohabitation is rebuttable. When such presumption has arisen from evidence, mere total denial of the husband that he ever lived with her cannot rebut the presumption. AIR 1952 SC 231, Rel. on. (Para 6)

(E) Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 488 — Rate of maintenance — Petitioner claiming maintenance at Rs. 150 per month for herself and her two minor children — Respondent husband owning 14 acres of land and doing contract work and was also income-tax payer — Petitioner held should be granted maintenance at Rs. 35 per month for herself and Rs. 25 each for her minor children.

J. M. Riazuddin, for Petitioners; B. V. Deshpande, for Respondent.

ORDER:— This petition arises out of proceedings taken under Section 488, Criminal Procedure Code. The 1st petitioner before this Court claims to be the wife of the respondent and the petitioners 2 and 3 are said to be her minor children born to the respondent. The 1st petitioner claimed a total sum of Rs. 150/- per month towards maintenance of herself and her 3 minor children. After the enquiry the learned Magistrate dismissed the petition. The petitioners challenge the correctness of the said order passed by the learned Magistrate in this revision petition.

2. Sri Riazuddin, learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the petitioners, has contended that the learned Magistrate, after having accepted the evidence let in by the petitioners, was wrong in dismissing the petition. He has pointed out that the learned Magistrate has also rejected the evidence let in on behalf of the respondent, but yet strangely dismissed the petition. The learned Magistrate has also given a finding that it had been established in evidence that petitioner 1 was the kept mistress of the respondent. It has been argued that the standard of proof of marriage under Section 488, Criminal Procedure Code is different from that laid down either in the Divorce Act or in prosecutions under Secs. 494, 495 and 498, Indian Penal Code. The proviso to Section 50 of the Indian Evidence Act makes this clear. The learned Counsel has strongly relied on AIR 1953 Orissa 10 and 1967 Mad LJ (Cri) 311 (Ker) in support of his said contention. It is also contended that as the 1st petitioner was a widow no specific ceremonies need be performed for a valid Hindu Marriage. The learned Counsel has relied on AIR 1950 Mad 777 in support of his contention that a Hindu marriage need not take place in the presence of a priest, and the tying of a Tali in the presence of an idol is also one of the forms of a marriage known to Hindu Law. It is argued that the evidence given by petitioner 1 and her witnesses clearly makes out a case that the petitioner 1 was the wife of the respondent and petitioners 2 and 3 are his children born to him after his marriage with petitioner 1.

3. The learned Magistrate believed the evidence of P. Ws. 1 and 2 examined on behalf of the petitioners. He has stated that P. Ws. 1 and 2 appear to be disinterested and independent witnesses. Further, there was absolutely nothing on record to suggest that they are either interested in the petitioners or that they had any ill-will against the respondent. He has stated that he had carefully examined the evidence of these witnesses and he was satisfied that their evidence is convincing and they have spoken the truth. The learned Magistrate has also disbelieved the evidence of the witnesses examined on behalf of the respondent. He has held that they are all interested witnesses and persons working under the respondent. After reviewing the evidence, he has accepted the evidence that petitioner 1 and the respondent were living together as husband and wife for a long time, and he finds that petitioner 1 was the kept mistress of the respondent. But strangely enough, after giving such a finding, he has entirely dismissed the petition filed on behalf of the children for maintenance. With regard to the question whether petitioner 1 is the wife of the respondent, he states as follows:—

"If really R. W. 4 had married P. W. 3 at Tirupathi, there was no necessity for him to keep P. W. 3 in a separate house. On the evidence placed a presumption that there was a valid marriage cannot be justified."

45. The first question for consideration in this case is whether the 1st petitioner is the wife of the respondent. The 1st petitioner has been examined as P. W. 3 in the case.

(After discussion of petitioner's evidence his Lordship proceeded.)

6. The learned Magistrate has also accepted the evidence of this witness (P. W. 1) that petitioner 1 and the respondent were living together for a number of years. In Gokal Chand v. Parvin Kumari, AIR 1952 SC 231, their Lordships of the Supreme Court has pointed out that continuous cohabitation of a man and a woman as husband and wife and their treatment as such for a number of years may raise the presumption of marriage. But the presumption which may be drawn from long cohabitation is rebuttable. In the instant case, except denying totally and saying that he never lived with petitioner 1, the respondent has not in any way rebutted the presumption of marriage arising out of the continuous cohabitation as alleged by petitioner 1 and her witnesses.

7. (After discussion of some more evidence His Lordship proceed.) After going through the evidence, I am satisfied that the respondent married the 1st petitioner at Tirupati and thereafter lived with her as his wife in different places and petitioners 2 and 3 were born to the respondent and petitioner 1 after their marriage.

8. It is contended by Shri Deshpande learned counsel appearing on behalf of the respondent, that there is no legal proof whatsoever that the respondent married petitioner 1. Petitioner 1 has not stated what are the ceremonies that were performed at the time of the alleged marriage. She has also not given any evidence about the custom of her community. He argues, there must be strict proof of marriage before maintenance can be awarded under Section 488, Criminal Procedure Code to the wife. He has strongly relied on Bhaurao v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1965 SC 1564. In the said decision, their Lordships have laid down that Section 17 of the Hindu Marriage Act makes the marriage between 2 Hindus void if two conditions are satisfied: (i) the marriage is solemnized after the commencement of the Act and (ii) at the date of such marriage either party had a spouse living. Their Lordships have pointed out that the word 'solemnized' means, in connection with a marriage, 'to celebrate the marriage with proper ceremonies and in due form'. It follows, therefore, that unless the marriage is 'celebrated or performed with proper ceremonies and due form' it cannot be said to be 'solemnized'. It is therefore essential for the purpose of Section 17 of the Act, that the marriage to which Section 494, Indian Penal Code applies on account of the provisions of the Act, should have been celebrated with proper ceremonies and in due form. Merely going through certain ceremonies with the intention that the parties be taken to be married, will not make the ceremonies prescribed by law or approved by any established custom. Their Lordships have also laid down, prima facie, that the expression "whoever . . . marries" in Section 494, Indian Penal Code must mean 'whoever . . . marries' validly. The bare fact of a man and a woman living as husband and wife does not, at any rate, normally give them the status of husband and wife even though they may hold themselves out before society as husband and wife and the society treats them as husband and wife.

9. Sri Deshpande has also relied on Deivanai Achi v. Chidambaram Chettiar, AIR 1954 Mad 657. In the said decision, their Lordships have considered what are the essential ceremonies that are necessary to constitute a valid marriage under the Hindu Law. Their Lordships have referred to the various forms of marriage and the ceremonies that are necessary to be performed to constitute a valid marriage. Their Lordships have also referred to the essentials of a valid custom. The custom must be ancient, certain and reasonable and it cannot be enlarged beyond the usage by parity of reason since it is the usage that makes the law and not the reason of the thing.

10. The petitioner No. 1 has stated that she got married to the respondent at Tirupathi. She has not been asked what were the ceremonies that she underwent during the said marriage. There is no evidence to show that she has not undergone the ceremonies necessary for a valid marriage. In the notice, Ext. P-2, given by her to the respondent, she has stated that she has undergone the marriage according to the religious rites. In the Supreme Court decision mentioned above AIR 1965 SC 1564, their Lordships were considering a case of prosecution for bigamy under Section 494, Indian Penal Code and in that context their Lordships held that the prosecution should prove that the marriage has been duly solemnized. It has to be remembered that proceedings under Section 488, Criminal Procedure Code are summary in nature, meant to prevent vagrancy. The standard of proof of marriage in proceedings under Section 488, Criminal Procedure Code need not be so high as required in prosecutions for bigamy or proceedings under the Divorce Act. In this connection, reference may be made to the proviso to Section 50 of the Indian Evidence Act. Section 50 reads as follows:—

"When the Court has to form an opinion as to the relationship of one person to another, the opinion, expressed by conduct, as to the existence of such relationship, of any person who, as a member of the family or otherwise, has special means of knowledge on the subject, is a relevant fact."

"Provided that such opinion shall not be sufficient to prove a marriage in proceedings under the Indian Divorce Act or in prosecutions under Sections 494, 495, 497 or 498 of the Indian Penal Code."

Illustration (a) to the above Section says:—

"The question is, whether A and B were married. The fact that they were usually received and treated by friends as husband and wife is relevant."

It is pertinent to point out that the proviso does not refer to proceedings under Section 488, Criminal Procedure Code. It only says that such opinion shall not be sufficient to prove marriage in proceedings under the Indian Divorce Act or in prosecutions under the Indian Penal Code for bigamy, etc.

11. In AIR 1953 Orissa 10, Narasimham, J., (as he then was) has pointed out that Section 488, Criminal Procedure Code is not included in the proviso to Section 50 of the Evidence Act. Hence, for proving a marriage in proceedings under Section 488, Criminal Procedure Code, the standard of proof need not be so high as required in proceedings under the Indian Divorce Act or in prosecutions under Sections 494, Indian Penal Code. His Lordship observed that even an opinion expressed by conduct of persons who had special means of knowledge on the subject, may suffice to prove the fact of marriage in a proceeding under Section 488, Criminal Procedure Code.

12. It is contended by Sri Deshpande that the said Orissa decision may not be a good law in view of the later decision of the Supreme Court referred to earlier, i.e., AIR 1965 SC 1564. He also contends that after the Hindu Marriage Act came into force, the requirements laid down in Section 7 should be fully complied with to prove a marriage. As already pointed out, the Supreme Court decision dealt with the case of a prosecution for bigamy and did not consider the question of proof of marriage arising under Section 488, Criminal Procedure Code. Section 50 of the Indian Evidence Act and the proviso stand unaltered. It therefore follows that the strict proof required for proving a marriage in a criminal prosecution or in proceedings under the Divorce Act, is not necessary in a summary proceeding under Section 488, Criminal Procedure Code. It may be pointed out that even though the Criminal Court may come to the conclusion in a proceeding under Section 488, Criminal Procedure Code that the parties are husband and wife, if a Civil Court gives a different finding on the point, the Criminal Court should alter its finding. In this connection, it is pertinent to point out sub-section (2) of Section 489, Criminal Procedure Code which reads as follows:—

"Where it appears to the Magistrate that, in consequence of any decision of a competent Civil Court, any order made under Section 488, should be cancelled or varied, he shall cancel the order or, as the case may be, vary the same accordingly."

This clearly shows that the finding given by the learned Magistrate is not final and if there is a decision of a competent Civil Court, the Magistrate should cancel the order or vary it.

13. After the abovementioned decision of the Supreme Court, in Bebi Bai v. Y. Japamony, 1967 Mad LJ (Cri) 311 (Ker), the Madras High Court held that in a proceeding under Section 488, Criminal Procedure Code, the standard of proof of marriage need not be so high as required either in a proceeding under the Indian Divorce Act or in a prosecution under Section 494, 495, 497 or 498, Indian Penal Code. Thus, even opinion expressed by conduct of persons who had special means of knowledge on the subject may suffice to prove the fact of marriage in a proceeding under the Section.

14. The learned Magistrate has not applied his mind properly to the question of marriage of petitioner 1 with the respondent. The reasons given by him for coming to the conclusion that there was no valid marriage between them cannot be supported. The finding given by the learned Magistrate is as follows:—

"If really R. W. 4 had married P. W. 3 at Tirupathi, there was no necessity for him to keep P. W. 3 in a separate house. On the evidence placed a presumption that there was a valid marriage cannot be justified."

I accept the evidence of petitioner 1 that the respondent married her at Tirupathi. This evidence of petitioner 1 is corroborated by the evidence of P. W. 2. There is no reason to reject the evidence given by these two witnesses. The fact that the respondent married the 1st petitioner at Tirupathi is also set out in the registered lawyer's notice, Ext. P-2, sent by petitioner 1 to the respondent. As already pointed out, though the respondent received the same, he did not send any reply denying the facts mentioned therein that he had married petitioner 1 at Tirupathi.

15. The next question for consideration is whether it has been proved that petitioners 2 and 3 are the children of the respondent, born to him after his marriage with the 1st petitioner. Taking first the case of petitioner No. 2, the 1st petitioner in her evidence has stated that the 2nd petitioner was born after her marriage with the respondent, when they were living together in Mariammanahalli. P. W. 1 has also been examined to prove this fact. P. W. 1 is the midwife residing at Mariammanahalli. She has stated that about 6 years back, the respondent was residing in Mariammanahalli and he was working as a roadway contractor. He was in her village for 3 years. He had kept the 1st petitioner in a separate house there and they were living there together. She has also stated that she attended on the 1st petitioner when she gave birth to the second petitioner. The respondent had sent for her before the delivery and the respondent was in the house at that time. She has also stated that the respondent paid her charges. She has further stated that even after the birth of the 2nd petitioner, petitioner 1 and the respondent were living together for one more year in the said village. The evidence given by P. W. 1 has not at all been shaken in cross-examination. The learned Magistrate who had the benefit of seeing P. W. 1 in the box has held that she is an independent and disinterested witness. He has also stated that there is absolutely nothing on record to show that P. W. 1 was in anyway interested in the 1st petitioner or that she bore any ill-will towards the respondent. The learned Magistrate has held that the evidence given by P. W. 1 is convincing and that she has spoken the truth. It may be pointed out that P. W. 2, whose evidence the learned Magistrate has accepted, has also stated that the 1st petitioner and the respondent were living as husband and wife in Mariammanahalli. He has further stated that they were so living together for 3 years in Mariammanahalli and for 2 years in Bommanahalli.

16. The evidence with regard to the birth of petitioner 3 to the respondent is again spoken to by petitioner 1. She has stated that the third petitioner was born in Bellary in the Government Women's Hospital. She has also produced Ext. P-1 the extract of the birth register relating to the birth of the third petitioner. Ext. P-1 is the certified copy of the extract from the Register of Births, registered in the Bellary Municipality during the month of July, 1966. In the said extract, the name of the mother is given as Vanajakshamma (1st petitioner) and the name of the father is mentioned as Gopalakrishna (respondent). The place of birth is mentioned as Government Women and Children Hospital, Bellary. There cannot be any doubt that Ext. P-1 is a public document and as per Section 77 of the Indian Evidence Act, certified copy of a public document may be produced in proof of the contents of the public document. From the evidence of petitioner 1 and Ext. P-1, it can be reasonably concluded that petitioner 3 was born to the respondent after his marriage with petitioner 1 when they were living at Bellary. I have therefore no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the 2nd and 3rd petitioners are the children born to the respondent after his marriage with the 1st petitioner at Thirupathi.

17. The next question for consideration is as to what rate of maintenance petitioners 1 to 3 are entitled. Petitioner 1 in her evidence has stated that the respondent is a contractor, that he owns a house and 10 acres of land. She has also stated that he owns a lorry and he earns on an average Rs. 700/- to Rs. 800/- per month. She has also stated that she requires Rs. 150/- per month for their maintenance. The respondent in his cross-examination has admitted that he has got 14 acres of land in his own name at Kollegal. He has also admitted that he is doing contract work along with his elder brother. He has admitted that they had one lorry, but stated that they have now sold it. He has also admitted that they pay income-tax. The respondent stated that when there is work he gets about Rs. 200/- to Rs. 300/- per month from the contract work. Though he admitted that he has got 14 acres of land, he has stated that he gets an income of only Rs. 100/- per year from the land. Taking the admission of the respondent himself, it shows that he has got 14 acres of land in his own name. He has also admitted that he is doing contract work and paying income-tax. Taking the evidence let in by the parties with regard to the income of the respondent, I am of opinion that it is reasonable to award a maintenance of Rs. 35/- (Rupees thirty five only) per month to the 1st petitioner and Rs. 25/- (Rupees twenty five) each, per month to the 2nd and 3rd petitioners, from the date of the petition.

18. In the result, for the reasons mentioned above, I allow this revision petition, set aside the order passed by the learned 1st Additional Munsiff-Magistrate, Bellary and award maintenance at Rs. 35/- per month to the 1st petitioner, and at Rs. 25/- each per month to the 2nd and the 3rd petitioners from the date of the petition.

Revision allowed.

S. G. Bhat, for Petitioner; E. S. Venkata-ramaiah, for Respondent.

CHANDRASHEKHAR, J.:— The petitioner was a member of the Mysore Judicial Service in the rank of Subordinate Judge. In this petition, he has assailed the disciplinary proceedings against him culminating in an order retiring him from service compulsorily.

2. We may now state the material facts which are not in dispute.

3. In the year 1963 the petitioner was working as the Principal Subordinate Judge in Bangalore. On 8-10-1963 one Annappa Setty (examined as P. W. 9 in the disciplinary enquiry) submitted a complaint to the

GN/HN/D400/70/RSK/C

Director, Anti-Corruption, making certain allegations against the petitioner regarding the disposal of a steel almirah which had been attached in an execution case pending before him.

4. The said Director forwarded that complaint to the High Court on 13-10-1963. On 14-10-1963 the Hon'ble Chief Justice requested Mr. Justice Narayana Pai to hold a preliminary enquiry on that complaint and to report. After holding a preliminary enquiry, Mr. Justice Narayana Pai sent a report in which he stated that in his opinion there was a prima facie case for instituting disciplinary proceedings against the petitioner.

5. On the report of the preliminary enquiry, the Hon'ble Chief Justice directed on 19-10-1963 that the Governor might be moved to appoint Mr. Justice K. S. Hegde as the Specially Empowered Authority to hold a Departmental Enquiry against the petitioner. In pursuance of that direction the Registrar-in-charge of the High Court addressed on 23-10-1963 a demo-official letter to the Secretary to the Government of Mysore in Home Department stating that he (the Registrar-in-charge) was directed to request the Secretary to move the Governor to appoint Mr. Justice K. S. Hegde as the Specially Empowered Authority to hold a Departmental Enquiry into the conduct of the petitioner under Rule 11 of the Mysore Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules, 1957.

6. Purporting to act in exercise of the powers conferred by that Rule, the Governor of Mysore, by his order dated 8-11-1963, specially empowered Mr. Justice K. S. Hegde, Judge of the High Court of Mysore, to exercise the powers and perform the functions of the Specially Empowered Authority under the said Rule in respect of the disciplinary proceedings against the petitioner.

7. On 18-12-1963 the Specially Empowered Authority framed a charge against the petitioner. The said charge reads:

"That you while being the Principal Subordinate Judge, Bangalore, misused your official position with a view to secure monetary benefit either for yourself or for your father-in-law by utilising the services of the Process Nazir and the Process Staff attached to the First Munsiff's Court, Bangalore, to get up false records to show that all the six Godrej Almirahs got attached in Original Suit No. 215 of 1960 on the file of the Subordinate Judge's Court, Bangalore, were sold in the Court auction held, while actually one Godrej Almirah was not sold in auction but was merely shown to have been sold in the relevant sale papers for a low price of Rs. 150/-, but later you got the Almirah removed to the house wherein you and your father-in-law reside."

8. The petitioner filed a written statement in which he denied having committed any of the acts alleged in the charge. He asked for an oral enquiry and to be heard in person.

Accordingly, the Special Empowered Authority held an enquiry in which 9 witnesses were examined in support of the charge. The petitioner examined defence witnesses and he also gave evidence as a defence witness.

9. After such enquiry, the Special Empowered Authority, in his report dated 16-3-1964, held that the charge against the petitioner was established and found him guilty of the charge. Regarding the punishment, the Special Empowered Authority recommended that the petitioner might be reduced to the rank of Civil Judge, Junior Division (Munsiff), and that he should not be considered for promotion as Civil Judge, Senior Division, or as Subordinate Judge for a period of two years.

10. After considering the report of the Specially Empowered Authority, the Governor recorded his finding that the charge was proved. The Governor caused the issue of a notice under Article 311 (2) of the Constitution proposing to retire the petitioner compulsorily from service by way of punishment. The petitioner was asked to show cause why the proposed action should not be taken. After considering the representation of the petitioner in response to the said notice, the Governor, by his order dated 31-10-1964, directed that the petitioner be retired compulsorily from service with immediate effect. The petition for review of the aforesaid order, was dismissed by the Governor on 1-4-1965.

11. Thereafter the petitioner filed the present petition which was dismissed by this Court on 16-7-1965 at the stage of admission without notice to the respondent. Later this Court granted a certificate of fitness to appeal to the Supreme Court.

12. In the appeal, Civil Appeal No. 1735 of 1967, after hearing the petitioner and the respondent (The State of Mysore), the Supreme Court, by its order dated 22-8-1969, set aside the order of this Court dated 16-7-1965, and remanded the case to this Court for being disposed of afresh according to law. The Supreme Court directed this Court to admit this petition, to issue notice to the respondent giving it an opportunity to file any counter-affidavit and thereafter to deal with the case in accordance with the law laid down by the Supreme Court in the State of West Bengal v. Nripendra Nath Bagchi, AIR 1966 SC 447.

13. Accordingly, this Court admitted this petition on 3-10-1969 and issued notice to the respondent (the State of Mysore) which has filed a counter-affidavit. This is how the petition has now come up before us.

14. The ground on which the Supreme Court set aside the order of this Court dated 16-7-1965, is that this Court had not considered the aspect that by Article 235 of the Constitution, the High Court is made the sole custodian of the control over the judiciary and as pointed out by the Supreme Court in AIR 1966 SC 447, the word, 'Control', as used in Article 235, includes disciplinary control or jurisdiction over District Judges and other subordinate Judges. Before the Supreme Court, it was, no doubt, contended on behalf of the respondent that by its letter dated 23-10-1963 the High Court had itself requested the Government to appoint Mr. Justice K. S. Hegde as the Specially Empowered Authority to hold the Departmental enquiry into the conduct of the petitioner and therefore the provisions of Article 235 of the Constitution had been substantially complied with. But the Supreme Court did not examine the validity of the plea of substantial compliance (with the provisions of Article 235 of the Constitution) as it (Supreme Court) felt that it did not have the advantage of the judgment of this Court on that disputed point.

15. Mr. S. G. Bhat, learned Counsel for the petitioner, urged the following grounds before us:

(i) The disciplinary proceedings initiated by the Governor and culminating in the order of compulsory retirement of the petitioner passed by the Governor, are void as being inconsistent with the provisions of Article 235 of the Constitution;

(ii) Rules 8, 9 and 11 of the Mysore Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules, 1957, in so far as they relate to the Judicial Service, are violative of Article 235 of the Constitution;

(iii) The order of compulsory retirement is not one of the punishments which falls within Article 311 of the Constitution;

(iv) The finding of the Specially Empowered Authority that the petitioner was guilty of the charge, is unsustainable as it is not based on any evidence; and

(v) The Governor should have given to the petitioner an opportunity of being heard, before recording a finding that the charge was proved."

16. Elaborating the first contention, Mr. Bhat argued that it is the High Court and not the Governor that can hold a disciplinary enquiry against a Judicial Officer, that the order of the Governor appointing Mr. Justice K. S. Hegde as the Special Empowered Authority, is void and consequently, the enquiry held by Mr. Justice K. S. Hegde has also no legal validity, and that the punishment based on an invalid enquiry is also void. It was also argued by Mr. Bhat that the Governor had no power to impose on the petitioner the punishment of compulsory retirement, in the absence of a recommendation by the High Court to that effect.

17. In AIR 1966 SC 447, the material facts were briefly these: Respondent Bagchi was an Additional District & Sessions Judge, and was acting as District & Sessions Judge. The Government of West Bengal framed certain charges against him and appointed Mr. B. Sarkar, the Commissioner (late Member, Board of Revenue) to hold an enquiry into those charges. Mr. Sarkar held the enquiry and reported to the Government that some of those charges were proved. A notice was issued to Bagchi to show cause why he should not be dismissed. After he had shown cause and after consulting the Public Service Commission, he was dismissed from service. But the High Court was not consulted at all. On a petition by Bagchi under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution, the High Court at Calcutta quashed the order of dismissal as well as the enquiry.

18. In the appeal preferred by the Government of West Bengal, the Supreme Court upheld the decision of the High Court. Explaining the scope of Article 235 of the Constitution, Hidayatullah, J., (as he then was) who spoke for the Court, said that the word 'control' in Article 235 of the Constitution is not merely the power to arrange the day-to-day working of the Court but includes control over the conduct and discipline of Judges, and that the High Court is made the sole custodian of the control over judiciary.

His Lordship added:

"Control is useless if it is not accompanied by disciplinary powers. It is not to be expected that the High Court would run to the Government or the Governor in every case of discipline however small and which may not even require the punishment of dismissal or removal."

19. It was contended before the Supreme Court in Bagchi's case, AIR 1966 SC 447 that Judicial Officers who are appointed by the Governor, cannot be dismissed or removed by any authority other than the Governor and consequently an inquiry against a Judicial Officer should be made by or under the directions of the Governor or the Government. Repelling that contention, Hidayatullah, J., said that the Governor appoints District Judges and the Governor alone can dismiss or remove them, does not infringe upon the control of the High Court and does not lead to the further conclusion that the High Court must not hold the enquiry any more than that the Governor should personally hold the enquiry. His Lordship added that there is nothing in Article 311 which compels the conclusion that the High Court is ousted of the jurisdiction to hold the enquiry, that in exercise of the control vested in the High Court, the High Court can hold enquiry, impose punishments other than dismissal or removal subject however to the conditions of service and right of appeal if granted by the conditions of service and to giving an opportunity of showing cause as required by clause (2) of Article 311, unless such opportunity is dispensed with by the Governor acting under the provisos (b) and (c) of that clause. His Lordship concluded that the High Court alone could have held the enquiry in that case.

20. In view of the above pronouncement of the Supreme Court, it is clear that an enquiry held by or under the authority of the High Court, forms, the foundation for any punishment that may be imposed on a judicial Officer. It follows from the above decision that in the present case also it is High Court that could have held the enquiry against the petitioner. The Governor had no power to order such enquiry or to empower any person to hold such enquiry. Even though the Specially Empowered Authority who held the enquiry against the petitioner, was a Judge of the High Court, he was not empowered by the High Court to hold that enquiry and the enquiry held by him cannot be regarded as one by or under the authority of the High Court.

21. However, the attempt of the learned Advocate-General who appeared for the State, was a salvage as much as possible of the disciplinary proceedings against the petitioner. The learned Advocate-General submitted that even if we were to hold that the disciplinary proceedings against the petitioner subsequent to the stage of the report of the Specially Empowered Authority, are void, we should uphold the disciplinary proceedings up to the stage of the said report, so that it may be open to the High Court now to take disciplinary proceedings against the petitioner starting from the stage of that report.

22. The learned Advocate-General argued that the appointment of the Specially Empowered Authority must be regarded as being, in substance, one made by the High Court and that likewise the enquiry made by the Specially Empowered Authority must be regarded as being, in substance, one held under the authority of the High Court, in view of the following circumstances:

- (i) The initiative to take disciplinary proceedings against the petitioner, came from the High Court and not from the Governor;
- (ii) The Specially Empowered Authority who held the enquiry was a Judge of the High Court; and
- (iii) The Governor empowered the very person proposed by the High Court, as the Specially Empowered Authority.

23. It can reasonably be inferred that in empowering Mr. Justice K. S. Hegde as the Specially Empowered Authority, the Governor did not act suo motu but acted on the letter addressed by the Registrar-in-charge of the High Court to the Government stating that he (The Registrar-in-charge) had been directed to request the Government to move the Governor to so appoint Mr. Justice K. S. Hegde. It is true that the Governor empowered the very person so recommended as the Specially Empowered Authority to hold the enquiry and that the Specially Empowered Authority was a Judge of the High Court. But are these circumstances sufficient to hold that Mr. Justice K. S. Hegde was, in substance, appointed by the High Court and the enquiry held by him was, in substance, under the authority of the High Court?

24. Mr. Bhat argued that there is nothing to show that the said letter of the Registrar-in-charge of the High Court to the Government was written under the direction of the High Court. The learned Advocate-General placed before us the relevant records of the High Court. It is seen from these records that on the report of Mr. Justice A. Narayana Pai who held the preliminary enquiry, the Hon'ble Chief Justice directed that the Governor might be moved to appoint Mr. Justice K. S. Hegde as Specially Empowered Authority.

25. It was contended by Mr. Bhat that the recommendation of the Hon'ble Chief Justice to appoint Mr. Justice K. S. Hegde as the Specially Empowered Authority, cannot be regarded as a recommendation by the High Court. This contention was sought to be met by the learned Advocate-General by the plea that in making the said recommendation the Hon'ble Chief Justice acted within the scope of the powers assigned to him by the High Court. In support of this plea, the learned Advocate-General relied on the resolution of the Full Court of the High Court at its meeting held on 11-10-1961. A copy of this resolution has been filed with a memo and the original of this resolution contained in the administrative papers of the High Court, was also shown to us.

26. The relevant parts of the proceedings of the meeting of the Full Court held on 11-10-1961, read :

"Proceedings of the Full Court meeting held at 4.30 P. M. on Wednesday the 11th October 1961 in the Judges' Common Room (High Court).

RESOLUTION

The proposed arrangement for administrative work in the High Court was finalised as follows:—

- |   |    |    |
|---|----|----|
| I. FULL COURT:  | .. | .. |
| 1. ..   | .. | .. |
| 2. Disciplinary action against Judicial Officers.   | .. | .. |
| 3. ..   | .. | .. |
| II. C. J. & TWO JUDGES:   | .. | .. |
| 1. ..   | .. | .. |
| 2. Preliminary investigations to consider desirability of taking disciplinary action against Judicial Officers. | .. | .. |
| 3. ..   | .. | .. |
| III. Chief Justice:   | .. | .. |
| 1. ..   | .. | .. |
| 2. Unspecified subjects or new subjects until they are allocated to committees or individual Judges."           | .. | .. |

27. It is seen from the above resolution of the Full Court that while preliminary investigation and determination of desirability of taking disciplinary action against Judicial Officers come within the powers of a Committee consisting of the Hon'ble Chief Justice and two other Judges, disciplinary action against Judicial Officers is a matter to be dealt with by the Full Court itself. Appointment of the Specially Empowered Authority or the Enquiry Officer to hold enquiry into charges against a Judicial Officer, comes, in our opinion, within the ambit of "disciplinary action against Judicial Officers" which is a matter to be dealt with by the Full Court itself and the Hon'ble Chief Justice has not been empowered by the said resolution to make such appointment.

28. However, the learned Advocate-General argued that appointment of the Specially Empowered Authority or the Enquiry Officer in disciplinary proceedings against a Judicial Officer, comes within Item No. 7 of the matters assigned to the Hon'ble Chief Justice by the said resolution of the Full Court. That Item reads: "Unspecified subjects or new subjects until they are allocated to Committees or individual Judges". We find it difficult to accede to this contention. Item No. 7 is a residuary item which covers only those matters which do not come within any of the matters retained by the Full Court or assigned to Committees consisting of the Hon'ble Chief Justice and two other Judges or any of the first six Items (preceding this Item) assigned to the Hon'ble Chief Justice. Appointment of the Specially Empowered Authority or the Enquiry Officer is a part of the disciplinary action against Judicial Officers and squarely falls within Item No. 2 of the matters retained by the Full Court under the said resolution.

29. In exercise of the powers conferred by Article 225 of the Constitution and under Section 19 of the Mysore High Court Act, 1961, and all other powers thereunto enabling, the High Court of Mysore has made rules, called the High Court of Mysore Rules, 1959, with respect to practice and procedure to be followed at the High Court. Rule 6 of Chapter III of these Rules provides that Benches shall be constituted and judicial work of the Court shall be allotted or distributed to them by or in accordance with the directions of the Hon'ble Chief Justice. But the power conferred on the Hon'ble Chief Justice under this Rule is only in regard to Judicial Work and not administrative matters.

30. Thus it is clear that the Hon'ble Chief Justice has not been empowered to appoint on behalf of the High Court the Specially Empowered Authority or the Enquiry Officer. The question of appointment of the Specially Empowered Authority or the Enquiry Officer to hold an enquiry against the petitioner, was not considered by the Full Court of the High Court. It follows that the direction of the Hon'ble Chief Justice on 19-10-1963 that the Governor might be moved to appoint Mr. Justice K. S. Hegde as the Specially Empowered Authority, cannot be regarded as a recommendation or proposal made by the High Court to the Governor in regard to such appointment. When there was no recommendation or proposal of the High Court in this behalf, the appointment of Mr. Justice K. S. Hegde by the Governor cannot be regarded as being, in substance, an appointment made by the High Court, nor can the enquiry made by him be regarded as being, in substance, one made by the High Court.

31. As the very foundation for any disciplinary action against the petitioner, namely, an enquiry held by the High Court, is absent in the present case, the penalty of compulsory retirement imposed on the petitioner by the impugned order of the Governor dated 31-10-1964, is clearly unsustainable.

32. Another infirmity in the disciplinary proceedings against the petitioner, is that the report of the enquiry held by Mr. Justice K. S. Hegde, was not considered by the High Court. As stated earlier, Mr. Justice K. S. Hegde had recommended in his report that the petitioner should be reduced to the rank of Civil Judge, Junior Division (Munsiff) and that he should not be considered for promotion as Civil Judge, Senior Division, or Subordinate Judge, for a period of two years. If the High Court agreed with this proposed penalty or considered that the appropriate penalty to be imposed on the petitioner, was one other than his dismissal or removal from service, the High Court itself was competent to impose such penalty on the petitioner and the matter could not have been referred to the Governor. It is only when the High Court considers that the appropriate penalty against a Judicial Officer is dismissal or removal from service that the High Court need recommend to the Governor to impose such penalty.

33. In the view we have taken on the first ground urged by Mr. Bhat, it is unnecessary to consider the other grounds urged by him.

34. For the foregoing reasons, we quash the order of the Governor dated 31-10-1964 retiring the petitioner compulsorily from service and the enquiry held by Mr. Justice K. S. Hegde. However, it will be open to the High Court to take fresh disciplinary proceedings against the petitioner according to law.

35. As the impugned disciplinary proceedings were prior to the elucidation by the Supreme Court in Nripendranath Bagchi's case, AIR 1966 SC 447 of the respective powers of the High Court and the Governor in disciplinary matters against Judicial Officers, we direct the parties to bear their own costs in this petition.

Petition allowed.

D. M. CHANDRASHEKHAR, J.

Rangayya Kananthas and others, Petitioners
v. Govinda Chatra and others, Respondents.Civil Revision Petition No. 1314 of 1968, D/- 5-2-1970, against order of Civil I,
Udipi, D/- 31-8-1968.(A) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 26, R. 9 — Object of local investigation under — Investigation is merely to assist Court.

The local investigation made by the Commissioner under Order 26, Rule 9 is merely to assist the Court by placing a report of such local investigation before the Court. Such report is not, in any way, binding on the Court whose power to arrive at its own conclusion, even at variance with such report, is in no way impeded by such report.

(Para 11)

(B) Civil P. C. (1908), Order 26, Rule 9, Section 115 — Trial Court holding that appointment of Commissioner under Order 26, Rule 9 would amount to abdication or delegation of powers of court to Commissioner — By such erroneous view court held declined to exercise jurisdiction to appoint Commissioner — Failure justified interference in revision.

(Para 14)

(C) Civil P. C. (1908), Order 26, Rule 9 — Suit for partition and possession — Defendant's claim for improvements — Issue of commission — Directions to defendant and plaintiff.

Where in a suit for partition and possession the defendants apply for the appointment of commission to visit the properties and to estimate the value of improvements made by them, before issuing the commission the defendants shall be directed to set out clearly, in detail, the improvements claimed, the reasons why they are claimed and the value claimed. The plaintiffs shall then be called upon to make their rejoinder on those points. The Court shall thereafter judicially consider both the statements and then decide on what points, if any, it regards commission as necessary and will then issue a commission with detailed instructions accordingly. ORDER: This petition is for revision of the order of the Civil Judge at Udipi, rejecting an application for appointment of a Commissioner under Order 26, Rule 9, Civil P. C.

2. The suit is for partition and possession of the plaintiffs' share in certain agricultural lands and buildings. The plaintiffs who claim to be the reversioners, have contended that the alienations of the suit properties by the widow of the last male owner, are not binding on them.

3. Defendants 11, 12, 19, 22, 23 and 25 who are the alienees of the suit properties, have claimed inter alia, that they have effected improvements in the suit properties by spending several thousands of rupees and that even if the alienations in their favour are held to be not binding on the plaintiffs, they (those defendants) are entitled to some equities in respect of the said improvements.

4. The said defendants made an application I. A. III, praying for the appointment of a Commissioner to visit the said properties and to estimate the value of the improvements made by them. According to them, such appointment of a Commissioner would save a good deal of time and expenditure in proving those improvements and the value thereof.

5. That application was resisted by the plaintiffs mainly on the ground that the alienees are not entitled to the value of the alleged improvements.

6. The learned Civil Judge has said in his order that the Court can itself conduct an investigation in order to ascertain the improvements alleged to have been effected by the said defendants, that a local investigation by the Commissioner under Order 20, Rule 9, Civil P. C., presupposes the existence of independent evidence on record, that the issue whether the defendants have effected any improvements has to be tried by the Court on the evidence adduced by the parties, that the decision on this material issue can never be left to the Commissioner and that the Court cannot delegate any of its judicial functions to the Commissioner. In that view, the learned Civil Judge felt that it was improper to issue any commission to assess the value of the alleged improvements.

7. Mr. B. P. Holla, learned counsel for the petitioners, contended that the learned Civil Judge has entirely misconstrued the scope and object of the local investigation by the Commissioner appointed under O. 26, Rule 9, Civil P. C. and that on account of such erroneous view, he failed to exercise the jurisdiction vested in him under O. 26, Rule 9, Civil Procedure Code. Mr. Holla submitted that the purpose of appointing the Commissioner is to make a local investigation of the alleged improvements to the suit properties and the value thereof, so that the report of the Commissioner may be useful to the Court in deciding as to the existence of such improvements and the value thereof and that there is no question of delegation of any power of the Court to decide any matter in dispute in the suit.

8. Mr. Holla invited my attention to the following observations of the Supreme Court in Munnalal v. Rajkumar, AIR 1962 SC 1493 at p. 1496:

"But it is manifest that the trial Judge only directed the Commissioner to submit his proposals for partition of the property, and for that purpose authorised him to ascertain the property which was available for partition and to ascertain the liability of the joint family. By so authorising the Commissioner, the trial Court did not abdicate its functions to the Commissioner: the Commissioner was merely called upon to make proposals for partition, on which the parties would be heard, and the Court would adjudicate upon such proposals in the light of the decree and the contentions of the parties. The proposals of the Commissioner cannot from their very nature be binding upon the parties nor the reasons in support thereof."

9. Mr. Holla submitted that the improvements claimed by the defendants were in the form of buildings and structures on the suit lands and trees and plants planted therein and that the Commissioner can, after local investigation, report whether he noticed such improvements and if so, the particulars thereof and the probable value thereof, and that such report would minimise the volume of evidence that the parties may have to adduce on those matters.

10. On the other hand, Mr. V. Tarakaram, learned Counsel for the respondents, contended that the questions whether any buildings or structures have been constructed by the defendants and whether any trees and plants have been planted by them, are not matters for local investigation but have to be established by the defendants by adducing evidence and hence it would not be appropriate to appoint a Commissioner.

11. I think Mr. Holla is right in contending that the learned Civil Judge has misconstrued the object of appointment of a Commissioner and the scope of his functions. By appointing a Commissioner who makes a local investigation and submit his report to the Court, there is neither abdication nor delegation of the powers of functions of the Court to decide the issue as to the alleged improvements and the value thereof. The local investigation made by the Commissioner, is merely to assist the Court by placing a report of such local investigation. Such report of the Commissioner is not, in any way, binding on the Court whose power to arrive at its own conclusion, even at variance with such report, is in no way impeded by such report. The learned Civil Judge erred in thinking that by appointing the Commissioner in the present case, there would be any impediment to the Court arriving at its own conclusion as to the alleged improvements and the value thereof.

12. Mr. Tarakaram is right in contending that the question whether the said defendants have effected any improvements or whether the suit properties were in the same condition as now, when they were alienated in favour of those defendants, is a question that can be decided only by taking evidence by the Court and that it is not a matter to be ascertained by the Commissioner. But the local investigation by the Commissioner will be useful in ascertaining the existing condition of the suit properties, the particulars of the buildings, structures, trees and plants found on the suit lands, though the question whether all those buildings, structures, trees and plants were there even prior to the alienations or were added thereafter, is clearly a question which has to be decided by the Court after taking evidence. By such local investigation, the Commissioner can also state the value of buildings, structures, trees and plants alleged to have been constructed or planted by the said defendants. The learned Civil Judge was clearly in error in holding that it is not proper to issue a Commission for local investigation.

13. However, Mr. Tarakaram urged that even if the view taken by the learned Civil Judge as to whether he should exercise his discretion to appoint a Commissioner, is erroneous, there is no error of jurisdiction, illegality or material irregularity which would justify interference in revision, with the exercise of his discretion.

14. As held by the Privy Council in Joychandlal Babu v. Kamalaksha Chaudhury AIR 1949 PC 239, if an erroneous decision of a subordinate Court results in that Court failing to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law, a case for revision arises. On account of the erroneous view taken by the learned Civil Judge that the appointment of Commissioner for local investigation as to the particulars of the alleged improvements and the value thereof, would amount to abdication or delegation of the powers of the Court, the learned Civil Judge declined to exercise his jurisdiction to appoint a Commissioner. Such failure to exercise jurisdiction justifies interference in revision.

15. However, in order to define the scope of the local investigation by the Commissioner, I think the procedure indicated by the Madras High Court in Ambi v. Kunhikavamma, AIR 1929 Mad 661 can conveniently be adopted in the present case also while issuing the Commission. That is, the said defendants shall be directed to set out clearly, in detail, the improvements claimed, the reasons why they are claimed and the value claimed. The plaintiffs shall then be called upon to make their rejoinder on those points. The Civil Judge shall thereafter judicially consider both the statements and then decide on what points, if any, he regards commission as necessary and will then issue a Commission with detailed instructions accordingly.

16. In the result, this revision petition is allowed, the order of the learned Civil Judge on I. A. III is reversed, and he is directed to issue a Commission following the procedure indicated above.

17. In this petition, parties are directed to bear their own costs.

Revision allowed.

AIR 1970 MYSORE 316 (V 57 C 76)

AHMED ALI KHAN, J.

Chamma, Petitioner v. Laxmichand and another, Respondents.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 441 of 1969, D/- 23-6-1970, from order of City Magistrate, Bangalore, D/- 6-11-1969.

Criminal P. C. (1893), Sections 190 (1) (b), 156 (3), 200 — Private complaint — Magistrate forwarding it to Police for investigation — He is not bound to examine complainant.

On receipt of a private complaint if the Magistrate forwards it to the Police for investigation and taking cognizance, the Magistrate acts under Section 156 (3) and does not take cognizance of the offence. The Magistrate, therefore, is not bound to examine the complainant on oath. He is bound to do so only when he takes cognizance of the case under Section 200.

(Paras 4, 5, 6)

Miss Vasudha Ramachandran, for Petitioner; E. Kanakasahapathy (for No. 1) and A. K. Laxmeshwar for State; Public Prosecutor (for No. 2), for Respondents.

ORDER:— This revision petition is directed against the order of the City Magistrate, Bangalore, passed on 6-11-1969 in C. C. No. 111 of 1969 on the file of his Court, dismissing the complaint filed by the petitioner. The operative portion of the order is as follows:—

"On a careful consideration of these facts, I do not find sufficient grounds to proceed with the case and hence I refuse to take cognizance of the alleged offence."

The complaint was for an offence of house trespass punishable under Sec. 483, Indian Penal Code. The learned Magistrate dismissed the complaint by his order referred to above.

2. Two contentions were advanced before me by the learned counsel for the petitioner. The first contention was that the Magistrate ought to have examined the complainant on oath after the complaint was filed and that the Magistrate has erred in not examining the complainant on oath. It was submitted that the provision of Section 200, Criminal Procedure Code, is mandatory and omission to examine the complainant on oath is an illegality and the order of the Magistrate is liable to be set aside on that ground.

3. The second contention was that the Magistrate has erred in dismissing a private complaint without giving the complainant an opportunity to prove her case in spite of her counsel submitting that the petitioner had evidence both oral and documentary, to support her case. After a perusal of the record, I think, there appears to be no force in the first contention.

4. Section 156 of the Code of Criminal Procedure provides:—

"156 (1) Any Officer in charge of a police-station may without the order of a Magistrate investigate any cognizable case which a Court having jurisdiction over the local area within the limits of such station would have power to enquire into or try under the provisions of Chapter XV relating to the place of inquiry or trial.

(2) No proceeding of a police Officer in any such case shall at any stage be called in question on the ground that the case was one which such officer was not empowered under this section to investigate.

(3) Any Magistrate empowered under Section 190 may order such an investigation as above mentioned."

Section 200 of the Code of Criminal Procedure lays down:—

"200. A Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence on complaint shall at once examine the complainant and the witnesses present, if any, upon oath and the substance of the examination shall be reduced to writing and shall be signed by the complainant and the witnesses, and also by the Magistrate:

Provided as follows:—

(a) When the complaint is made in writing, nothing herein contained shall be deemed to require a Magistrate to examine the complainant before transferring the case under Section 192;

(aa) when the complaint is made in writing, nothing herein contained shall be deemed to require the examination of a complainant in any case in which the complaint has been made by a Court or by a public servant acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties;

(b) where the Magistrate is a Presidency Magistrate, such examination may be on oath or not as the Magistrate in each case thinks fit, and where the complaint is made in writing, need not be reduced to writing; but the Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, before the matter of the complaint is brought before him, require it to be reduced to writing;

(c) when the case has been transferred under Section 192 and the Magistrate so transferring it has already examined the complainant, the Magistrate to whom it is so transferred shall not be bound to re-examine the complainant."

Section 202 of the Code of Criminal Procedure reads:

"202 (1). Any Magistrate, on receipt of a complaint of an offence of which he is . . . . . which has been transferred to him under Section 192, may, if he thinks fit, for reasons to be recorded in writing, postpone the issue of process for compelling the attendance of the person complained against, and either inquire into the case himself, or, if he is a Magistrate other than a Magistrate of the third Class, direct an inquiry or investigation to be made by any Magistrate subordinate to him, or by a police officer, or by such other person as he thinks fit, for the purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsehood of the complaint: Provided that, save where the complaint has been made by a Court no such direction shall be made unless the complainant has been examined on oath under the provisions of Section 200.

(2) If any inquiry or investigation under this Section is made by a person not being a Magistrate or a police officer, such person shall exercise all the powers conferred by this Code on an officer-in-charge of a police station, except that he shall not have power to arrest without warrant.

(2A) Any Magistrate inquiring into a case under this section may, if he thinks fit, take evidence of witnesses on oath.

(3) This section applies also to the police in the towns of Calcutta and Bombay".

It is thus clear that when the complaint was filed before the Magistrate he would have adopted one of two courses; he would have examined the complainant upon oath and then issue process. On the other hand, he could, under Section 202, Criminal Procedure Code postpone the issue of process and refer the complaint to the Police for further enquiry and then take action on receipt of the report.

5. The other course open to the Magistrate was to send the complaint to the police asking them to take action under Section 156 (3) of Criminal Procedure Code. In that case, the Magistrate would not examine the complainant but merely forward the complaint to the police for investigation and taking cognizance. In the instant case, after the complaint was filed by the petitioner, the Magistrate had referred the complaint to the Police. The order of the Magistrate is as follows:—

"Referred to Police (Magadi Road Post) for investigation under Section 156 (3), Criminal Procedure Code."

It will be seen that the Magistrate in this case has forwarded the complaint to the Police for investigation and taking cognizance and it is quite clear that the Magistrate acted under Section 156 (3), Criminal Procedure Code and did not take cognizance of the offence. Therefore, the Magistrate was not bound to examine the complainant on oath. He is bound to do so only when he takes cognizance of the case under Section 200, Criminal Procedure Code. In that case, he would have to proceed under Chapter XVI of the Code. On the other hand, if the Magistrate sends the complaint to the Officer-in-charge of the Police Station directing him to proceed under Chapter XIV, he need not examine the complainant on oath. In the present case, it is quite clear that the Magistrate had referred the complaint to the Police (Under Section 156 (3), Criminal Procedure Code) directing him to proceed under Chapter XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Thereafter, when 'B' report was submitted by the Police, on consideration of the material on record, he passed the order in revision. I think, the procedure followed by the Magistrate was proper and it cannot be said that the same is vitiated by any legal infirmity.

6. The second contention of the learned Counsel for the petitioner is also devoid of force. When the complaint petition was sent to the police asking them to take action under Section 156 (3), Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate is not bound to examine the complainant, much less, examining the evidence of the complainant. In such a situation he would merely forward the complaint to the Police for investigation and taking cognizance, which he has done. No other contention was raised before me.

7. On the grounds stated above, this revision petition must fail and the same is dismissed.

Revision dismissed.

AIR 1970 MYSORE 317 (V 57 C 77)

A. NARAYANA PAI AND K. BHIMIAH, JJ.

Patel Madegowda Agriculturist and Patcl, Petitioner v. The State of Mysore by Its Chief Secy. Vidhana Soudha Bangalore and others, Respondents.

Writ Petn. No. 1191 of 1968, D/- 6-7-1970.

Land Acquisition Act (1894), Sections 3 (c) and 4 (as amended in Mysore) — Notification under Section 4 can be issued by Government or Deputy Commissioner — Notification by Deputy Commissioner appointing Assistant Commissioner to function as Deputy Commissioner under Act — Notification is illegal — Such appointment can be made only by the State Government. (Para 4)

GN/HN/D458/70/MVJ/M

S. L. Sumha, for Petitioner; S. G. Doddakalegowda, High Court Govt. Pleader, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

NARAYANA PAI, J.— The petitioner Patel Madegowda, the owner of land bearing Survey No. 127 of Mandya Bommanayakana halli in Malur Hobli, Channapatna Taluk, impugnes the compulsory acquisition of the said land under the Land Acquisition Act as amended in Mysore on two main grounds

1. That the Assistant Commissioner, Ramanagaram Division, has not been duly authorised to perform the functions of the Deputy Commissioner under the Act, and

2. that the intimation of submission of report to the Government under Section 5-A had not been given to him.

2. The preliminary notification under Section 4 was prepared and published by the Deputy Commissioner of Bangalore Rural District. The said notification dated the 19th of May, 1965, appeared in the Mysore Gazette of 15th of July, 1965. The third paragraph of the notification contains the authorisation in the following terms.

"The Assistant Commissioner, Ramanagaram Sub-Division, Ramanagaram, is hereby appointed under Clause (c) of Section 3 of the said Land Acquisition Act, to perform the functions of the Deputy Commissioner for all proceedings hereafter to be taken in respect of the said land."

3. Although Section 4 as amended in Mysore permits both the appropriate Government as well as the Deputy Commissioner to issue a notification thereunder, the power to confer upon an officer other than the Deputy Commissioner, the right to function as Deputy Commissioner under the Act, is found in the definition of the expression "Deputy Commissioner" in clause (c) of Section 3, which reads:

"The expression 'Deputy Commissioner' means, the Deputy Commissioner of a District and includes an Assistant Commissioner in charge of a Sub-Division of a District and any officer specially appointed by the appropriate Government to perform the functions of a Deputy Commissioner under this Act."

4. The definition makes it clear that an Assistant Commissioner of a Sub-Division or any officer to be able to function as 'Deputy Commissioner' under the Act, must be specially appointed by the appropriate Government to perform the functions of the Deputy Commissioner under the Act. In the extract of the notification given above, the appointment is by the Deputy Commissioner and not by the State Government which is the appropriate Government in this case.

5. It follows therefore that the Assistant Commissioner had no power to function as the 'Deputy Commissioner' for the purpose of acquisition of the land in question.

6. As this is sufficient to invalidate the proceedings, we do not go into the second question of fact whether the intimation had in fact been given to the petitioner of the submission of the report under Section 5-A.

7. We allow the writ petition and quash the notification under Section 4 referred to above, as well as the subsequent notification under Section 6 dated the 11th of October, 1967, published in the Mysore Gazette of 2nd November, 1967.

A. NARAYANA PAI, J.

Annu alias Kallappa, Plaintiff-Appellant v. Sheshu Gundappa, Defendant-Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 237 of 1965, D/- 22-6-1970, from judgment and decree of Dist. J., Belgaum, D/- 19-9-1964.

(A) Limitation Act (1908), Section 14 — Exclusion of time — Suit for recovery of possession filed beyond limitation — Proceedings taken by plaintiff in B. A. D. R. Court are beyond scope of Section 14 — (Debt Laws — Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act (28 of 1947), Section 4).

The proceedings referred to in Section 14 are proceedings dealt with under the Code of Civil Procedure in a Court exercising general civil jurisdiction to which alone provisions of Limitation Act apply. Further, the other proceedings referred to therein must be proceedings which relate to the same matter in issue and by taking which the party bona fide believes that he might secure the relief which is under consideration.

Where a person files a suit for recovery of possession of certain land beyond limitation and the only ground on which the plaintiff seeks exclusion of time under Section 14 of Limitation Act is the period spent by him in bona fide pursuing other remedies before Court under Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act for adjustment of his debt, such proceedings are wholly beyond scope of Section 14 of Limitation Act. (Para 12)

(B) Debt Laws — Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act (28 of 1947), Section 52 — Exclusion of period of proceeding under the Act — Benefit under Section 52 is conferred on creditor whose ordinary remedies either by way of suit or otherwise get incapable of being pursued by him. (Para 13)

K. S. Sivanur, for Appellant; J. S. Guntal, for Respondent.

JUDGMENT:— This second appeal is against a concurrent decision of both the Courts below.

2. The salient facts necessary for the disposal of the second appeal are as follows:

GN/IN/D153/70/SSG/B

A money decree in Original Suit No. 326 of 1936 on the file of the trial Court against the appellant's father was assigned to the respondent who put it into execution. During that period Sections 68 to 72 of the Code of Civil Procedure had not been repealed. Hence the actual conduct of the sale was made over to the Collector by the Civil Court. The Collector sold two strips of land measuring 1 acre 20 guntas and fifteen guntas respectively on 6-6-1944. They were purchased by the respondent for Rs. 1,290/- and the sale was confirmed on 22-11-1944. The respondent took possession on 8-10-1946.

3. Subsequent thereto the appellant is said to have preferred an appeal to the State Government of Bombay against an appellate Order of the Divisional Commissioner dismissing his appeal. The State Government set aside the order of sale and directed the appellant to approach the Collector for appropriate consequential reliefs.

4. The appellant instead of going to the Collector, applied to the trial Court for restitution under Section 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That application was made on 13-2-1954 and was dismissed on 8-2-1956.

5. Prior thereto the appellant had applied to the Court under the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act for adjustment of his debt. That application was made on 20-10-1945 and dismissed on 10-10-1951, on the ground that the appellant was not a debtor within the meaning of the Act and also on the ground that the sale had been confirmed long before the presentation of the application.

6. It was thereafter that he made the above application under Section 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which, as already stated, was dismissed on 8-2-1956. More than five years thereafter i.e., on 13-10-1960 the appellant filed the present suit for recovery of possession after an unsuccessful application to the Collector made on 7-3-1956, which was dismissed shortly thereafter.

7. On the dates given above, namely, taking of possession by the respondent on 8-10-1946 and the filing of the suit on 13-10-1960, there can be no doubt whatever that the suit was prima facie barred by limitation. The period of limitation was twelve years from the date of loss of possession. The actual time lag is fourteen years and five days.

8. The only ground on which the appellant tried to bring his suit within the limitation of twelve years is that he was entitled under Section 14 of the Limitation Act, 1908, to the exclusion of the periods spent by him in bona fide pursuing other remedies.

9. The first sub-section of the said section reads:—

"In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, the time during which the plaintiff has been prosecuting with due diligence another civil proceeding, whether in a Court of first instance or in a Court of appeal, against the defendant, shall be excluded, where the proceeding is founded upon the same cause of action and is prosecuted in good faith in a Court which, from defect of jurisdiction, or other cause of a like nature, is unable to entertain it."

The other proceeding referred to in this section is undoubtedly a proceeding in a Civil Court to which the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure apply. The argument is that the Civil Proceedings in this section must be regarded as covering everything other than a criminal proceeding. Reliance is placed on a ruling of the Madras High Court in Dugarajulum v. Aryan Bank, Vizagapatam, AIR 1937 Mad 357. The other proceedings dealt with in the said Madras case were proceedings in execution of a decree and the actual declaration of law is contained in the following observations of Justice Varadachariar:—

"The Legislature has not, for purposes of computation, drawn any distinction in cl. (1) of Section 14 between the suit stage and later stages in execution, though for purposes of initiation of proceedings, a distinction has been made between a suit dealt with by clause (1) of Section 14 and an application provided for in clause (2). . . . . The principle of Section 14, Limitation Act, is that if and so long as a person has been bona fide and with due diligence seeking the relief that he was entitled to in a Court which he believed to be a Court competent to grant him that relief, he ought not to be penalized for having instituted that action in the wrong Court. . . . . The section specifically refers to the possibility of proceedings being taken in the Court of first instance or in the Court of Appeal; this obviously rests on the theory that an appeal is merely a continuation of the proceedings in the first Court. No express reference has been made to proceedings in execution, apparently because under the law proceedings in execution have to be taken in the Court of first instance."

10. Apart from the fact that the Court was dealing exclusively with proceedings in a Civil Court the further reference to the fact that proceedings dealt with in the section are referred to as those taken in the Court of first instance or appeal or revision, leave no room, in my opinion, for any doubt that the proceedings referred to are proceedings dealt with under the Code of Civil Procedure in a Court exercising general civil jurisdiction to which alone, it may be remembered, the provisions of the Limitation Act apply.

11. Another ingredient of this section which must be borne in mind is that the other proceedings referred to therein must be proceedings which relate to the same matter in issue, which Justice Varadachariar has understood to mean the proceedings by taking which the party bona fide believes that he might secure the relief which is under consideration.

12. If these principles are applied, there can be no doubt that the proceedings taken by the appellant before the B. A. D. R. Court are wholly beyond the scope of Section 14 of the Limitation Act. Firstly they are not proceedings taken under the Code of Civil Procedure in a Civil Court, and secondly they are not proceedings taken for the relief sought in the present suit, namely, recovering of possession of the property. The only relief sought in the B. A. D. R. Court was the adjustment of the debt, as the only relief the appellant could have sought and which that Court was competent to give was the adjustment of the debt and not recovery of possession of the property as an ordinary Civil Court can do.

13. Finally, Section 52 of the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act contains what Mr. Cunjil for the respondent describes as complete answer to the appellant's contention. That section reads as follows:—

"In computing the period of limitation for the institution of any suit or proceeding in respect of any debt due from any person who is held not to be a debtor by the Court or the Court in appeal or an application relating to which has been dismissed by the Court or the Court in appeal, the period during which the proceedings in respect of such debt were prosecuted before the Court or the Court in appeal shall be excluded."

On the plain language of this section, the benefit thereof is intended to be conferred on the creditor whose ordinary remedies either by way of suit or otherwise get incapable of being pursued by him. Further the reason for conferring this benefit of exclusion upon the creditor expressly by Section 52 is that in the absence thereof the creditor would have been disabled from taking the benefit of Section 14 of the Limitation Act.

14. The appellant, therefore, is not entitled to the exclusion of the period occupied by the B. A. D. R. proceedings taken by him.

15. The question of law whether he could deduct the period occupied by his application under Section 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure in the trial Court, need not be gone into because even if that is deducted still the suit is beyond time.

16. Nor is it worthwhile considering the question of Government's jurisdiction to set aside the sale, because whatever may be the position in regard thereto, the undeniable fact is that the respondent took possession of the property for his own benefit and in his own right and to the exclusion of the right of everybody else on 8-10-1946 more than twelve years before the institution of the suit.

17. The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

END

issued. There is no substance in this contention either. At the time the notification was issued only the eligibility of the member was taken into consideration. It is only on taking charge that the Chairman functions as such and ceases to be an ordinary member. In the Chambers's Dictionary the word "eligible" contains the following meanings: "fit or worthy to be chosen; legally qualified for election or appointment; desirable". Eligibility is determined with reference to certain qualifications. The requirement that on cessation of membership the person is to function as Chairman, does not relate to the qualification or virtue of the person; the qualification is otherwise determined. The restriction that he should cease to be a member, in other words that he cannot function both as member and Chairman, relates only to the point of time and not to the intrinsic merit or qualification of the person. On the date of issue of the notification, Sri Samal was fit or worthy to be chosen as Chairman of the Commission. He was legally qualified for such appointment. The notification is therefore valid and no exception can be taken to it. It would come into force only when the incumbent joins his new office. The moment the incumbent joins the new office he ceases to hold the former office.

On the aforesaid analysis, the contention of Mr. Misra that opposite party No. 2 could not have been appointed as Chairman while he was member of the Commission, must be rejected.

16. In Dhirendra Krishna v. Corporation of Calcutta, AIR 1966 Cal 290 (FB) this question came up for consideration though on a different point. Mr. Justice Mitter in paragraph 12 of his dissenting judgment observed thus:—

"As a person cannot hold two posts at the same time, it must be held that on appointment as a Chairman a person ceases to hold office as an ordinary member of the Commission. It cannot be gainsaid that there is difference in status between that of a Chairman and an ordinary member besides the difference in salary. As a person cannot function as a Chairman unless he is appointed expressly for the purpose, it follows that on being appointed the Chairman of a Public Service Commission, a person who was a member ceases to hold the office of an ordinary member though for many purposes he may be considered to be a member of the said Commission. We must read Article 316 along with the other Articles including Article 319, so that they harmonise with one another. I do not see why Article 316 (2) should control Article 319. If it is possible to arrive at an interpretation which gives effect to both, we should adopt that construction. In my view, the expression "ceasing to hold office" in Article 319 is referable to any situation whereby a person who held an office before discontinuing to hold it, may be by effluxion of the period of office or resignation, or by appointment to another office. The Constitution does not seem to require that a member of the State Public Service Commission should resign his office before he could be appointed a member of the Union Public Service Commission."

This passage has our respectful concurrence.

17. If it was necessary that a member should resign before he is appointed as Chairman of the Commission, the Constitution would have said so.

We accordingly find no merit in the second contention.

18. In the result, the application fails and is dismissed, but in the circumstances without costs.

S. K. RAY, J.: 19. I agree.

RAY, J.—The Criminal Reference has been referred to a Division Bench by our learned brother R. N. Misra, J., for an authoritative decision on the question as to whether affidavits for utilisation in a proceeding under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code should be sworn before the Magistrate before whom the proceeding is pending, or another Magistrate as authorised by the trying Magistrate, and affidavits which are not sworn to before these authorities are not available to be looked into in such proceeding.

In the proceeding under Section 145, out of which this reference arose, the parties swore some of their affidavits before the officer-in-charge of the current duties of the S D O in whose Court the Section 145 proceeding was pending during the latter's absence and before another first class Magistrate who had no seisin over the proceeding. The S D O relied upon these affidavits along with others in disposing of the case under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code before him. The Additional Sessions Judge, Balasore, thereupon made a reference to the High Court for setting aside the order of the S. D. O. on the ground that the affidavits which were not sworn to before the S. D. O. who had actual seisin of the matter to which the affidavits related, should have been discarded from consideration.

2. The Criminal Revision was also referred to the Division Bench by our learned brother, Patra, J., for an authoritative pronouncement on the point whether an affidavit sworn before a Magistrate other than the Magistrate before whom a proceeding under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code was pending can be utilised for deciding the dispute in the said proceeding.

3. The amplitude of the questions posed by Misra, J., is larger than the question posed by Patra, J. Misra, J., posed two questions, viz., (i) whether the affidavit sworn to before a Magistrate other than the trying Magistrate can be utilised in the Section 145 proceeding as evidence, and (ii) whether affidavits filed before another Magistrate who is authorised by the trying Magistrate to take such affidavits can be utilised in the Section 145, proceeding. The first question is common both to the Reference and the Revision. The second question posed by Misra, J., does not strictly arise out of the reference before him, because, in that case the S. D. O. before whom the Section 145 proceeding was pending never authorised any other Magistrate to take affidavits and that the impugned affidavits were not sworn to before any Magistrate so authorised. This part of the question may be disposed of at once.

There does not appear to be any provision in the Criminal Procedure Code which empowers a Magistrate having seisin over a proceeding under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code to authorise any other Magistrate to take affidavits which may be utilised in the proceeding. Section 539, Criminal Procedure Code deals with the subject-matter of user of affidavits before a High Court and permit swearing of such affidavits and affirmations before such Court and other persons and authorities enumerated therein including any person appointed by the High Court. The power to authorise another person to take affidavits is conferred expressly on the High Court by this section. Apart from this provision, there are no other sections in the Code which vest a Magistrate with the power to authorise another Magistrate to take affidavits in relation to a matter pending before him.

Section 4 of the Indian Oaths Act authorises all Courts having by law authority to receive evidence either to administer oaths themselves or empower any officer to administer such oaths. In pursuance of this section the Magistrate can empower an officer obviously of his Court and subordinate to him, to administer oath. This cannot be construed as authorising a Magistrate to empower another Magistrate, which is also a Court, to administer oaths and affirmations, which is his primary functions in relation to a matter pending before it. The power of delegation of the authority to administer oaths and affirmations conferred under this section must be strictly observed and can only be exercised in favour of an officer as distinguished from a Magistrate which is a Criminal Court as defined in Section 6 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Thus, the second question posed by Misra, J., must be answered in the negative, viz., that since the Magistrate trying a proceeding under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code has no power to authorise another Magistrate to take affidavits intended to be used before him, such affidavits cannot obviously be treated as evidence in this case, because, the Magistrate so authorised would not be a person who can be deemed to have been validly authorised to administer oaths and affirmations which are quite unrelated to any matter pending before him.

4. The only common question now left for determination is whether affidavits sworn before Magistrates other than the concerned Magistrate before whom a proceeding under Section 145 is pending, can or cannot be entertained as evidence and perused by the trying Magistrate under Section 145 (4), Criminal Procedure Code. Judicial opinion is divided on this issue. According to the decisions reported in AIR 1963 All 256, Wahid v. State; AIR 1966 Raj 5, Hemdan v. State of Rajasthan, and AIR 1969 All 405, Govind v. State, affidavits to be used in a proceeding under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code which are of substantive nature, must be sworn to before the Magistrate holding an enquiry into the question of possession in a proceeding under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code or by an officer empowered by him in this behalf and not by any other Magistrate. Indirect support has been derived from a decision of the Calcutta High Court reported in AIR 1944 Cal 283, Nandalal Ghosh v. Emperor even though question of the present nature did not directly arise there.

Contrary view has been laid down in two cases, one reported in AIR 1966 Punj 528, Ahmad Din v. Abdul Salem and the second reported in AIR 1969 Manipur 3, Leitanthem Bidhu Singh v. Khangirakpam Ibobi Singh. This Manipur case has adopted the Punjab High Court view.

5. There are some provisions in the Code of Criminal Procedure which provide for filing of affidavits in certain cases. They are contained in Sections 74, 145 (1), 499 (3), 510-A, 526 (4) and 539-A. Under Section 74, an affidavit in proof of service of summons is required to be made where a summons issued by a Court is served outside the local limits of its jurisdiction and the serving officer is not present in the Court at the hearing of the case. Such an affidavit may be made before "a Magistrate". This section, therefore, authorises every Magistrate to take affidavits of the kind specified therein and to administer oath. Section 145 (1), Criminal Procedure Code requires the parties concerned in the dispute likely to cause breach of peace to adduce evidence of such persons on whom they rely in support of their claims by putting in their affidavits but it does not expressly indicate as to before which Court or person such affidavits are to be sworn. Section 499 (3) permits a Court to accept affidavits in proof of facts contained therein relating to the sufficiency of sureties but is silent as to before whom the affidavit is to be made. Section 510-A provides that the evidence of any person whose evidence is of a formal character may be given by affidavit and that such affidavit may be read in evidence in any inquiry, trial, or other proceeding under the Criminal Procedure Code. Under Section 526 (4) every application for exercise of power conferred by this section may be made by motion, which shall, except when the applicant is the Advocate-General, be supported by affidavit or affirmation. Section 539-A allows affidavit evidence of the allegations respecting any public servant to be given in any inquiry, trial or other proceeding under the Criminal Procedure Code. Sections 539 and 539-AA, Criminal Procedure Code are the two provisions which lay down the authorities before whom certain classes of affidavits may be sworn. Section 539 provides that the affidavits of all kinds to be used before any High Court or any officer of such Court may be sworn before the authorities or Courts specified therein. Section 539-AA lays down that affidavits to be used before any Court other than a High Court under Section 510-A or Section 539-A may be sworn or affirmed in the manner prescribed in Section 539 or before any Magistrate. It is significant to note that this Sec. 539-AA does not refer to affidavits under Section 145 while it refers to affidavits under Sec. 510-A or Section 539. It thus transpires that the Criminal Procedure Code has enacted specific provisions as to the Courts or authorities before whom affidavits under Sections 74, 510-A, 539-A are to be sworn and does not specifically provide for the mode of swearing of an affidavit under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code.

When evidence of a person is of a formal character and is not of a substantive nature, it may be given by affidavit sworn to before any Magistrate other than the Magistrate before whom Section 145 proceeding is pending. That is so because of the specific provisions contained in Section 510-A and Section 539-AA, Criminal Procedure Code. But where the evidence is of substantive character, the question for determination cannot be solved with reference to anything in the Code. Reliance in this connection has to be placed on the provisions of the Indian Oaths Act.

6. Section 4 of the Indian Oaths Act enumerates the Courts and persons who are authorised thereunder to administer oath. It runs as follows:

"The following Courts and persons are authorised to administer, by themselves or by an officer empowered by them in this behalf, oaths and affirmations in discharge of the duties or in exercise of powers imposed or conferred upon them respectively by law:

(a) all Courts and persons having by law or consent of the parties authority to receive evidence;

(b) the Commanding Officer of any military, naval or air force station or ship occupied by troops in the service of Government;

Provided:—

(1) that the oath or affirmation be administered within the limit of the station, and

(2) that the oath or affirmation be such as a Justice of the Peace is competent to administer."

Section 5 (a) of the Indian Oaths Act runs as follows:—

"5 — Oaths or affirmations shall be made by the following persons;

(a) all witnesses, that is to say, all persons who may lawfully be examined, or give, or be required to give, evidence by or before any Court or person having by law or consent of parties authority to examine such persons or to receive evidence."

7. Section 4 speaks of the authority who can administer oath whereas Section 5 speaks of persons who shall make such oath. Both are interrelated and must be conjunctively read and construed. Reading these two sections together, it is quite clear that certain preconditions must be fulfilled before a Court or a person can administer oath. Those conditions, so far as are relevant for the present purpose, are that the Court must have authority to receive evidence and the witnesses who are to swear affidavits before him, must be those who may be lawfully examined by that Court or may give or be required to give evidence before such Court and that such Court must be discharging his duties or exercising his powers conferred upon him by law, in course of which the oath is to be administered. In other words, there must be a nexus between the administration of oath and discharge of duties or exercise of powers imposed or conferred upon the Court by law and that such Court must have authority to receive the evidence of the person who is being administered oath, may lawfully examine him or require him to give evidence before him.

A Court which has no connection with the matter to which the affidavits relate and is not discharging its duty or exercising its power in connection therewith, cannot administer any oath. If it were not so, then the expression "in discharge of the duties or in exercise of the powers imposed or conferred upon them respectively by law" in Section 4 of the Oaths Act would appear to be redundant and a meaningless surplage. That expression would have relevancy and meaning if Section 4 is interpreted to mean that it refers to "Courts and persons" who, while administering oaths or affirmations must be discharging their duties or exercising their powers in connection with the matter to which the affidavit relates and would be acting in that connection.

This view is further fortified by S. 539-AA, Criminal Procedure Code. This section, as already stated, provides for swearing or affirmation of affidavits before any Magistrate when it is intended to be used in any Court other than the High Court under Section 510-A or 539-A. This is a special provision which specially empowers swearing of affidavit before a Magistrate who has no connection with the matter to which the affidavit relates. This provision would be needless, if Sections 4 and 5 of the Oaths Act could be so interpreted as to permit affidavits before any Magistrate to be used before any other Magistrate in all circumstances whatsoever.

A scrutiny already made, of the various sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure where affidavits are permitted to be used, shows that where the legislature intended that an affidavit sworn before any Magistrate could be used before any other Magistrate, the Code had expressly stated so. Where such express indication is wanting, the Section 4 of the Oaths Act would operate, in which case the Court where the affidavit is to be used is the Court before whom it is to be sworn. Section 74, Criminal Procedure Code permits affidavits referred to therein, to be made before 'a Magistrate'. But none of Sections 499 (3), 510-A, 526 (4), 539-A indicates that the affidavits referred to therein can be sworn before any Magistrate other than the Court where such affidavits have to be used. There are two sections in the Code of Criminal Procedure, namely, Sections 539 and 539-AA which permit swearing of affidavits before Courts and authorities other than the Court where the affidavits are to be used. The obvious inference is that but for those two special provisions affidavits intended to be used in any court must be sworn to before that authority or Court. As already seen Section 539-AA, Criminal Procedure Code does not cover affidavits in Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. This provision therefore proves the rule that affidavits in proof of possession shall be sworn to before the Magistrate who is holding the inquiry under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code since Section 539-AA does not authorise swearing of such affidavits before any Magistrate as it does in respect of affidavits under Section 510-A, Criminal Procedure Code. Section 539-AA being an exception to the Rule proves it.

8. Sub-section (1) of Section 145, enacts that the Magistrates as enumerated therein may, after initiating the proceeding, require the parties concerned "to put in such documents or to adduce, by putting in affidavits, the evidence of such persons as they rely upon in support of such claim." This clearly shows that evidence by way of affidavits has to be adduced before the Magistrate who has seisin of the proceeding. "Evidence" has been defined in Section 3 of the Indian Evidence Act. It means and includes all statements which the Court permits or requires to be made before it by witnesses, in relation to matters of fact under inquiry which is called 'oral evidence' and all documents produced for inspection of the Court, are called 'documentary evidence'. The affidavits contemplated under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code must be evidence as defined in the Evidence Act, and it can only be such if the witness makes a statement by way of affidavit before the very Court who is sitting upon the inquiry and if it is in relation to the subject-matter of inquiry. Affidavit is a declaration of facts made in writing and sworn before a person having an authority to administer oath. Such affidavits would be evidence if the statement is made before the Magistrate holding the inquiry and relates to the subject-matter of that inquiry. From this the indication is quite clear that the affidavits which are to be filed before a Magistrate initiating the proceedings under Section 145, or a Magistrate to whom such a proceeding is transferred and who is to hold the inquiry, must be sworn before him in order to be evidence.

9. For all these reasons, we are clearly of the opinion that the affidavits which are to be used in a proceeding under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code must be sworn to before the Magistrate before whom such proceeding is pending, unless the evidence of a person is of a formal character in which case that evidence may be given by affidavits sworn to before any other Magistrate. We are, therefore, in respectful agreement with the view expressed in AIR 1963 All 256; AIR 1966 Raj 5 and AIR 1969 All 405, and dissent from that expressed in AIR 1966 Punj 528, and AIR 1969 Manipur 3.

10. The affidavits in the two 145 proceedings sworn to before another Magistrate who had no concern with the proceedings are not proper affidavits and must be rejected. The parties must not be allowed to suffer on account of this decision, as the point decided was not free from doubt, and the parties were likely to be misled as they have been misled.

The reference, therefore, is accepted and the revision is also allowed. The order dated 16-3-1967 passed by Sri N. M. Mohanty, S. D. O., and the Magistrate, 1st Class Bhadrak in Misc. Case No. 10/1/66 and the order dated 13-3-1967 passed by Sri K. M. Ram, Magistrate, 1st Class, Athgarh, in Cri. Misc. Case No. 62/65 are set aside. The cases are sent back to the respective Magistrates who shall give the parties concerned opportunity to file proper affidavits afresh, rehear the cases and then to dispose of them in accordance with law.

R. C. Patnaik and A. K. Misra, for Petitioner; Advocate-General, for Opposite Parties.

G. K. MISRA, C. J.:— The petitioner is a police constable. In February, 1960, he was attached to Jaleswar Police Station in the district of Balasore. On 7-2-1960 a farewell party was given at Jaleswar Police Station on the occasion of the transfer of the Officer-in-Charge. When the Police Officers, other constables and outsiders assembled at the barracks to attend the feast, the petitioner entered into the barracks with a short lathi in a drunken state and inflicted blows on constable No. 29. Thereafter, the petitioner remained confined in his own room, bolting the door from inside and did not listen to repeated calls by the Assistant Sub-Inspector to come out. A proceeding was drawn up against the petitioner. On 22-9-1961, the Superintendent of Police, Balasore (Opposite Party No. 31) ordered that the petitioner would forfeit his best increment as also his next increment for a period of two years from 1-9-1961, involving a pecuniary loss of Rs. 41/-. He also imposed three black marks. An appeal to the Inspector-General of Police produced no result. The writ application has been filed under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution challenging the order of the Superintendent of Police imposing the aforesaid punishment.

2. In the writ application, the impugned order was challenged on several grounds such as that the procedure laid down for holding enquiries was not followed, the evidence of the prosecution witnesses was taken at the back of the petitioner, copies of documents were not supplied though they were utilised by the prosecution, the proceeding was conducted in English which was not known to the petitioner, and no opportunity was given to defend petitioner through counsel. At the time of hearing, all these grounds were not pressed. The only contention urged by Mr. Patnaik was on the basis of certain facts not mentioned in the writ application. Ordinarily, such a contention would not have been permitted to be urged as it would involve a question of fact. But as the learned Advocate-General did not dispute the accuracy of the factual basis of the statement, the contention was permitted to be urged.

3. The undisputed facts on which the contention is based are that initially, one Mr. Bhowmick was appointed as the enquiring officer. On the application of the petitioner to transfer the proceeding from Mr. Bhowmick, the disciplinary authority appointed one Mr. Hazari as the enquiring officer. Mr. Hazari was subsequently transferred and so the disciplinary authority appointed one Mr. Paramananda Misra as the enquiring officer. Each of these enquiring officers recorded some evidence and the enquiry report was submitted by Mr. Paramananda Misra.

4. On the aforesaid facts Mr. Patnaik contended that as the enquiry report was based on evidence recorded by some of the predecessor enquiring officers and as the last enquiring officer who submitted the report had no opportunity to observe the demeanour of all the witnesses, the enquiry report was bad in law, and the disciplinary authority cannot rest his conclusion on such enquiry report.

5. The contention, on the face of it, appears fantastic and illogical. Mr. Patnaik however placed reliance on a few decisions some of which may be noticed.

In AIR 1959 Cal 470, Amulyakumar v. L. M. Bakshi, the learned Judge made the following observations:—

"If the enquiring authority has the duty to come to a conclusion as to the guilt of the delinquent, upon an evaluation or assessment of the evidence, then it is entirely necessary that he should be the person who should hear the evidence of witnesses. It is impossible to evaluate the evidence of a witness taken on proxy, because one of the salient features in such a proceeding is to observe the demeanour of the witnesses. As it has been said, even the Devil doth not know the mind of man and therefore to arrive at the truth it is necessary not only to read the evidence but to see the demeanour of the person giving evidence and where necessary to elicit answers to doubtful points. To anyone conversant with such trial it is but an elementary proposition that the demeanour of a witness is the most important element in assessing the value of his evidence."

These observations apparently support the contention of Mr. Patnaik. But on a closer scrutiny of the facts it would appear that they were made in relation to the facts and circumstances of that case. Therein the enquiring officer was appointed by the disciplinary authority. On two dates the evidence of some important witnesses was taken by one Nirmal Kumar Bhattacharjee who was not appointed as the enquiring officer and on that evidence the ultimate finding rested. This is clearly against the principles of natural justice. The evidence was recorded by a person having no jurisdiction or authority to record evidence and was wholly inadmissible. The disciplinary authority certainly cannot rest his conclusion on such evidence. The aforesaid observations must therefore be confined to the facts of that case.

Similarly, in AIR 1961 Guj 63, Hemraj-singhji v. I. G. of Police, there are some observations supporting the petitioner's contention. In that case, the proceedings against the petitioner were dealt with by more than one officer and the same officer did not deal with them throughout. Their Lordships held:—

"The officer who had occasion to see the witnesses and observe their demeanour had not written any summing up. The summing up was written by his successor and in the proceedings which followed after they were set aside, no witnesses were examined by the successor in office whose summing up was based on the evidence of witnesses recorded by his predecessor."

On these facts, their Lordships held that the principle of natural justice was violated.

For reasons to be presently given, we are clearly of opinion that this decision is contrary to law.

6. It is well known that even in civil suits, a successor judicial officer can deliver judgment on the evidence recorded by his predecessor. Doubtless, observation of the demeanour of witnesses is an essential part of the trial but in a case where the judicial officer is transferred while in the midst of the trial, or at the close of the same but before judgment is delivered, the successor delivers judgment, without recording fresh evidence himself, and such judgment is not without jurisdiction or contrary to law.

After the amendment of the Criminal Procedure Code in 1955, the same principle applies to trial of criminal cases by Magistrates; unless the successor Magistrate chooses otherwise, he can proceed on the basis of evidence recorded by his predecessor. The accused is not entitled to claim de novo trial as a matter of right which he had prior to the amendment.

7. There is no rule that in a disciplinary proceeding the successor enquiring officer cannot rely upon the evidence recorded by the predecessor enquiring officer. In the absence of such a rule, there is no violation of the principle of natural justice merely because the successor was not in a position to observe the demeanour of witnesses. The enquiring officer is not the ultimate punishing authority. It is the disciplinary authority which is entitled to impose the final punishment after reaching the necessary conclusion. In any event, where the evidence is recorded by the enquiring officer, the disciplinary authority has no opportunity of marking the demeanour of the witnesses. If the view taken in the aforesaid two cases is held to be of general application, then, as a necessary and logical conclusion, the finding of the disciplinary authority in every case must be held to be without jurisdiction merely because he had no opportunity of observing the demeanour of witnesses himself. Such a conclusion is not borne out by the rules and is wholly illogical.

8. After the pronouncement of their Lordships in AIR 1964 SC 364, Union of India v. H. C. Goel, such a contention is wholly untenable. One of the questions that arose in that case was whether Government was competent to differ from the findings of fact recorded by the enquiring officer who had been entrusted with the work of holding a departmental enquiry. The matter was critically examined and their Lordships observed thus:—

“The interposition of the enquiry which is held by a duly appointed enquiry officer does not alter the true legal position that the charges are framed by Government and it is the Government which is empowered to impose the punishment on the delinquent public servant. Therefore, on principle it is difficult to see how the respondent is justified in contending that the findings recorded by the enquiry officer, bind the appellant (Government) in the present case.”

The ratio of the decision clearly implies that the disciplinary authority imposes the punishment without recording evidence and without having any opportunity of marking the demeanour of the witnesses. If the ultimate punishing authority can take the decision without marking the demeanour of witnesses, it would be fantastic to say that a successor enquiring officer cannot give the report unless he himself has recorded the entire evidence. The aforesaid view runs counter to the argument that an enquiry report submitted by the last enquiring officer cannot be based on the evidence of his predecessors. The Supreme Court decision was followed in AIR 1969 SC 966, Railway Board, Delhi v. N. Singh.

Our view is also fully supported by the decision in AIR 1966 Mad 203 (FB), D. I. G. of Police v. Amalanathan.

9. On the aforesaid analysis, we are of opinion that the successor enquiring officer can submit the enquiry report on the basis of materials collected by his predecessors. The Calcutta case is distinguishable on facts and the observations in the Gujarat decision are contrary to law. If any of these decisions purported to lay down any general propositions to the contrary, we are unable, with respect, to accept them as laying down good law.

10. In the result, the writ application fails and is dismissed, but in the circumstances, without costs.

Second Appeal No. 432 of 1965, D/- 23-12-1969 from decision of Sub-J., Berhampur, D/- 6-7-1965.

(A) Court-fees and Suits Valuations — Court-fees Act (1870), Sec. 7 (iv-A) (Orissa) — Suit for declaration that plaintiff was not bound by sale deed executed by her father in favour of defendant — Plaintiff not party to sale deed — Suit is not one for cancellation falling within Section 7 (iv-A). (Para 10)

(B) Civil P. C. (1908), Section 100 — Plea as to pecuniary jurisdiction of trial Court — Finding that suit was properly valued and Court had jurisdiction — Appellate Court refusing permission under Order 41, Rule 2 to raise question of jurisdiction — High Court refused to allow it to be raised again in second appeal. (Para 10)

(C) Transfer of Property Act (1882), Section 11 — Restriction repugnant to interest created — Settlement deed — Conveyance of absolute interest — Restriction as to joint enjoyment with settlor and as to alienation is void and cannot be given effect to.

A deed of settlement executed by a father in favour of his daughter ran as follows:— “Since you are nursing me and also taking care of me, I out of affection, have settled this property described fully in the schedule and have created right in your favour. So long as I am alive, with the usufructs of the land, you and I will be maintained. You without my knowledge and I without your knowledge cannot execute any document touching this property. After my death you would perform my obsequies and you and your descendants shall enjoy and possess the properties from generation to generation with full rights.”

Held that the document created an absolute conveyance of title in favour of the daughter and therefore the restriction on alienation and enjoyment imposed by the subsequent clauses of deed were bad in law and could not be given effect to. Y. S. N. Murty, for Appellant; G. Rath, for Respondent.

JUDGMENT:— This second appeal is by the sole defendant in a suit for title, declaration that her interest is not bound by the alienation by her father in favour of the defendant on 7-9-1959 under Ext. B and to recover possession. The defendant has lost in the Courts below.

2. The plaintiff's case was that her father Bachha Das was the owner of the suit property and he died leaving behind the plaintiff who is his daughter as the sole heir. Bachha executed a settlement on 5-1-1959 giving all his properties to the plaintiff and the plaintiff has been in possession ever since then. The defendant Khandha happens to be a cousin of Bachha and when he disturbed her possession, proceedings under Section 144, Criminal Procedure Code were initiated which were subsequently converted to proceedings under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. Possession was, however, found in favour of the defendant. Therefore the plaintiff has come with the present suit.

3. The defence taken was that the property would be valued at Rs. 12,500/-. Ext. B, the sale deed in his favour is also for the said land. In the circumstances the learned trial Judge had no pecuniary jurisdiction to try the suit. It was further claimed that the suit was barred by limitation. Bachha had cancelled the settlement dated 5-1-1959 (Ex. B) and thereafter had executed the Ext. B, the sale deed in favour of the defendant. The defendant claimed to be in possession all throughout after the same.

4. The learned trial Judge found that the suit had been properly valued and the Court had jurisdiction. He further found that the settlement deed Ext. B was valid and binding and therefore Bachha had no title in him to alienate the properties under the Ext. B in favour of the defendant. On these findings he decreed the suit.

5. The lower appellate court affirmed the findings of the learned trial Judge and held that the plaintiff had acquired an interest in present in the suit property under Ext. B; Ext. C, the cancellation deed dated 20th July, 1959 was not valid and Bachha had no alienable interest to convey under Ext. B.

6. In the memorandum of appeal before the lower appellate court the question of want of pecuniary jurisdiction of the learned trial Judge had not been raised. When an attempt to raise that point was made before the lower appellate Court, the learned appellate Judge did not give the permission to agitate the question of jurisdiction. Order 41, Rule 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides thus:

"The appellant shall not, except by leave of the Court, urge or be heard in support of any ground of objection not set forth in the memorandum of appeal shall not be confined to the grounds of objection set forth in memorandum of appeal or taken by leave of the Court under this rule: . . . . . The learned appellate Judge looked into this aspect of the matter in a part of his judgment, but ultimately held:

"I do not find any necessity to permit the appellant to agitate the question of jurisdiction. In that view, the objection raised regarding the valuation and jurisdiction is overruled."

7. Mr. Murty, learned counsel for the appellant raises two contentions before me. Firstly he contends that the defendant had taken the plea in the written statement that the Court had no pecuniary jurisdiction to entertain the suit. An issue being issue No. 4 was specifically raised and had erroneously been determined by the trial Court. To the facts of the present case Section 7 (iv-A) of the Court-fees Act as amended in Orissa was directly applicable. One of the prayers in the suit was for a declaration that Ext. B was not binding on the plaintiff. Therefore, the learned trial Judge clearly went wrong in holding that the claim was not to be valued at Rs. 12,500/-. the consideration money under Ext. B. Even if a ground had not been included in the memorandum of appeal challenging the finding on issue No. 4, the Court was not going into the matter and as the learned appellate Judge as a matter of fact has gone into the question and has taken a wrong view of the law, in second appeal, the appellant should be permitted to canvass that aspect.

8. Mr. Rath, learned Counsel for the respondent contends that the second relief in the suit was redundant. In view of the fact that the plaintiff was not a party to the said document it was open to the plaintiff to ignore it and claim title on the basis of the settlement deed dated 5-1-1959 in her favour. To find title on the basis of the settlement deed, it necessarily would involve an enquiry about the validity of the sale deed dated 7-9-1959 and thus the second relief in the suit is redundant on the principle that the plaintiff is not "eo nomine", a party to Ext. B, she could proceed by ignoring the document and therefore this is not a case which strictly calls for cancellation of a document and does not give rise to the application of S. 7 (iv-A) of Court-fees Act.

9. There is a peculiar feature in this case. On 5-1-1959 Bachha executed the settlement deed in favour of the plaintiff, which has been marked as Ext. B. On 20th July, 1959, the said document was cancelled by Ext. C. On 7-9-1959, a sale deed came to be executed by Bachha in favour of the defendant Kandha. Again on 8th March, 1960, Bachha executed a cancellation deed (Ex. 1) cancelling Ext. B itself.

10. On a consideration of the aforesaid materials I would accept the position that the second relief in the suit was redundant; plaintiff being not a party to the document (Ext. B) was not bound to have it cancelled in order to succeed in her suit; the provisions of S. 7 (iv-A) of the Court-fees Act as amended in Orissa, therefore, do not apply to the facts of the present case. In any event, the lower appellate court having not permitted the defendant-appellant to batter the findings under issue No. 4, I would not also permit the defendant to question the same in the second appeal. This appeal will proceed on the basis that the learned trial Judge had jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

11. This leads me to examine the only other contention as to whether Ext. 3 created an absolute conveyance in favour of the plaintiff so that Bachha had no alienable interest under Ext. B. The material portions of Ext. 3 may be translated thus:

"Since you are nursing me and also taking care of me, I out of affection, have settled this property described fully in the schedule and have created right in your favour. So long as I am alive, with the usufructs of the land, you and I will be maintained. You without my knowledge and I without your knowledge cannot execute any document touching this property. After my death you would perform my obsequies and you and your descendants shall enjoy and possess the properties from generation to generation with full rights."

Mr. Murty relies on a decision of this Court in the case of Kshetra Sahu v. Shyama Sahu, 24 Cut LT 127 = (AIR 1958 Orissa 254) wherein a grant came to be interpreted by Mohapatra, J. The terms of the grant were to the following effect as would appear from a part of the judgment.

"The land described in para 3 of the document is my self-acquired property and I am enjoying it with absolute rights without any dispute. None else has got any right or title or claim to this land. You are my daughter. You have no properties for your maintenance, there is great need and so for your maintenance you are depending on me. For your maintenance I am giving (Pradana) the para 3 scheduled lands worth Rs. 1,500/- and I have put you in possession of the lands and have divested myself of my rights from the lands. From today this land has become yours. You will keep this land in your possession and from out of its income, you will pay the Government revenue and with the balance usufruct you will maintain yourself and if necessary you can sell and mortgage or transfer the land to meet your maintenance and you can do whatever you like regarding the land. Regarding this land at any time in future, neither I nor my heirs and successors can make any claim against you .....

Ultimately it was held in this case that only a life interest for the grantee was created and on the death of the grantee, the property reverted to the grantor or his heirs. Relying on the principle of this case Mr. Murty's contention is that Ext. 3 must be held to have created only a limited interest in favour of the plaintiff and as such there cannot be a loss of total title in Bachha so as to justify the conclusion of the lower appellate Court that Bachha had no transferable interest by the time he came to execute the sale deed Ext. B. Ext. B does not purport to convey the residuary title of Bachha and it proceeds on the basis that Bachha was the full owner of the property in possession and purported to part with title and possession together.

12. Mr. Rath, learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent contends that Ext. 3 was an absolute conveyance of title in regard to the subject-matter, therefore any subsequent limitation was bad law. In support of his proposition he relies on the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Ram-kishorelal v. Kamalnarayan, AIR 1963 SC 890. Their Lordships of the Supreme Court came to hold that if title was conveyed and in the subsequent clauses of the document, restrictions on alienations were imposed, the clauses imposing restriction should be held as bad.

"Again, even where a particular word has to a trained conveyancer a clear definite significance and one can be sure about the sense in which such conveyancer would use it, it may not be reasonable and proper to give the same strict interpretation of the word when used by one who is not so equally skilled in the art of conveyancing. Sometimes it happens in the case of documents, whether they are testamentary or non-testamentary instruments, that there is a clear conflict between what is said in one part of the document and in another. A familiar instance of this is where in an earlier part of the document some property is given absolutely to one person but later on, other directions about the same property are given which conflict with and take away from the absolute title given in the earlier portion. What is to be done where this happens? It is well settled that in case of such a conflict the earlier disposition of absolute title should prevail and the later directions of disposition should be disregarded as unsuccessful attempts to restrict the title already given."

As it appears, there is a clear averment in the earlier portion of Ext. 3 that the property described in the schedule is settled and a right to the property is created. Thereafter a restriction was sought to be imposed on the right to alienate during the lifetime of the grantor and there was a further averment made that the property would be jointly enjoyed. The statement that neither the grantor nor the grantee would be in a position to alienate during the lifetime of the grantor without consent runs counter to the creation of title in the grantee. I would, therefore, hold that in terms of the principle indicated in the aforesaid decision of the Supreme Court, the subsequent clauses are not to be given effect to and title be held to have passed under Ext. 3 to the daughter.

13-14. Once it is found that Ext. 3 conveyed good title in respect of the property to the plaintiff, it must necessarily follow that Bachha had no subsisting interest in such property on the date when he came to execute Ext. B, and as such the defendant under that document did not obtain title so as to obstruct the title of the plaintiff.

15. I would, therefore, hold that the plaintiff was the absolute owner of the suit land under the settlement deed dated 5-1-1959 and is entitled to recover possession of the disputed property.

16. The claim for mesne profits seems not to have been pressed in the Courts below and no decree for such mesne profits has therefore been granted.

17. The appeal fails and is dismissed. The plaintiff would be entitled to her costs throughout.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT: This is an appeal by the plaintiffs against a reversing judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge, Puri in a suit for declaration of title and possession and for other reliefs.

2. The case made out by the plaintiffs was that the suit properties along with certain other properties belonged to the deity Sri Nrusinghanath Deb. Plaintiffs 2 and 3 and the predecessors of the defendants were in possession of such properties as marfatdars. For convenience of possession, the marfatdars had divided the properties of the deity among themselves and in such division the suit properties came to be allotted to the share of Ananda Panda, father of plaintiffs 2 and 3. Ananda's eldest son Agadhu died issueless. Taking advantage of a dispute between late Agadhu Panda and plaintiff No. 2 (plaintiff no. 3 was a minor then) Bhagaban Panda, uncle of defendant no. 1 obtained a permanent lease in respect of the disputed properties in the names of himself and his brother Banchhanidhi, father of defendant no. 1. This lease was not acted upon and was a fraudulent one. Notwithstanding the fraudulent character of the lease deed, defendant No. 1 created trouble in respect of the disputed properties. At the instance of certain well-wishers it was settled that plaintiffs 2 and 3 would purchase the right of defendant no. 1 in respect of the suit land for a consideration of Rs. 300 and in pursuance of such arrangement defendant no. 1 executed and registered the sale deed Ext. A dated 19-5-60 and received the entire consideration of Rs. 300. But the original sale deed Ext. A was kept with him and later defendant no. 1 brought a false criminal case against plaintiffs 2 and 3 on the allegation that they had plucked cocoanuts from the suit land. Though there was an acquittal in the criminal case, the plaintiffs in order to remove the cloud from their title have filed the suit.

3. Defendants 4, 6 to 8, 10, 12, 14, 15 and 19 supported the plaintiffs. Defendant no. 1 actually contested the litigation. His case was that late Banchhanidhi Panda and Bhagaban Panda obtained a permanent lease of the suit properties from plaintiff no. 2 late Agadhu Panda and their mother Jamuna by a registered deed of lease on payment of salami for the purpose of the deity. Defendant no. 1 as the sole surviving heir of Banmali and Banchhanidhi has been in possession of the leasehold. In order to purchase other properties defendant no. 1 agreed to alienate the suit properties to plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 for a consideration of Rs. 300 and it was further agreed that the consideration money would be paid by plaintiffs nos. 2 and 3 to defendant no. 1 at the time of endorsing the registration ticket in favour of plaintiffs nos. 2 and 3 and delivery of possession of the suit properties would be given to plaintiffs nos. 2 and 3 then. Accordingly the sale deed Ext. A was executed and registered by defendant No. 1. As plaintiffs nos. 2 and 3 failed to pay the consideration money defendant no. 1 did not endorse the registration ticket in their favour and executed a cancellation deed Ext. C on 6-1-61. Defendant no. 1 has been in possession throughout and no title has been acquired under Ext. A by plaintiffs 2 and 3.

4. The trial court came to find that the permanent lease deed dated 2-4-1917 was genuine and for consideration; the plaintiffs were not in possession of the suit properties and the defendant no. 1 was in possession of the same; and title passed independent of passing of consideration. It was needless to discuss the evidence on the question of passing of consideration. The learned Munsif decreed the suit.

5. Before the lower appellate court it was conceded that the consideration money had not passed under the sale deed Ext. A, nor was the genuineness of the lease deed of 1917 challenged. Therefore, the only question with which the lower appellate court concerned itself was as to whether title passed under the sale deed Ext. A even if the consideration had not been paid. The material portion of the sale deed has been translated by the lower appellate court in the following manner:—

“That in order to purchase new landed properties, I sell the above mentioned 1.08 acres land to you with coconut, mango, jackfruit, Chakunda and other trees standing thereon at the highest prevailing price of Rs. 300/- and having agreed to receive the consideration money at the time of endorsing the registration ticket, I deliver possession of the sold land and become disentitled thereto. From today you will cultivate the said land or get it cultivated as your purchased property and appropriate the income thereof from generation to generation by paying rent, obtaining receipt and getting your name mutated in place of mine.”

The learned Appellate Judge referred to two decisions of this Court in 1960-2 OJD 136 = (AIR 1961 Orissa 19), Miehu Kuanr v. Raghu Jena and ILR (1964) Cut 551 = (AIR 1964 Orissa 239), Ramehandra Biharilal Firm v. Mathuramohan and came to hold ultimately that no title had passed under Ext. A and, therefore, he reversed the decree of the trial court.

6. Mr. Mohanti wanted to contend that the concession said to have been made before the lower appellate court that the consideration money has not passed under the sale deed Ext. A is not a correct one. I do not find any challenge in the grounds of appeal to support the present contention of Mr. Mohanti. Normally a statement in the judgment of a court must be accepted to be true unless it is properly challenged. Even mere incorporation of a ground in the memorandum of appeal has been held not to constitute a sufficient challenge to the correctness of such a statement. The concession is on a question of fact and parties or their learned counsel are entitled to make such a concession. In the circumstances, I must hold that the concession has been made and the statement made in the lower appellate court's judgment to record such a concession cannot be disputed.

7. The only point that arises for consideration is as to whether on the footing that no consideration was paid for Ext. A title can be said to have passed. ‘Sale’ has been defined in Section 54 of the T. P. Act as “a transfer of ownership in exchange for a price paid or promised or part-promised.” In the present case, the narrative portion, as extracted above, goes to show that the consideration was to be received subsequently at the time of endorsing the registration ticket. It was not indicated as to on which date or at what point of time the registration ticket would be endorsed. Without waiting for such endorsement to be made of the ticket and the consideration to be received, it was stated in the conveyance,

“I deliver possession of the sold land and become disentitled thereto. From today you will cultivate the said land or get it cultivated as your purchased property and appropriate the income thereof from generation to generation by paying rent, obtaining receipt and getting your name mutated in place of mine.”

As such the intention seems to be unequivocal of making a conveyance of the title in praesenti and not dependent upon passing of the consideration. A Division Bench of this Court in ILR (1953) Cut 531 = (AIR 1953 Orissa 23), Balabhadra Misra v. Nirmala Sundari Devi came to consider a similar question where the narration in the sale deed ran thus:—

“But being in need of money to make part payment of the mortgage dues of Sree Babu M. Subba Rao we of our own accord and free will sell the zamindari consisting of the undermentioned village to the above-mentioned vendee for Rs. 1205 as the consideration for the said zamindari and we have counted the said money and received it from the vendee out of her Stridhan through her father in one instalment and acknowledge that from this day the vendee will be entitled to possess all rights, including land, water, trees, stones, property, underground, idols and temples, . . . . all rights and after her sons and grandsons for all time to come and they will deposit the sadarzama of the property. . . . .”

and held that in such a case the passing of title was not dependent upon payment of consideration. I think, the reasons that appealed to the learned Judges in that case are well applicable to the facts of the present case and it must be held on the aforesaid basis that passing of title was not made dependent upon passing of the consideration money. In the circumstances, it must be held that title passed under Ext. A being not dependent upon the passing of consideration. Once it is so found, it must also be held that the judgment of the lower appellate Court is wrong and the appellants are entitled to succeed.

8. The Second Appeal is allowed with costs throughout. The judgment of the lower appellate court is reversed and that of the trial court is restored.

Appeal allowed.

S. Misra (2), for Petitioner; The Standing Counsel, for Opposite Parties.

R. N. MISRA, J.: This is a writ application under Articles 226 and 311 of the Constitution at the instance of the petitioner who was an organiser of the Craft School, Cuttack. He came to be appointed to such post in 1955, and while he was serving in such capacity, on 6-5-67 he was subjected to a departmental proceeding. Twelve charges were framed against him by the appointing authority and he was called upon to submit his explanation in respect of such charges. On 11-5-57, he applied for copies of statements of facts on which the charges were based and of documents referred to in the charges in order to be in a position to offer his explanation against the charges. As the copies were not supplied, ultimately on 9-8-57 he offered his explanation mentioning therein that he had been handicapped in placing his explanation against the charges on account of the non-supply of the statements of facts and the documents which he had asked for. One Sri L. S. Panda, the Assistant Director of Industries, was appointed the enquiring officer. The enquiry continued for over three years. Two more enquiring officers in succession were appointed, and ultimately the last enquiring officer, Shri L. Dandapat submitted his report on 26-12-60. At the enquiry, 28 witnesses in support of the charges and 9 in support of the petitioners' defence were examined. 193 documents were exhibited. The disciplinary authority had nominated an Anti-corruption Inspector to present the case in support of the charges before him. The petitioner had, therefore, raised an objection to the conduct of the case by a Prosecuting Inspector. The disciplinary authority by his order dated 17-7-58 rejected the application. Thereafter the petitioner came up with an application for permission to have legal assistance in support of his defence, but the enquiring officer refused such request by his order dated 18-8-1958.

After the enquiry was over, the petitioner was called upon to offer a second explanation against the charges, obviously on account of the fact that the documents had not been given to him and he might not have given a complete explanation on the earlier occasion. That explanation he gave on 9-2-61. On 5-5-62 the petitioner was called upon to show cause against the proposed punishment, and on 7-5-63 the Director of Industries passed the order of discharge from service. Of the twelve charges framed against the petitioner, the enquiring officer had found him guilty in respect of ten. The punishing authority found that two more charges had not been proved against the petitioner, and the punishment ultimately rested on the eight remaining charges framed against the petitioner. Aggrieved by the said order of discharge from service, the petitioner has come before this Court.

2. The opposite parties have filed a counter-affidavit wherein it has been contended that the petitioner had inspected some records and was allowed to have copies from them, and some other records were produced before the enquiring officer at the time of enquiry and the petitioner was given sufficient opportunity to examine and cross-examine witnesses on the basis of the documents. Therefore, the petitioner was not prejudiced in raising a proper defence. It was further asserted that the charges were not at all intricate or complicated, and the petitioner had not made out any special facts and circumstances for allowing the assistance of a legal practitioner.

3. Two contentions were raised by Mr. Misra appearing for the petitioner. They are—

(1) The petitioner has been substantially prejudiced on account of the omission on the part of the authorities to provide the delinquent with the statements of facts on the basis whereof the charges were framed, and on account of the non-supply of the documents material and relevant for the enquiry; and

(2) Denial of legal assistance in the facts of the present case has denied the reasonable opportunity guaranteed under Art. 311 (2) of the Constitution to the petitioner in defending himself.

4. The first contention of Mr. Misra that reasonable opportunity has been denied on account of the non-supply of material papers and documents is sought to be made on the basis of Rule 15 of the Orissa Civil Service

(Classification, Control and Appeal), Rules, 1962 (hereinafter referred to as the Rules). The petitioner lost sight of the fact that the enquiry was concluded at a time when the Rules of 1962 were not in force. The present enquiry was being undertaken under the old Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules. The material provisions of the aforesaid Rules are absolutely similar to those contained in the Rules of 1962. The counter-affidavit however did not question the assertion made by the petitioner that there was non-compliance of the provisions of the Rules of 1962. To examine the first contention of Mr. Misra, reference has however to be made to the Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules, 1930, and not to the Rules framed in 1962. The requirement for supply of a statement of the allegations, on which the charges are based, was also prescribed in such Rules. The procedure prescribed for enquiry against delinquent public servants, as contained in the aforesaid Rule provides for 'reasonable opportunity' as contemplated under Art. 311 (2) of the Constitution, and, therefore, compliance with each of the requirements laid down by the rule in question should normally be insisted upon, as otherwise reasonable opportunity, which is guaranteed to the public servant under Article 311 (2) of the Constitution, may not be ensured to the delinquent whose conduct is under enquiry. On examination of the charges in the instant case, it is clear that the statement of facts is not included therein. The allegation in the counter-affidavit that the charges included the statement cannot be accepted.

5. Annexure 8 to the writ application is an application of the petitioner dated 14-12-1959 to the Joint Registrar of Co-operative Societies, Orissa, for supply of records and documents. Therein the petitioner has referred to seven of his earlier applications between 11-5-57 and 11-11-59. The petitioner clearly indicated in the said application that no action had been taken on all his previous applications for the documents and he was handicapped in his defence. He, therefore submitted a list of records and documents which he wanted and prayed that authenticated copies of the said documents should be made available to him. The authorities seem to have taken a callous attitude and did not dispose of his representations either contemporaneously or within a reasonable time. The enquiry continued and witnesses after witnesses before different enquiring officers were being examined. Voluminous documents were being placed in support of the charges. The petitioner did not have any opportunity of knowing the contents of the documents which were going to be utilised against him. As he was not being represented by a counsel at the enquiry, it was incumbent upon the enquiring officer to ensure that the petitioner had been provided with copies of the documents or at least inspection thereof before the documents were being exhibited by different witnesses who were being examined in support of the charges. Realising this infirmity, the authorities called upon the petitioner to offer another explanation against the charges after the enquiry was over. It may be that by that time the petitioner had acquainted himself with the materials that were used against him but the enquiry was over and the witnesses had already been examined and cross-examined and the documents had been exhibited. While the petitioner was called upon to give another explanation against the charges, the enquiry was not reopened and, therefore, the petitioner cannot be said to have had the benefit which he could otherwise have had if the documents or copies thereof had been provided to him before the witnesses were examined. It is settled law that a delinquent can establish his defence by cross-examining the witnesses in support of the charge. That right had been denied to the petitioner in the present case.

In paragraphs 4 and 5 of the counter affidavit it is stated,

"4. . . . It is submitted that some of the records were inspected by the petitioner and the petitioner was allowed to take copies therefrom and other records were produced before the enquiring officer at the time of enquiry and the petitioner was given sufficient opportunity to examine and cross-examine the witnesses on the basis of the documents.

5. That as regards the statement in paragraph 7 of the writ application it is submitted that as the petitioner could not get adequate opportunity of going through the records on which charges were based, he was given a second chance to submit the written statement basing on facts alleged in course of enquiry and the petitioner submitted this statement on 9th February, 1961."

It is interesting to find that the punishing authority noticed this aspect in his final order. He stated,

"As the delinquent officer could not get adequate opportunity of going through the records on which charges were based, he was given a second chance to submit a written statement basing on facts allowed in course of enquiry and Sri Baidhar Das gave his statement on 9-2-61."

On the accepted position that reasonable opportunity was not given to the petitioner before or at the enquiry and he was prejudiced in raising his defence properly, the proceedings are liable to be quashed. Article 311 (2) of the Constitution which guarantees a reasonable opportunity to a public servant ensures (a) an opportunity to deny his guilt and establish his innocence which he can only do if he is told what the charges levelled against him are and the allegations on which such charges are based; (b) an opportunity to defend himself by cross-examining the witnesses produced against him and by examining himself or any other witnesses in support of his defence; and (c) an opportunity to make his representation as to why the proposed punishment should not be inflicted on him. This rule laid down in AIR 1958 SC 300 (Khem Chand v. Union of India) has been accepted as laying down the real purport and scope of the guarantee under Article 311 (2) of the Constitution. In the facts of the present case, there can be no doubt that the said reasonable opportunity has been denied to the petitioner and an infirmity has crept into the proceedings. The first contention of Mr. Misra, therefore, is bound to succeed.

6. The second contention raised by Mr. Misra is equally forceful. The charges in this case were of falsification of accounts, misappropriation of Government money, acceptance of illegal gratification etc. As many as 28 witnesses in support of the charges, 9 in support of the defence were examined. As has already been indicated 193 documents were exhibited. The enquiry began in the year 1957 and ended in 1961. Three enquiring officers in succession to one another were appointed. The punishing authority noticed this aspect of the matter also and in his final order he stated,

"The case is pending with me for a few months, but as depositions of 37 witnesses had to be read and as the report of the Enquiring Officer and the explanations given by Sri Baidhar Dash, Ex-Organiser of the Crafts school on different occasions had also to be studied, I never found time enough to go through all these materials. In the meantime Sri Baidhar Dash had seen me several times. . . . At first the enquiry was taken up by the Asst. Director of Industries (General) who examined 3 prosecution witnesses and later Joint Registrar of Co-op. Societies (General) Sri A. B. Panda took up the enquiry and examined 27 prosecution witnesses including those re-examined. Sri L. Dandapat, Joint Registrar of Co-op Societies (General) completed the enquiry and examined 9 defence witnesses. In all 28 prosecution witnesses, 9 defence witnesses and 193 exhibits were examined and produced."

From the materials on record we gather that the petitioner does not have much of educational attainment and nothing is placed on record to show that he has the working knowledge of the procedures obtaining in courts relating to examination and cross-examination of witnesses. There is no doubt that the charges are of very serious nature. The documents are bulky and many. The witnesses examined in support of the charges are also too many.

7. The contention raised by Mr. Misra has to be examined from two aspects. Firstly, if the person nominated by the disciplinary authority to present the case in support of the charges is a legal practitioner, the delinquent officer is entitled, as of right, to be represented by a legal practitioner at the enquiry. If however the officer nominated to present the case in support of the charges is not a legal practitioner, the delinquent officer is not entitled to such representation by a lawyer unless the disciplinary authority, having regard to the circumstances of the case, permits such representation. This aspect of the matter had been the subject matter of examination in this Court on several occasions. A Division Bench of this Court examined the matter in AIR 1959 Orissa 152 (James Bushi v. Collector of Ganjam) and stated thus:—

“In departmental proceedings against delinquent public servants they are not entitled, as of right, to be represented by a lawyer; and it is left to the discretion of the Officer holding the enquiry to allow, or refuse to allow, a lawyer to represent the delinquent officer. Hence, the mere denial of such legal help will not necessarily involve failure to observe the rules of natural justice in all cases. In considering the question of prejudice other factors such as the nature of the charges made against the public servant and his own educational and other attainments which have a bearing on his ability to defend himself without legal help, should also be considered.”

On the next occasion when the same point came up for examination in AIR 1962 Orissa 78 (Nitya Ranjan v. State) Chief Justice Narasimham on behalf of the Division Bench stated:—

“Though in a departmental enquiry the delinquent public servant may not be entitled as of right to legal assistance to defend himself, nevertheless, there may be special circumstances connected with the case, such as, complexity of facts, volume of evidence, the educational attainments and experience of the public servant etc. which may show that without legal assistance he will not be able to adequately cross-examine the witnesses or to establish his innocence. In such circumstances denial of legal assistance may be equivalent to denial of ‘reasonable opportunity’ within the meaning of Article 311 (2) and the entire proceeding is liable to be quashed.”

In both the cases, the principle that in proper cases legal assistance would be required to be provided as a part of “reasonable opportunity” was accepted. But in the first case the Court came to hold that the petitioner therein was used to the process prevalent in court and as a fact had been able to cross-examine the witnesses sufficiently. Therefore they did not entertain the contention that denial of legal assistance had vitiated the ultimate order of punishment. In the second case, however, their Lordships stated as follows:—

xity. The total number of witnesses examined on the side of the prosecution and defence and Court was 91. The total number of documents exhibited was 166. The deposition of witnesses alone runs into 437 pages. . . . . The charges deal with criminal breach of trust, falsification of accounts and forgery which, as is well known, are some of the most difficult offences in the Penal Code.

The petitioner is comparatively a junior officer of the Forest Department who entered service in 1951 and has absolutely no knowledge of law. It is true that as an Assistant Conservator of Forests he might have detected and tried a few minor forest offences, but his intellectual attainments and experience cannot be said to be of that standard as to enable him adequately to cross-examine witnesses in a case of this type. . . . . In the peculiar circumstances of this case, therefore, the petitioner should have been permitted to be represented by a lawyer as prayed for by him.”

The punishment in the second case was vacated on the aforesaid finding. The facts of the present case are almost comparable to the facts of AIR 1962 Orissa 78 referred to above. The gravity of the charges, the nature of evidence led, and the extent of documents exhibited clearly go to show that the petitioner could not have cross-examined the witnesses and supported his defence without representation by a lawyer. This aspect of the matter came up for examination by a Division Bench of this Court consisting of my Lord the Chief Justice and myself very recently in O. J. C. No. 1678 of 1968 (Orissa) (Purna Chandra Sethi v. Supdt., Proof and Experiments, Chandipur) disposed of on 30-7-1969, wherein my Lord the Chief Justice examined the legal aspects at length and laid down the law applicable to such cases.

8. The person nominated to present the case in support of the charges in this case was an Anti-corruption Inspector. The petitioner raised an objection to the engagement of such a person at the enquiry. On 14-7-1958 the disciplinary authority informed the petitioner the decision on his objection. Annexure 6 is the said decision which is extracted below:—

“With reference to your letter No. 15 dated 18-2-1958 raising an objection to the presence of Sri G. N. Brahma, Inspector, Anti-corruption in course of the hearing, I am to inform you that there is no harm in having an investigating officer to assist the enquiring officer. The enquiring officer can take any reasonable assistance in the matter, as such. Your objection to Shri G. N. Brahma assisting the investigating officer in course of the enquiry is not acceptable. . . . .”

It may be true that the Anti-corruption Inspector was not a legal practitioner. But we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that the said Inspector is an experienced prosecutor and for the petitioner to be pitted against such a person at the enquiry definitely puts the delinquent petitioner at a disadvantage. Such a contention was raised before this Court in AIR 1962 Orissa 78 referred to above. His Lordship the Chief Justice in disposing of this matter in that case stated:—

"The petitioner and the Prosecuting Inspector were not placed on the same footing as far as the applicability of Rule 6 (2) of the Disciplinary Proceeding (Administrative Tribunal) Rules were concerned. He further contended that the word 'counsel' occurring in Rule 6 (2) should not be given a narrow meaning so as to restrict it to legal practitioners practising in law courts but that it should be construed in a liberal sense to include all those persons who by virtue of their experience and attainments are in no way inferior to legal practitioners." The Court however did not dispose of the said aspect.

9. This point came up for examination before a Division Bench of Mysore High Court in AIR 1964 Mys 250 (T. Muniswamy v. State of Mysore). Iyer, J., delivering the judgment of the Division Bench, said,—

"But the two rules made by the Governor assist the impeachment in every possible way and cripple the defence in an equal measure. If one of these rules permits the impeachment to be entrusted to any agency selected by the disciplinary authority, and empowers him to do so in any case, there can be small reason for the refusal of that right to the government servant or for the prescription of the permission of the disciplinary authority to engage counsel. The bestowal of power on the disciplinary authority to decide whether the case is one for the grant or refusal of such permission without placing any such restriction on the power of the disciplinary authority to arrange for the conduct of the impeachment, is as unreasonable and discriminatory as the prohibition against the engagement of any one other than an approved government servant for the conduct of the defence without any corresponding restraint on the selection by the disciplinary authority. Further, although a disciplinary authority is a tribunal to whom the power to pronounce on the guilt or innocence of the government servant is confided, Rule 11 (5) very strangely makes it his duty to arrange for the presentation of the case in support of the charge, which is not known to be the concern of a quasi-judicial tribunal which the disciplinary authority is. If the exercise of the power to nominate a person to conduct the impeachment involves the application of the mind of the disciplinary authority to the selection of a suitable person for that purpose, the disciplinary authority does not when making such selection function as a tribunal but as a statutory authority entrusted with the duty to arrange for the establishment of the accusation, and in that role, it occupies a position similar to that of the government servant both of whom should therefore be treated alike and afforded equal opportunities in their respective pursuits which Rule 11 (5) does not, and is therefore susceptible to the criticism that its provisions are not in consonance with the spirit of clause (2) of Art. 311. ...." There is much force in what has been stated and it is indeed a matter for serious consideration of the authorities framing rules under Article 311 (2) of the Constitution connected with disciplinary proceedings to examine this aspect of the matter and provide sufficient protection for the guarantee of reasonable opportunity to the delinquent public servant. In this view of the matter, the second contention of Mr. Misra also succeeds. In the facts and circumstances of this case, the disciplinary authority acted contrary to the spirit of Article 311 (2) of the Constitution in denying the representation of the petitioner by a lawyer at the enquiry, and thus deprived him of the reasonable opportunity guaranteed to the petitioner as a public servant under the said provisions of the Constitution. The enquiry is thus vitiated.

10. We, therefore, issue a writ of certiorari and quash the order of discharge from service of the petitioner dated 7-5-1963 and direct that the petitioner be taken as continuing in service. We however make it clear that it is open to the disciplinary authority to continue the proceedings on the basis of the charges framed in accordance with law. This writ application is allowed with costs. Hearing fee of Rs. 100/- (Rupees one hundred).

Sudhakar Chadei, Petitioner v. The State of Orissa, Opposite Party.

O. J. C. No. 283 of 1965, D/- 17-11-1969.

(A) Civil Services — Orissa Administrative Services Class II (Recruitment) Rules (1959), Rule 6 and Regulations framed under R. 6 — Reg. 10 — Reservation for Scheduled Castes — Competitive examination by State Public Service Commission — Public Service Commission recommending 33 candidates for 'A' Class posts and 53 for B class posts — Scheduled Caste candidate standing 105th in order of merit recommended for 'B' class post — Candidate appointed to 'B' class post cannot claim appointment to 'A' class post on the basis of reservation in 'A' class posts.

CN/DN/B550/70/BDB/M

(B) Constitution of India, 'Article 335 — Reservation in services for Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes — Candidates found unfit cannot claim appointment despite reservation.

Constitutional guarantee given to members of Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes that a certain proportion of posts in the Public Services should be reserved for them is subject to the paramount consideration that they must be declared fit by the Public Service Commission having regard to the maintenance of administrative efficiency; if the members of the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes, are unfit, they cannot claim to be appointed to the service despite reservation. (Para 6)

S. P. Mohapatra, for Petitioner; Advocate-General, for Opposite Party.

G. K. MISRA, C. J.: Facts more or less are not in dispute. The petitioner belongs to the 'Tiar' community which is a Scheduled Caste. He graduated from the Utkal University in 1962. In the competitive examination held by the Orissa Public Service Commission for the year, the petitioner secured the 105th position in the list of 133 successful candidates. He was the only successful scheduled caste candidate. The Public Service Commission placed him under Group 'B' with the following observation:

"There were fifteen candidates and seven candidates belonging to the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes respectively. Five scheduled caste candidates and four scheduled tribe candidates did not take the examination. Out of the remaining candidates who appeared at the examination only one scheduled caste candidate qualified himself at the examination. He is Sri Sudhakar Ghadei who occupies the 105th position in the enclosed list. The commission, having regard to the maintenance of efficiency of administration consider him suitable for appointment to the services under Group B. He was appointed to the Junior Branch of O. F. S." (Orissa Finance Service).

The Service Commission recommended the first 33 candidates in the list of 133 as being suitable for appointment to the services under Group 'A', under the Orissa Administrative Service, Class II (Appointment by Competitive Examination) Regulations, 1959, (hereinafter referred to as the Regulations). Government appointed 27 candidates to the services under Group 'A'. In the ordinary course, the petitioner could not have been appointed to any of the Services under Group 'B' as, in all Government appointed 86 candidates to the Services in both the groups and the position of the petitioner was 105th. The Service Commission, however, having regard to the maintenance of efficiency of administration considered him suitable for appointment to any service under Group 'B', in consideration of the special provision relating to reservation of vacancies for members of the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes. The petitioner's case is that as there is reservation of 18 per cent for each category of Service and as he was the only successful scheduled caste candidate he should have been appointed to any of the services under Group 'A' even though his position was 105th in the list of successful candidates.

This contention requires a careful examination of the various provisions of the Orissa Administrative Services Class II (Recruitment) Rules, 1959 (hereinafter referred to as the Rules) and of the Regulations.

3. Rule 4 relates to method of recruitment. Clause (a) thereof prescribes direct recruitment by competitive examination. Rule 6 provides that recruitment to the Service shall, subject to the provisions of the Rules, be in accordance with such regulations as the State Government may, after consultation with the Service Commission, make in this behalf. Such regulations, in the case of direct recruitment, shall inter alia provide for reservation of seats for scheduled castes and scheduled tribes in accordance with orders issued by the State Government from time to time. Regulation 3 deals with holding of examinations. It runs thus:—

"3. Holding of examination. — (1) A combined competitive examination shall be conducted by the Commission having regard to the likely number of vacancies each year, in the manner prescribed in Schedule I for direct recruitment to the Services mentioned in Groups A and B below:—

Group A.

(i) The Orissa Administrative Service, Class II

(ii) The Orissa Finance Service (Senior Branch)

(iii) The Orissa Police Service

Group B.

(i) The Orissa Subordinate Administrative Service

(ii) The Orissa Finance Service (Junior Branch)

(2). The dates on which and the places at which the examination shall be held, shall be fixed by the Commission."

It will thus be seen that by virtue of Regulation 3, a combined competitive examination shall be conducted by the Public Service Commission, after taking into account the total number of anticipated vacancies, both in Groups A and B. Though the status and scales of pay of the Services in Groups A and B essentially differ, still one combined examination is held for both the classes of services. As would be explained hereafter this is based on the simple reason that persons higher in the list would be selected for Group A and the remaining persons lower in the list would be appointed to the Services under Group B according to the vacancies.

4. The other relevant regulations are 7 to 10. They may be extracted in full:

7. Forwarding of the list by the Commission (1). The Commission shall forward to the Government in the Administrative Department a list, arranged in order of merit, of the candidates who have qualified by such standards as the Commission may determine and of the candidates belonging to Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes who, though not qualified by that standard, are having regard to the maintenance of efficiency of administration, declared by the Commission to be suitable for appointment to the service. The list shall also be published for general information.

(2) The said list shall ordinarily be in force for one year from the date of its preparation by the Commission:

Provided that the State Government may at any time, in consultation with the Commission, for a grave lapse in the conduct on the part of any person included in the list, remove the name of such person from the list.

8. Filling of vacancies — Subject to the provisions of Regulations 10, 12 and 13 candidates will be considered for appointment to the available vacancies in the order in which their names appear in the list.

9. Allotment — (1) Candidates securing the highest places on the results of the examination and eligible for appointment to the services included in group A under regulation 3 (1) will subject to any preference that (may) have been expressed by them in their applications, be appointed to these, upto the number of vacancies that are decided by Government to be filled on the result of the examination. Due consideration will be given to the preference expressed by a candidate at the time of his application, but the Government reserve the power to assign him to any service for which he is a candidate and for which he is considered most suitable.

(2) If two or more candidates obtain equal marks in the aggregate, the order of merit shall be determined in accordance with the highest marks secured by such candidates in the aggregate in the compulsory subject; should the marks in the aggregate in the compulsory subject be also equal, then the order of merit shall be decided in accordance with the highest marks secured in the viva voce test.

10 Reservation for Castes and Tribes candidates:— (1) Eighteen per cent and twenty per cent of the available vacancies shall be reserved for candidates who are members of Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes, respectively.

(2) In filling the vacancies so reserved, candidates who are members of the Scheduled Castes or Scheduled Tribes shall be considered for appointment in the order in which their names appear in the list, irrespective of their relative ranks as compared with other candidates.

(3) If a sufficient number of candidates who are members of the Scheduled Castes or Scheduled Tribes are not available for filling all the vacancies reserved, the remaining vacancies shall be filled by the appointment of other candidates in the list and an equivalent number of additional vacancies shall be reserved for candidates belonging to the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes to be filled on the results of the next examination:

Provided that if a sufficient number of suitable candidates belonging to the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes is not available as a result of the said next examination to fill all the reserved vacancies including the additional vacancies, the additional vacancies, or such of them as are not filled, shall lapse.

5. On an analysis of the Regulations, it will be clear that the Service Commission shall forward to Government one list, arranged in the order of merit, of all the candidates who have qualified by such standards as the Commission may determine. Such a list would be based purely on merit, on the basis of the results of the competitive examination. It would not fit in with the reservation of seats for scheduled caste and scheduled tribe candidates, for whom, according to Regulation 10 (1) eighteen and twenty per cent respectively of the available vacancies would be reserved. To harmonise the inconsistency arising out of taking in general candidates on the basis of results of the competitive examination and Scheduled caste and scheduled tribe candidates on the basis of reservation, the Regulations have devised a method by prescribing that even if a candidate belonging to the scheduled caste or scheduled tribe may not be qualified by the standard prescribed by the Service Commission on the basis of the competitive examination, his name should be included in the list to fulfil the ratio of reservation, if the Commission declares that such a candidate, having due regard to the maintenance of efficiency of administration, is suitable for appointment to the Service. Once the Commission gives such a declaration under Regulation 7, then by virtue of Regulation 10 (2) the vacancy would be filled up taking in the scheduled caste or scheduled tribe candidate if his name appears in the list, even though his relative rank, as compared with the other general candidates may be much lower.

In this particular case, the Public Service Commission recommended the first 33 candidates as being suitable for appointment to the Services under Group A. Indisputably, the petitioner does not come within this list of 33 candidates. Yet, he could be selected for Group A if the Public Service Commission declares that though by the standard of the competitive examination he could not come within these 33 places, yet he was suitable for appointment under Group A having regard to maintenance of efficiency of administration. The Commission not having made any such declaration, the petitioner cannot claim to be appointed to any of the services under Group A.

6. On merits, the petitioner could not have been appointed to any of the services under Group B also, because, in all, only 86 candidates were appointed under both the groups and the petitioner secured the 105th place. The Public Service Commission, however declared that though the petitioner is not entitled to be selected for Group B on the basis of the competitive examination, yet, having regard to the maintenance of efficiency of administration, he was suitable for appointment to the services under Group B. This principle has been evolved in order to, preserve the constitutional guarantee given to members of Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes that a certain proportion of posts in the Public Services should be reserved for them. This however is subject to the paramount consideration that they must be fit; if the members of the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes, are unfit, they cannot claim to be appointed to the service despite reservation.

7. The writ application fails and is dismissed but in the circumstances without costs.

RAY, J.: 8. I agree.

Application dismissed.

Netrananda Barik, Petitioner v. State of Orissa and another, Opposite Parties.

O. J. C. No. 231 of 1966, D/- 13-2-1970.
Co-operative Societies — Orissa Co-operative Societies Act, 1951 (11 of 1952). Sections 8, 71 — Government is empowered to confer all powers of Registrar on persons appointed to assist him under sub-section (1) of Section 8 — Powers exercisable under Section 71 by Registrar can also be exercised by officers appointed to assist him, when such power is conferred on them by Notification under Section 8 (2) — O. J. C. No. 104 of 1967 (Orissa), Overruled.

Although the Act maintains a distinction between a "Registrar" and "persons authorised to exercise the powers of a registrar", yet Section 8 authorises the State Government to entrust the powers of the Registrar on persons appointed to assist him. Normally under Section 71 power to receive references is vested with the Registrar but when that power is conferred by the Notification D/- 28-2-1956 on persons appointed to assist him, it cannot be challenged on the ground that the Act makes a distinction between the two classes of officers. Though a broad distinction has been maintained in the conferment of powers, there is still some scope for ambiguity as to who should exercise the powers from amongst various classes of officers who can entertain those powers; that by itself is not enough to invalidate the Notification. (A provision similar to Section 15 Civil P. C. (1908), is recommended by the Court). O. J. C. No. 104 of 1967, (Orissa), Overruled; AIR 1958 Orissa 217, Disting; AIR 1956 SC 35, Ref.

R. Mohanty and S. C. Ghosh, for Petitioner; Govt. Advocate and K. C. J. Ray, for Opposite Parties.

R. N. MISRA, J.:— This application under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution of India seeks to challenge the jurisdiction of the Assistant Registrar under the Orissa Co-operative Societies Act, 1951 (Act 11 of 1952) (hereinafter referred to as the Act) to make the impugned award on 27-3-62 in a dispute raised by Opposite Party No. 2. That award of the Assistant Registrar was challenged in an appeal before the Deputy Registrar under Section 128 (1) of the Act and was also subjected to two revisions in succession — one under Section 131 before the Registrar and the other under Section 132 (1) before the State Government. The decision of the Assistant Registrar having been upheld by all the forums the petitioner has come up before this Court.

2. One of the grounds raised in the petition is that the Assistant Registrar had no jurisdiction to entertain the dispute directly and his taking cognizance of the dispute without a reference of the dispute being made by the Registrar has vitiated the exercise of a jurisdiction by the Assistant Registrar. When this writ application came up for hearing before a Division Bench consisting of their Lordships the Chief Justice and Ray, J., a decision of this Court passed in O. J. C. No. 104 of 1967 (Orissa) was cited wherein my Lord the Chief Justice and myself took the view that it was not open to the Assistant Registrar to entertain a dispute raised under Section 71 (1) of the Act unless such a dispute was referred to him by the Registrar. The correctness of this decision was challenged before the Division Bench which was hearing this writ application and, therefore, in pursuance of the order dated 10-12-1969 this larger Bench has been constituted to examine the correctness of the decision in O. J. C. No. 104 of 1967 (Orissa) (hereinafter referred to as the "earlier case").

3. The reasoning which was given in the earlier case to uphold the conclusion that no other authority except the Registrar was entitled to entertain a dispute under the Act was as follows:—

"It is not disputed by the parties that the Assistant Registrar and the Deputy Registrar are persons on whom jurisdiction has been conferred under Section 8 (2) of the Act to discharge the specified powers entrusted to the Registrar by or under the Act. But the scheme of Section 73 makes it clear that all references of disputes under Section 71 are to be made to the Registrar, and after the disputes are received he may dispose of the disputes himself or transfer such disputes for disposal to persons authorised under Section 8 (2) of the Act. The necessary consequence of this provision is that no other authority than the Registrar has jurisdiction to receive reference of disputes which are to be made under Section 71 of the Act, and after taking cognizance of the disputes under Section 73 it is open to the Registrar to keep the disputes for disposal by himself or transfer the same to the persons authorised in the manner indicated above. Therefore it follows that unless a dispute is transferred either to the Assistant Registrar or to the Deputy Registrar by the Registrar, the former has no jurisdiction to be in seisin of it. On the aforesaid analysis, the award of the Deputy Registrar is wholly without jurisdiction inasmuch as neither the Assistant Registrar before whom the dispute was originally placed nor the Deputy Registrar to whom it was transferred as indicated above could entertain the dispute unless it was one which had been received by the Registrar and had been made over to either of them for disposal in accordance with the Statute."

4. The Learned Counsel appearing before us now did not dispute the correctness of the aforesaid conclusion if it was to be drawn only from the statutory provisions contained in Chapter IX of the Act. The clear effect of the provisions in Sections 71(1) and 73 of the Act would lead to the said conclusion. The correctness of the decision is, however, disputed on the basis that by notification as authorised under the Statute the powers vested in the Registrar under Sections 71 and 73 of the Act have been delegated to the other authorities under the Act appointed to assist the Registrar, and in view of the delegation of the authority of the Registrar to those subordinate authorities of the Registrar, it is now contended, the conclusion could not be correct. Before us in the earlier case reference to the notification by which such powers have been so delegated had not been placed (made—Ed.) and the conclusions were reached on a bare analysis of the statutory provisions in Chap. IX of the Act.

5. In view of the additional feature now placed at length, namely, that certain powers of the Registrar have been delegated to those appointed to assist him, the matter has to be reconsidered and the correctness of the earlier decision in the present background has to be decided.

6. It would be useful to refer at length for convenience to all the material provisions of the Act in due course. That there is a clear distinction throughout the Statute between the "Registrar" and "persons appointed to assist the Registrar" cannot be and is not disputed.

Section 2 (a) of the Act defines "Registrar" means "a person appointed to perform the duties of a Registrar of Co-operative Societies under this Act". Section 8 of the Act makes the following provisions:

"8 (1) The State Government may appoint a person to be Registrar of Co-operative Societies for the State of Orissa and may appoint persons to assist him.

(2) Subject to restrictions imposed by the rules, the State Government may, by general or special order in this behalf published in the Gazette, confer all or any of the powers entrusted to the Registrar, by or under this Act, on any person appointed under sub-section (1) to assist the Registrar."

7. It is not disputed that appointments have been made under sub-section (1) of Section 8 of categories of authorities as persons meant to assist the Registrar. Such categories are the Additional Registrar, the Joint Registrar, Deputy Registrars and Assistant Registrars. It is also not disputed that by notifications duly published in the gazette the State Government have conferred many of the enumerated powers entrusted to the Registrar by or under the Act on those authorities.

8. The powers under Sections 71 and 73 appear to have been clearly conferred by that notification on all those authorities enumerated above who have been appointed to assist the Registrar. The notification relevant for the present purpose is dated 28-2-1950 and as far as relevant it reads as follows:—

"Notification.

Dated, Bhubaneswar, the 28th Feb., 1950.

No. 3215/C.F. In pursuance of sub-section (2) of Section 8 of the Orissa Co-operative Societies Act 1951 (Orissa Act XI of 1952) the Government of Orissa are pleased to confer on the Assistant Registrars of Co-operative Societies in charge of Co-operative Circles constituted in the Notification of the Government of Orissa in the Development (L. S. G.) Department No. 5153 L. S. G. dated the 29th June, 1954 the powers of Registrar of Co-operative Societies, Orissa under the following Sections under the said Act and Rules made thereunder and to the extent, if any, specified therein, namely:—

(iii) Sections 71, 73, sub-sections (1), (2) (3) and (4) of Section 103, Section 104, sub-section (3) and clause (a) of sub-section (1) of Section 105 and Section 121. .... It is not contended before us that Rules have been made imposing restrictions on conferment of the powers of the Registrar on the persons appointed to assist him as envisaged under sub-section (2) of Section 8 of the Act.

9. On the basis of the aforesaid notification which admittedly was in force on the date when the dispute was filed before the Assistant Registrar in the present case it is contended that the power of the Registrar to receive disputes under Section 71 (1) of the Act was open to be exercised by the Assistant Registrar who as a fact took cognizance of the dispute directly. The jurisdiction inhering in the Registrar for exercise of powers under Sections 71 and 73 has been vested, it is contended, in the Assistant Registrar on the authority of the aforesaid notification and, therefore, the Assistant Registrar had jurisdiction to entertain the dispute filed before him by opposite Party No. 2 and no objection can be taken to his entertaining the dispute without a reference being made by the Registrar.

10. This contention raised on behalf of Opposite Party No. 2 who initiated the dispute before the Assistant Registrar is challenged by the petitioner with reference to the specific provisions made in Section 73 of the Act. The provisions of Section 73 are to the following effect:—

“(1) On receipt of a reference under Section 71, the Registrar may—

- (a) decide the dispute himself; or
- (b) transfer it for disposal to any person authorised by the State Government to exercise the powers of a Registrar in this behalf; or
- (c) subject to any rules, refer it for disposal to an arbitrator or arbitrators appointed in this behalf by the State Government.

(2) Subject to any rules, the Registrar may withdraw any reference transferred or referred under clauses (b) and (c) of sub-section (1) and decide it himself under clause (a) of that sub-section or transfer or refer it again under clause (b) or (c) of that sub-section to another person exercising the powers of Registrar, or to an arbitrator or arbitrators other than those to whom the reference was originally transferred or referred.

(3) The Registrar, a person exercising the powers of the Registrar under this section, or an arbitrator or arbitrators deciding a dispute under this section, shall have power to order the expenses incurred in determining such dispute to be paid out of the funds of the society or by such party or parties to the dispute as he or they may think fit.”

Mr. Mohanty, learned Counsel for the petitioner contends that throughout the Act a distinction has been made between the Registrar and the persons authorised by the State Government to exercise the powers of a Registrar. In view of the fact that these two authorities, namely, the “Registrar” and “persons authorised to exercise the powers of a Registrar” appear in the same Chapter of the Statute, one authority cannot be equated to the other and a distinction must necessariety be maintained between the two. He seeks to place reliance for this argument of his on a decision of their Lordships of the Supreme Court in AIR 1956 SC 35, (Member, Board of Revenue v. A. P. Benthall). It has been stated therein by their Lordships:

“When two words of different import are used in a statute in two consecutive provisions, it would be difficult to maintain that they are used in the same sense, and the conclusion must follow that the expression ‘distinct matters’ in Section 5 and ‘descriptions’ in Section 6 have different connotations.”

Mr. Mohanty contends that though Rules have not been framed imposing restrictions upon delegation as we are required to put a harmonious construction on the provisions contained in the different Sections of the Statute by necessary implication it would follow that the State Government had no jurisdiction to confer powers on persons appointed to assist the Registrar in such manner that the two terms would in fact stand equated.

11. Historically it is an undisputed position that until the notification of 28-2-1956 there had been no conferment of the Registrar’s powers under Chapter IX on any person appointed to assist him. Therefore when it was challenged before this Court that the provisions of Section 183 of the Act by which restriction has been imposed on appearance of parties through counsel were unconstitutional in AIR 1958 Orissa 217, (Bharat Naik v. Co-op. Societies, Cuttack). Narasimham, J. has stated:

“Moreover, it seems a reasonable classification to divide into two groups the authorities who may exercise powers under the Act, the higher group consisting of the Registrar, the State Government, the Collector and the Board of Revenue, and the lower group consisting of other officers exercising the powers of Registrar, liquidator, arbitrator or body of arbitrators, etc. Before the former authorities there is no deprivation of the right of a party to be represented by a legal practitioner. It is only before the latter authorities that a party is deprived of the right of appearing through a legal practitioner.

If the Legislature thought that before the lower authorities the main questions to be decided may not generally involve difficult questions of law, but only ascertainment of facts and that for that purpose there would be no need for any legal practitioners to assist the party, it will be difficult to hold that the distinction made between these groups of authorities is unreasonable. Moreover, every order passed by any of the lower authorities is subject to appeal to the Registrar before whom a legal practitioner may appear as of right. The absence of any rule for the guidance of the Registrar while making an order of transfer under Section 73 of the Act will not affect the constitutionality of that provision. It is expected that while making orders of transfer the Registrar would first of all consider the questions involved in the case the competence of the transferee officer to decide those questions and then transfer only those cases where, in his opinion, the aid of a legal practitioner will not be required, before those lower authorities."

The reasoning given by the Division Bench in the aforesaid decision is not relevant to resolve the dispute before us. It is quite possible that in view of the present delegations by which the powers entrusted to the Registrar under the Act have now been conferred on his subordinates, the reasoning given to negative the contentions raised before the Division Bench may not be justified. We, however, do not propose to express any final opinion on that point. Suffice it to say that the aforesaid authority is not relevant for our purpose except to the extent that it notices the fact that until then it was only the Registrar who was receiving the disputes.

12. The scheme contained in Chapter IX of the Act in regard to receipt of disputes as also for settlement of disputes seems to have been similar in the corresponding Statutes in the States of Bihar, Delhi, Madras, Punjab and Kerala. In the material Sections in the Statutes in vogue in those States the specified disputes are required to be referred to the Registrar and the Registrar is also authorised either to dispose of the disputes himself or refer the same for disposal to persons exercising the powers of a Registrar in that behalf. Provisions similar to the ones contained in Section 8 of the Act are also contained in those Statutes.

13. Mr. Mohanty contends that the provisions in the Statute are so drafted that there is enough room for the view that had been taken by us in the earlier decision. Possibly there is some force in that contention. But once the Statute authorises the State Government by notification in the gazette to confer those powers which have been entrusted to the Registrar under the Statute on the persons appointed to assist him and such notifications have been duly made, we cannot take the view that the powers which were entrusted to the Registrar under Sections 71 and 73 of the Act cannot be exercised by the Assistant Registrar or any other persons so authorised. It was open to Government not to confer the powers of the Registrar under Section 71 of the Act on the Assistant Registrar and authorise the persons appointed to assist the Registrar only for the purposes of settlement of disputes under Section 73 of the Act. In that eventuality all disputes were bound to be referred only to the Registrar and the Registrar could decide the dispute himself or transfer them for disposal under clause (b) or (c) of sub-section (1) of Section 73 of the Act. There is, however, no restriction on the conferment of the power exercisable by the Registrar under Section 71 (1) on the persons appointed to assist him, and once such conferment is made in the manner indicated by the Statute objection cannot be taken to such conferment. In view of the clear provisions made in the Statute and in the face of the notification in question the only conclusion that can reasonably flow would be to hold that a dispute can also be referred to a person who has been authorised by notification to exercise the powers of the Registrar under Section 71 (1) of the Act.

14. A challenge to the notification was also attempted to be thrown on the ground that care has not been taken by the State Government to delegate the powers of the Registrar to his subordinates in a manner which would keep the spirit of the Statute intact. It was also canvassed that if full effect is given to the notification it would lead to uncertainty of jurisdiction and the self same dispute may be referred to either the Registrar or an authority subordinate to him. The learned Government Advocate brought to our notice the conditions indicated in the conferment of powers in the notification. A broad distinction has been maintained in making the conferment of powers; disputes which arise between institutions whose area of operation is State-wide have been reserved for authorities having State-wide jurisdiction namely, the Additional Registrar and the joint Registrar; disputes arising in relation to societies having limited area of operation but beyond the local limits of circles have been reserved for the Deputy Registrars whose jurisdiction is in relation to ranges and the other disputes which are limited within the circles have been assigned to the Assistant Registrars. A dispute which is, however, entertainable by the Assistant Registrar being a dispute covered within the circle would also be maintainable before the Registrar direct unless a provision similar to the one made under Section 15, Civil Procedure Code which prescribes,

"Every suit shall be instituted in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it" is also made either in the Rules or in the notification or is indicated in the notification as a condition. Unless such a provision is made there may be some scope for ambiguity, but that by itself would not be a ground to resolve the dispute in favour of the petitioner.

15. On the aforesaid analysis we would hold that by virtue of the notification under Section 8 (2) of the Act the State Government have jurisdiction to confer all the powers which have been entrusted by the Statute to the Registrar upon persons appointed under sub-section (1) of Section 8 of the Act to assist the Registrar. In view of such notification and authorisation the Deputy Registrar in the earlier case had jurisdiction to entertain the dispute directly though the dispute had not been referred by the Registrar. On the aforesaid conclusion of ours, the answer would necessarily be that the said point had not been correctly decided in the earlier case.

16. This matter will now go back for disposal on merits by the Division Bench. We do not propose to make any order as to costs of this reference.

R. N. MISRA, J.:— This is an appeal by the plaintiffs (the original plaintiff having died, his legal representatives) in a suit for declaration that the sale deed dated 27-9-1958 executed by defendant No. 1 in favour of defendants 4 and 5 is fraudulent and does not confer title on the transferees. Their claim was accepted by the trial Court, but has been negated by the lower appellate court. Hence the plaintiffs are in second appeal against the reversing judgment.

EN/EN/C398/70/VSS/C

2. A short genealogy would be useful to indicate the mutual relationship of the parties.

The suit property is claimed to be the joint family property of the plaintiffs and defendants 1 to 3. In 1948, the defendant No. 1 executed a will with the ill motive of bequeathing all the properties to defendants 2 and 3. The plaintiff instituted T.S.2/49 for partition of the ancestral lands located at Angapada. That suit was decreed and the decree was affirmed even by this Court. On the plea that the properties now in the suit which are located at village Turada are also the joint family properties and have been left out of partition on the earlier occasion, the present suit has been filed. It is claimed that on 27-9-1958 the defendant No. 1 executed the sale deed for the suit land in favour of defendants 4 and 5 which is a void transaction. The plaintiffs claim that they have their 1/4th interest in the suit lands.

3. The defence of defendants 1, 2 and 3 jointly is that the suit is barred both under Section 11 and under Order 2, Rule 2, Civil Procedure Code. The suit property is not the joint family property, but it is the self-acquired property of defendant No. 1. The plaintiff is not in possession of this property for more than 12 years and as such his present suit is barred by limitation.

4. The learned trial Judge came to hold that the suit lands were ancestral joint family property; the suit was not barred under Section 11 nor under Order 2, Rule 2, Civil Procedure Code; the suit was also not bad on the theory of partial partition. He further found that the sale deed dated 27-9-1958 in favour of defendants 4 and 5 was not binding on the plaintiffs and he accordingly decreed the suit.

5. On appeal by the defendants, the learned appellate Judge affirmed the findings of the trial Court that the suit land was the joint family property. He further found that the property under Ext. 8 was the self-acquisition of Achuta and was not liable for partition. He, however, came to find that the suit was barred under Order 2, Rule 2, Civil Procedure Code and was also barred by limitation.

6. In view of the concurrent finding in the courts below that the property is the joint property and in view of the admitted status of the plaintiff as a co-sharer, normally relief of partition could be granted.

7. The only stumbling block in the way in the opinion of the lower appellate Court is that the present claim is barred under Order 2, Rule 2, Civil Procedure Code. The single point for determination in the second appeal, therefore, is as to whether the present claim for partition is barred under Order 2, Rule 2, Civil Procedure Code. Order 2, Rule 2, Civil Procedure Code reads thus:

(1) Every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action but a plaintiff may relinquish any portion of his claim in order to bring the suit within the jurisdiction of any Court.

(2) Where a plaintiff omits to sue in respect of, or intentionally relinquishes, any portion of his claim, he shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion omitted or relinquished.

(3) A person entitled to more than one relief in respect of the same cause of action may sue for all or any of such reliefs, but if he omits, except with the leave of the Court, to sue for all such reliefs, he shall not afterwards sue for any relief so omitted.

Explanation: .....

8. In a suit for partition in respect of a co-sharer and in respect of a coparcener a distinction in law has always been maintained. For a coparcener who seeks to separate himself from the hitherto joint corpus the cause of action arises in respect of the entire joint property at a single point of time while in respect of a co-sharer joint tenant it may arise at different points of time in respect of different items of property. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee examined the scope of Order 2, Rule 2, Civil Procedure Code at considerable length in the case of Mohammad Khalil Khan v. Mahbub Ali Mian, AIR 1949 PC 78. Sir Madhavan Nair, J., speaking on behalf of the Board summarised the principle thus:

"The principles laid down in the cases thus far discussed may be thus summarised:

(1) The correct test in cases falling under Order 2, Rule 2, is "whether the claim in the new suit is in fact founded upon a cause of action distinct from that which was the foundation for the former suit."

(2) The cause of action means every fact which will be necessary for the plaintiff to prove if traversed in order to support his right to the judgment.

(3) If the evidence to support the two claims is different, then the causes of action are also different.

(4) The causes of action in the two suits may be considered to be the same if in substance they are identical.

(5) The cause of action has no relation whatever to the defence that may be set up by the defendant nor does it depend upon the character of the relief prayed for by the plaintiff. It refers ..... to the media upon which the plaintiff asks the Court to arrive at a conclusion in his favour."

9. Their Lordships of the Supreme Court examined the scope of sub-rule (3) of Order 2, Civil Procedure Code in the case of Shankar Sitaram v. Balkrishna Sitaram, AIR 1954 SC 352. They dismissed the action in the said case holding that it was barred under the said sub-rule as the plaintiff had omitted to sue for a relief which was available to him when the suit in respect of the other items of claim had been filed on an earlier occasion. My Lord, the present Chief Justice had also occasion to consider the applicability of Order 2, Rule 2, C. P. C. in the case of Union of India represented by the General Manager, South Eastern Rly. v. Iswar Sahu Hadibandhu Sahu, (1966) 8 O J D 26 and referring to the position indicated in the aforesaid decision of the Privy Council, held on the facts of that case that the subsequent claim was barred under Order 2, Rule 2, C. P. C.

10. A claim in respect of certain joint family property for partition directly came up for decision in some cases. Examining the applicability of Order 2, Rule 2, C. P. C. as a bar for a subsequent claim for partition in respect of certain property left out in the earlier suit, Chief Justice Wanchoo in a Division Bench case reported in A. I. R. 1954 Raj 269 indicated the law to be thus:—

"The reason why in the case of partition between coparceners all the property must be thrown in the hotchpot except for certain well-recognised exceptions is that where a member of a joint Hindu family who broke up the joint status, wants the joint family property to be divided, the cause of action arises at one time, and he must therefore include every item of property in the suit. But in the case of tenants-in-common, it is not necessary that the cause of action for partition of every item of the property which is held in common must arise at the same time. Therefore, it may be possible in cases of co-tenants that a suit may lie for one item of property at one time and for another item at another time.

It is clear, therefore, that in the case of tenants-in-common it is not essential that all the property held in common should be brought into hotchpot though it is desirable that as far as possible, in order to avoid multiplicity of suits, all the property should be included in one suit. It is, however, for the Court in each case to decide whether the case is of such a nature that the plaintiff should be ordered to include the remaining property also in the suit for division, provided of course the property is within the jurisdiction of the Court in case it is immovable property. But the suit, in our opinion, cannot be thrown out on the mere ground that all the property which is capable of partition was not included."

11. Admittedly in the present case the question of partial partition was not raised in the earlier litigation, Title Suit No. 2/49 and that suit was entertained for disposal on merit. If it had been contended that some other properties were left out, it was quite possible that action would have been taken by the present plaintiff who was also plaintiff in the said suit to have the disputed property included in the hotchpot.

12. A similar question in a suit for partition arose for determination in a Patna case. Raj Kishore Prasad, J., in the case of Sm. Jasoda Kumari Sewani v. Sm. Satyabhama Sewani, AIR 1960 Pat 76, after examining the law applicable to a case of this type held:

"..... it is manifest that, after a decree has been passed in a suit for partition of the joint family property, a subsequent suit for partition may be brought in respect of any portion of that property which, by mistake, or inadvertence, or due to ignorance or to oversight, or by consent of the co-owners, was omitted in the former suit, and if no objection is taken by the party concerned to a partial partition, the subsequent suit for partition of the portion of the property so left out and still held in joint possession, would be maintainable. If by mistake, or the like, acting innocently and fairly, a partition of a portion only of their estate has been made, whether by order of the Court or otherwise there is no reason why the Court should not grant a division of the remainder at the instance of one or more of the co-owners. In such a case, there could be no omission to sue within the meaning of Rule 2 of Order 2 of the Code."

13. In a more recent case dealing with this aspect of the matter, in the case of Venkatasubamma v. Venkata Subbamma, AIR 1964 Andh Pra 124, Jaganmohan Reddy, J., (as he then was) considered many authorities and ultimately held that a suit would lie in almost similar circumstances as in the present case. Keeping in view the legal position as indicated above I would hold that the present claim was not hit by Order 2, Rule 2, Civil Procedure Code. The learned appellate Judge has indicated no material to support his finding that the plaintiff intentionally did not include the suit land in his previous partition suit. On the other hand, the learned appellate Judge has stated:

"It shall be deemed that the plaintiff intentionally did not include."

There could be no scope to arrive at a finding by speculation or by drawing an inference from mere fact that on the earlier occasion, this item had been left out in the hotchpot in the partition. The learned appellate Judge came to his conclusions on a wrong basis of the legal position and as such his conclusions were also vitiated. I would hold in view of the concurrent finding that the property had been acquired from the joint family funds, and the plaintiffs' present claim is entitled to succeed. The fact that the defendant on the earlier occasion had not raised the plea that the present suit property had been left out from the hotchpot, the assertion of the plaintiffs in the present case that the existence of this property as a joint family asset was not known to him and the legal position that such a suit in certain circumstances is maintainable lead me to accept the claim of the plaintiffs in this case. Mere failure of existence of this property would not bring the case within the bar provided under Order 2, Rule 2, Civil Procedure Code. It is quite possible that the plaintiff on the earlier occasion did not have materials to find that this was a property which had been acquired out of joint family nucleus. Subsequently he came to find that this was acquired out of joint family nucleus and was, therefore, partible. More or less that is his case now. I would therefore vacate the judgment of the lower appellate Court and restore that of the trial Court and hold that the plaintiffs are entitled to their claim of 1/4th share in the suit property.

14. The appeal succeeds and is allowed. Since this is a suit for partition, I would direct both the parties to bear their own costs up to this stage.

Appeal allowed.

R Mohanty, for Petitioner; Standing Counsel for Opposite Parties

R. N. MISRA, J.:— This is an application under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution of India by the petitioner who is the recorded tenant of plot No 78 of khata No. 107 in mouza Bisinabar, Cuttack Town. Plots Nos 149, 150, 151 and 153 within the said mouza are homestead plots located in the neighbourhood of the petitioner's land, but plot No 78 intercepts these plots from the Municipal road. A sketch map is on record which shows the location of these plots at the spot. Plot No. 153 located nearabout is a big tank whose embankment was providing a circuitous approach from another municipal road to these plots from a different side.

The owners of these homestead plots who are quite a number of people approached the municipal authorities of Cuttack for construction of a road to link up these plots with the nearby municipal road and thereby provide a convenient outlet to the inhabitants of this area. The Municipal authorities decided that such a road in the interests of the inhabitants of the area should be provided and requested the State Government to acquire a part of the intervening Plot No. 78 of the petitioner to accommodate this proposed link road. The State Government took action under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act (hereinafter referred to as the Act) and issued a notice under Section 4 and invited objections under Section 5-A of the Act. The petitioner's case is that he did not know about the notice under Section 4 and that for the first time he came to know about this acquisition when a notice under Section 6 of the Act dated 15-5-1965 was published declaring the acquisition to be for a public purpose. The petitioner's further case is that the acquisition is not for a public purpose and only 3 or 4 persons are the direct beneficiaries of this acquisition. The petitioner cannot be deprived of his property by the process under the Land Acquisition Act in order to benefit some individuals, and the mere declaration under Section 6 of the Act that it is for a public purpose is not binding and cannot clothe the notification with the immunity that a valid notification under Section 6 of the Act is entitled to. Therefore, according to the petitioner, there is no public purpose and the acquisition must be quashed.

2. On behalf of the State of Orissa a counter-affidavit has been filed by the Additional District Magistrate of Cuttack. Therein it has been stated as follows:—

"From the materials on record it transpires that there was no connecting passage to plots Nos 149, 150, 151 and 153. As a lot of inconvenience and difficulties were being faced for going into and coming from the said plots certain members of the public made an application to the Municipality for construction of a road at Dhobi Lane. The matter was in due course placed before the Municipal Council and the Municipal Council decided and passed a resolution that the construction of a road in that locality was in the interest of and for the benefit of the public. The resolution to that effect was passed by the Municipal Council and necessary steps were taken for the acquisition of required land for the construction of the road. .... That the purpose of acquisition of the land was for the benefit of a section of the community and it need not be necessarily for the benefit of the entire community."

3. Under the scheme of the Act, acquisitions are contemplated for the State, local bodies and companies. Part VII provides the procedure for acquisition of land for companies. Section 6 which deals with the declaration that the land is required for a public purpose provides as follows:—

"6 (1) Subject to the provisions of Part VII of this Act, when the appropriate Government is satisfied, after considering the report if any, made under Section 5-A, sub-sec. (2), that particular land is needed for a public purpose, or for a Company, a declaration shall be made to that effect under the signature of a Secretary to such Government or of some officer duly authorised to certify its orders: .....

Provided that no such declaration shall be made unless the compensation to be awarded for such property is to be paid by a Company, or wholly or partly out of public revenues or some fund controlled or managed by a local authority.

(3) The said declaration shall be conclusive evidence that the land is needed for a public purpose or for a Company, as the case may be; and, after making such declaration, the appropriate Government may acquire the land in manner hereinafter appearing.

4. If the provisions of Section 6 are analysed, it clearly follows that a distinction has been maintained between acquisitions for the purposes of the State and local bodies on one hand and for a company on the other. In Part VII the procedure to be followed for making acquisition for a company is indicated at length. The fact that there is no such procedure laid down in respect of an acquisition for the purposes of the State or for a local body clearly goes to show that for obvious reasons the Legislature has provided for a different machinery and proper safeguards when the power of acquisition provided under the Act is to be exercised for the benefit of the company. Sub-section (3) of Section 6 gives the declaration the status of conclusive evidence that the land is needed for a public purpose when it is for the State or a local body. But the conclusiveness that is given to the declaration under sub-section (3) in relation to the need for a company is not for the public purpose, but that the acquisition is for a company.

5. The notification under Section 6 of the Act is as follows:—

“Revenue and Excise Department Declaration

The 15th May, 1965.

No. 32543-L.A.260/65—Cte-R. Whereas it appears to the Government of Orissa that lands are required to be taken by Government at the public expense for a public purpose, viz., for a road at Dhobi Lane (Buxi Bazar) in mouza town Bisinabar, Thana Cuttack No. 204, paragana Bakhraabad, district Cuttack, it is hereby declared that a piece of land measuring, more or less, 0.018 acre, bounded on the North and East—By plot Nos. 77 p & 151 p South and West — By plot Nos. 77 p & 69 is required within the aforesaid mouza town Bisinabar thana Cuttack, pargana Bakhraabad, district Cuttack.

This declaration is made, under the provisions of Section 6 of Act I of 1894, to all whom it may concern.

A plan of the land may be inspected in the office of the Land Acquisition Deputy Collector, Civil Branch, Collector, Cuttack.

By order of the Governor
S. Barik.

Assistant Secretary to Government.”

6. Mr. R. Mohanty, appearing for the petitioner, contends that the beneficiaries under this acquisition are a few individuals and as such it cannot be considered to be for the benefit of the community, and therefore there is no public purpose. The notification under Section 6 is a colourable exercise of power and, therefore, the petitioner's homestead cannot be taken away and he cannot be deprived of his property against his volition under the cloak of a proceeding under the Land Acquisition Act. In support of his submission he relies upon two decisions in AIR 1960 J and K 78, Prem Nath v. State of J. and K. and AIR 1965 SC 616 (State of West Bengal v. P. N. Talukdar). On examination we find that the case before the Jammu and Kashmir High Court related to an acquisition proceeding which really regularised certain previous illegal acts of the Chairman of the town area committee of Anantanag. The Chairman had illegally permitted one Qadir Suthu to raise construction on the properties of the petitioners, and later on the acquisition proceedings were taken to acquire these lands of the petitioners on some pretext or other, but Qadir Suthu remained in actual possession and enjoyment of the land and he was never dispossessed from the land as a result of the land acquisition proceedings. On the aforesaid finding of fact the High Court held that the declaration under Section 6 was only an example of abuse of power and it would be one issue in fraud of the powers conferred by the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act. Therefore, the principles laid down in the said case have no bearing on the point under examination.

7. In AIR 1965 SC 646 referred to above their Lordships were considering the case of acquisition for the purpose of the Ramkrishna Mission. They held that the Ramkrishna Mission is equated with a company being a society registered under the Societies Registration Act of 1860, and, therefore, an acquisition in its favour was required to satisfy the requirements of Part VII of the Land Acquisition Act. They referred to an earlier decision of their Court in AIR 1962 SC 764, (R. L. Arora v. State of Uttar Pradesh) wherein the procedural requirements of Part VII were examined at length. Wanchoo, J. delivering the leading judgment in the said case said:

“Therefore, though the words ‘public purpose’ in Sections 4 and 6 have the same meaning, they have to be read in the restricted sense in accordance with Section 40 when the acquisition is for a company under Section 6. In one case, the notification under Section 6 will say that the acquisition is for a public purpose, in the other case the notification will say that it is for a company. The proviso to Section 6 (1) shows that where the acquisition is for a public purpose, the compensation has to be paid wholly or partly out of public revenues or some fund controlled or managed by a local authority. Where however the acquisition is for a company, the compensation would be paid wholly by the company.....”

In delivering the judgment in the 1965 case referred to above Wanchoo, J. reiterated the self-same view and the factual examination was confined to the requirements of Part VII in view of the fact that the acquisition was for the purposes of a company. Their Lordships of the Supreme Court ultimately came to hold that the acquisition for staff quarters cannot be said to be a public purpose as quarters would be useful to the public. That would in our opinion be reducing the idea of what is useful or can be used by a section of the public to absurdity. When we speak of a section of the public we must exclude from it an individual and what can be used by an individual cannot be said to be used by a section of the public which must always be more than one."

“they are meant for occupation of individual members of the staff. We cannot accept the argument that an individual member of the staff must also be held to be a section of the public and therefore staff-

8. This decision of the Supreme Court cannot be applied to the facts of the present case in view of the fact that the acquisition in question is not for a company. We find that under Section 235 of the Orissa Municipal Act the Municipal Council has been authorised to lay out and make new public roads and sub-section (2) of that Section provides:

"Reasonable compensation shall be paid to the owners of any land or buildings or part of the building which are required for, or affected by, any such purposes."

The municipal authorities, in exercise of their powers under Section 235, requested the State of Orissa to make the acquisition in question and after acquisition the ownership of the road when laid is to vest in the municipality. The construction of the road does not bring in a benefit limited to any particular individual. The road would be the property of the municipality and would be available to be used by all the members of the public as of right and without any restriction. The persons living in the area are not a few individuals, but they are a section of the public at large and it is not only they but all persons who intend to come from and go to that area would have the advantage of the existence of the public way.

9. The learned Standing Counsel, appearing on behalf of the State, placed before us another decision of the Supreme Court in AIR 1963 SC 151 (Somawanti v. State of Punjab). In that case the acquisition was one for an industry in which the State Government were interested and payment of compensation was also partly made by them. It was in fact a third class of acquisition (the first one being for the purpose of the State and the local bodies and the second one being for companies) where the acquisition was primarily for a company, but it was also at the same time for a public purpose and the whole or part of the compensation was to be paid out of public revenues. This aspect of the matter was also discussed in AIR 1963 SC 646 referred to above, and in paragraph 9 of the judgment their Lordships upheld the contention that an acquisition of this type was also for a public purpose by stating as follows:—

"In such a case though the acquisition may look as if it is primarily for a company it will be covered by that part of Section 6 which lays down that acquisition may be made for a public purpose if the whole or part of the compensation is to be paid out of the public revenues or some fund controlled or managed by a local authority." Mudholkar, J., speaking for the Court in AIR 1963 SC 151 referred to above, said:

"The Government has to be satisfied about both the elements contained in the expression 'needed for a public purpose or a company'. Where it is so satisfied, it is entitled to make a declaration. Once such a declaration is made sub-section (3) invests it with conclusiveness. That conclusiveness is not merely regarding the fact that the Government is satisfied but also with regard to the question that the land is needed for a public purpose or is needed for a company, as the case may be. Then again, the conclusiveness must necessarily attach not merely to the need but also to the question whether the purpose is a public purpose or what is said to be a company is a company. There can be no 'need' in the abstract. It must be a need for a 'public purpose' or for a company. As we have already stated the law permits acquisition only when there is a public purpose or when the land is needed for a company for the purposes set out in Section 40 of the Act. Therefore, it would be unreasonable to say that the conclusiveness would attach only to a need and not to the fact that that need is for a public purpose or for a company. No land can be acquired under the Act unless the need is for one or the other purpose and, therefore, it will be futile to give conclusiveness merely to the question of need dissociated from the question of public purpose or the purpose of a company. .... The Act has empowered the Government to determine the question of the need of land for a public purpose or for a company and the jurisdiction conferred upon it to do so is not made conditional upon the existence of a collateral or extraneous fact. It is the existence of the need for a public purpose which gives jurisdiction to the Government to make a declaration under Section 6 (1) and makes it the sole Judge whether there is in fact a need and whether the purpose for which there is that need is a public purpose. The provisions of sub-section (3) preclude a court from ascertaining whether either of these ingredients of the declaration exists."

10. As we have already said, the facts of this case clearly go to show that what is really contemplated is the laying of a public passage, the ownership whereof is meant to vest in the Cuttack Municipality. The beneficiaries are the public at large and not the 3 or 4 individual owners of the plots referred to above. Once this fact is accepted, it is difficult to see any force in the contentions of Mr. Mohanty that the beneficiaries are a few individuals and, therefore, the notification under Section 6 is not justified. We have already extracted the decision of the Supreme Court wherein it has been said that the notification under Section 6 (3) about the existence of the public purpose and the particular land being required for the said purpose is conclusive and not open to question. In the circumstances, the contention raised by Mr. Mohanty must be negatived and it must be held that the notification under Section 6 is for a public purpose as it purports to be and the writ application has no merit.

11. We, therefore, dismiss the writ application, but make no order as to costs.

G. K. MISRA, C. J.: 12. I agree.

JUDGMENT: The plaintiff is in appeal against a confirming judgment of the learned 5th Additional Subordinate Judge, Cuttack.

in a suit for contribution against defendants 1 and 2.

2. The plaintiff and defendants 1 and 2 who are his nephews were in possession of a homestead land to the extent of 12 decimals. In a partition the property and rent (sic) was being paid to defendant no. 4 together. On the allegation that defendant no. 4 and defendant no. 4 (sic) filed a rent suit for recovery of Rs. 11.19 by way of arrears of rent while nothing was due and in the said rent suit a decree was obtained by suppressing summons and the holding was put to sale also without issuing proper notices to the plaintiff who was a judgment-debtor and the plaintiff came to know about the auction sale only when it was about to be confirmed and, therefore, made the deposit to satisfy the decree, the present suit for contribution was filed. The plaintiff claimed recovery of Rs. 245.33.

3. The defence taken by defendants 1 and 2 was that they had paid their share to the plaintiff; the plaintiff was aware of the suit and was also in the know of the subsequent execution proceeding and had intentionally defaulted to make the payment; the rent suit was filed and the execution was taken on account of the default of the plaintiff and in the circumstances the plaintiff is not entitled to sue for contribution.

4. The trial court found that the default to pay arose out of a common wrong of all the parties, that is, the plaintiff and defendants 1 and 2, and in that view of the matter the plaintiff being one of the joint wrong-doers was not entitled to sue for contribution. The trial court also found that a major portion of the claim was also barred by limitation on the date of the suit. On these findings the suit was dismissed. On appeal the lower appellate court affirmed the decree of the trial court. The Second Appeal is directed against the appellate judgment.

5. Three questions are raised by Mr. Das, appearing for the plaintiff-appellant. They are:—

(1) In view of the findings recorded by the Rent Suit Officer in the execution proceeding it must be held that defendants 1 and 2 had colluded with defendant no. 4. The finding in the said case being inter partes is res judicata for the present suit. Therefore, the courts below went wrong in not relying upon the findings of the Rent Suit Officer and accepting the samo on the basis of res judicata.

(2) The theory of joint wrong-doers being entitled to sue for contribution is not applicable in India as has been held by a Full Bench AIR 1951 All 774 (FB) Dharmi Dhar v. Chandra Shekhar and, therefore, the trial court as also the court of appeal below went wrong in relying upon the decision of the Patna High Court in AIR 1936 Pat 49 Bishambhardeo Narayan Singh v. Hitnarayan Singh to hold that the suit was not maintainable.

(2) No part of the claim in the suit was barred by limitation and the courts below went wrong in negating his claim on the question of limitation.

Each of the points needs examination.

6. There is some allegation in the plaint that defendants 1 and 2 had colluded with defendant no. 4. But in the present suit there is absolutely no evidence to support the allegation of collusion. The question raised is that there having been a finding recorded by the Rent Suit Officer in the execution proceeding, such finding is available to be used in the present suit and the defendants are barred by res judicata from disputing the position. The application filed before the Rent Suit Officer is not before us. The said order of the Rent Suit Officer which has been exhibited in the case states that the application before him was under Secs. 227 and 228 of the Orissa Tenancy Act. Section 227 admittedly would have no application to the facts of the case. Under Section 228 there are two sub-sections and sub-section (1) covers certain cases where auction sale has to be set aside while sub-section (2) refers to another set of cases where the same relief can be obtained. The relief ultimately granted in the case, as that order would show, is that the sale was vacated on accepting the entire decretal dues in satisfaction. Such an order fits in with the scheme of the Statute in sub-section (1) of Sec. 228 and does not comply with the requirements of sub-section (2) of Section 228 of the Orissa Tenancy Act. In view of the final direction given in the said order, it must be taken to be one coming within the meaning of Section 228 (1) of the Act. If it was a case covered by Section 228 (1), the question of fraud had not to be gone into, and therefore, cannot be said to have been in issue before the court for disposing of the application.

7. Then there is no evidence that the other two judgment-debtors, who are defendants 1 and 2 here, were appearing before the Rent Suit Officer. The plaintiff's case was that there was suppression of summons. There is no other material excepting the two references in the order sheet to a judgment-debtor appearing in the proceeding and asking for time to pay the decretal dues. Mr. Das contends that since it is the plaintiff's case that he for the first time came to know about the rent suit and its execution at a time when the sale had taken place, reference to some judgment-debtor without specifying the same must be by necessary application referring to either defendant no. 1 or defendant no. 2. By this process of elimination, to conclude that one of these two defendants had already appeared in the rent suit or its execution would be drawing an inference not available directly from the facts and I would be slow to do it. Therefore, I would hold that the matter before Rent Suit Officer was under Section 228 (1) of the Orissa

Tenancy Act and the question of fraud or collusion was not in issue. These two defendants had not participated in the proceeding and until it was shown that they had notice of the case it must equally be taken that they were not parties who had been heard or had been given an opportunity to be heard and had not availed of it and, therefore, any decision taken by the Rent Suit Officer cannot be res judicata against them. The first point raised by Mr. Das fails.

8. His next contention is that the principle of joint wrong-doers not being entitled to sue for contribution is not available in India. The Full Bench case in AIR 1951 All 774 refers to two Patna decisions in AIR 1919 Pat 165, Mababir Prasad v. Darbhanga Thakur and AIR 1936 Pat 49 referred to above. In the first case, Chief Justice Dawson-Miller sitting with Adami, J. held that the exception as noted above applies to India. They also took into consideration the case of Merryweather v. Nixon, (1799) 101 ER 1337 and came to hold that the principle laid down therein was applicable to India. In the Allahabad case while two learned Judges took the view that the rule was not applicable to India Mr. Justice Agarwala did not agree to it.

9. In view of the facts that the Patna High Court has consistently taken the view indicated above, I would prefer to follow the rule in the Patna decisions in preference to that indicated in the Allahabad decision and conclude that a joint wrong-doer is not entitled to sue for contribution is applicable to India. In view of the finding already recorded by the courts below that the plaintiff was a joint wrong-doer in not paying the rent due and a further finding that the rent was actually due and had been properly sued for in the rent suit, I would hold that the plaintiff is not entitled to sue for contribution.

10. This leads to the ultimate question for determination relating to limitation. In view of the findings already recorded, limitation is not material to be decided. But since Mr. Das contended that there was no limitation I am prepared to examine the said question. It is admitted that a part of the payment was made on 15-6-60 and the suit was filed on 11-5-63 within 3 years from the date of the 1st payment. Mr. Das's contention is that the payment which the plaintiff made was only a deposit in the custody of the court and until it was directed to be appropriated and was in fact appropriated by the auction purchaser the money was still his though in the custody of the Court. It was open to the plaintiff in the present suit not to press his application in the rent execution proceeding and on his withdrawing the application in the said execution proceeding the money was available to be refunded to him. There can be no dispute to such a position. Therefore, until there was actual appropriation the question of limitation cannot be raised. Since the order of appropriation was made on 15-6-60 only and the suit is within 3 years from that date, the question of limitation must be decided in favour of the plaintiff. The courts below went wrong in holding that the suit was out of time.

11. On the aforesaid analysis, there is no merit in the Second Appeal and the suit has been rightly dismissed in the courts below. The Second Appeal is dismissed. Parties will bear their own costs throughout.

Leave to appeal, as prayed for, is refused.
Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT: Defendants 1 and 2, who are the Certificate Officer and the State of Orissa represented by the Collector of Ganjam, are the appellants in this appeal against a reversing judgment of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge, Berhampur, in a suit for declaration that the certificate proceedings for recovery of arrears of sales tax dues which are being pressed by defendant no. 1 are illegal and not in conformity with the provisions of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act, 1859 and for further relief for permanent injunction.

2. As it appears, the plaintiff, one Ramadcen defendant no. 3 and another Girdharilal Malu, not a party to the present suit, were partners of a firm known as Reedkaran Ramadin which was registered firm under the Indian Partnership Act, 1932. The firm came to be dissolved with effect from 15-5-56. Defendant no. 3 had undertaken to pay up the liability of sales tax and other public dues upto the date of dissolution. Bulk of the amount of sales tax as demanded have been paid, but the outstanding amount of Rs. 18,277-50 remained due for which certificate proceedings have been taken. Objections were raised before the Certificate Officer on various counts, but they were overruled and the properties were threatened to be sold. Steps were taken in appeal and revision under the said Act, but they proved futile. Ultimately the suit was filed.

3. The other defences taken in the suit may not be necessary to be indicated and it may be sufficient to state that one of the defences was want of notice under Sec. 80, Civil P. C. In paragraph 13 of the plaint it was stated:

"The notice under Section 80, Civil P. C. is not necessary as the public officers concerned have been informed of the several illegalities and irregularities etc., and were approached with prayers not to perform the sale. As the sale is proceeding on 25-8-1963 and no time is left to protect the plaintiffs' rights the public officers cannot claim the statutory period of two months....." In paragraph 3 of the written statement by the two public officers it was contended:

"The plaintiff, before the institution of the suit has not served on the defendants the notice as required under Section 80, Civil P. C. and the contention advanced in para. 13 of the plaint that such notice is not necessary is untenable. The suit instituted without such notice is not maintainable in law." Issue no. 2 was framed in the suit to the following effect:—

"Is the suit instituted without notice under Section 80, Civil P. C. and not maintainable?"

4. The trial court disposed of the matter against the defendants holding,

"The learned advocate for the plaintiff has relied upon a decision reported in AIR 1960 Pat 530 wherein his Lordship has clearly observed that a notice u/s. 80, Civil P. C. is not necessary for any future act. That in the instant case the suit has been filed only for a future act of sale. Therefore, I hold that even though the suit was filed only one day after sending of notice u/s. 80 Civil P. C. the suit is maintainable and it is proper and valid and that even such a suit can be filed without any notice under Section 80, Civil P. C."

Before the Learned Appellate Judge this matter was further canvassed and he negatived the defence claim relying upon the decision of the Andhra Pradesh High Court reported in AIR 1963 Andh Pra 161, Hussain Ali Mirza v. State of Andhra Pradesh.

5. The question as to the requirement to notice under Section 80, Civil P. C. as a condition precedent to suits which are covered by that section came up for consideration before the Supreme Court in AIR 1966 SC 1068, Sawai Singhai v. Union of India. Chief Justice Gajendragadkar, speaking on behalf of the Court, stated:

"It is significant that in a large majority of cases, the plea that the Government raises is that notice is necessary and it is generally contended that the notice being defective in one particular or another makes the suit incompetent and in dealing with such pleas, the courts have naturally sought to interpret the notices somewhat liberally and have sometimes observed that in enforcing the provisions of Section 80, commonsense and sense of propriety should determine the issue. It is very unusual for the Government to contend that in a suit brought against it, no notice is required under Section 80. It is plain that such a plea has been raised by the respondent in the present case, because it helps the respondent to defeat the appellant's claim on the ground of limitation. In any case, the contention based on the object or purpose of the notice can hardly assist us in interpreting the plain words of Sec. 80. It will be recalled that prior to the decision of the Privy Council in Bhagchand Dagadusa v. Secy. of State, 54 Ind App. 338 = (AIR 1927 PC 178) there was a sharp difference of opinion among the Indian High Courts on the question as to whether Section 80 applied to suits where injunction was claimed. The Privy Council held that Section 80 applied to all forms of suit and whatever the relief sought, including a suit for an injunction. In dealing with the question about the construction of Section 80, the Privy Council took notice of the fact that some of the decisions which attempted to exclude from the purview of Section 80 suits for injunction were influenced by the 'assumption as to the practical objects with which it was trained'. They also proceeded on the basis that Section 80 was a rule of procedure and that any construction which may lead to injustice is one which ought not to be adopted, since it would be repugnant to the notion of justice. Having noticed these grounds on which an attempt was judicially made to except from the purview of Section 80 suits, for instance, in which injunction was claimed, Viscount Sumner, who spoke for the Privy Council, observed that 'the Act albeit a Procedure Code, must be read in accordance with the natural meaning of its words' and he added that 'Section 80 is express, explicit and mandatory, and it admits of no implications or exceptions'."

Even after the aforesaid decision of the Judicial Committee some High Courts, took the view that notice for a case for injunction under section 80, Civil P. C. may not be necessary. One such instance is the case reported in AIR 1960 Pat 530 on which the trial court placed reliance.

6. The Supreme Court decision referred to above was not known by the time when the Second Appeal was filed. As it now transpires, notice under S. 80, Civil P. C. is necessary condition precedent and the present suit cannot be maintainable. In consideration of the view I have taken Mr. Roy prays that he may be permitted to withdraw the suit with liberty to file a fresh suit on the same cause of action. I think, want of, notice is a technical defect and the prayer of Mr. Roy should be allowed. I would, therefore, vacate the judgments of both the courts below and give leave to the plaintiff to file a fresh suit on the same cause of action. This would, however, be on payment of a consolidated cost of Rs. 100 (one hundred) to the State, on payment of which alone a fresh suit can be filed.

Order accordingly.

political control, contented and having a sense of security. It was also decided that a maximum of twenty five percent of superior posts (cadre posts) should be thrown open to the State Civil/Police Service Officers of outstanding merit as against the maximum of twenty percent of superior posts in the I. C. S./I. P.

3. Accordingly, the two All India Services were formed and they were put on a statutory basis under the Indian Civil Administrative (Cadre) Rules, 1950, the I. P. (Cadre) Rules, 1950 and the Indian Administrative and Police Service (Pay) Rules, 1950. This was followed by the All India Services Act, 1951, which the Indian Parliament passed under Article 312 (1) of the Constitution of India, which empowered the Government of India, in consultation with the State Governments, to make rules for the regulation of recruitment and conditions of service of the persons appointed to an All India Service. In terms of Section 3 of the All India Services Act, 1951, a series of rules were promulgated in consultation with the State Governments. Under the Indian Administrative Service/Indian Police Service (Recruitment) Rules, 1954, the I. C. S./I. P. officers became members of the Indian Administrative Service/Indian Police Service, subject to the provisions of Article 314 of the Constitution of India. Generally, these rules follow the pattern of the rules applicable to the former I. C. S. and I. P. officers. Attention may, however, be invited to the following rules which are relevant for deciding the point in controversy in the instant applications.

They are:

- The Indian Administrative Service (Recruitment) Rules, 1954;
- The Indian Administrative Service (Appointment by Competitive Examination) Regulations, 1955;
- The Indian Administrative Service (Appointment by Promotion) Regulations, 1955;
- The Indian Administrative Service (Appointment by Selection) Regulations, 1956;
- The Indian Administrative Service (Cadre) Rules, 1954;
- The Indian Civil Administration (Cadre) Rules, 1950;
- The Indian Administrative Service (Pay) Rules, 1954;
- The Indian Administrative and Police Services (Pay) Rules, 1950;
- The Indian Administrative Service (Regulation of Seniority) Rules, 1954;
- The Indian Police Service (Regulation of Seniority) Rules, 1954;
- Bihar Service Code, Appendix 6, Rule 14.

It may be stated that it is the last three in the series of rules which are crucial for determining the relative seniority of the petitioners as well as the direct recruits, other rules being more or less subsidiary to throw light upon the provisions of the Regulation of Seniority Rules. Here it is relevant to set out the following charts which would apply a bird's-eye view with regard to the relevant dates in connection with the question of seniority.

4. Rule 1 of the Indian Administrative Service (Regulation of Seniority) Rules, 1954, deals with the title and Rule 2 contains the relevant definitions. It defines 'cadre' which means an Indian Administrative Service Cadre constituted in accordance with Rule 3 of the Indian Administrative Service (Cadre) Rules, 1954, Rule 2 (g), which is one of the contentious provisions, stood thus before it was amended.

"Senior post" means a post included under Item 1 of each Schedule to the Indian Administrative Service (Fixation of Cadre Strength) Regulations, 1955, framed under sub-rule (1) of Rule 4 of the Indian Administrative Service (Cadre) Rules, 1954, or any post declared equivalent thereto by the State Government concerned;

Rule 3 deals with the assignment of year of allotment and prior to amendment stood thus:

"3. Assignment of year of allotment.—

(1) Every officer shall be assigned a year of allotment in accordance with the provisions hereinafter contained in this rule.

(2) The year of allotment of an officer in service at the commencement of these rules shall be the same as has been assigned to him or may be assigned to him by the Central Government in accordance with the orders and instructions in force immediately before the commencement of these rules:

Provided that where the year of allotment of an officer appointed in accordance with sub-rule (1) of Rule 8 of the Recruitment Rules has not been determined prior to the commencement of these Rules, his year of allotment shall be determined in accordance with the provision in clause (b) of sub-rule (3) of this rule and for this purpose, such officer shall be deemed to have officiated in a senior post only if and for the period for which he was approved for such officiation by the Central Government in consultation with Commission.

(3) The year of allotment of an officer appointed to the Service after the commencement of these rules, shall be—

(a) where the officer is appointed to the Service on the results of a competitive examination, the year following the year in which such examination was held;

(b) where the officer is appointed to the Service by promotion in accordance with sub-rule (1) of Rule 8 of the Recruitment Rules, the year of allotment of the junior-most among the officers recruited to the Service in accordance with Rule 7 of those rules who officiated continuously in a senior post from a date earlier than the date of commencement of such officiation by the former;

Provided that the year of allotment of an officer appointed to the Service in accordance with sub-rule (1) of Rule 8 of the Recruitment Rules who started officiating continuously in a senior post from a date earlier than the date on which any of the officers recruited to the Service in accordance with Rule 7 of those Rules so started officiating, shall be deemed ad hoc by the Central Government in consultation with the State Government concerned;

Provided further that an officer appointed to the Service after the commencement of these rules in accordance with sub-rule (1) of Rule 8 of the Recruitment Rules shall be deemed to have officiated continuously in a senior post prior to the date of the inclusion of his name in the Select List prepared in accordance with the requirements of the Indian Administrative Service (Appointment by Promotion) Regulations framed under sub-rule (1) of Rule 8 of the Recruitment Rules, if the period of such officiation prior to that date is approved by the Central Government in consultation with the Commission.

Explanation 1.— An officer shall be deemed to have officiated continuously in a senior post from a certain date if during the period from that date to the date of his confirmation in the senior grade he continues to hold without any break or reversion a senior post otherwise than as a purely temporary or local arrangement;

Explanation 2.— An officer shall be treated as having officiated in a senior post during any period in respect of which the State Government concerned certifies that he would have so officiated but for his absence on leave or appointment to any special post or any other exceptional circumstance.

(c) where the officer is appointed to the Service by selection in accordance with sub-rule (2) of R. 8 of the Recruitment Rules, such year as may be determined ad hoc by the Central Government on the recommendation of the State Government concerned and in consultation with the Commission:

Provided that he shall not be allotted a year earlier than the year of allotment of an officer appointed to the Service in accordance with sub-rule (1) of Rule 8 of the Recruitment Rules, whose length of service in the State Civil Service is more than the length of continuous service of the former in connection with the affairs of the State."

R. 4 provides for seniority of officers inter se. Sub-rule (4) of this Rule relates to the seniority of officers appointed to the Service on or after the 11th day of April, 1958, who were assigned the same year of allotment. Rule 5 deals with the seniority of officers placed in List II or List III by the special Recruitment Board and Rule 5-A with the seniority of officers appointed under the Indian Administrative Service (Special Recruitment) Regulations, 1956. Rule 5-B is not relevant. Rule 6 deals with the preparation of graduation list, 7 deals with fixation of seniority on transfer to another cadre, 8 relates to interpretation and 9 is repeal and saving. The relevant rules, therefore, on which stress has been laid are 2 (g) and 3, particularly Rule 3 (3) (b). Reference to sub-rule (1) of Rule 8 of the Recruitment Rules relates to recruitment by promotion and Rule 7 refers to recruitment as a result of a competitive examination.

I have already stated that so far as the direct recruits are concerned, they are given their year of allotment, being the year following the one in which such examination was held, in terms of Rule 3 (3) (a), but the year of allotment assigned to a promoted officer is the year of allotment of the junior-most of the direct recruits who started continuous officiation in a senior post from a date earlier than the date of commencement of such officiation by a promoted officer. The claim of the direct recruits in this case is that they should rank higher than those promoted officers who were appointed to the Indian Administrative Service on a date later than their appointment, unless they started continuous officiation in a senior post, which officiation received approval of the Central Government in consultation with the Public Service Commission. 'Senior post', as I have already indicated, means a post included under Item I of each Schedule to the Indian Administrative Service (Fixation of Cadre Strength) Regulations, 1955, or a post declared equivalent thereto by the State Government concerned.

5. Mr. Daphtary appearing on behalf of petitioner Ram Chandra Sinha (C. W. J. C. No. 854/68) has contended that the decision of the Government of India allotting certain years, being the year 1948 in the case of his client petitioner Ram Chandra Sinha, must be taken to be final as this decision was arrived at after a full consideration of the letter of the State Government, being the letter of Shri M. S. Rao, dated the 9th July, 1958 (annexure C, page 13, of the brief in C. W. J. C. No. 853/68-Volume III), which approval was communicated to the State Government in the letter of Shri Narayanaswamy, Deputy Secretary, Government of India. The reason assigned by the Government of India for revising this decision, stating that the Government of India's previous decision was incorrect, must be held to be invalid and the order quashed inasmuch as there was no error or misrepresentation in the letter of Shri M. S. Rao. The Government of India took a decision after a mature consideration of the reasons assigned in Shri M. S. Rao's letter and reversed that decision without hearing the petitioners, which amounted to a violation of the principle of natural justice. He has referred in this connection to the decision of the Supreme Court in Union of India v. T. R. Varma, AIR 1957 SC 882. On behalf of the Union of India as also the direct recruits, it has been urged that the orders passed in regard to the seniority of these officers are all administrative orders in which no reasons are to be assigned, no officer has got any vested right to be heard in person and the principle of natural justice cannot be invoked in a case like this. It is true, no doubt, that the previous order was passed in September, 1958 and the promoted officers continued to hold rank higher than the direct recruits from that date onwards up to 1967 when the previous decision was revoked and the seniority of these officers was ordered to be revised. In my opinion, the contention put forward on behalf of the petitioners cannot be accepted as correct. In a matter of administration, it is open to the departmental authority to pass any suitable order, if materials be on record for assessing the merit of claim or claims of the officer or officers concerned. If, however, any officer feels aggrieved by such an order, it is open to him to put in a representation for reconsideration of the decision and it can well be taken as established that if the authority taking the decision is satisfied that there is substance in the grievance made by the officer adversely affected by that order, the decision must be altered and justice done between the parties. It is true that normally this should be done within a reasonable time to avoid further complications by virtue of any officer having enjoyed the benefit of that decision for such a long time and, unless there be very compelling reason to do so, such a decision should not be altered if a long time has passed since the decision taken one way and alteration sought to be made on a subsequent date. As an abstract question of administrative policy, however, it is difficult to uphold the contention that if a decision has been arrived at by the Government on the administrative side, it cannot be altered if the Government is satisfied that the decision was wrong. In this particular case, it has been urged on behalf of the direct recruits that there is no delay caused on account of any inaction or acquiescence on their part. In fact, after the rejection of the representations by Shri P. S. Appu, Shri K. A. Ramasubramanian and Shri S. D. Prasad, the opposite party questioned the correctness of the decision of the Government of India allotting the particular years to the promotees as early as 1960. It was the Government of Bihar that did not forward their representations to the Central Government upto the year 1965 and then two years were taken for the decision to be arrived at. It cannot be urged that there is no substance in the contention raised on behalf of the opposite party although it is unfortunate that the matter has taken such a protracted course and the promoted officers have enjoyed high posts by virtue of their seniority for at least nine years after the year of allotment ordered in their favour in 1958. As I have already indicated, there is no question either of violation of the principle of natural justice in this case because there is no provision for a personal hearing and, as for detailed objection by the petitioners, the matter was gone into and, although the Government of India adhered to its decision of 1967, it must be assumed that it felt satisfied that the decision taken in favour of the direct recruits was a correct decision. The decision of the Supreme Court not being a decision in an administrative matter cannot be deemed to have any relevance in the case of an administrative order passed by the Government.

6. The second point raised by Mr. Daphtary, objecting to the stand of the letter of the Government of India, that consultation with the Public Service Commission was not held is that this stand cannot be taken to be legal or even factually correct. This is not stated in the counter-affidavit filed on behalf of the Union of India in all the petitions although this statement finds place in the counter-affidavit filed in the case of petitioner Ramchandra Sinha. He has urged, however, that the select list of officers for promotion to the Indian Administrative Service cadre was actually prepared in 1954, and not in 1955. In that year the seniority rules were promulgated in September, they were well known to the authorities, and approval was given to the ad hoc list by the Union of India in consultation with the Chairman of the Public Service Commission and this list was ready in December, 1954. It is true, no doubt, that the ad hoc list was not a select list which contained the list of officers found fit for promotion, but the ad hoc list referred to the fitness of certain officers for officiation in a senior post.

Mr. Daphtary has urged that this ad hoc list consisting of officers who were considered fit for officiation in a senior post must be taken to be sufficient compliance with the proviso to Rule 3 (3) (b), because when the Chairman of the Public Service Commission was satisfied about the fitness of all the petitioners for officiation in a senior post and the Union Public Service Commission approved it, this should be sufficient compliance with the requirement of the said proviso. Learned Counsel for the Union of India and the direct recruits have contended against the correctness of this argument. It is accordingly necessary to quote here the background in which the ad hoc list was prepared and which is referred to in the letter of Shri M. S. Rao (annexure C, page 23, of the brief in C. W. J. C. No. 853 of 1968, Volume III):

"After careful consideration the State Government have come to the conclusion that the term 'current waiting list of District Magistrates' must include the select list prepared each year under Regulation 7 of the I. A. S. (Appointment by Promotion) Regulations and any other list of State Civil Service Officers approved by the Union Public Service Commission for officiation or trial in posts carrying pay in the senior I. A. S. scale. We have first the list which was prepared by an ad hoc committee presided over by the Chairman, Union Public Service Commission. This committee met in September, 1954, before the I. A. S. (Appointment by Promotion) Regulations were issued, but after the I. A. S. (Recruitment) Rules had come into force. This Committee selected State Civil Service Officers for substantive appointment in the vacancies that existed in promotion quota. At the same time, it prepared a list of State Civil Service Officers considered suitable for officiation in posts in senior I. A. S. scale. This latter list which may for the sake of convenience be called the 'ad-hoc list 1954' was approved by the Union Public Service Commission in their letter, dated the 28th December, 1954. The ad hoc committee was constituted on the same lines as the selection committee under the I. A. S. (Appointment by Promotion) Regulations and the only reason why it was an ad hoc committee is that the Regulations had not been issued by the Central Government."

It may be stated that earlier dates of continuous officiation in a senior post were recommended in Shri Rao's letter but the Government of India chose to circumscribe it to the date of the preparation of the ad hoc list which was the 28th of December, 1954, in regard to these petitioners. In fact, there was nothing irregular in granting approval of officiation from a date when the ad hoc list was prepared of officers who were considered fit for holding senior posts and as such qualified for promotion to the cadre of the Indian Administrative Service.

7. It has, however, been urged on behalf of the Union of India by Mr. C. B. Agarwala as also on behalf of opposite party Nos. 3 to 14, the direct recruits, that, in any case, this approval was given without the concurrence of the Public Service Commission. It has been urged by Mr. Daphtary on behalf of petitioner Ram Chandra Sinha that, in the first place, preparation of the ad hoc list in consultation with the Chairman of the Union Public Service Commission and formally approved by the Union Public Service Commission must be taken to be sufficient so far as the preparation of the list for officiation in a senior post was concerned. But, even assuming that there was no such approval, consultation with the Public Service Commission was merely directory and not imperative. He has referred to Montreal Street Rly. Co. v. Normandin, 1917 AC 170 = (AIR 1917 PC 142); State of U. P. v. Manbodhan Lal Srivastava, AIR 1957 SC 912 and Bhopal Sugar Industries Ltd. v. Income-tax Officer, Bhopal, AIR 1961 SC 182. It is true, no doubt, that so far as the decisions of the Supreme Court are concerned, it has been ruled that consultation with the Public Service Commission under Article 320 of the Constitution of India is not mandatory but purely directory, i. e. even if it be found that there was no actual consultation, it would not affect the validity of an appointment made or an order passed. It has, however, been urged on behalf of the Union of India that where such a power has been conferred on the Government under an Act for making any appointment in consultation with the Public Service Commission, omission to do so may not be fatal to the appointment, but such a power cannot be claimed under any rule. If any rule made by the Executive Government provides for such consultation, it must be held to be imperative and any act done without compliance with such a rule must be held to vitiate the order passed. Making an appointment in consultation with the Public Service Commission is one thing but giving approval to a recommendation of the State Government without consulting the Public Service Commission is quite different. Failure in the former case may be a mere irregularity so as not to shake the validity of the act, but failure to observe the requirement of the rule framed by the Executive Government for consultation with the Public Service Commission must be distinguished and treated as imperative. To my mind, however, it is difficult to draw such a line of distinction. If the argument were to prevail that where consultation with the Public Service Commission is provided for under any legislative enactment, failure to carry it out may be merely an irregularity, but where such a provision has been made in the rule, it must be treated as violative of an imperative provision, would amount to saying that every provision of a rule irrespective of its character must always be treated as literally binding. In my opinion, however, there is no warrant for such contention. All provisions of law whether as an Act passed by the Parliament or any rule, regulation, bye-law or executive instruction, must be interpreted by the canons which are applicable to the interpretation of any enactment put on the statute book by the Legislature. It is well settled that they are all in the nature of laws prevailing in the country and the same principle should apply in interpreting them, and whether a particular provision is directory or mandatory must depend upon the circumstances of each case in construing rules and regulations in the same manner as will apply in construing an Act passed by the Parliament. In the present case whatever might be the legal effect of the preparation of the ad hoc list, it seems clear that the Government of India gave its approval to the ad hoc list which was drawn up by the State Government in consultation with the Chairman of the Union Public Service Commission and duly approved by the Commission. The Government of India in 1958, therefore, in accepting the recommendation contained in the letter of Shri M. S. Rao was clearly influenced by the consideration that a list which had the approval of the Chairman of the Union Public Service Commission and the Commission (sic) could well be taken to have been made in compliance with the rule and as such further reference to the Union Public Service Commission would be a superfluous act. It is notable that the rules regarding seniority were promulgated on the 8th September, 1954, before the approval of the Union Public Service Commission was granted for the ad hoc list prepared. It was in that sense that no reference was made and, as has been held by the Supreme Court in the above cases that consultation with the Public Service Commission is a directory provision, in the special circumstances of this case, it is conspicuous that it was not necessary to make a further reference, though as a matter of abundant caution the same could have been done before granting approval.

The stand in the counter-affidavit of the Union of India that formal approval of the Public Service Commission was not obtained in 1958 has no merit, because this has reference, obviously, to consultation which, in the circumstances of this case, would have been as an act purely ex majorie cautela. The preparation of the ad hoc list by the selection committee presided over by the Chairman of the Union Public Service Commission, which is a list of officers in which the petitioners are included as considered fit for officiation in a senior post and the approval of such a list by the Union Public Service Commission must be taken to be sufficient compliance with the second proviso requiring approval of the period of such officiation prior to the date of the inclusion of their names in the select list by the Central Government in consultation with the Commission. It may be stated that the letter by Shri S. P. Mukherjee Under-Secretary to the Government of India, dated the 7th May, 1957, No. 3/35/57 (page 102, Vol. I of the brief in C. W. J. C. 853/68) also refers to the question of seniority and disapproval is expressed only in respect of 'fit for trial list' and not 'fit for officiation list'.

8. It has been further contended in regard to the approval of the Central Government that it was necessary that it should be given only after formal consultation with the Union Public Service Commission, and where the Central Government would give such an approval without consulting the Union Public Service Commission, it would not be valid in terms of Rule 3 (3) (b), proviso two. Reliance has been placed on the following passage in Craies Statute Law, at page 260:

"If there be any one rule of law clearer than another, it is this, that where the Legislature have expressly prescribed one or more particular modes of dealing with property, such expression always excludes any other mode, except as specifically authorised. This does not appear to have any relevance so far as the present proceeding in regard to the exercise of power by the Government of India in granting approval is concerned. Reference has been made to the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Patna Improvement Trust v. Smt. Lakshmi Devi, AIR 1963 SC 1077 and the case of K. S. Srinivasan v. Union of India, AIR 1958 SC 419. The decision in the case of Patna Improvement Trust, AIR 1963 SC 1077, however, is not relevant because it does not relate to a decision of the Government of India in consultation with the Union Public Service Commission, but to acquisition of land under the Land Acquisition Act only after a valid notification under Section 4 (i) of the Act or a declaration under Section 6 of the Act. This case, therefore, is of no assistance to learned counsel for the opposite party.

The decision in Srinivasan's case, AIR 1958 SC 419 has no particular bearing because that also related to the construction of rules 4 (b) and 3 of the Central Government Civil Services (Temporary Service) Rules, 1949, as to whether they were directory or mandatory. The real question in that case was whether without any declaration of a temporary post as quasi-permanent, it could acquire last character, although this was to be done in consultation with the Union Public Service Commission. Their Lordships did not decide that question. S. K. Das, J., who delivered that judgment, in paragraph 22, spoke thus:

"Rule 4 (b) of the Temporary Service Rules states that when recruitment to a specified post is required to be made in consultation with the Public Service Commission, no declaration under Rules 3 and 4 (a) shall be issued except after consultation with the Commission. In the view which we have taken of the order dated December 14, 1953, it is not really necessary to decide in the present case whether the provisions of Rule 4 (b) are merely directory or mandatory. It is sufficient to state that the Public Service Commission was not consulted before the order dated December 14, 1953 was issued, and the appointing authority did not intend the order as a declaration under Rules 3 and 4 (a)."

The conclusion drawn, therefore, from non-consultation with the Public Service Commission was that the authority did not really make any declaration at all. The decision thus rested upon a conclusion of fact; but so far as the effect of Rule 4 (b) was concerned, it was left open. No doubt, the principle underlying Article 320 of the Constitution is distinct from the provision of a rule to be administered by a subordinate authority, but upon that also, it was observed that quasi-permanent status was a creature of the rules, and Rule 4 (b) requires that no declaration under Rule 3 shall be made except after consultation with the Public Service Commission.

9. It has been urged by learned counsel for the Union of India, on the authorities of East Riding County Council v. Park Estate (Bridlington) Ltd., 1957 AC 223 and Raza Buland Sugar Co. Ltd., Rampur v. The Municipal Board, Rampur, AIR 1965 SC 895 that even if the provision with regard to consultation with the Public Service Commission be held to be directory, there should be a substantial compliance with the requirement of such a provision and not that it should be completely dispensed with. No doubt, in the above case AIR 1965 SC 895, their Lordships of the Supreme Court had to deal with a situation in which there was substantial compliance with the requirement of the rule and this was adverted to in specific terms. The question for consideration was the validity of the publication of a resolution passed in Hindi in a Urdu Newspaper of considerable local circulation and whether such publication was in conformity with section 94 (3) of the U. P. Municipalities Act (Act 2 of 1916 as amended by Act 7 of 1953). That, however, is not the ratio of that decision. So far as the directory provision is concerned, it has been held, as I have already indicated in a series of decisions that failure to comply with such a provision does not render ipso facto the act done as invalid. The court is at liberty to examine all the circumstances of the case in order to pronounce upon the validity or otherwise of such an act in the event of non-compliance with the directory provision of law. In the instant case, however, even assuming that substantial compliance with the directory provision is necessary, it has been done beyond question. When the ad hoc list was being prepared regarding the fitness of the officers of the State Civil Service for promotion to the rank of the I. A. S. it was prepared sanctioning their fitness for officiation in a senior post. This list was prepared, as I have already said, by a special committee appointed on the same lines as Rule 3 under the I. A. S. (Appointment by Promotion) Regulations, presided over by the Chairman of the Union Public Service Commission and this recommendation had the formal sanction of the Commission on the 28th of December, 1954. It is true, no doubt, that this committee formally recommended the fitness of the officers for officiation in a senior post and the State Government later on recommended that the posts they had held with effect from that date should be treated as continuous officiation for the purpose of determining seniority; and the Central Government in the circumstances disclosed, accepted that recommendation. It is difficult to come to any other conclusion than that this was substantial compliance with the requirement that the Central Government should grant its approval in consultation with the Public Service Commission in regard to the posts held by the promoted officers as a case of continuous officiation, which fact would be taken into account for determining seniority of the officers concerned. The East Riding County Council Case, 1957 AC 223 has no bearing on the point under discussion.

10. It has also been contended by Mr. Daphtary that there is nothing on record to show that there was no consultation with the Public Service Commission even in a more formal manner inasmuch as the denial to it is given by an Under Secretary in the Home Ministry of the Union Government, who admittedly had no concern with the department, and the approval was given in the letter of Shri Naravanswamy to the recommendation of the State Government in September, 1958. It is well settled that he was not competent to do so and the only person who could really give the denial would be the person who dealt with the matter, such as Shri Narayanswamy, or some other person who would be in a position to speak from personal knowledge of what happened when approval was accorded by the Government of India. It may also be noticed that in this case there is no statement on record that the Union Public Service Commission was consulted in the matter as was done in Srinivasau's case, AIR 1958 SC 419 where the Public Service Commission was consulted and which refused to give its approval to the post of the petitioner in the Supreme Court as equivalent to the post of Public Relations Officer which was a quasi-permanent post. There is substance in this contention also on behalf of the petitioners. The counter-affidavit stating that the Public Service Commission was not consulted, or stating the circumstances in which it was not consulted, will be relevant for enabling the court to come to a correct conclusion as to the effect of failure to consult the Union Public Service Commission. I have already referred to Srinivasan's case and I may add that whereas the majority did not think it proper to express any opinion as to whether the provision of Rule 4 (b) of the Central Civil Services (Temporary Service) Rules, 1949, was directory or mandatory, Bose, J. clearly stated that consultation with the Public Service Commission by the Department concerned even in respect of this rule must be held to be directory and not mandatory on the authority of several decisions of the Supreme Court as also the decision of the Privy Council in 1917 AC 170 = (AIR 1917 PC 142).

11. The next question which has been argued at great length by learned counsel for the parties refers to the expression 'senior post' the exact scope of which is to be precisely determined, inasmuch as it is the continuous officiation only in a senior post which is necessary for deciding the comparative seniority of a direct recruit and a promoted officer, if both have officiated in such a post. It is true that the posts the petitioners were holding on the date of the preparation of the 'fit for officiation' or ad hoc list in December, 1954 could not be regarded as senior cadre posts included under item 1 of each schedule to the Indian Administrative Service (Fixation of Cadre Strength) Regulations, 1955, because they were holding posts of the rank of Additional District Magistrates as Deputy Secretaries some of which were ex-cadre posts or in other posts under the State Government held by them. It is, therefore, clear that they could claim the benefit of Rule 3 (3) (b), second proviso, only if it could be established that these posts were equivalent to a senior cadre post and were declared as such by the State Government.

It has been contended on behalf of the Union of India that although prior approval was given in September, 1956 by the Government of India treating the posts held by the petitioners as equivalent to senior cadre posts, this was under a mistaken notion on account of the representation made by the State Government contained in the letter of Shri M. S. Rao. The Government of India was under the impression that these officers already were holding posts which were equivalent to senior cadre posts on the 28th of December, 1954; so that there could be no technical objection to accepting the recommendation of the State Government in respect of the petitioners. It is contended, however, that it was not so, and these posts were declared equivalent by the State Government after the appointment of the petitioners to the Indian Administrative Service with effect from the 26th of December, 1953. This will be a case, therefore, of retrospective declaration which is not contemplated under R. 2 (g) which covers only the case of a prospective declaration. It has been urged, however, by Mr. Daphtry for petitioner Ram Chandra Sinha, that the ground assigned in the letter of the Government of India for revising its previous decision of 1953 is not sustainable inasmuch as declaration contemplates an existing fact and not necessarily bringing into existence new fact although it may signify either according to the circumstances of a case. If the word 'declaration' has been used in Rule 2 (g), it must be reasonably construed as referring to a post which was not declared a senior post prior to the appointment of an officer of the State Civil Service to the cadre of the Indian Administrative Service.

Our attention has been drawn by learned counsel to the Indian Administrative Service (Cadre) Rules, 1954, of which Rule 9 lays down that a non-cadre officer cannot hold a cadre post excepting for a short period not exceeding three months, and if it is for a longer period, not without the approval of the Central Government as provided in sub-rules (2), (3) and (4). That being the position, there could be no occasion for declaration by the State Government of a non-cadre post as equivalent to a cadre post held by an officer of the State Civil Service. This limitation in regard to a non-cadre Officer is general and not the exceptional situation which arises for determining seniority when such non-cadre officer has been selected for promotion to the I. A. S. Cadre. It is also true, no doubt, that under Rule 9 of the Indian Administrative Service (Pav) Rules, 1954, an I. A. S. Officer can be deputed to a non-cadre post only when it is declared as such; without that there may be technical objection to his drawing the salary to which he is entitled as a cadre officer. Mr. C. B. Agarwala has contended that 'declaration' here only refers to a prospective declaration and the same principle should apply to 'declaration' as contemplated in Rule 2 (g). Mr. Daphtry, however, has contended, in reply, that even in respect of Rule 9, it is not necessary that a declaration should always precede the deputation of an I. A. S. Cadre Officer to a non-cadre post without which such officiation will be void, but it only contemplates the factum of a declaration. Mere failure to make the declaration prior to the deputation of an I. A. S. officer to hold such a post cannot reasonably be taken to render the holding of such post as void and depriving the officer of the privileges of the Service to which he belongs, such as salary, leave, pension, etc., but that such a declaration has to be made. There is no authority to the contrary as the word 'declaration' implies that this amounts to recognising a fact, vide Maxwell (page 213, 11th edition). See also Government of India's decisions at page 238 and Pay Rule 9 of the All India Services Manual. But, even assuming that in respect of Rule 9 such a prior declaration is necessary, this cannot affect the meaning of 'declaration' in Rule 2 (g) of these Rules. The real meaning of 'declaration' in R. 2 (g) is to be read in conjunction with the second proviso to Rule 3 (3) (b) which has used the expression "shall be deemed to have officiated continuously in a senior post", which implies that in the present context, in any case, the possibility of a declaration at a subsequent stage is not ruled out. The objection emphatically formulated in the counter-affidavit on behalf of the Union of India, as also urged by learned Counsel for the Union, is that if such retrospective declaration were permissible it would result in much mischief and the State Government might declare any post as equivalent to a cadre post much later than the appointment of an officer of the State Civil Service to the Indian Administrative Service, only to enable him to obtain the benefit of seniority as against the direct recruits. This has been repeated several times in the counter-affidavit as also has been put forward as a principal ground even in the letter of the Government of India, dated the 20th September, 1967, finally allowing the representations of Shri Ram Subramanian and Shri S. D. Prasad. It is urged that this apprehension is not well founded. If the rule making authority has conferred such wide power upon the State Government, there is a definite policy behind it which has been dealt with in the decision of the Supreme Court in Anand Prakash Saksena v. Union of India, AIR 1968 SC 751. The policy underlying this provision has been thus stated in paragraph 21 (at page 760) of the report:

"The object of Rule 3 (3) (b) is to fix the seniority of the promotees in relation to direct recruits. The promotees obtain promotion after long service in the State Civil Services. From the point of view of the promotee, his seniority should be counted from the date of his joining the State Civil Service. From the point of view of the direct recruit, the seniority of the promotee should be counted from the date of his appointment to the Indian Administrative Service.

Rule 3 (3) (b) attempts to strike a just balance between the conflicting claims. It gives the promotee the year of allotment of the junior-most direct recruit officiating continuously in a senior post earlier than the date of commencement of such officiation by the promotee. If no direct recruit was officiating continuously in a senior post on an earlier date the seniority of the promotee is determined ad hoc. In our opinion, the rule is not arbitrary or discriminatory and is not violative of Articles 14 and 16 of the Constitution."

If this is the policy of the Government of India as provided in Rule 3 (3) (b), it must be given an interpretation which is in consonance with this policy. If it were to be held that unless an officer of the State Civil Service, before his appointment to the Indian Administrative Service, holds a post which is declared as equivalent to a senior cadre post, he cannot get the benefit of this officiation, it is likely to result in substantially defeating the policy of the Government, even if not entirely. There may be a few cases in which the State Civil Service officers are actually holding a post of equal responsibility but the declaration of the equivalence has no relevance prior to this appointment and the expressions 'an equivalent post' or a post of equal rank and responsibility would have no meaning. I am, therefore, inclined to accept the contention of Mr. Daphtary, on behalf of the petitioners, that the word 'declaration' even generally and more so in the present context cannot be construed as having only prospective effect, but it must be taken in a more general sense of treating a post of equal rank and responsibility as equivalent post at any time. If, however, the State Government would declare a post of a distinctly lower rank as equivalent to a senior cadre post, in the first place, the Central Government will not accept it and, even if it were so, the court of law on a consideration of the fact might strike it down as unreasonable and invalid declaration, and the promotee cannot get the benefit of seniority by virtue of such declaration. The apprehension, therefore, expressed in the counter-affidavit is ruled out, in the first instance, by the requirement of the second proviso to this rule which is that (sic) in the next place there should be either holding of a regular senior post or of a post equivalent thereto which is held by a promoted officer continuously with the approval of the Central Government and the Central Government, as I have already indicated, generally, acting on the approval of the Public Service Commission. An extreme case of an absurd situation, therefore which is the basis of the apprehension, cannot arise. If, on the contrary, it were to be accepted that the word 'declaration' should be taken only to refer to a prospective declaration amounting to creation or bringing into existence a new post with the nomenclature of equivalence with a cadre post then this is bound to nullify the policy of the Government in respect of the promoted officers as it was laid down in R. 2 (g) and Rule 3 (3) (b) of the Indian Administrative Service (Regulation of Seniority) Rules, 1954. This also has been clearly brought out, if I may say so with respect, in the judgment of the Supreme Court in Anand Prakash Saxena's case, AIR 1968 SC 754. Mr. Agarwala has placed reliance on the case of Champaklal Chimanlal Shah v. Union of India, AIR 1964 SC 1854 in which the question for consideration was the definition of quasi-permanent service under Clauses (i) and (ii) of Rule 3 of Central Civil Services (Temporary Service) Rules, 1949. That rule stands as follows:

"A Government servant shall be deemed to be in quasi-permanent service:—

(i) if he has been in continuous Government service for more than three years;

(ii) if the appointing authority, being satisfied as to his suitability in respect of age, qualifications, work and character, for employment in a quasi-permanent capacity has issued a declaration to that effect, in accordance with such instructions as the Governor-General may issue from time to time."

Leaving aside some uncertainty as to the wording of these two clauses of rule 3 and as to whether a 'comma' occurs with 'and' towards the end of Clause (i) or a mere 'semi-colon' or a 'semi-colon' with 'and', it is a case where the two clauses were read together as conjunctive with reference to the clauses as such and the subsequent rules, and in that context, therefore, a formal declaration was necessary. The formal declaration of a temporary post as a quasi-permanent post has been held to be imperative before a temporary post can be clothed with the character of a quasi-permanent post, but, in the present context, the word 'declaration' has to be read in the light of Rule 3 (3) (b) and the intention of Government sought to be carried out in determining the seniority of various categories of recruits to the Indian Administrative Service, and Champaklal's case is not relevant for this purpose.

12. Reference has been made to Civil Appeals Nos. 942 and 943 of 1966 (The Income Tax Officer, Alleppey v. N. C. Ponnose decided in the Supreme Court on the 28th of July, 1969) for the proposition that no retrospective operation could be given by a departmental authority to any rule. In that case a Tahsildar who had no authority, on the relevant date, to attach an assessee's property for realisation of Income-tax dues under the Finance Act, 1963, was held not competent to do it and his act could not be held to be valid retrospectively. That was how the Supreme Court ruled in this case and ruled in favour of the creditor who sought to attach it in execution of his own dues. The relevant observation on the point runs thus:—

"The legal fiction could not be extended beyond its legitimate field and the aforesaid words occurring in Section 4 of the Finance Act, 1963, could not be construed to embody conferment of a power for a retrospective authorisation by the State in the absence of any express provision in Section 2 (44) of the Act itself. It may be noticed that in a recent decision of the Constitution Bench of this court in B. S. Vadera v. Union of India, AIR 1969 SC 118 it has been observed with reference to rules framed under the proviso to Article 309 of the Constitution that these rules can be made with retrospective operation. This view was, however, expressed owing to the language employed in the proviso to Article 309 that 'any rules so made shall have effect subject to the provisions of any such Act'."

This case, therefore, relates only to the scope of the power of the executive authority. If Rule 3 (3) (b) cannot be construed to confer any privilege upon a promoted officer, undoubtedly, the act of the Central Government or the State Government giving the benefit to him would not be held to be valid. If, however, the rule empowers the State Government to do it, the decision in this case would be no bar; on the contrary, this rule itself says that if the rule makes it retrospective, the authority concerned has got the power to apply it retrospectively and if the word 'declare' in Rule 2 (g) is held to cover not only the case of a future declaration but also recognising the existence of a fact, then this decision would lend support to the petitioners' contention and would not go against it. The decision of the Supreme Court in Civil Appeal No. 2162 of 1969 (State of Orissa v. B. K. Mohapatra), disposed of on 11-4-1969 = (reported in AIR 1969 SC 1249) deals with a case where a police officer's name was only included in the 'fit for trial list' and, as such, the observation in this judgment can have no effect where the petitioners were not in the 'fit for trial list', because it was a different list altogether as referred to in the above letter of Shri M. S. Rao. They were included in the ad hoc list, which is different from the 'fit for trial list' as the letter of Shri Rao itself has clearly stated. The implication of the ad hoc list is almost that of a select list, because the ad hoc list was prepared keeping in view the Regulation of Seniority Rule, 1955, which was available to the State of Bihar and to the Central Government in a draft form, and it was thus that approval was given by the Union Public Service Commission. The decision, therefore, in the Orissa case must be held to be not applicable to such a list. Another decision in Civil Appeal No. 1464 (N) of 1963 (Portabpore Co. Ltd. v. Cane Commr. of Bihar, disposed of on 21-11-1968) = (reported in AIR 1970 SC 1896) also is of no assistance to learned counsel for the opposite party respondents. That relates to the case of an order of the Cane Commissioner of Bihar and it was held that the right acquired by the owner of a mill to purchase the sugarcane from a certain area could not be affected on a subsequent date. This decision, therefore, also has no bearing on the question for consideration in the present case. In Writ Petn. Nos. 173 to 175 of 1967 (A. K. Krapak v. Union of India, disposed of on 29-4-1969) = (reported in AIR 1970 SC 150) it has been held that the dividing line between the administrative power and quasi judicial power is quite thin and is being gradually obliterated. This is a complete answer to the contention raised on behalf of the opposite party respondents that the order passed by the Government of India is an Administrative order and, therefore, it cannot be quashed. Hegde J., in this judgment, has made an exhaustive review of the case laws on this point and has come to that conclusion. In that case the petitioners were gazetted officers serving in the Forest Department of the State of Jammu and Kashmir. They felt aggrieved by the selection made from among the officers serving in the said department to the Indian Forest Service which was constituted in 1966 under Section 3 (i) of the All India Services Act, 1951. The order passed by the selecting authority was quashed. It is no longer open, therefore, now to contend that the matter of the claim of an officer to appointment by promotion when the same has not been made in accordance with the rules and procedure, and even in regard to the basic concept of justice, cannot have any value. The following quotation was made from the judgment of Shah, J., in State of Orissa v. Dr. (Miss) Binapani Dei, (1967) 2 SCR 625 = (AIR 1967 SC 1269):—

"We think that such an enquiry and decision were contrary to the basic concept of justice and cannot have any value. It is true that the order is administrative in character, but even an administrative order which involves civil consequences as already stated, must be made consistently with the rules of natural justice....."

13. I have dealt with the argument of learned Counsel for the opposite party respondents on the footing that Rule 2 (g) is to be construed with Rule 3 (3) (b) and that the scope of the word 'declaration' in Rule 2 (g) is to be gathered with reference to what is laid down in the latter rule. The argument, however, may also be considered in the light of the submission made by learned Counsel for the opposite party respondents in so far as the contention has been that Rule 2 (g) refers only to the post declared as equivalent to a cadre post as contemplated in Rule 9 of the pay Rules and that the declaration must, in any case, be only prospective. It is urged that Rule 3 (3) (b), which relates to the comparative seniority of a direct recruit with reference to a promoted officer, should be construed independently of Rule 2 (g). It appears, however, that even on such a construction the conclusion is not altered. The comparative seniority provision gives the benefit of continuous officiation to a promoted officer with effect from the date prior to the inclusion of his name in the select list if such period of officiation is approved by the Central Government in consultation with the Commission, inasmuch as such officiation shall be deemed to be officiation in a senior post. Senior post is defined in Rule 2 (g) which is different from the cadre post; and any post declared as equivalent to a cadre post shall also be treated as a senior post in terms of this rule. Let us take the definition of senior post as incorporated in this rule. The proviso lays down that even where there is no actual continuous officiation in such a senior post, i. e., in a cadre post or in a post declared equivalent thereto by the State Government, nevertheless, the holding of any post by a promoted officer prior to the inclusion of his name in the select list shall amount to his holding a senior post, provided officiation in such a post is approved by the Central Government in consultation with the Commission. To my mind, it is an additional privilege granted to a promoted officer that whenever he has officiated in a post involving discharge of duties of equal responsibility with the senior post independent of all other considerations if the Central Government is satisfied that the post as such is of equal status in consultation with the Public Service Commission, such officiation shall inure for the benefit of the promoted officer irrespective of whether it is, or can be, a declared post as contemplated in Rule 2 (g). The crux in the matter of allowing the benefit of continuous officiation for the purpose of seniority may not be any kind of declaration at all involving the difficulty as to prospective or retrospective declaration, but the mere recognition by the Central Government of the status of the post in consultation with the Public Service Commission, (sic) and there is no time-limit as to when such approval is granted, as the proviso does not lay down any point of time at which such approval is to be extended by the Central Government. The word 'deemed' in itself postulates recognition of a past fact almost on the same footing as 'declaration' but, if anything, it is even freer from ambiguity than the word 'declared'. Oxford Concise Dictionary puts one of the meanings of the word 'deem' as 'as if it were' which means that although it was not so there before in fact; the authority having the power to grant recognition will do it as such and then it will be considered to be on the same footing. In Stroud's Judicial Dictionary (Volume I-3rd Edition) it is said at page 751 'when a thing is to be "deemed" something else, it is to be treated as that something else with the attendant consequences'. It is not necessary to refer to the various contexts in which there are very nice sets of meaning of this word. It is sufficient to state as is mentioned in Words and Phrases (Volume 11, page 481) that the word, 'deemed' as used in an Act providing that after the death of the husband the wife's legal settlement shall be "deemed" to be the place where he was last legally settled, it is equivalent to the expression "shall be taken to be". Hence, in this context also, if the Central Government gives its approval to a promoted officer officiating continuously on a certain post as a senior post, it shall be taken to be officiation in a senior post. It is true, no doubt, that such approval must be given in a bona fide manner as, in fact, was done in the present case, because Shri M. S. Rao brought to the notice of the Central Government the circumstances in which a proposal was made for fixing the year of allotment with reference to the post which these officers were holding and also with reference to the letter of Shri Prabhakar Rao and Appendix 6, Rule 14, of the Bihar Service Code, pointing out that the officers for whom the year of allotment was to be fixed concerning their officiation on the 28th of December, 1954, were treated to be in the current waiting list of District Magistrates. Reference may be made in this connection to paragraph 12 in Shri M. S. Rao's letter, the relevant portion of which has been quoted at page 19 of this judgment. Even in the remarks column of Annexure A (at page 30 of the paper book in C. W. J. C. No. 853/68-Volume III), which has been quoted at page 9 of this judgment, Shri M. S. Rao pointedly brought to the notice of the Central Government the contents of the letter of Shri Prabhakar Rao, No. 5/27/55 AIS(i), dated the 14th August, 1956, in which the suggestion was that the period of continuous officiation of these officers should be recognised with effect from the date of occurrence of the substantive vacancies, but the recommendation of the Bihar Government was that since these officers were included in the ad hoc list of 1954, they should be held to be in officiation in view of the provisions of the Bihar Service Code. Shri Narayanswamy's letter was addressed to the Government of Bihar in answer to this and there is no question, therefore, of any kind of misrepresentation whatsoever. The stand in the counter-affidavit of the Union of India that there was misconception caused by the letter of the Government of India is without any substance, and that is why in the impugned letter dated the 20th September, 1967, of the Government of India, there is no reference to any misconception or misrepresentation but only to what the Government of India regarded as an error on its part in giving its approval to the proposal of the Government of Bihar which amounted to a retrospective declaration of the posts held by the petitioners as senior posts. If, therefore, the conclusion be, even on the assumption of the correctness of the argument on behalf of the Union of India, that Rule 2 (g) is not applicable to the case of the promoted officers, then it is not that prior officiation cannot be equated with officiation in a senior post but that the matter is governed entirely by the second proviso to Rule 3 (3) (b), and in that case, the question of declaration does not arise and it is only the acknowledgment of such officiation by the Central Government deeming such officiation to be an officiation in a senior post that will confer the benefit on the promoted officer. The entire basis of the objection in the revised order of the Government of India, therefore, based on retrospectivity completely disappears. It has rightly been urged by Mr. Daphary, on behalf of the promoted officers, that the question of any misrepresentation or any misconception being caused by the letter of the Chief Secretary of Bihar, Shri M. S. Rao, is wholly irrelevant and, as has been held in S. K. Ghosh v. Union of India, AIR 1968 SC 1385, the revision of that order by the Central Government is arbitrary and liable to be struck down as violating Article 16 of the Constitution.

14. It has further been urged that Rule 2 (g) is intended only to cover continuous officiation in a senior post or declared equivalent to it only in respect of direct recruits and does not cover the case of a promoted officer. In the case of the latter, he must hold directly a senior cadre post such as the post of a District Magistrate or any other post included in the cadre list approved by the Central Government as the post included in the I. A. S. cadre for every State must have the approval of the Central Government. To my mind, this contention is, examined on its merit, equally fallacious as I have already said in the preceding paragraph. Rule 3 (3) (b) refers to comparative seniority and if the provision in regard to the equivalence were confined only to direct recruits, then the wording of the proviso should have been different. As it stands, it obviously applies to both categories of officers not only holding of senior posts but also of equivalent posts, and the argument must be overruled as being without substance. A single Judge decision of the Calcutta High Court in Arum Ranjan Mukherjee v. Union of India, (1967) 2 Lab LJ 289 (Cal), has, if I may say so with respect, taken the correct view with regard to the scope of Rule 2 (g) and held that it is applicable retrospectively and State Government can say so by mere expression of intention without following any particular form.

15. Yet another consideration in regard to the construction to be put upon the second proviso to Rule 3 (3) (b) is that even if Rule 2 (g) be held to be applicable only to direct recruits in so far as the second part of it regarding equivalence is concerned, as has been contended by learned counsel for the opposite party-respondents and also for the Union of India, then for the purpose of continuous officiation the proviso will have to be read in wider amplitude since the wording of this proviso is that such a promoted officer shall be deemed to have officiated continuously in a senior post. This 'deeming' provision as has been authoritatively recognised by judicial pronouncements as also in books on canons of interpretation is significant, for in that case even where no declaration of senior post is formally made in terms of this proviso where such continuous officiation by a promoted officer prior to the inclusion of his name in the select list is approved by the Central Government in consultation with the Commission, such officiation must be taken to be officiation in a senior post. If the language were, however, that such an officer must have officiated continuously in a senior post prior to the date of his inclusion in the select list etc., if the period of such officiation is approved by the Central Government in consultation with the Commission, then possibly this proviso will be governed entirely by rule Rule 2 (g) and in that case senior post would mean a post included in item one of each Schedule or any post declared equivalent thereto by the State Government concerned. But in view of the fictional recognition given to the holding of a post on account of the use of the word 'deemed', it seems reasonable to hold that a promotee is entitled to get the benefit of continuous officiation for the purpose of seniority even where he has not held a senior post in the formal sense of the term as defined in Rule 2 (g). If the Government of India in consultation with the Public Service Commission would be satisfied about the nature of the post held by a promoted officer, as to the nature of its rank and seniority as being equal to a senior post, the necessity of a formal declaration would be altogether dispensed with as already held and, in that view of the matter, the question of retrospective declaration will not even arise. The stand of the State of Bihar as contained in the letter of Shri S. V. Sohoni appears to me sound. The following passage in this letter is relevant:—

"(c) the use of the word 'deemed' in the second proviso of Rule 3 (3) (b) of the Regulation of Seniority Rules is very significant. It seems to confer wide powers on the Central and State Governments for periods to be counted towards continuous officiation even if the officer might not in fact, have held a post which was already a declared 'senior post'. In its legal sense, the word 'deemed' means that something must be assumed to be a fact, whether it may or may not be so. Whenever this word is used in a Statute, whatever act is required to be deemed or taken as true of any person or thing, it must in law, be considered as having already been duly adjudged or established concerning such person or thing accordingly. Accordingly, the use of the word 'deemed' in the second proviso of Rule 3 (3) (b) of the Regulation of Seniority Rules indicates that it was not even necessary to declare the posts held by the abovementioned officers as equivalent to cadre posts under Rule 2 (g) of the Regulation of Seniority Rules."

Thus, the same conclusion is arrived at by a proper construction of the second proviso to Rule 3 (3) (b) as it stands or by reading it in juxtaposition with rule 2 (g), in which case the contention put forward on behalf of the Union of India and opposite parties 3 to 8 that rule 2 (g) is applicable only to a post to be declared as equivalent to a cadre post under Pay Rule 9, cannot be regarded as having any force. I may also invite attention to the fact that in the subsequent decision of the Government of India even Pay Rule 9 has been construed otherwise and even a cadre officer can now be deputed to a non-cadre post. This is incorporated as sub-rule (4) to Rule 9, added on the 22nd of June, 1960, and it stands thus:—

"Notwithstanding anything contained in this rule, the State Government concerned in respect of any posts under its control, or the Central Government in respect of any post under its control, may, for sufficient reasons to be recorded in writing, where equation is not possible, appoint any member of the service to any such post without making a declaration that the said post is equivalent in status and responsibility to a post specified in Schedule III."

This is so even in respect of Clause (i) of Rule 9 upon which learned Counsel for the opposite party have banked in support of their contention of retrospectivity but the argument loses much of its force when it is borne in (mind that—Ed.) there is no provision corresponding to Rule 9 of the Pay Rules, 1954, in respect of a post in the State Civil Service. I am satisfied, therefore, that the approval by the Government of India to the recommendation contained in Shri M. S. Rao's letter of July, 1958, in regard to the continuous officiation of these officers in a senior post with effect from 28-12-54 in respect of the petitioners, must be taken to be the approval of the Government of India duly given consistent with proviso two to Rule 3 (3) (b).

16. It is also contended that Rule 2 (g) cannot legitimately be taken to include, or to have reference to, a post in State Civil Service, because if it were so, it would be ultra vires the powers of the Parliament. Declaration is to be made by the State Government in regard to the rank of a post held by a provincial civil officer whereas this rule has been promulgated by the Central Government affecting the service conditions of officers who do not belong to the Central Service, but belong to the Civil Service of the State. Such a provision by the Central Government in regard to the State Civil Service could not be made either by the Parliament of India or the rule-making authority under the Central Act. The Parliament or the Central Government might do so in regard to the Central Service but to attempt to do so concerning the service conditions of State Civil Service Officers, would be unconstitutional. This contention too appears to me to be without substance. These rules have been made under the power conferred upon the Central Government under Section 3 of the All India Services Act, 1951, as I have stated above, and lays down the principle in regard to the determination of seniority of an officer to be recruited to the All India Service. To argue, therefore, that this rule by the rule making authority of the Central Government seeks to affect the service conditions of an officer of the State Civil Service, is altogether incorrect. By this rule, it is intended only to treat certain categories of posts which are not cadre posts as equivalent thereto, so that a senior member of the State Civil Service may not suffer unduly in rank when he is appointed to the Indian Administrative Service in relation to an officer who has been recruited as a result of a competitive examination.

17. It has also been contended that the year of allotment of direct recruits having once been determined under Rule 3 (3) (a), it cannot be altered. It has been argued on behalf of the direct recruits that if the promoted officers are given a year of allotment earlier than the year of allotment of the direct recruits in terms of rule 3 (3) (b) and the proviso, this would deprive them of their vested right. That right is acquired by virtue of the year of allotment itself. It appears to me, however, that there is no force in this contention either. Rule 3 (3) (a) deals with the year of allotment of a direct recruit as such. Clause (b), however, deals with the comparative seniority. There is no question, therefore, of any vested right to be acquired by any officer because all these rules taken together, which are intended to cover the seniority of officers recruited to the Indian Administrative Service from various sources, also refer to the comparative seniority of the various categories of the officers. It has, however, been contended that the provision of Rule 3 (3) (a) is to be read in conjunction with Rule 4 (3). That rule, so far as it is relevant, provides thus:—

"4. Seniority of officers.—

x   x   x   x   x   x   x

(3) The seniority of officers appointed to the Service after the commencement of these rules and before the 11th day of April, 1958, who are assigned the same year of allotment shall be in the following order, that is to say—

(i) Officers appointed to the Service on the results of a competitive examination in accordance with Rule 7 of the Recruitment

Rules ranked inter se in accordance with Rule 10 of the Indian Administrative Service (Probation) Rules, 1954.;

(ii) officers appointed to the Service by promotion in accordance with sub-rule (1) of rule 8 of the Recruitment Rules ranked inter se in the order of the date of their appointment:

x      x      x      x      x

It has been contended that once a particular year of allotment has been assigned to a direct recruit and a promotee also is given the same year of allotment, automatically, all the officers directly appointed will rank senior to those who entered the Service by promotion from the rank of State Civil Service. In my opinion, however, Rule 4 (3) has no such effect. Paragraph 21 itself in Anand Prakash Saksena's case, AIR 1968 SC 754 is relevant on this matter. It states "This contention is devoid of merit. The seniority of direct recruits inter se and promotees inter se is fixed by Rule 4. The object of Rule 3 (3) (b) is to fix the seniority of the promotees in relation to the direct recruits". This shows that, in the opinion of their Lordships of the Supreme Court, Rule 4 deals only with inter se ranking of officers of both categories. So far as their comparative seniority is concerned, they refer to Rule 3 (3) (b) alone as being relevant. The argument of learned Counsel for the Union of India and the direct recruits even from this angle cannot be taken to be correct.

18. It has also been urged that, in fact, there was no factual officiation by the promotees in senior-scale posts. Reference in this connection is made to the posts held by the petitioners. In this connection, I may quote here the relevant passage from Shri Soboni's letter to the Secretary (Services), Ministry of Home Affairs, Government of India, New Delhi (vide Annexure 'E' of the brief in C. W. J. C. No. 853/63, page 99 at 113 Vol. III).

"5. All the promoted officers, except Shri Alam, held the same post or similar posts from a date much earlier than 28th December, 1954, which is the date from which the benefit of continuous officiation has been given to them under the second proviso to Rule 3 (3) (b) of the Regulation of Seniority Rules. Shri S. C. Misra was appointed as Director of Gram Panchayats on 20th August 1948. This post is now a senior cadre post of the I. A. S. After that, he held the post of Deputy Secretary in the Local Self Govt. Depart. from the 9th October, 1949. On 4th August, 1954, he was appointed to the cadre post of Deputy Secretary in the L. S. G. Department, in addition to his own duties as Chairman of the Patna Improvement Trust. He held this post till 18th March, 1955. Shri S. A. F. Abbas was Development Training Officer in the Administrative Training School on 20th December, 1954. He joined this post on 23rd December, 1954. Before that, he was Additional Deputy Secretary in the Development Department from 22nd April, 1953, and Secretary to Food Production and Development Commissioner from 13th January, 1950. For about six months in 1953-54, he officiated as Registrar, Co-operative Societies, which is a senior cadre post. The same post of Secretary to the Food Production and Development Commissioner has been converted into that of Deputy Development Commissioner and has since been included in the cadre. Therefore, Shri Abbas can legitimately claim that he held a senior post continuously from 13th January, 1950. Shri R. S. Mandal was appointed as Mayurakshi Resettlement Officer on 5th July, 1949, which was a post in the rank of Additional District Magistrate. He joined as Additional Collector, Santhal Parganas, on 3rd November, 1950. In 1952, he was transferred as Deputy Director of Development and Rehabilitation in the Damodar Valley Corporation and succeeded Shri K. S. V. Raman, I. C. S., as Director, Development and Land Acquisition in the Damodar Valley Corporation in August, 1953, which post he held on 28th December, 1954, and continued to hold till June, 1956. Therefore, in his case also, it can be said that he continuously held a senior post from 3rd November, 1950; if not from 5th July, 1949. Shri R. C. Sinha was appointed as Secretary to the Chief Minister on 8th February, 1949. In 1952, the duties and responsibilities of the post of Secretary to the Chief Minister were reappraised and the State Government upgraded the post to the status of Deputy Secretary to Government with effect from 22nd, September, 1952. He held this post on 28th December, 1954, and left it only in 1961.

Thus, while these officers were holding posts equivalent to senior cadre posts from a date much earlier than 28th December, 1954, the benefit of continuous officiation was limited upto 28th December, 1954, only. I may point out that, in a sense, it is arbitrary. This is the date when the list of officers considered suitable for officiating appointment to senior cadre posts in the I. A. S. was approved by the Union Public Service Commission. This list was called the ad hoc list because, at the time it was prepared, the Indian Administrative Service (Appointment by Promotion) Regulations had not come into force, but the Seniority Rules were promulgated on September 9, 1954. The former Regulations were in the draft stage. However, in preparing the list, the same procedure, as was prescribed subsequently in the Regulations, was followed; and the list was prepared on a rigorous test of merit. After the Promotion Regulations were finalised, all these officers were included in the first 'Select List' which became operative on 26th December, 1955. Due to delay in finalisation of the Promotion Regulations, there was delay in the preparation of the 'Select List'. The record of service of these officers will show that these officers would have been included in the 'Select List' if the preparation of such a list had been undertaken earlier. Therefore, they have suffered for no fault of theirs and for a circumstance which could have been avoided if the fact of their officiation were reported timely to the Central Government and the Union Public Service Commission. Thus, it has been unfair to limit the benefit of continuous officiation from 28th December, 1954. If the matter were now re-opened, in all fairness, the year of allotment of these officers should be determined on the basis of the actual date on which they were appointed to the posts intrinsically equivalent to senior cadre posts. If this is done, it will be found that most of the officers held such posts from dates which were earlier than that of continuous officiation of any direct recruit to the I. A. S. in Bihar, and, in that case, their seniority will have to be re-fixed on an ad hoc basis under the first proviso to rule 3 (3) (b) of the Regulation of Seniority Rules.

6. In view of what has been stated above, the State Government strongly support the prayer contained in the representations filed by the promoted officers affected by the decision of the Government of India, communicated in their letter dated 20 September, 1967. The least that should be done is to revoke this decision and restore the previous year of allotment, and fixed finally in Government of India's letter No. 6/18/56-AIS(II), dated 3rd September, 1968".

The letter of Shri S. V. Sohoni, points out the posts which the officers held at the time of their promotion for appointment to Indian Administrative Service as also the date from which the benefit of continuous officiation was allowed to them by the Central Government and how these posts were of equal responsibility with any senior post held by any senior person; and even assuming that the salary was not the same, it would not make the least difference inasmuch as what equivalence requires is not equality in salary but the nature and the duties involved in it which would make it equal to the senior post. In that view of the matter, even the post of an Additional District Magistrate could well be equated by the State Government to the post of a District Magistrate, as in fact it has been subsequently done, and the ex-cadre post of Deputy Secretary might well be equated to the post of a Deputy Secretary which is a cadre post when the incumbents were already declared to belong to the current list of the District Magistrates. The Government of India was fully justified in approving the officiation of these officers in such posts as officiation in equivalent posts.

19. Learned Counsel has relied upon two decisions in support of his contention. One is the case of S. M. Naqavi v. President of India, ILR 47 Pat 533 = (1968 Lab IC 1426) and another is D. R. Nim v. Union of India, AIR 1967 SC 1301. In the case of S. M. Naqavi, ILR 47 Pat 533 = (1968 Lab IC 1426) a Division Bench of this court has taken the view that the benefit of continuous officiation is admissible to an officer whose name was included in the ad hoc list, but not to an officer whose name was included only in the 'fit for trial list' because such a list was not within the contemplation of the Indian Administrative Service (Appointment by Promotion) Regulations, 1955, as the Government of India made clear beyond doubt in the following passage:

"The question whether the officiation in senior posts of the State Civil Service Officers after inclusion of their names in the 'fit for trial list' should or should not be taken into account for the purpose of seniority, on their subsequent appointment to the Indian Administrative Service, has been engaging the attention of the Government. As the Government are aware, the Indian Administrative Service (Appointment by Promotion) Regulations do not provide for the preparation of any such 'fit for trial' list. Such a list has been defined merely to enable the State Government to try out a few officers irrespective of their seniority with a view to test their suitability for senior posts, and is intended only to avoid specific references to the Union Public Service Commission for casual short term appointments of the State Civil Service officers to senior Indian Administrative Service posts. The Union Public Service Commission, who were consulted in this respect, have advised that any officiation of the State Civil Service Officers included in the 'fit for trial list' should not be taken into account to determine their seniority in the Indian Administrative Service. The Government of India have accordingly decided that wherever such lists have been prepared in some States, the officiation in the senior posts of the State Civil Service Officers included in the 'fit for trial list' cannot be counted for the purpose of determining the seniority of such officers under the Indian Administrative Service (Regulation of Seniority) Rules, 1954." — (vide page 540 of S. M. Naqavi's case, ILR 47 Pat 533 = (1968 Lab IC 1426)).

As their Lordships have observed in this judgment, the view of the Central Government in regard, however, to the officers included in the ad hoc list was different as is stated in paragraph 12 of the judgment at page 543 (of ILR 47 Pat) = (at p. 1429 of Lab IC). As explained above, as to why the Government of India took up a different attitude in regard to the officers included in the ad hoc list is not material but definitely there was no misconception in the mind of the Home Ministry of the Central Government in regard to this matter. If the contention of learned Counsel for the Union of India and for opposite party Nos. 3 to 8 be accepted as correct that Rule 2 (g) does not apply to officers of the State Civil Service, then any difficulty created by lack of formal declaration in regard to the senior posts held by them will completely disappear, as already stated, inasmuch as the second proviso to Rule 3 (3) (b) itself will be deemed to have been carried out in the manner in which the ad hoc list was prepared and approval of the Union Public Service Commission was granted to it. In the case of D. R. Nim, AIR 1967 SC 1301, a date of continuous officiation was assigned to a police officer who was promoted from U. P. Police Service as a result of a competitive examination held in 1938. He was appointed Superintendent of Police with effect from the 25th of June, 1947. He officiated till he was appointed to the Indian Police Service against the promotion quota of the Indian Police Service cadre of Uttar Pradesh with effect from the 22nd of October, 1955. After the promulgation of the rules and regulations in regard to the determination of seniority of officers appointed by promotion came into force, the seniority of the appellant D. R. Nim also had been determined. He was given a year of allotment by the Central Government which he challenged as arbitrary. The Government of India explained the reasons for assigning him that date, being the 19th of May, 1951, by virtue only of instructions issued vide Shri R. C. Dutt's letter No. 1/18/53-AIS, dated the 22nd of June, 1951. It was held by the Supreme Court that this date was fixed without taking into consideration the period of officiation of the appellant as officiating Superintendent of police with effect from the 25th of June, 1947. SIKRI, J., who spoke for the Court, put the point as follows:—

"The above statement of the case of the Government further shows that the date, May 19, 1951, was an artificial and arbitrary date having nothing to do with the application of the first and the second proviso to R. 3 (3). It appears to us that under the second proviso to Rule 3 (3) the period of officiation of a particular officer has to be considered and approved or disapproved by the Central Government in consultation with the Commission considering all the relevant facts. The Central Government cannot pick out a date from a hat — and that is what it seems to have done in this case — and say that a period prior to that date would not be deemed to be approved by the Central Government within the second proviso."

Unlike Nim's case, AIR 1967 SC 1301, the Government of India gave its approval to the recommendation in the letter of Shri M. S. Rao on foot of the ad hoc list accepted by the Union Public Service Commission on the 28th of December, 1954. The names in the ad hoc list were treated by the State Government in terms of Appendix 6, Rule 14, of the Bihar Service Code, as those of officers fit for appointment as District Magistrates. Since the Bihar Government under its own code could draw up such a list — and this was mentioned in the letter of Shri M. S. Rao and full circumstances also stated as to how all the other officers should get the benefit of the ad hoc list — when the Government of India gave its approval to the ad hoc list as such, such an approval cannot be held to be arbitrary or erroneous or given under any misconception but based on good reason, and the year of allotment proposed by the State of Bihar was accordingly approved by the Central Government. Nim's case, AIR 1967 SC 1301 therefore, which is relied upon by learned Counsel for the opposite party respondents, appears to me to be an authority in favour of the petitioners that where a date of officiation has been approved by the Government on intelligible basis, this must be upheld as correct, as was done in the present case. If a arbitrary and artificial date were given without considering the circumstances set out in detail in the above letter of the Government of Bihar, the decision in this case might well be cited as an authority in support of the case of the direct recruits. The position being quite different, it appears to me that the crux is where approval has been given taking into consideration all the circumstances of a case which are rational and intelligible, that approval cannot be withdrawn by the Government of India to the prejudice of the interest of the officer affected by such withdrawal.

20. It has also been contended that even assuming that Shri Narayanswamy's letter dated the 3rd September, 1958, be construed as approval of the officiation of the promotees within the second proviso to Rule 3 (3) (b) of the seniority Rules, that approval having been again withdrawn by the Government of India, it is the same as not having been given at all and it could not be challenged. This argument has only to be stated in order to be rejected. If the Government of India be taken to have given a valid approval, as has been contended on behalf of the petitioners and if the petitioners have acquired a right to continue on the post, it would be unintelligible to argue that the same authority could withdraw the approval and jeopardise the interest of the employees in a capricious way. It is as good as saying that if a person is once appointed by the Government, the Government being an appointing authority and having the power to dismiss the Government servant can do so without valid reason. This will be fundamentally opposed to the security of tenure of the Government employee, that once he acquired a right to continue in the post, Government can remove him, at its option. It is, therefore, difficult to understand the contention urged on behalf of the opposite party respondents that if it lay on the part of the Government of India to grant approval, which was done in 1958, the approval can be withdrawn in 1967. It must be taken as well established that the validity of the approval of 1958, if at all, may be challenged; but once it is found that it was a valid approval, it would not be open to the Government to withdraw it on the ground that the authority which can grant approval also would be at liberty to withdraw it.

21. It has also been urged that the order of the Central Government is final. To this contention it is urged in reply that if this position be taken at its face value, then there is more substance in the objection by the petitioners that the order of the Central Government passed in 1958 accepting the date of continuous officiation proposed in Shri M. S. Rao's letter should be taken to be final. No provision is made for appeal against such an order in the Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules and as such the Government of India would have no power to revise it. In any case, it is difficult to support the contention on behalf of the opposite party respondents that the order passed by the Government of India cannot be quashed by this Court. Learned Counsel for the opposite party respondents has relied upon a decision of the Supreme Court in Parry and Co. Ltd. v. Commercial Employees Association, AIR 1952 SC 179 in which it is stated that a writ of certiorari will not lie merely on the ground that a decision by an inferior Tribunal with jurisdiction is erroneous. That, however, was a decision of a quasi-judicial authority under the provisions of Section 51 of the Bihar Shops and Establishments Act. But it may be noticed that even in that judgment, it was conceded by Mr. Issacs that in spite of such a statutory provision the superior Court is not deprived of its power to issue a writ although it can do so only on the ground of manifest defect of jurisdiction or of a manifest fraud of the party procuring it. The decision of the Government of India is not the decision of a Tribunal and, in that view of the matter, the case is clearly distinguishable.

22. It has also been urged that the present writ petition is barred on the principle of constructive res judicata and judicial propriety. Reference is made in this connection to the order passed by this Court, to which I was a party, in C. W. J. C. No. 787 of 1967. This was a petition filed by some of the direct recruits (Shri K. A. Ramasubramaniam, Shri S. D. Prasad and Shri P. S. Appu) for a writ of mandamus directing the State of Bihar to give effect to the decision of the Government of India revising the seniority list of the petitioners vis-a-vis the opposite party respondents. It is true, no doubt, that when the State of Bihar expressed its willingness to implement the decision of the Government of India, the writ application had to be allowed. Learned Counsel for the opposite party respondents has urged that the State was bound, therefore, by its own agreement to abide by the decision of the Government of India. The promoted officers filed an application in that case for being implicated as party on the ground that their interest was being adversely affected by the stand of the State of Bihar and as such they sought an opportunity to oppose the application of the direct recruits. Their prayer was refused. It is urged, however, on behalf of the petitioners that this cannot operate as res judicata. In order to understand the contention, the following paragraph of the order passed by this Court may be quoted:—

"In the circumstances, the writ application should stand allowed as the opposite party to this application, the State of Bihar, has accepted the point of view of the petitioners and the order of the Government of India will be implemented. There is opposition to this on behalf of the promoted officers affected by this order. There is an application filed by them to the effect that they should be joined as opposite party to this application and matter may be considered on merit in their presence. The admission of the claim of the petitioners by the State of Bihar should not be taken to be sufficient to dispose of this application because, in the very nature of it, this application involves some prejudice to the interest of the promoted officers which is the direct consequence of the admission made by the State of Bihar.

Having heard learned Counsel for the parties at some length, the petitioners insisting upon the application being allowed in view of the stand of the State of Bihar and Mr. Balbadra Prasad Singh for the promoted officers opposing it on the ground of the prejudice caused to the promoted officers, it appears to us that this application as it is at present constituted has to be allowed. We are not prepared at this stage to add the promoted officers as parties to this application and their application is, therefore, rejected. The present application, however, stands allowed.

This order is, however, without prejudice to the right of the promoted officers to agitate this question, if they are advised to do so, in an application properly framed for that purpose.

It has been contended by Mr. Basudeva Prasad for the opposite party respondents that this would operate as res judicata on the authority of the Supreme Court in Narash Shridhar Mirajkar v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1967 SC 1. That was a case in which a reporter attached to the English Weekly "Blitz" wanted to publish a detailed report of the proceedings in the Court which however, Justice Tarkunde of the Bombay High Court disallowed on a grievance made by one of the witnesses. This was an oral order. The reporter, Narash Shridhar Mirajkar, felt aggrieved by the order and moved the High Court of Bombay by a writ petition under Article 226 of the Constitution. That petition was, however, dismissed on the ground that the impugned order was a judicial order of the High Court and was not amenable to a writ under Article 226. Mirajkar, however, made an application under Article 32 of the Constitution praying to the Supreme Court for enforcement of a fundamental right under Article 19 (1) (a) and (g) of the Constitution. This was dismissed by the Supreme Court on the ground that since he made an application under Article 226 in the High Court of Bombay and it was dismissed, the proper remedy for the petitioner was to file an appeal against the judgment of the Bombay High Court. The same not having been done, the decision would operate as res judicata and the petitioner could not seek the same remedy in the Supreme Court by way of an application under Article 32 of the Constitution. It is true that their Lordships followed that course on the ground that the order passed by the learned Judge, Justice Tarkunde, was not collateral in the sense that the jurisdiction of the Judge to pass that order could be challenged otherwise than by a proceeding in appeal. Mr. Basudeva Prasad has contended that although the petitioner, Mirajkar, in that case was not directly a party to the proceedings before the learned Judge on the criminal side, yet an order passed against him was held to be conclusive. Likewise, the petitioners in the present case, although not parties to the above writ application (C. W. J. C. No. 787 of 1967), must be held to be affected by this order of the Court refusing to make them party. They should have gone up in appeal to the Supreme Court against that order and failing that they must be bound by that order. In my opinion, however, the contention is absolutely devoid of force. It is true that the prayer of the petitioners to be impleaded as parties to that application was rejected but, in the first place, they were no parties to that application and as such they would not be bound by that order and, in the second place, it is clearly stated in the order itself that the application was being allowed without prejudice to the right of the petitioners, which means that they would be at liberty to agitate the question in an independent application to be filed by them. It is well-known principle of res judicata that where a court keeps an issue open giving opportunity to the parties to re-agitate the question, it does not come within the principle of res judicata at all, because this implies an order of the Court not to decide a point where the Court directly leaves open an issue to be agitated in a future proceeding. The contention, therefore, of Mr. Basudeva Prasad must be rejected. Learned Counsel has also referred to Halsbury's Laws of England, volume 22 (third Edition), p. 780, Articles 1660 and 1661. They, however, deal with conclusiveness of judgments and merger of cause of action in judgment which are general principles and have no bearing upon the point raised in the instance case.

23. It has further been contended that no writ can issue to perpetuate an illegality. In my opinion, since I have already held that no illegality was committed by the Government of India in granting approval to the date of officiation of the petitioners in senior posts or in posts equivalent to senior posts for the purpose of seniority, the withdrawal thereof by a subsequent deed would be an illegality and there is no reason why the same should not be quashed by a writ of certiorari.

24. It has been contended that certiorari cannot be issued to quash the order of the Central Government because the interpretation put by the Central Government on Rules 2 (g) and 3 cannot be characterised as perverse. The view taken by the Central Government, if anything, is at least plausible. Reference has been made in support of this contention to the case of Principal, Patna College, Patna v. Kalyan Srinivas Raman, AIR 1966 SC 707. That was a case where an order of the Vice-Chancellor in regard to the University Regulation concerning the percentage of a candidate was quashed by the High Court, but the Supreme Court set aside that order on the ground that merely because the construction put by the High Court on the Regulation appeared to it to be more reasonable than the construction put upon it by the Vice-Chancellor would not justify quashing of the order. That, however, was a case where there was considerable ambiguity in the Regulation concerned and the various Articles of the Regulation were examined to come to that conclusion. Unlike that case, the petitioners had an order passed in their favour by the Central Government fixing the seniority in September 1958 and they held high posts under the Government by virtue of such seniority, but, as a result of the revised order, they would lose their seniority and would have to revert to lower posts after nine years. Apart from the propriety of the course adopted by the Central Government, in such circumstances, this would be a fit case in which if the High Court is satisfied about the error in the order of the revision passed by the Government of India, to quash it, and not that no certiorari could issue in this case. Every canon of justice in the present circumstances would be attracted in favour of the petitioners and it cannot be reasonably argued that no certiorari can issue in this case on the authority of the case of a student seeking admission to an examination on the interpretation of an ambiguous rule in respect of which the interpretation of the Vice-Chancellor, being equally plausible, was upheld by the Supreme Court. Moreover, the present case is not of the type dealt with by their Lordships of the Supreme Court. It is not a simple case but consideration of a number of rules and regulations is involved and, if anything, according to the petitioners, the second proviso to Rule 3 (3) (b) is clear enough and the interpretation sought to be put upon it on behalf of the petitioners was accepted by the Government of India after mature consideration as all the relevant factors in regard to the officiation by the petitioners were set out in the letter of Shri M. S. Rao, which was accepted by the Central Government.

25. I may also clarify the position in regard to the preparation of the ad hoc list which received the approval of the Union Public Service Commission on the 28th of December, 1954. I have already said that although the Indian Administrative Service (Appointment by Promotion) Regulations, 1955, came into force in 1955 (6th June, 1955), this was already in a draft form well known to the Central Government as also the Governments of the various States and the selection committee was appointed in terms of Regulation 3 of these Regulations. Regulation 4 deals with the conditions of eligibility for promotion and regulation 5 provides for preparation of a list of suitable officers, which was done in this case in September 1954. Regulation 6 provides for consultation with the Commission which, in this case, was done, as the list prepared by the committee presided over by the Chairman of the Union Public Service Commission was submitted to the Public Service Commission as spoken of in Regulation 6, and the Commission gave its approval duly on the 28th of December, 1954. It is true, no doubt, that the select list was formally prepared only after these Regulations were actually made and promulgated in a formal manner, but the entire procedure prescribed in these Regulations has been followed. The contention, therefore, that there was no consultation with the Public Service Commission, as is sought to be denied in the counter-affidavit by the Union of India, is misconceived. The confusion has been caused because these Regulations came into existence in 1955, but what was required to be done under the provisions of these Regulations, in fact, had been done in 1954, exactly in the manner contemplated in these Regulations and, in that view of the matter, the requirement of the second proviso to Rule 3 (3) (b) is complied with and the petitioners must be deemed to have officiated continuously in a senior post approved by the Central Government in consultation with the Public Service Commission. The Government of India was, obviously, aware of this position and that probably explains why the reason assigned in the final letter of the Government of India, dated the 20th September, 1967, which is sought to be quashed, has not referred to non-consultation with the Union Public Service Commission but merely to the defect that no declaration could be made by the State Government of treating any post which is not a cadre post as equivalent thereto with retrospective effect, which is supposed to have been done in the letter sent to the Accountant-General, Bihar, in respect of the petitioners in Annexure D series to the counter-affidavit by opposite party Nos. 3 to 8 (vide page 37 of the paper book in C. W. J. C. No. 853/68-Volume III). In my opinion, this erroneous conception on the part of Home Ministry of the Union of India has led to the withdrawal of the approval granted nine years before to the recommendation contained in the letter of Shri M. S. Rao. It is clear that there are two shields in this case on which the petitioners may rely in support of their case. One is, that the statement contained in the letter of Shri M. S. Rao regarding the nature of the posts held by the petitioners in itself should be deemed to be a declaration inasmuch as no formal act is to be done, to enable the State Government to treat a particular kind of post as a senior post, if Rule 2 (g) is interpreted in a comprehensive manner to include not only 'declaration' under Pay Rule 9 but, further, the declaration to be made by the State Government in regard to a post under its control. But, as I have already said, even leaving this matter out of consideration, the second shield on which the petitioners can rely is the second proviso to Rule 3 (3) (b) which uses not only a word similar in import as 'declare' but of a clearer character by using the word 'deem', which has been recognised in the cases referred to earlier as also in the following cases: Muller v. Dalgety & Co., Ltd., (1909) 9 CLR 693 at p. 696, Re Rogers & McFarland, (1909) 19 OLR 622 at p. 631 and R. v. Norfolk County Council, (1891) 60 LJQB 379 at p. 380.

In Muller's case, (1909) 9 CLR 693 per Griffith, C. J.—

"The word 'deemed' ..... is more commonly used for the purpose of creating .... a 'statutory fiction' ..... that is, for the purpose of extending the meaning of some term to a subject-matter which it does not properly designate...." In Re Rogers and McFarland, Riddell, J. held—"It would, I think, be quite impossible for us, so far as the authorities go, to hold that 'deemed' means anything less than 'adjudged' or 'conclusively considered' for the purposes of legislation". In (1891) 60 LJQB 379, Cave, J. observed—"Generally speaking, when you talk of a thing being deemed to be something, you do not mean to say that it is that which it is to be deemed to be. It is rather an admission that it is not what it is to be deemed to be, and that, notwithstanding it is not that particular thing, nevertheless.....it is to be deemed to be that thing."

26. Another feature of some importance in support of the contention raised in Shri Sohoni's letter (annexure E, page 99 of the brief in C. W. J. C. No. 853/68-Volume III) with regard to Rule 3 (3) (b), that will act as the second and independent shield apart from Rule 2 (g), is that under Rule 2 (g) what is defined is a senior post, which is a cadre post included in item 1 of the Schedule to the Indian Administrative Service (Fixation of Cadre Strength) Regulations, 1955 or any post declared equivalent thereto by the State Government concerned. However, so far as the second proviso is concerned, reference is not made to a post to be held by such an officer, but privilege is conferred upon the officer. The Central point in Rule 2 (g) is the 'post' but the central point in the second proviso is the 'officer concerned', and it is said that if an officer has officiated continuously in a post, it shall be deemed to be a senior post if such officiation prior to the date of the inclusion of his name in the select list is approved by the Central Government in consultation with the Commission. The question of any declaration is completely ruled out so far as the 'deeming' provision under this proviso is concerned. I may reiterate that where the post held by such an officer is not a senior post in terms of Rule 2 (g), i. e., not declared as such, but nevertheless if the Central Government is satisfied that it is a post of a character which should give the officer concerned the benefit of continuous officiation for the purpose of seniority, in consultation with the Commission, such a post shall be taken to be a senior post in the eye of law.

In such a case the question of declaration of any kind becomes redundant; and if that be so, the entire basis of the reasoning in the letter of the Government of India, dated the 20th September, 1967 (annexure I, at page 19 of the brief in C. W. J. C. No. 853 of 1988, Volume III), loses all its force. It is a pure question of interpretation of this rule and since such an act is of a quasi-judicial character, it has got to be quashed as an invalid order and, more so, because the effect of it is to put the petitioners in a rank much lower than what they have enjoyed for at least nine years prior to the order of reversion to a different lower rank. Hence, this is a fit case for issue of a writ of certiorari to quash the subsequent order of the Central Government.

Names of officers.

1. Sri Satish Chandra Mishra
2. Sri Syed Abul Fazlul Abbas
3. Sri Ram Sewak Mandal
4. Sri Sinheshwar Sahay
5. Sri Ram Chandra Sinha
6. Sri Ramanand Sinha
7. Sri Samir Kumar Ghosh

In substance, the grievance of the petitioners is that their year of allotment [given under Rule 3 of the Indian Administrative Service (Regulation of Seniority) Rules, 1954] was varied by the Central Government by an order dated the 20th September, 1967, with the consequence that all of them have come down in the gradation list [prepared under Rule 6 of the said Rules] of the members of the Indian Administrative Service so far as this State is concerned. These Rules had come into effect from the 8th September, 1954.

27. The argument in regard to the scope of Rule 2 (g) bearing on the scope of the term 'declaration' and Rule 3 (3) (b) and proviso thereof has been reiterated as learned counsel for the Union of India and for Respondents Nos. 3 to 14 have urged it with slightly different shades. Since the applications are being allowed on the general ground of invalidity of the order of the Government of India revoking the approval given to the seniority of the promoted officers in 1958, it is not necessary to set out in detail the specific facts of each case.

28. The applications are thus allowed. The order of the Government of India dated the 20th of September, 1967 is quashed and it is directed that the petitioners must continue to hold rank as assigned to them in 1958. There will be no order as to costs.

U. N. SINHA, J. 29. I have perused the judgment prepared by the learned Chief Justice and I agree that all the writ applications should be allowed and that the order of the Central Government dated the 20th September, 1967, be quashed by a writ of certiorari. I shall mention the salient features of these writ applications and my conclusions thereon.

30. There are seven petitioners in these six writ applications as follows:—

- G. W. J. C. 853/88 — Sri Syed Abul Fazlul Abbas and Sri Ram Sewak Mandal.
- C. W. J. C. 854/68 — Sri Ram Chandra Sinha.
- C. W. J. C. 877/88 — Sri Samir Kumar Ghosh.
- C. W. J. C. 878/88 — Sri Satish Chandra Mishra.
- G. W. J. C. 879/68 — Sri Sinheshwar Sahay.
- C. W. J. C. 880/88 — Sri Ramanand Sinha.

They were promoted to the Indian Administrative Service from the Bihar State Civil Service in the years 1955 and 1958 as follows:—

31. The grievance of the petitioners is based on the fact, that, by an order dated the 3rd September, 1958, the Central Government had given a more advantageous year of allotment to the petitioners, with the result that they were much higher up in the gradation list. By that order all the seven petitioners had been allotted the year 1948 and had been placed below Sri B. B. Srivastava, I. A. S., who was a direct recruit of the year 1948. By the latter order passed in 1967, the petitioners of C. W. J. C. 853/68, 878/68 and 879/68 have been re-allotted the year 1950 and have been placed below Sri S. D. Prasad, a direct recruit of the year 1950 and above Sri P. S. Appu, a direct recruit of the year 1951. The petitioners of C. W. J. C. 854/68, 877/68 and 880/68 have been re-allotted the year 1952 and have been placed below Sri K. K. Srivastava, a direct recruit of the year 1952, and above Sri R. B. Lal, a special recruit of the year 1952. When the petitioners had been allotted the year 1948 earlier, all of them were much higher than Sri S. D. Prasad in the gradation list. The earlier order of the Central Government of the year 1958 was based on the recommendation of the Government of Bihar made on the 9th July, 1958. The letter from the Government of Bihar to the Government of India had been written by Sri M. S. Rao, the then Chief Secretary to the Government of Bihar, Appointment Department, and I shall henceforth refer to this letter as Shri Rao's letter. The letter in reply from the Government of India to the Government of Bihar was written by Sri S. Narayanswamy, Deputy Secretary to the Government of India, Ministry of Home Affairs, and I shall refer to this letter as Sri Narayanswami's letter. It will be necessary to quote the relevant portions from the letter of Sri Rao. After mentioning the names of all the petitioners in Paragraph 9 of his letter Sri Rao had mentioned in the same paragraph as follows:—

"As all these officers started continuous officiation in the senior scale after 15th December, 1953 their year of allotment is to be determined under Rule 3 (3) (b) of the I. A. S. (Regulation of Seniority) Rules, 1954. The first proviso to Rule 3 (3) (b) will not apply to these officers." Thereafter Sri Rao stated as follows in Paragraphs 10 and 11:—

"10. The Government of India have already recognised the period of officiation in senior posts of some of these officers, the details of which are given in Annexures 'A' to this letter. For the reasons given below the State Government proposed to make certain alterations noted in Column 5 of Annexure 'A' in the dates of commencement of continuous officiation of some of officers.

11. When a State Civil Service Officer's name is included in the Select List prepared under Regulation 7 of the I. A. S. (Appointment by Promotion) Regulations, 1955, and he is appointed on a particular date to a cadre post or an equivalent post in accordance with Rule 9 of the I. A. S. (Recruitment) Rules, 1954, his officiation in senior posts for purposes of the I. A. S. (Regulation of Seniority) Rules begins from that date."

Referring to Annexure B of his letter Sri Rao stated as follows:—

"Annexure 'B' to this letter gives a complete gradation list of the officers of the State I. A. S. Cadre who are employed in posts in the senior scale worked out according to the principles recommended by the State Government in the earlier paragraphs. The Government of India are requested to notify the gradation list accordingly."

With respect to the petitioner of C. W. J. C. No. 854 of 1968, Sri Ram Chandra Sinha, a specific reference was made by Sri Rao in his letter in the following words:—

"On a straightforward application of the provision in the Bihar Service Code, those officers who were holding posts of Deputy Secretaries to Government on the relevant dates get the benefit. But where a junior officer was a Deputy Secretary and got the benefit of the Rule, the State Government have decided that it would be appropriate to allow the benefit to officers higher in the list even though they were not actually Deputy Secretaries to Government. One such officer is Shri Ram Chandra Sinha who has all along been Secretary to the Chief Minister. And another is Shri Rash Bihari Lal, who has been Director of Public Relations. These two posts are not inferior in duties and responsibilities to a post of Deputy Secretary to Government. Two other officers, Shri Anwar Karim and Shri S. M. Naqvi were holding posts of Additional Collectors. In this state, State Civil Service Officers of A. D. M.'s rank are appointed Additional Collectors or Deputy Secretaries to Government."

It was on this letter that the Central Government had given the year of allotment to all the petitioners in 1958. The impugned re-allotment appears to have been made on the representation made by three of the respondents in these cases, who are Sri K. A. Ramasubramaniam, Sri S. D. Prasad and Sri P. S. Appu. In the letter of the Central Government sent to the Government of Bihar dated the 20th September, 1967, the date of appointment of the petitioners to the Indian Administrative Service, the date of their commencement of continuous officiation in the senior posts other than those declared equivalent to cadre posts and the relevant date for determining their seniority were given as follows:—

[The date of appointment of Sri S. Sahay (Sri Sinheshwar Sahay) to the Indian Administrative service should be 26th September, 1956 and not 26th September, 1955].

32. In order to appreciate the contentions raised in this Court as to how the Central Government had made a change in the year of allotment, it will be necessary to quote a letter sent from the Central Government to the Government of Bihar on the 28th August, 1968. The letter was sent by Sri R. D. Thappara, Joint Secretary to the Government of India, Ministry of Home Affairs to Sri S. V. Sohni, Chief Secretary to the Government of Bihar. It stated as follows:—

		Date of appointment to I. A. S.	Date of commencement of continuous officiation in senior posts other than those declared equivalent to cadre posts retrospectively.	Relevant date for determining seniority.

"Dear Shri Sohoni,

Please refer to your D. O. letter No. 37/C. S. (R) dated 18-3-68 to Sri Prasad forwarding views of the State Government on the representations of Sri S. C. Mishra and other promoted officers against the decision of the Govt. of India communicated with this Ministry's letter D/- 26-5-64 — AIS (II) dated 20-9-67.

2. These representations and views of the State Government have been examined carefully. We have also had the benefit of the opinion of the Solicitor General on the various issues arising out of this case. We have been advised categorically that the State Government is not competent to declare as equivalent to a senior post in the cadre retrospectively and for purposes of determining seniority under the second proviso to Rule 3 (3) (b) of the IAS (Regulation of Seniority) Rules 1954 officiation in the senior post declared as equivalent by the State Government requires approval of the Central Government and U. P. S. C. before it can count on 'continuous officiation'. In view of this opinion, the Government of India do not find any reason to alter the decision taken in their letter dated 20-9-67. They therefore reject the representations of Sri S. C. Mishra and other promoted officers who may be informed accordingly.

Yours sincerely,
Sd. R. D. Thapar."

It appears that this letter had been sent from the Central Government on the representations made by relevant rules from the Indian Administrative Service (Regulation of Seniority) Rules, 1954 may now be quoted. Rule 2 (g) of the Rules reads as follows:—

"2. Definitions — In these rules, unless the context otherwise requires—

(c) 'Senior post' means a post included under Item 1 of each Schedule in the Indian Administrative Service (Fixation of Cadre Strength) Regulations, 1955 framed under sub-rule (1) of Rule 4 of the Indian Administrative Service (Cadre) Rules, 1954, or any post declared equivalent thereto by the State Government concerned."

[The definition of 'Senior post' has undergone many changes, but according to the learned counsel for all the parties, the definition given above will govern these cases.] Rule 3 of the Rules, so far as it is applicable, is quoted below:—

"3. Assignment of year of allotment. — (1) Every officer shall be assigned a year of allotment in accordance with the provisions hereinafter contained in this rule.

(2) .....
(3) The year of allotment of an officer appointed to the Service after the commencement of these rules, shall be—

(b) where the officer is appointed to the service by promotion in accordance with sub-rule (1) of Rule 8 of the Recruitment Rules, the year of allotment of the junior-most among the officers recruited to the Service in accordance with Rule 7 of those rules who officiated continuously in a senior post from a date earlier than the date of commencement of such officiation by the former.

Provided that the year of allotment of an officer appointed to the service in accordance with sub-rule (1) of Rule 8 of the Recruitment Rules who started officiating continuously in a senior post from a date earlier than the date on which any of the officers recruited to the Service in accordance with Rule 7 of those Rules so started officiating, shall be determined ad hoc by the Central Government in consultation with the State Government concerned.

Provided further that an officer appointed to the Service after the commencement of these rules in accordance with sub-rule (1) of Rule 8 of the Recruitment Rules shall be deemed to have officiated continuously in a senior post prior to the date of the inclusion of his name in the Select List prepared in accordance with the requirements of the Indian Administrative Service (Appointment by Promotion) Regulations framed under sub-rule (1) of Rule 8 of the Recruitment Rules, if the period of such officiation prior to that date is approved by the Central Government in consultation with the Commission."

33. At this stage a few facts have to be mentioned from the writ application filed by Sri Ram Chandra Sinha in C. W. J. C. 854 of 1968, as Sri Daphtary has based some argument on these facts. It is stated in paragraph 40 of the application that this petitioner had received Annexure I, dated the 25th September, 1967, which had mentioned, amongst others, that Sri Ram Chandra Sinha had been allotted the year 1952 and that the petitioner had written to the Chief Secretary, Bihar, on the 6th January, 1968 to take up the matter with the Government of India. On the 10th September, 1968 the Chief Secretary of Bihar had informed the petitioner that the Government of India had sent the letter dated the 28th August, 1968, which has been quoted above (from Sri R. D. Thapar to Sri S. V. Sohoni). The petitioner has stated in paragraph 43 of his application that on the 11th September, 1968 he had sent a letter to the Chief Secretary, Bihar, requesting him to furnish copies of the following papers:— (a) letter of the Government of India dated the 20th September, 1967, and (b) documents on the basis of which seniority of the petitioner was fixed in the year 1958 and the documents relied upon for changing the decision in 1967. According to the petitioner, no reply was sent to this letter nor has he been given the papers asked for.

34. The first contention raised by Sri C. K. Daphtary is that after his client, Sri Ram Chandra Sinha had been allotted the year 1948, by the Central Government, acting under the appropriate rules, this allotment should not have been changed by the Central Government without giving an opportunity to his client to show that the first allotment should not have been varied. It is contended that there had been a violation of natural justice in the procedure adopted by the Central Government. Sri Daphtary has argued that if the Central Government had proposed to reopen the question of allotment under the Regulation of Seniority Rules, his client may have shown that he was entitled to a year of allotment even earlier than 1948. Our attention has been drawn to paragraph 44 of Sri Ram Chandra Sinha's writ application, where it has been mentioned that the seniority of the petitioner has to be fixed under the first proviso to Rule 3 (3) (b) and not under the second proviso, and, therefore, consultation with the Union Public Service Commission was not necessary in this case. Whatever may be the merit of the last contention raised by Sri Daphtary, his argument that the Central Government should not have made any change in the year of allotment, in 1967, in the circumstances that it was made, is not without force. By re-allotment of the year,

Sri Ram Chandra Sinha's seniority has been reduced by twelve places in the gradation list between 1958 and 1967. [As a matter of fact, the seniority of all the petitioners has been affected by the order passed by the Central Government in 1967]. In the counter-affidavit filed on behalf of the Union of India it has been stated in paragraph 23 that in their letter dated the 9th July, 1958, the State Government had not placed all facts in their proper perspective. It is stated further, that acting on the basis of incorrect information, the Government of India had agreed to assign a certain year of allotment in 1958. In this connection, Sri C. B. Agarwala, appearing on behalf of the Union of India, has referred to Sri Rao's letter and has argued that the State Government had never mentioned in this letter that certain posts had been declared earlier as equivalent posts within the meaning of Rule 2 (g), quoted above. It is difficult to accede to the contention raised by Sri Agarwala in this context. Clearly, all aspects of the matter were placed by the State Government before the Central Government, requesting the latter to notify the gradation list according to the recommendation. Paragraph 16 of Sri Rao's letter had stated thus:—

"The second proviso to Rule 3 (3) (b) of the I. A. S. (Regulation of Seniority) Rules 1954, says that an officer promoted to the service after the commencement of these rules shall be deemed to have officiated continuously in a senior post prior to the date of inclusion of his name in the select list prepared in accordance with the requirements of the I. A. S. (Appointment by Promotion) Regulation if the period of such officiation prior to that date is approved by the Central Government in consultation with the Commission. The officers whose cases are being considered here were approved by the Central Government, in consultation with the Union Public Service Commission, as being suitable for officiation or for trial in senior posts in the I. A. S. Cadre. Under the provision in the Bihar Service Code, these officers were entitled to pay in the senior I. A. S. scale while holding posts of Deputy Secretaries to Government. A number of posts of Deputy Secretaries in Government are actually held by Cadre officers and several of the posts are included in the State I. A. S. Cadre. The State Government, therefore, recommend that the period during which they were allowed pay in the senior I. A. S. scale under the provision of the Bihar Service Code, after having been included in one of the lists prepared in consultation with the Commission, should be recognized by the Central Government under the second proviso to Rule 3 (3) (b) of the I. A. S. (Regulation of Seniority) Rules."

With respect to Sri Ram Chandra Sinha, in particular, paragraph 17 of Sri Rao's letter stated as follows:—

"It will appear from Annexure 'A' that there are four officers Sarvashri Ram Chandra Sinha, Rash Behari Lal, Anwar Karim and S. M. Naqvi, who have been given this benefit. Sri Ram Chandra Sinha has been holding the post of Secretary to the Chief Minister, and Shri Rash Behari Lal the post of Director of Public Relations. These two posts are equivalent in duties and responsibilities to a post of Deputy Secretary to Government. Shri Anwar Karim and Shri S. M. Naqvi were holding posts of Additional Collector, of the same rank as A. D. M. when officers below them in the list were already Deputy Secretaries to Government."

So it is difficult to appreciate the argument that the State Government had not given the correct facts or that the question of declaration of equivalence was not brought to the notice of the Central Government in 1958. The main argument of Sri C. B. Agarwala is that declaration of equivalence under Rule 2 (g) of the Indian Administrative Service (Regulation of Seniority) Rules has to be a deliberate communication or publication of a decision taken by the State Government and that the communication or publication must be with prospective effect and cannot be made retrospectively with effect from an anterior date. In my opinion, whether a declaration of equivalence will be effective retrospectively or not can arise only when steps are taken under Rule 3 of the Regulation of Seniority Rules for the allotment of a year contemplated by it and the effect of a declaration going backwards is inherent in its conception, if facts necessitate retrospective declaration. The declaration of equivalence has to be made under the Regulation of Seniority Rules, which came into force on the 8th September, 1954, and Rule 2 (g) of the Rules mentions that by 'senior post' is meant a post included under item 1 of each schedule to the Indian Administrative Service (Fixation of Cadre Strength) Regulations, 1955. The Indian Administrative Service (Fixation of Cadre Strength) Regulations came into force on the 22nd October, 1955 and without any retrospective effect the gap between the 8th September, 1954 and the 22nd October, 1955 could not have been filled up. Furthermore, if Sri C. B. Agarwala's contention, that, a declaration of equivalence under Rule 2 (g) of the Regulation of Seniority Rules had not been made by the State Government earlier than Sri Rao's letter, is valid, then it is difficult to appreciate as to the basis on which the Central Government had in their letter dated the 20th September, 1967 fixed the "relevant date for determining seniority" as the 26th December, 1955 in the case of Sri Satish Chandra Mishra, Sri Syed Abul Fazlul Abbas and Sri Ram Sewak Mandal, 26th September, 1956 in the case of Sri Sinheshwar Sahay, and, 17th October, 1956 in the case of Sri Ramanand Sinha, Sri Ram Chandra

Sinha and Sri Samir Kumar Ghosh. As stated earlier, these were the dates on which these officers were substantively promoted to the Indian Administrative Service. Taking one example for this purpose, it may be mentioned that Sri Satish Chandra Mishra was the Chairman of the Patna Improvement Trust on the 26th December, 1955. If he was holding a non-cadre post and a non-declared post, then this could not have been the relevant date for allotting a year under the Regulation of Seniority Rules. The contention put forward on behalf of the direct recruits on the interpretation of Rule 2 (g) of the Indian Administrative Service (Regulation of Seniority) Rules is in variance with the argument of Sri Agarwala. Sri Basudeva Prasad has argued that Rule 2 (g) did not confer any power to make any declaration and he argued that if Rule 2 (g) defines senior posts and for the purpose of defining senior posts mention about the declaration is necessary in regard to non-cadre posts, such a declaration has to be made under some power lying outside the seniority Rules. It is difficult to hold that Sri Basudeva Prasad's contention is valid to any extent.

The second contention of Sri C. B. Agarwala is that consultation with the Union Public Service Commission contemplated by Rule 3 (3) (b) second proviso of the seniority Rules was mandatory, and as there was no such consultation in 1958, the Central Government was entitled to make a re-allotment in 1967. But, in my opinion, reading the letters written by Sri Rao and Sri Narayanaswamy as a whole, it is clear that there was a substantial compliance with this proviso in this context. How the matter had been considered by the Union Public Service Commission was mentioned in detail in paragraphs 12 and 13 of Sri Rao's letter. I may mention that the inclusion of the petitioners' names in the ad hoc list dated the 28th December, 1954 may not have been accepted by the Central Government for the purpose of taking into consideration continuous officiation for the purpose of the second proviso to Rule 3 (3) (b) of the Seniority Rules, without anything more, but, this list had been followed by a Select List of 1955, which had been approved by the Union Public Service Commission on the 26th December, 1955 and the Central Government must have taken this into consideration in accepting the State Government's recommendation made in 1958 that the petitioners' continuous officiation in a senior post should start from the 28th December, 1954, when the ad hoc List had been approved by the Union Public Service Commission. What the Union Public Service Commission had approved on the 28th December, 1954, was known to the Central Government as will appear from the letter from the Union Public Service Commission dated the 28th December, 1954, which is on the record. Sri Narayanswamy's letter dated the 3rd September, 1958 shows that consultation with the Union Public Service Commission or its approval was found necessary in certain matters and in the case of Sri Huda, approval of the Union Public Service Commission was asked to be intimated to enable the Central Government to determine his year of allotment. In the case of Sri Rizvi and Sri Naqvi it had been mentioned that they were in the "Fit for Trial" List of 1956 and were included in the Select List of 1956, which was approved by the Commission on the 18th February, 1957, and, therefore, it is quite clear that some distinction was made by the Central Government between the officers who had been included in the ad hoc List of 1954 and those who were included in the "Fit for Trial" list of 1956.

The reason is not far to seek. The ad hoc list in which the names of the petitioners were included was approved by the Union Public Service Commission on the 28th December, 1954, whereas the Indian Administrative Service (Appointment by Promotion) Regulations 1955 had come into effect on the 6th June, 1955, which contemplated lists of suitable persons for promotion. Obviously, for this reason the Central Government had accepted the recommendation of the Union Public Service Commission with respect to the petitioners, made in December, 1954 and followed up by the inclusion in the Select List of December, 1955 and had given the earlier year of allotment to the petitioners in 1958. In my opinion, it was a matter of regret that the Central Government had found it necessary to reconsider its decision in September, 1967. Under Rule 8 of the Indian Administrative Service (Regulation of Seniority) Rules, 1954, if any question arises relating to the interpretation of these rules, the matter is required to be referred to the Central Government, whose decision thereon is taken to be final, and, therefore, when the Central Government had come to a conclusion with respect to the year of allotment, in 1958, it should have adhered to its decision with respect to such an important matter. In my opinion, the reasons advanced in this Court by the Central Government for its decision, given in September, 1967, cannot be accepted to be valid reasons; and, therefore, the petitioners are entitled to the relief claimed by them.

UNTWALIA, J. 35. I also agree with my Lord the Chief Justice that all the Writ applications should be allowed and the impugned order be quashed by a writ of certiorari. I would, however, like to record my views as hereunder on some of the points involved and canvassed in these cases.

36. Since the order passed in 1958 was an administrative order — pure and simple, as I am inclined to think, it is difficult to accept the contention that under no circumstances the Central Government can review the order determining seniority of various officers. In the first instance, although in one sense it concerns the persons whose seniority was determined by the order, it cannot be said that the order has got to be made after giving opportunity to all the officers concerned either of being heard or of making representation in writing. At the stage when the seniority inter se was determined of the promoted officers vis-a-vis direct recruits in the year 1958, the stage of exercise of the power in a quasi-judicial way had not reached. Any authority who makes an administrative order must be deemed to have the power to modify, revise or review the order on a proper case being made out or if exigencies of the situation so require. But at the second stage when the order was reviewed in the year 1967, in my opinion, although the character of the order remained administrative, the power had to be exercised quasi-judicially. The earlier order could not be varied without giving an opportunity of representation to the officers against whom it was varied. I would have held that the power so exercised without giving an opportunity to the officers concerned violated the principles of natural justice and the order was liable to be quashed on that ground alone but I do not think it advisable to do so in the present cases. There are two reasons for this. Most of the officers concerned subsequently had made their representations, and the Government of India, on a consideration of the viewpoints presented by them, reiterated its earlier decision made in September, 1967 and rejected their representations. Secondly, the viewpoints of both sides have been thoroughly and elaborately argued before us on merits and, therefore, it is just and proper to decide which of the two orders—one of the year 1958 and the other of 1967—is correct in law on merits.

37. On the 21st of October, 1946 an agreement was entered into between the Government of India and the Governments of the then Provinces regarding the constitution of an Indian Administrative Service to provide officers for the Central Government and the Governments of the various Provinces including Bihar. The strength including both the number and character of posts of the Service was to be as specified in the Schedule appended to the Memorandum of Agreement. The total authorised strength of the Service was 96 for the Province of Bihar, out of which 50 specified posts were senior posts under the Provincial Government and 17 under the Central Government. Recruitment to the Service was to be by direct recruitment or by promotion of the members of the Provincial Civil Service. Direct recruits were to be selected on the results of a competitive examination. Twenty five per cent of the superior posts which, in case of Bihar, came to 17 could be filled up by promotion of the members of the Provincial Civil Service. In the Schedule given at page 55 of the All India Services Manual, 1967 Edition, only 8 posts of Deputy, Joint or Additional Secretaries to Government were shown as senior posts under the Provincial Government. The posts of other such secretaries to the Government were not senior posts; that is to say, all posts of Deputy, Joint or Additional Secretaries were not scheduled as senior posts.

38. In exercise of the powers conferred by sub-section (2) of Section 241 and Section 247 of the Government of India Act, 1935 and the Agreement aforesaid dated the 21st October, 1946 the Governor-General of India, in consultation with the Provincial Governments, made the Indian Civil Administrative Cadre Rules, 1950. A 'cadre officer' under the said Rules meant an officer belonging to any of the categories specified in Rule 4, the last category of which was of the members of the Indian Administrative Service. A 'cadre post' meant any duty post included in the Schedule. Rule 5 provided that except with the sanction of the Government of India no cadre post could be filled otherwise than by a cadre officer unless in the opinion of the Provincial Government the vacancy was not likely to last more than 3 months or there was no suitable cadre officer available for filling the vacancy, and that if a person other than a cadre officer was appointed to a cadre post for a period exceeding 3 months, the Provincial Government was to report the fact to the Government of India together with the reasons for making such an appointment.

39. The All India Services Act, 1951 (Act LXI of 1951) passed by the Central Parliament came in force on the 29th October, 1951. Section 3 provides that the Central Government may, after consultation with the Governments of the States concerned, make rules for the regulation of recruitment and the conditions of service of persons appointed to an All India Service, which included the Indian Administrative Service. Under Section 4 all rules in force immediately before the commencement of this Act and applicable to an All India Service continued to be in force and were to be deemed to be rules made under this Act. On the 8th September, 1954 came into force the following Rules framed under Act LXI of 1951—

- (i) The Indian Administrative Service (Cadre) Rules, 1954,
- (ii) The Indian Administrative Service (Recruitment) Rules, 1954.
- (iii) The Indian Administrative Service (Regulation of Seniority) Rules, 1954.
- (iv) The Indian Administrative Service (Pay) Rules, 1954.

40. On the 6th of June, 1955 came into force the Indian Administrative Service (Appointment by Promotion) Regulations, 1955 made in pursuance of sub-rule (1) of Rule 8 of the Indian Administrative Service (Recruitment) Rules, 1954. The Indian Administrative Service (Fixation of Cadre Strength) Regulations, 1955 made under sub-rule (1) of Rule 4 of the Indian Administrative Service (Cadre) Rules, 1954 came into force on the 22nd of October, 1955. For discussion of the points at issue, it will be necessary to refer to the relevant provisions of the Rules and Regulations aforesaid. Therefore, for the sake of brevity and convenience, the four Rules hereinafter shall be referred to as the Cadre Rules, Recruitment Rules, Regulation of Seniority Rules and the Pay Rules and the two Regulations will be referred to as Appointment by Promotion Regulations and Fixation of Cadre Strength Regulations.

41. It appears that there have been amendments in the various provisions of the Rules and Regulations from time to time. At all places in my judgment except otherwise indicated reference will be made to those provisions of the Rules and Regulations which were there at the relevant time in the years 1954 to 1956.

42. Appointment by promotion to the Service was made even before coming into force of the Rules and Regulations of 1954 and 1955 in accordance with the Memorandum of Agreement and the previous Rules. Since all the petitioners were appointed to the service in the years 1955 and 1956 their cases will be governed by the Rules and Regulations which had been framed by them. It may, however, be stated here that the original definition of the 'senior post' in Clause (g) of Rule 2 of the Regulation of Seniority Rules of 1954 made reference to a post included under Item 1 of each Schedule to "the Indian Administrative Service (Cadre) Regulations, 1954". Some such Regulation was under contemplation in the year 1954 but finally the Regulation was the Fixation of Cadre Strength Regulations of 1955 effective from 22-10-1955. An ad hoc list was prepared with the approval of the Union Public Service Commission on 28-12-1954. All these petitioners along with some others were shown in that list as "fit to hold in an officiating capacity, Indian Administrative Service Cadre posts" (vide annexure 3 to the Writ Application in G. W. J. C. 877/68). But that was not the Select List within the meaning of Regulation 7 of the Appointment by Promotion Regulations, 1955. The Select List prepared under Regulation 7 undisputedly was the one which was finally approved by the Union Public Service Commission on 26-12-1955. The names of all the petitioners find place in this List. Sarvashri Mishra, Abbas and Mandal were appointed to the Service on 26-12-1955. Shri Sabay was appointed on 26-9-1956 and Sarvashri Ramanand Sinha, R. C. Sinha and

S. K. Ghosh were appointed to the Service on 17-10-1956. All these seven petitioners by the first order of the Government of India were assigned 1948 as the year of allotment which was changed to 1950 in the case of the first three, 1951 in the case of Shri Sahay and 1952 in the case of last three by the impugned order of the Central Government made in 1967. The question in this case in which of the two assignments of the year of allotment to the various petitioners is correct in law.

43. Under Rule 7 of the Recruitment Rules, the direct recruits, respondents 3 to 14, were appointed to the Service through competitive examinations held in the years 1947 to 1951. Under Rule 8 came the petitioners by promotion from the State Civil Service. Rule 11 of the Recruitment Rules provided that all rules corresponding to these rules in force immediately before their commencement stood repealed but any order made or action taken under the repealed rules was to be deemed to have been made or taken under the corresponding provisions of the Recruitment Rules, 1954. The expression in the various parts of the Regulation of Seniority Rules e. g.—

"An officer appointed in accordance with sub-rule (1) of Rule 8 of the Recruitment Rules"

or
"in accordance with Rule 7 of those Rules" has got to be read to mean with the help of Rule 11 of the Recruitment Rules that the said expression not only means appointment in accordance with Rule 8 (1) or Rule 7 of the Recruitment Rules, 1954 but even the appointment so made in accordance with the previous rules repealed by the Recruitment Rules. The matter becomes quite obvious when the language of the provisos to sub-rule (2) of Rules 3 and 4 is kept in view. If that were not so, the first part of both the provisos would read with reference to the dates as follows—

"Provided that where the year of allotment or the seniority of an officer appointed after 8-9-54 has not been determined prior to or before 8-9-54."

The expression will be meaningless. But if the said provisos are read with the help of Rule 11 of the Recruitment Rules, as I have indicated above, it would mean that where the year of allotment of an officer appointed in accordance with the rules which existed before 8-9-54 has not been determined prior to 8-9-54, his year of allotment was to be determined in accordance with the provision in Clause (b) of sub-rule (3) of Rule 3. Respondents 3 to 14, the direct recruits, undisputedly were all appointed to the Service before 8-9-1954. It cannot, therefore, be said that the years of allotment which were assigned to them were in accordance with Clause (a) of Rule 3 (3) because that applies to an officer appointed to the Service after 8-9-1954. Substantially, however, there was no difference and each of the respondents was assigned the year of allotment on the results of the competitive examination the year following the year in which such examination was held, and it continued to be the same under sub-rule (2) of Rule 3. The petitioners, however, as stated above, were all appointed to the Service after commencement of the Recruitment Rules. Hence, their year of allotment had to be determined with reference to Clause (b) of sub-rule (3) of Rule 3. Under this clause the year of allotment of the juniormost direct recruit who officiated continuously in a senior post from a date earlier than the commencement of such officiation by a promoted officer has to be assigned to the latter. Although neither Rule 3 nor Rule 4 of the Regulation of Seniority Rules provides in express terms that a member of the Service, who has been assigned prior year of allotment, will be senior to the one who has been assigned a later year of allotment, be he a direct recruit or a promotee, it is obvious that an officer getting a prior year of allotment will be senior to the one getting a later year. When officers belonging to either class are given the same year of allotment, their seniority inter se as also in relation to each other is determined under Rule 4. Under sub-rule (3) of Rule 4, as it stood before the amendment brought about in the year 1958, as between the officers appointed to the Service on the results of the competitive examination and officers appointed by promotion, the former getting the same year of allotment en bloc ranked senior to the latter who were assigned the same year of allotment irrespective of the fact whether some in the former group had officiated or not continuously in a senior post from a date earlier than the date of commencement of such officiation by the latter. But after amendment in the year 1958 in that regard too, the seniority of all officers appointed to the Service on or after the 11th day of April, 1958 who are assigned the same year of allotment has been made to depend upon the dates of their respective officiation in a senior post.

44. All the petitioners, as stated above, were assigned 1948 as their year of allotment by the order of the Central Government made in 1958 on the footing that all of them had officiated continuously in a senior post from the 28th of December, 1954 the date when their names were included in the Ad hoc List, if not earlier. The juniormost direct recruit who had started officiating continuously in a senior post earlier than 28-12-1954 had, had his year of allotment, 1948. On that footing, in accordance with Rule 4 (3) of the Regulation of Seniority Rules, as it stood then, all the petitioners were placed below the direct recruits who had been assigned 1948 as the year of allotment notwithstanding the fact that some of them had not officiated continuously in a senior post prior to 28-12-1954.

45. The first proviso to Clause (b) was not attracted in the petitioners' cases as, on the facts which are not in dispute, none of them started officiating continuously in a senior post from a date earlier than the date on which any of the direct recruits — respondents 3 to 14—so started officiating. The expression "officers recruited to the Service in accordance with Rule 7 of those Rules", meaning thereby Rule 7 of the Recruitment Rules, has got to be given the meaning which I have explained above to cover the cases of respondents 3 to 14 who were recruited before coming into force of the Recruitment Rules, 1954, otherwise there will be no express rule in the Regulation of Seniority Rules for fixation of Seniority of the officers appointed after 8-9-1954 in relation to those appointed before that date. The second proviso to Clause (b) of sub-rule (3) of Rule 3 of the Regulation of Seniority Rules will govern the cases of the petitioners in so far as the period of their continuous officiation in a senior post from 28-12-1954 to 26-12-1955 is concerned. In view of the principle of law laid down by the Supreme Court in Civil Appeal No. 2162 of 1968 decided on 11-4-1969 = (reported in AIR 1969 SC 1249) the Ad Hoc List prepared in consultation with, and approval of, the Union Public Service Commission on 28-12-1954 in so far as the petitioners are concerned, cannot be taken to be a Select List, even assuming such an ad hoc List prepared in respect of those found suitable for promotion to the Service, a point which was not decided in the Orissa case, could be held to be a Select List within the meaning of appointment by promotion Regulations. In case of the petitioners, even the Ad hoc List prepared had found them fit to hold in an officiating capacity Indian Administrative Service Cadre post; in other words, it was a fit for trial list. Neither Mr. Daphtary nor any other learned Counsel appearing for the petitioners contended otherwise.

46. The question, however, is whether the petitioners' period of officiation in a senior post prior to their inclusion in the Select List prepared on 28-12-1955 can be said to have been approved by the Central Government in consultation with the Union Public Service Commission within the meaning of the second proviso to Rule 3 (3) (b) of the Regulation of Seniority Rules. It is only then that they can be said to have officiated continuously in a senior post prior to 26-12-1955, not otherwise. It is to be remembered that the period of officiation in a senior post by a promoted officer after the inclusion of his name in the Select List but before he is appointed to the Service under Regulation 9 of the Appointment by Promotion Regulations did not require the approval of the Central Government. The first proviso to clause (b) of sub-rule (3) of R. 3 provides for a situation which is not covered by Clause (b). The second proviso cuts down the period of officiation either under Clause (b) or under the first proviso to that period only which has been approved by the Central Government in consultation with the commission, if the said period relates to a date prior to the inclusion of the name of the promoted officer in the Select List. In D. R. Nim v. Union of India, AIR 1967 SC 1301 while considering the identical provisions of the Rules and Regulations of the All India Public Service, Sikri, J., said at page 1303 (column 1)—

"The second proviso limits the operation of the first proviso by dividing the officiating period into two classes: first, a period before the date of inclusion of an officer in the Select List, and secondly, the period after that date. The first period can only be counted if such period is approved by the Central Government in consultation with the Commission."

This case has been followed in the Orissa Case, (Civil Appeal No. 2162 of 1968 decided on 11-4-1969 = (reported in AIR 1969 SC 1249) and it has been said—

"....the object of the second proviso is to cut down the period of officiation which would be taken into consideration under Rule 3 (3) (b)."

In my opinion, Mr. C. B. Agarwala, on the basis of the aforesaid two decisions of the Supreme Court was right in his submission that the word 'deemed' in the second proviso refers to the period of officiation as approved by the Central Government. Even though the actual period of officiation in a senior post before the inclusion of the name of the promoted officer in the Select List may be longer, the promoted officer will get advantage only of such period as has been approved by the Central Government in consultation with the Commission. Thus, by a legal fiction he will be deemed to have officiated continuously in a senior post for that period only. It does not mean that a post which is not a senior post as defined in Clause (g) of Rule 2 of the Regulation of Seniority Rules will be deemed to be a senior post merely because continuous officiation in such a post has been approved by the Central Government in consultation with the commission. But, I shall presently show, the same result will follow by a different process of reasoning.

47. When the relevant Rules and Regulations were framed in 1954-55, some confusion cropped up in relation to the definition of the cadre post or a senior post. Experience made the Government wiser, and by subsequent amendments the confusion or the defect, if any, which was there has been removed. I have already stated that in Clause (b) of Rule 2 of the Indian Civil Administrative Cadre Rules, 1950 'cadre post' meant any duty post included in the Schedule; it was not confined to the senior cadre posts only as mentioned in item 1 or 2 of the Schedule. In the Indian Administrative Service (Cadre) Rules, 1954, as they stood prior to the amendment, the expression 'cadre post' meant any of the posts specified as such in the Regulations made under sub-rule (1) of Rule 4. The Fixation of Cadre Strength Regulations, 1955 specified in the Schedule to those Regulations the posts borne on, and the strength and composition of, the cadre of the Indian Administrative Service of the various States. These Schedules have been amended from time to time. But what I want to point out is that in the Schedule appertaining to each State are mentioned not only the senior cadre posts but also the Junior ones. The definition of 'Cadre post' given in the Cadre Rules, 1954 was amended by a notification dated the 5th April, 1966 and thereafter it meant any of the posts specified under Item 1 of each cadre of the Schedule to the Fixation of Cadre Strength Regulations, 1955, that means the senior posts only under the State Government. Under Rule 9 of the cadre Rules a cadre post in a State could be filled up by a person who was not a cadre officer under certain circumstances and for a limited period enumerated in the said rule. Regulation 8 of the Appointment by Promotion Regulations provides that a member of the State Civil Service after his name is included in the Select List can be appointed to a cadre post in accordance with the provision of Rule 9 of the Cadre Rules. Such officiation in the senior cadre post undoubtedly can be counted for the purposes of determining the seniority of the promoted officer when he is finally appointed to the Service from the Select List under Regulation 9 of the Appointment by Promotion Regulations. It was rightly urged on behalf of the Union of India and respondents 3 to 14 that a member of the State Civil Service could be appointed to the Indian Administrative Service only by his appointment to a senior post because he is appointed against the promotion quota of the senior cadre posts only. It was further pointed out on their behalf that under Rule 9 of the Pay Rules, 1951 no member of the Service can be appointed to a post other than a post specified in Schedule III unless the State Government concerned in respect of post under its control or the Central Government in respect of post under its control, as the case may be, makes a declaration that the said post is equivalent in status and responsibility to a post specified in the said Schedule.

Out of Schedule III, we are concerned with group B. in these cases, which relates to posts carrying pay in the senior time-scale of the Indian Administrative Service under the State Governments including posts carrying special pay in addition to pay in the time-scale. Rule 3 of the Pay Rules prescribes the time-scales of pay on Junior scale as also on Senior Scale. I shall advert to these provisions of the Pay Rules a bit later after I have discussed the main contentious question with reference to the definition of 'senior post' given in Cl. (g) of Rule 2 of the Regulation of Seniority Rules.

48. According to the definition, as it stood at the relevant time, 'senior post' meant a senior cadre post under the State Government or "any post declared equivalent thereto by the State Government concerned". No mode was prescribed for declaring a post equivalent to the senior cadre post nor was it indicated at what time the post was to be declared equivalent whether it could be declared only prospectively or it could be so done retrospectively or, to be more accurate, retroactively. It created some confusion or it might have given a long handle to State Government to show favour to the promoted officers by declaring any post equivalent to a senior cadre post for the purpose of giving undue weightage to the promoted officers in the matter of seniority in relation to the direct recruits. It seems to me that this led to a drastic amendment of the definition of 'senior post' which, as it stands now after the 17th April, 1967, means a senior cadre post under the State Government and includes a post included in the number of posts specified in items 2 and 5 which are also senior posts in the Schedule to the Fixation of Cadre Strength Regulations and the posts added to the cadre under the second proviso to sub-rule (2) of Rule 4 of the Cadre Rules, 1954. The amendment has completely done away with the power of the State Government to declare any post equivalent to a senior cadre post. Not only that, by the same Notification of amendment dated 17-4-1967, second proviso to Rule 3 (3) (b) has been deleted and in its place a new Explanation as no. 1 has been introduced, whereunder the period of continuous officiation of a promoted officer in a senior post shall, for the purposes of determination of his seniority, count only from the date of his inclusion of his name in the Select List, or from the date of his officiating appointment to such senior post whichever is later.

49. But fortunately for the petitioners and unfortunately for respondents 3 to 14 we are concerned in these cases with the definition of senior post as it stood at the relevant time before the amendment. To my mind, if the power of the State Government of declaring any post equivalent to a senior cadre post as envisaged under cl. (g) of R. 2 of the Regulation of Seniority Rules is to be interpreted to mean a prospective declaration only, such an interpretation will rob the power of the main purpose for which it was conferred at the nascent stage of the Service wherein members of the State Civil Service were allowed to enter by promotion after giving them some weightage in the matter of seniority by striking out a just balance between the conflicting claims of the direct recruits and the promotees in respect of inter se seniority, as observed by the Supreme Court in paragraph 21 at page 760 in the case of Boddu Venkatakrishna Rao v Smt. Boddu Satyavathi, AIR 1968 SC 751. Such a power of declaring any post equivalent to a senior cadre post is not to be found in Indian Civil Administrative (Cadre) Rules, 1950 nor was any similar rule shown to us which governed the field before 8-9-1954 when the Regulation of Seniority Rules, 1954 came into force. The question of assignment of the year of allotment to a promoted officer cropped up only when he was appointed to the Service and not before. The question of declaring a post held by the promoted officer before his promotion equivalent to a senior cadre post did not arise or in any event such declaration was not necessary before his promotion and appointment to the Service. It was only after his appointment that the State Government could feel the necessity to declare that the post held by the promoted officer before his appointment to the Service was a post equivalent to the senior cadre post. If the declaration related to a period after the inclusion of the name of the officer in the Select List, no check by approval of the Central Government was provided for. But if it related to a period prior to that, a check was provided for under the second proviso to clause (b) of sub-rule (3) of Rule 3.

If the Central Government considered the declaration by the State Government of a post equivalent to a senior cadre post as mala fide, unjustified or unreasonable, it could withhold its approval of the period of officiation in the allegedly senior post prior to the date of inclusion of the name of the officer in the Select List. But if it gave its approval on a consideration of the materials placed before it, as, I shall presently show, was done in these cases, it is not correct to say as has been said later by the Central Government in its impugned order that the State Government had no power to declare a post equivalent to a senior cadre post retrospectively. Almost all the petitioners continued in the same post even on appointment to the Service which they were holding on 28-12-1954. In view of the provision contained in Rule 9 of the Pay Rules, Mr. G. B. Agarwala had to concede that those posts, although they were not added to the cadre of senior post in the Schedules to the Fixation of Cadre Strength Regulations, had to be taken as senior posts and the officers concerned were entitled to the senior time-scale of pay under Rule 3 of the Pay Rules read with Rule 9. Learned Counsel, however, contended that under Rule 9 of the Pay Rules a prior declaration has to be made before a member of the Service is appointed to a post other than that specified in Schedule III but he had to concede that if due to a mistake a member of the Service is appointed to a post other than the post specified in Schedule III, the mistake can be rectified by a subsequent declaration and the member of the Service cannot be made to suffer in regard to his pay, etc., for the said mistake. I am, therefore, inclined to think that the declaration of the posts held by the petitioners as equivalent to senior cadre posts made by the State Government was in one sense a declaration of an existing fact which existed on 28-12-1954 or in another sense, preferably in that the declaration clothed the said posts with the status of a senior post within the meaning of clause (g) of Rule 2 of the Regulation of Seniority Rules retrospectively. The effect of the declaration was not retrospective in the sense that by a legal fiction the fact of declaration was pushed back to an anterior date but it had a retro-active effect in the sense that the declaration when made clothed the post with the character of a senior post from an anterior date. Such a declaration in relation to a particular post, undoubtedly, could inure to the advantage of a direct recruit also for the purpose of finding out the date of his officiation in a senior post, if that post was held by him.

50. It would appear from the facts stated in Shri M. S. Rao's letter dated the 9th July, 1958 as also in various other annexures and affidavits filed in these cases on the basis of which a statement was prepared by learned Counsel for the Union of India showing the posts held, periods and upgradation orders issued by the State Government, that correspondence started between the Government of Bihar and the Central Government as soon as petitioners Mishra, Abbas and Mandal were appointed to the Service on 26-12-1955. The correspondence related to the fixing of the date of officiation in a senior post. The Government of India in its letter dated the 14th August, 1956 written by Shri Prabhakar Rao agreed to the date of officiation in senior Indian Administrative Service scale and consequently in a senior post as 28-12-1954, 15-8-1955 and 1-10-1955 respectively in the cases of the said three petitioners. In Shri M. S. Rao's letter of the 9th July, 1958 recommendations were made to the Central Government for accepting the date of officiation in senior Indian Administrative Service scale in cases of all the petitioners from 28-12-1954. One of the points made out on behalf of the respondents was that this recommendation was only for fixation of the date of officiation in senior Indian Administrative Service scale and not in a senior post.

In my opinion, throughout the letter, it would be noticed, fixation of the date of officiation in senior Indian Administrative Service scale was meant for fixation of date of officiation in a senior post for the purpose of determining the relative seniority of the promoted officers vis-a-vis the direct recruits.

In this connection, I may pointedly refer to the statement in paragraph 10 of the letter—

"The Government of India have already recognised the period of officiation in senior posts of some of these officers the details of which are given in Annexure 'A' to this letter."

In Annexure 'A', however, in the third column the heading was—

"Date of officiation in senior I. A. S. scale as agreed by Government of India."

And, as against this heading, the three dates with reference to petitioners Mishra, Abbas and Mandal were shown as already alluded to. The case made out in the letter of the State Government dated the 9th July, 1958 in substance was like this. Under sub-paragraph (2) of Paragraph 14, Appendix 6 of Bihar Service Code if the post of a Deputy Secretary to Government, which was not a cadre post, "is held by an officer of the Indian Administrative Service or a Deputy Collector whose name is on the current waiting list for District Magistrates or who would have otherwise been appointed as a District Magistrate the post shall pay in the senior scale of the Indian Administrative Service plus a special pay of Rs. 150/-." The clear view of the State Government expressed in the letter of the 9th July, 1958, was that to all intents and purposes and in substance the ad hoc List prepared with the approval of the Union Public Service Commission on 28-12-1954, in which the names of the officers belonging to the State Civil Service had been included, had the effect of a waiting list for District Magistrates entitling the said officers to get pay in the senior scale of the Indian Administrative Service plus a special pay of Rs. 150/- if they were holding the post of a Deputy Secretary to the Government. Many of the petitioners were holding such posts on 28-12-1954. Some who were senior to them were holding special post and they could not be debarred from reaping the advantage of the said provision in the Bihar Service Code. That being so, the recommendation was that all those officers should get "the benefit of officiation in the senior scale for purposes of seniority with effect from the date on which their name was included in anyone of the lists which are equivalent to, in fact, covered by the term 'waiting list for District Magistrate.'" In my opinion, reading the letter of the State Government as a whole, it would be noticed that it had the effect of declaring the posts held by the petitioners on 28-12-1954 as senior posts within the meaning of clause (g) of Rule 2 of Regulation of Seniority Rules. The declaration in unequivocal or express language is not to be found in the letter of the State Government because the period of officiation commencing from 28-12-1954 as suggested by the State Government required the approval of the Central Government. Letters in express language to that effect were written to the Accountant-General, Bihar, in the subsequent years 1959, 1960 and in some other years, too, as would appear from annexures D/2 and D/3 to the counter-affidavit of respondents 3 to 8 in C. W. J. C. 853 of 1968 as also from various other annexures as mentioned in the statement given by learned Counsel for the Union of India. It would appear from that statement that such letters were written to the Accountant-General as and when approval was accorded by the Central Government. The question of writing such letters in express language to the Accountant-General, it seems to me, arose because his office, as usually known, being too technical would not sanction the payment in the senior scale for a Senior Post without an express or unequivocal declaration to that effect by the State Government. For the purpose of determination of seniority, however, the letter written by the State Government in the language in which it was couched by Shri M. S. Rao in view of the law not being very clearly provided in cl. (g) of Rule 2 of the Regulation of Seniority Rules had the effect of declaring the posts held by the petitioners as senior posts. That it was so understood by the Central Government will be clear from its letter dated 3-9-1958, a copy of which is Annexure 2 to the writ application in C. W. J. C. 854 of 1968. While according sanction to the proposal of the State Government contained in its letter dated the 9th July, 1958 the Central Government said in regard to the petitioners and a few others that it accepts the recommendation of the State Government, "who may be finally allotted to the year 1948 and placed below Shri B. B. Shrivastava, I. A. S. (1948 R. R.)". In regard to Shri Nageshwar Prasad Sinha, another officer who is not a petitioner in these cases, it was stated in the letter aforesaid of the Central Government that "he may be allowed to count for the purpose of seniority his officiation in equivalent post" from the 24th December, 1955. I fail to understand the argument put forward on behalf of the respondents that the Central Government was made to accord its approval by misrepresentation of facts by the State Government or by any wrong statement. In any event, this is not the ground mentioned in the review order under challenge in these cases passed in the year 1967. The only ground mentioned in the said order, as I read it, is that since the Central Government had been advised that there could be no retrospective declaration of a senior post under Rule 2 (g) of the Regulation of Seniority Rules, it proposed to revise the order of allotment and to fix the same with reference to the dates of substantive appointment to the Service. It may, however, be pointed out here, as I have already stated, that most of the petitioners continued to hold the same posts even after their appointment to the Service, which they were holding on 28-12-1954. It would appear from the statement supplied by the learned Counsel for the Union of India on the basis of the materials in these cases that petitioner Mishra, apart from holding the post of Deputy Secretaries — either cadre or non-cadre, was holding the post of the Chairman, Patna Improvement Trust, on 28-12-1954 which post he was holding from before and continued to hold until 13-2-1958. Similarly, petitioner Abbas held the post of Development Training Officer, Administrative School, on 28-12-1954 and held it until 27-12-1956. Petitioner Mandal was Director of Rehabilitation and Development, Damodar Valley Corporation, on 28-12-1954 and held it up to 4-6-1950. Petitioner R. C. Sinha was Secretary to the Chief Minister on 28-12-1954 and continued to be so till May, 1958. Petitioner S. Sahay was Deputy Secretary, Revenue Department on 28-12-54 and continued as such till the date of his appointment to the service. Petitioners Ramnand Sinha and S. K. Ghosh were Additional Deputy Secretaries to the Government of Bihar on 28-12-1954 and continued to be so until their appointment to the Service or shortly thereafter. It would bear repetition to say that such posts as were held by many of the petitioners on 28-12-1954 became senior posts from the date of their appointment to the service as conceded to by Mr. C. B. Agarwala, learned Counsel for the Union of India, with reference to Rule 9 of the Pay Rules. It would be highly unjust and illogical to hold that the posts which the petitioners were holding on 28-12-1954 could not be declared to be senior posts within the meaning of Rule 2 (g) of the Regulation of Seniority Rules, even though in substance the declaration was made in the letter of the State Government dated the 9th July, 1958, and in express language in letters written subsequently to the Accountant-General. In my opinion, on a wrong view of the law the Central Government has revised its previous order. In any event, in the confused state of law, as it existed at the relevant time, it is difficult to find that the order of the Central Government made in the year 1958 was such as could justify its revision 9 years later.

51. Apropos the strenuous argument put forward on behalf of the respondents that the approval given by the Central Government in its letter dated 3-9-1958 for the period of officiation of the petitioners in senior posts before inclusion of their name in the Select List was invalid as it was in violation of the mandatory requirement of the second proviso to Rule 3 (3) (b) of the Regulation of Seniority Rules inasmuch as the approval was accorded without the consultation with the Union Public Service Commission, I would lay stress on the fact that neither in the impugned order nor in any of the counter-affidavits filed on behalf of the respondents there is a clear statement of fact that the approval was accorded by the Central Government without such consultation. Even assuming it was so, the failure on the part of the Central Government to perform its duty of consulting the Commission before according the approval will not invalidate the order made in favour of the petitioners. The requirement of the approval by the Central Government under the proviso aforesaid is undoubtedly mandatory. But the requirement of the Central Government to consult the Commission before according the approval cannot be held to be mandatory so as to result in the nullification of the approval given in breach of the said requirement. I don't think that inclusion of the petitioners' name in the ad hoc List with the approval of the Commission had, in any manner, the effect of approval of the period of officiation in question by the Central Government in consultation with the Commission. The two types of consultation were different and distinct; one could not take the place of the other. I am, however, inclined to think that in the state of law as it existed in the years 1954 to 1958 the Central Government might not have thought it necessary to consult the commission for according its approval to the period of officiation of the petitioners in senior posts when the period proposed by the State Government was to commence only from 28-12-1954 the date when the petitioners' name had been included in the Ad hoc List with the approval of the Commission. It may well be that the Central Government thought that to all intents and purposes the Ad hoc List was in substance the select List and for according approval to the period of officiation in a senior post from that date it was not quite necessary to consult the Commission. Whatever might have been the cause of the failure, if any, of the Central Government to consult the Commission, it is clear that the alleged failure cannot entail the nullification of the order made by the Central Government in favour of the petitioners in the year 1958.

Madan Mohan Prasad and others, Petitioners v. Government of Bihar and others, Respondents.

Civil Writ Judn. Case No. 183 of 1968, D/- 26-9-1969.

(A) Civil Services — Bihar Superior Judicial Service Rules (1946), Rule 16 (e) — Expression "may have been allowed to officiate continuously" — Interpretation — Expression means actual and continuous officiation and not fictional or notional one — Seniority cannot be given to promoted officer on basis of notional or fictional officiation. (Para 13)

EN/FN/GI91/70/DVT/M

(B) Civil Services — Bihar Superior Judicial Service Rules (1946), Rule 16 (e) — Seniority — Determination of — Officer working on special post — Upgradation of post — Effect — Officer is deemed to have officiated in promoted post from date of upgradation — Recourse to upgradation of post — It is valid if done without violating any law or principle. (Para 14)

(C) Civil Services — Bihar Superior Judicial Service Rules (1946), Rule 3 (2) — Amendment of Schedule appended to Rules — Upgradation of post — Amounts to amending Schedule — Can be done retrospectively — Publication in Gazette is not necessary. (Paras 15, 17)

(D) Constitution of India, Article 309, Proviso — Framing of rules — Power of authority under Proviso — Can be exercised both prospectively and retrospectively in absence of appropriate legislation. AIR 1969 SC 118, Foll. (Para 15)

(E) Constitution of India, Article 166 (1) — Conduct of Government business — Officer working on special post — Upgradation of that post — Order need not be expressed in the name of Governor. AIR 1964 SC 1823, Foll. (Para 17)

(F) Constitution of India, Article 233 — Appointment of District Judges — Post of Additional District and Sessions Judge although not subordinate to, is of grade lower than that of District and Sessions Judge — Vacancy in post of District Judge cannot be equated with vacancy in post of Additional District Judge. (Para 20)

(G) Constitution of India, Articles 233, 235 — Appointment of District Judges — Power vests in Governor — Prior consultation with High Court necessary:

On harmonious construction of Articles 233 and 235 it is clear that appointment of persons to be and the posting, meaning the first posting on such appointment and promotion of District Judges which expression includes Additional District Judges in any State, is within the power of the Governor who has to exercise that power in consultation with the High Court. Apart from these three matters the entire control over District Courts or Courts subordinate thereto vests in the High Court. Clause (1) read with clause (2) of Article 233 clearly suggests that appointment to the Superior Judicial Service can be from two sources, namely, Subordinate Judicial and the Bar as envisaged by the second clause. (Case law discussed).

(Para 23)

(H) Constitution of India, Articles 235, 162 — Control over Subordinate Courts — Seniority of officers employed in State Judicial Service — Determination of — Power vests solely in High Court — Exercise of power is subject to Rules framed under Article 309 — State Government cannot fix seniority in exercise of power under Article 162 as it is subject to power under Article 235.

Basudeva Prasad, Amla Kant Choudhary, Tarkeshwar Dayal, Karuna Nidhan Keshav, Revinandan Sahai, Narendra Prasad and Mrs. Sudha Rai Jayaswal, for Petitioners, M. C. Chagla, S. Sarwar Ali and Uday Pratap Singh (for State), J. C. Sinha, Lalshman Saran Sinha and Janardan Pd Singh, (for Respondent No. 2) and K. P. Verma and Bundabasin Pd. Sinha, (for Respondent No. 4), for Respondents.

UNTWALIA, J.— This is an application under Article 226 of the Constitution of India, which involves the question of determination of seniority of the petitioners vis-à-vis respondents 2 to 4, the first respondent is the Government of Bihar. It also raises an important constitutional question as to whether the State Government are competent to determine the seniority of an officer belonging to the Superior Judicial Service (hereinafter called the Service) or whether it is within the competence and power of the High Court to take a final decision on their administrative side in that regard.

2. There are three petitioners in this writ application. Their case is that three vacancies in the post of Additional District and Sessions Judges occurred between 1958 and 31st of January, 1959. On the 14th of March, 1959 respondent No. 1 advertised the said three posts borne on the cadre of the Service to be filled up by direct recruitment from the Bar in accordance with Rule 5 (a) of the Bihar Superior Judicial Service Rules, 1946 (hereinafter called the Rules). On or before the 31st of March, 1959 the petitioners along with some others applied for being appointed to the posts. Eventually they were so appointed on 21-4-1960. They were confirmed in the posts of Additional District and Sessions Judge in April, 1961. Their case further is that respondents 2 & 3 were never promoted from the post of Sub-Judge which they were holding substantively to the post of Additional District and Sessions Judge according to law and although there was no vacancy in any such post on the 17th of June, 1959, the Government of Bihar by their order dated the 6th of September, 1960, a copy of which is Annexure 'D' to the writ application, which order was never published in the Bihar Gazette, purported to upgrade the post of the Deputy Registrar of the Patna High Court, which post Shri Chandrika Prasad Sinha, respondent No. 2, was holding and that of the Secretary, Bihar Legislative Assembly, which post was held by Shri Enayetur Rahman, respondent No. 3, retrospectively with effect from the 17th of June, 1959, till those posts were held by them.

The intention of the said upgrading was to indirectly confer seniority on respondents Nos 2 and 3 by giving them fictitious officiation in a post in the service for the purpose of placing them in a more advantageous position than that of the petitioners in the matter of promotion and other service benefits. The said upgrading was done even in contravention of the recommendation of the Patna High Court, which was only for a limited upgrading of the said posts for a short period of 3 months 14 days, i.e., from the 17th June to 1st October, 1959, purely in fulfilment of the requirements of the 'next below rule' as Shri Jitendra Narain, respondent No. 4, started officiating in a temporary leave vacancy in a post of Additional District Judge from the 17th of June, 1959.

When respondent No. 2 was appointed as District and Sessions Judge on 25-4-1961, the petitioners felt surprised on their apparent supersession by respondent No. 2. On inquiries they learnt towards the end of August, 1961, that respondents 2 and 3 had somehow been treated as senior to them and that the seniority list of the Service had also been altered by placing respondents 2 and 3 over the petitioners. A true copy of the seniority list is Annexure 'E' to the writ application.

3. The petitioners' case proceeds further thus. They also came to know that respondent No. 4 who had been appointed as Additional District Judge on the 19th of September, 1960 long after the petitioners' appointment and was thus junior to them had made a representation to the Government claiming seniority over them on the ground that respondents 2 and 3 had been allowed retrospective fictional promotion as Additional District Judge with effect from the 17th of June, 1959 even though there was no vacancy in the cadre then.

On the 3rd of September, 1961, the petitioners made representation to the Government both against the aforesaid illegal seniority of respondents 2 and 3 and the seniority claimed by respondent No. 4. In February, 1963, the petitioners came to know that the Government had rejected their representation and they had also illegally decided that respondent No. 4 should be placed above them in the seniority list even though he was to be junior to the petitioners for other purposes of the service. The petitioners' case is that respondent No. 4 was working on the post of a Sub-Judge all along during the relevant period except for the brief period of 3 months 14 days when he had officiated in a temporary leave vacancy from 17-6-1959 to 1-10-1959. He reverted to the post of the Subordinate Judge from 2-10-1959. During the period in question some of his judgments delivered as Sub-Judge were subject-matter of appeal before the District Judge. The petitioners also state that the Patna High Court had recommended for rejecting the representation of respondent No. 4 for giving seniority to him and the Government's decision is against the recommendation of the High Court.

4. The petitioners attack the order of the State Government contained in their letter dated the 6th September, 1960 (Annexure D), the seniority list (Annexure E) and the decision of respondent No. 1 to place respondent No. 4 also above the petitioners on various grounds which, as formulated by Mr. Basudeva Prasad, learned Advocate for the petitioners, at the time of the hearing of the writ application, may be stated thus —

(i) The seniority list (Annexure E) has been framed in contravention of the provision of law contained in Rule 16 (e) of the Rules.

(ii) The order of the State Government dated 6-9-1960 contained in Annexure 'D' to the writ application as also the order of the State Government dated 24-1-1968, a copy of which is Annexure 'B' to the counter-affidavit of respondent No. 4, giving fictitious officiation with retrospective effect is ultra vires and illegal.

(iii) There was no vacant post of an Additional District Judge available before 1-11-1959 and, therefore, creation of new posts for respondents 2 and 3 by the State Government was ultra vires Article 166 of the Constitution read with Rule 14 (2) of the Rules of Executive Business and Item 3 (e) of the 3rd Schedule appended to the said Rules.

(iv) There was no vacaney available in the post of Additional District Judge for respondent No. 4 in the promotees' quota between 1-11-1959 and 19-9-1960.

(v) Respondents 2 and 3 having never been appointed to the substantive post of Additional District Judge in accordance with Rules 5 and 15 of the Rules, their seniority cannot be determined with reference to Rule 16 (e).

(vi) The seniority of respondents 2 to 4 having been fixed without any basis in law and in an illegal and arbitrary manner infringes the fundamental rights of the petitioners in the matter of their employment under Article 16 (1) of the Constitution.

(vii) Under Article 235 of the Constitution, it is the exclusive power of the High Court on their administrative side to promote Subordinate Judges to the posts of Additional District Judge and to determine the seniority of a Judicial Officer; the State Government, as against the decision or recommendation of the High Court, had no power to determine the seniority of respondent No. 4 and give him a place over the petitioners.

5. In pursuance of the rule issued to the respondents, cause has been shown on behalf of the State Government, respondent No. 1, by their learned Counsel Mr. M. C. Chagla.

Mr. J. C. Sinha, appeared for respondent No. 2 and Mr. K. P. Verma, learned Government Advocate, appeared for respondent No. 4; nobody appeared separately for respondent No. 3. All the points urged by Mr. Basudeva Prasad, learned Counsel for the petitioners, were combated by one Counsel or the other. I shall deal with their argument in my judgment while discussing the points involved in the case. But before I do so, it would be convenient to refer to certain facts from the various affidavits filed by the parties and their annexures.

6. In accordance with Rule 3 (1) of the Rules, the strength of the Service which means the Bihar Superior Judicial Service, and the number and character of the posts are as specified in the Schedule to the Rules. Under sub-rule (2) of Rule 3 "the State Government may, from time to time, after consultation with the High Court amend the said Schedule". In March, 1959, when three posts were advertised to be filled up by direct recruitment from the Bar under clause (2) of Article 233 of the Constitution, the sanctioned strength of the Service was—

District Judges	14
Registrar, High Court	1
Secretary, Law Department	1
Total	16
Additional District Judges	18
Deputy Secretary, Law Department	1
Total	19

As mentioned in paragraph 7 of the counter-affidavit filed on behalf of the State of Bihar on 27-2-1968 two posts of Additional District Judge consequent upon the amendment of the Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887, whereby the pecuniary jurisdiction of appeal before the District Judge had been raised from Rs. 5000 to Rs. 9,999, were created for a period of one year in the first instance and the creation of the posts was approved by the State Government on 5-5-1959. Two temporary posts of Peripatetic District and Sessions Judge were created for a period of two years and the creation of the posts was approved by the State Government on 24-4-1959. On 25-1-1959, however, the Registrar of the High Court wrote a letter to the Chief Secretary of the Government (vide Annexure X/1 to the counter-affidavit of respondent No. 2) that he had been directed to say that a few short-term leave vacancies had occurred in the cadre of the Additional District and Sessions Judges consequent upon four of them proceeding on leave for the periods noted against their names, which varied from 5-2-1959 to 11-7-1959, and as the Sessions file in some districts was getting out of control due to paucity of officers, the Court proposed to fill in the leave vacancies by promotion of Subordinate Judges. Having carefully considered the records of service of the Subordinate Judges due for promotion, the Court recommended the names of Sarvashri C. P. Sinha, E. Rahman, J. Narain (respondents Nos. 2 to 4) and Sharda Prasad for being promoted to act temporarily as Additional District and Sessions Judges. Since the Courts were engaged in various important administrative works and tackling heavy arrears, the then Hon'ble the Chief Justice desired to retain the services of respondent No. 2 as Deputy Registrar. Since his promotion had become due, it was recommended that he should not be made to suffer any pecuniary loss on account of the fact that he could not be spared. The Court, therefore, recommended that the status and emoluments of the post of the Deputy Registrar should be temporarily upgraded so long Shri C. P. Sinha continued to hold the post and remained eligible to officiate as an Additional District Judge. The next higher vacancy was recommended for Shri E. Rahman who was on deputation in the Bihar Legislative Assembly Department. He was also not being spared from there although he had become due for promotion to the rank of Additional District Judge. The Court, therefore, recommended that either he should be relieved or that the Government may consider the desirability of temporarily upgrading his post till June, 1959. Shri J. Narain was working as Under-Secretary in the Law Department but since the State Government had already agreed to relieve him of the said assignment, he was recommended to be promoted to act as Additional District Judge in the third longer vacancy and posted to Dumka as such. Shri Sharda Prasad was recommended to be promoted to act as Additional District Judge in the fourth vacancy to be posted as Additional Judicial Commissioner, Ranchi, where he was already working as a Subordinate Judge. It's not quite clear from the records of this case as to what happened in cases of other leave vacancies. But what is definite and clear is that Shri J. Narain officiated in a leave vacancy as Additional District Judge at Dumka from 17-6-1959 to 1-10-1959; the lower Courts were closed for the Annual Puja Vacation from 2-10-1959 to 7-11-1959, and the 8th of November, 1959 was a Sunday.

7. The next letter to which a reference is necessary to be made is Annexure X/2 to the counter-affidavit of respondent No. 2. It is dated 17-8-1959. The Registrar of the Court wrote this letter to the Chief Secretary of the Government in reply to latter's letter dated 29-5-1959 to say that there were four vacancies in the cadre of Additional District Judge — two occurring on the appointment of two Peripatetic District Judges for a period of two years and two new posts having been created for Additional District Judges. It seems in pursuance of the Government decision taken on 24-4-1959 and 5-5-1959 referred to in paragraph 7 of the counter-affidavit, a letter was written by the Government to the High Court on the 29th

May, 1959, to fill up the four vacancies. The Court suggested in their letter dated 17-8-1959 the names of four persons to be promoted to act as Additional District Judges until further orders. They were Sarvashri Achyutanand Sahay, Rash Bihari Prasad Sinha, Chandrika Prasad Sinha and Enayetur Rahman. The first two were not found fit on the earlier occasion although they were senior to the latter two. But this time, finding them fit, the Court recommended their names also for promotion. While recommending the names of Sarvashri A. N. Sahay and R. B. P. Sinha to be promoted to act as Additional District Judges in two of the vacancies, in regard to the other two vacancies, the Court's recommendation was that Shri C. P. Sinha and Shri E. Rahman be promoted to act as Additional District Judges, but for the reasons mentioned in Court's letter dated the 25th April, 1959 the posts of the Deputy Registrar of the Court and the Secretary of the Legislative Assembly held by them should be upgraded. In other words, this time the upgrading was suggested not in the leave vacancies but as against the substantive posts till they could be relieved of their special jobs. In the meantime, it was recommended, two more posts of Additional District Judges be created for that period.

8. The State Government sent their reply on 7-3-1960 to Court's letter dated 17-8-1959. Many vacancies, however, occurred during the interval on the retirement of District Judges and appointment of Additional District Judges in their places. The Registrar of the Court, therefore, wrote to the Chief Secretary of the Government on 3-3-1960 (Annexure X/5 to the counter-affidavit of respondent No. 2) even before the receipt of the Government's reply dated 7-3-1960 to their letter dated 17-8-1959, that seven vacancies had occurred on the appointment of seven Additional District Judges as District Judges and one due to retirement of one Additional District Judge between 1-12-1959 and 6-2-1960, and the ninth vacancy was caused by the appointment of Shri M. P. Verma, as he then was, as District Judge of the newly created judgship of Singhbhum, which was created on 4-2-1960. As against these nine posts, recommendations had already been made to the Government to fill five posts — three by direct recruitment from the Bar and two by promoting respondents Nos. 2 and 3, by upgrading their posts as already desired in the Court's letters dated 25-4-1959 and 17-8-1959. The Court had recommended the names of the three persons from the Bar to be appointed as Additional District Judges in their letter dated 1-10-1959. The said recommendation was in regard to the three petitioners. Out of the nine vacancies, five were thus recommended to be filled up.

In regard to the remaining four vacancies, it was stated that the Court had decided that they should also be filled up by direct re-recruitment. It may be stated here that under Rule 6 of the Rules, of the posts in the cadre of the Service two-thirds were to be filled by promotion and one-third by direct recruitment. The decision of the Court to fill up the remaining four vacancies by direct recruitment had been communicated to the Government in the Court's letter dated 10-2-1960. Even though the vacancies occur earlier, due to practical difficulties, some of which are unavoidable, the recruitment from the Bar takes a long time — sometimes 2 to 3 years. It was, therefore, stated in the letter that the Court did not think it advisable to keep those four posts vacant and proposed to fill them by promotion of Subordinate Judges for the time being as a temporary arrangement so that the work might not suffer; when direct recruitment of officers from the bar would be finalised namely, the four in respect of which yet the advertisement and other formalities had to be gone into, four of the junior officers who might be officiating as Additional District Judges would have to revert for the direct recruits if no fresh vacancies in the cadre would occur in the meantime. The names of four Subordinate Judges thus recommended for promotion were Sarvashri J. Narain (respondent No. 4), Sharda Prasad, Durga Prasad Sinha No. 1 and Bhanu Prakash Pandey. The Court also reminded the Government in their letter dated 21-3-1960 (Annexure X/6 to the counter-affidavit of respondent No. 2) referring to the Court's letter dated 3-3-1960 that although the Court's recommendation for appointment of three Additional District Judges from the Bar were made as far back as in October, 1959 in Court's letter dated 1-10-1959, Government's orders had not been received till then; the delay would very much affect the future career of the Bar Judges, meaning thereby the three petitioners whose names had already been recommended, and not the four who were to be appointed in the last four vacancies out of nine, in the matter of their seniority under Rule 16 (e) of the Rules. The Court, therefore, recommended to the Government that the appointment of the aforesaid three Bar Judges should be made earlier than the appointment of the Service Judges, namely, the four recommended in the Court's letter dated 3-3-1960, so that the interest of the Bar Judges may not be adversely affected. It appears that eventually the notification appointing the petitioners to the three posts was issued on 21-4-1960.

9. The State Government wrote to the Court on 7-3-1960 (Annexure X/3 to the counter-affidavit of respondent No. 2) in reply to the latter's letter dated 17-8-1959. The delay caused — and sometimes unavoidably in correspondence between the High Court and the State Government — at times causes some dislocation in the matter of seniority not generally amongst those who come by promotion but vis-a-vis the direct recruits as their appointment naturally takes a long time.

The Government informed the Court in their letter that Sarvashri A. N. Sahay, and R. B. P. Sinha, Subordinate Judges, had been appointed to act as Additional District Judges against the newly created two posts consequent on the amendment of the Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887. In regard to the Court's recommendation for promotion of Sarvashri C. P. Sinha and E. Rahman to act as Additional District Judges in the chain of appointment of two Peripatetic District and Sessions Judges, they were informed that Sarvashri K. P. Sinha and S. M. Hassan, retired District and Sessions Judges, however, were re-employed as Peripatetic District and Sessions Judges with effect from the 15th February and 1st February, 1960. There were other vacancies from earlier dates, for which recommendation of the Court was awaited. The Court was, therefore, requested to suggest the dates from which and the vacancies against which Sarvashri C. P. Sinha and E. Rahman were then proposed to be promoted to act as Additional District Judge so that steps for upgrading of the posts of the Deputy Registrar of the Court and the Secretary, Bihar Legislative Assembly Department, could be taken on receipt of the Court's reply.

It may be made clear here that two posts of Peripatetic District and Sessions Judges had been added to the cadre in May, 1959 but the posts could be filled up only in February, 1960 by re-employment of the two retired District and Sessions Judges. Although the Court, in substance and in effect, had already complied with the request made by the State Government in their letter dated 7-3-1960 when the former had written their letter on 3-3-1960, the formal reply to the letter dated 7-3-1960 was sent by the Court on 10-5-1960 (vide Annexure X/4 to the counter-affidavit of respondent No. 2). In this letter it was pointed out that nine vacancies had occurred in the posts of Additional District and Sessions Judge from 9-11-1959 to 6-2-1960, eight on the appointment of the Additional District Judges to the post of District Judges and one on the retirement of an Additional District Judge. In this letter, therefore, the Court stated that Shri C. P. Sinha and Shri E. Rahman should be appointed to act as officiating Additional District Judge against any two of the nine vacancies which had occurred in the cadre of the Additional District and Sessions Judges from a date with effect from which their posts were upgraded. The Court also reiterated their request made in their letter dated 17-8-1959 that two temporary ex-cadre posts of Additional District Judges may be sanctioned at an early date for a period until Sarvashri C. P. Sinha and E. Rahman continue to hold their respective posts, meaning thereby the posts of the Deputy Registrar of the Court and the Secretary, Legislative Assembly Department.

10. In this background, I shall now refer to the impugned order of the State Government contained in their letter dated 6-9-1960 (Annexure D to the writ application) to the Accountant-General, Bihar. The first paragraph of this letter reads as follows:—

"I am directed to say that the State Government have been pleased to upgrade the posts of Deputy Registrar, Patna High Court and Secretary, Bihar Legislative Assembly Secretariat held by Sarvaswari Chandrika Prasad Sinha and Enayetur Rahman respectively in the rank and scale of pay of the Additional District and Sessions Judge with effect from the 17th June, 1959 till posts are held by them."

It is manifest that the Under-Secretary to the Government, who wrote the above letter, communicated the order of the State Government to the Accountant General that they have been pleased to upgrade the two posts held by respondents Nos 2 & 3 in the rank and scale of pay of Additional District and Sessions Judge with effect from the 17th June, 1959, till posts were held by them. I may dispose of two short points here. During the course of argument, Mr Basudeva Prasad endeavoured to show that there was no order of the State Government made in accordance with the procedure prescribed by the Rules of Executive Business. In reply Mr M. G. Chagla, learned Counsel for the State, informed us that the order had been passed by the State Government after the matter was placed before, and considered by, the Council of Ministers as required by the Rules of Executive Business. But since this point was not taken in the petition, no specific reference has been made in the counter-affidavit of the State that the order had actually been passed in accordance with the Rules of Executive Business. We did not feel inclined to pursue this matter as we felt satisfied that the question of fact not having been specifically raised by the petitioners did not require any investigation. The second point which I would like to dispose of here is that it is not correct to say that the High Court had recommended the upgrading of posts held by respondents Nos. 2 and 3 for a limited period of 3 months 14 days, i.e., from 17-6-1959 to 1-10-1959. Even assuming it was possible to take this view, on the wordings of the letter dated 25-4-1959 written by the Registrar of the Court, it is abundantly clear that the recommendation made later in the subsequent letters was for upgrading the posts till they were held by respondents 2 and 3. The Government's order contained in Annexure D and extracted above is clear enough in that regard. The question as to whether it could take effect from the 17th June, 1959 will be discussed hereinafter.

11. It is undisputed that respondent No. 4 reverted to, worked on, the post of the Subordinate Judge from 2-10-1959 until he was appointed Additional District Judge in the substantive vacancy on 19-9-1960.

12. It would appear from the Supplementary Affidavit filed on behalf of the State of Bihar on 20-11-1963 that respondent No. 4 made a representation to the State Government on 10-4-1961 praying for fixation of his seniority just below Shri E. Rahman in the cadre of Additional District Judges and allowing him seniority with effect from 1-11-1959. Two other representations dated 21-10-1961 and 3-8-1961 were also filed by the said respondent No. 4. The matter remained pending before the High Court and the Government were informed of their opinion in their letter 20-8-1961. The Court recommended the rejection of the representations. The State Government finding themselves not in a position to agree with the opinion expressed by the Court wrote back on 5-8-1963 requesting the Court to reconsider the matter. The Court in their letter dated 18-1-1966 informed the Government that they did not see any reason to reconsider their previous view. The matter was again thoroughly examined by the Government and then eventually the order was made on 24-1-1968 in favour of respondent No. 4 by the State Government. A copy of this order is contained in Annexure B to the counter-affidavit of respondent No. 4 filed on 27-9-1968. It is better to quote the order of the State Government contained in the letter dated 24-1-1968 written by the Under-Secretary to the Registrar of the High Court —

"I am directed to refer to your letter No. 501 dated 18-1-1966 on the subject noted above and to say that after a careful consideration of the case of Shri Jitendra Narain at present District and Sessions Judge of Dhanbad, the State Government have been pleased to decide that Shri Narain shall rank immediately below Shri Enayetur Rahman and above Sarvaswari Madan Mohan Pd., Rameshwar Pd. Sinha and Chandra Shekhar Prasad Singh, the direct recruits from the Bar in the cadre of the Superior Judicial Service, and for this limited purpose, he will be deemed to have been officiating as Additional District and Sessions Judge with effect from 1st November, 1959.

Sri Narain may kindly be informed accordingly."

13. In order to decide various contentious questions raised in this writ application, it is first necessary to refer to certain other provisions of the Rules. Rule 4 says—

"Every post in the cadre of the service shall be filled by a person —

x                      x                      x                      x                      x

(iii) who is appointed a member of the Bihar Superior Judicial Service under R 5."

Rule 5 provides for appointment to the Service by direct recruitment or by promotion from amongst the members of the Bihar Civil Service (Judicial Branch). Rule 15 says that a member of the Service appointed by direct recruitment shall be on probation for a period of one year and shall not be confirmed unless he is found to be suitable in every respect for appointment to the Service; but promoted officers appointed against substantive vacancies in the cadre should forthwith be confirmed in the service. Then comes Rule 16 which may, for the sake of convenience, be called the fixation of seniority rule. It does not in term say who will fix or determine the seniority, it merely lays down certain rules for fixation or determination of seniority. Under clause (a) of Rule 16 seniority inter se of direct recruits shall be determined in accordance with the date of their substantive appointment to the Service, and under clause (b) seniority inter se of promoted officers shall also be determined in accordance with the dates of their substantive appointments to the Service. Clauses (c) and (d) relate to the fixation of seniority inter se of direct recruits when appointed at one time and seniority inter se of officers promoted from the Subordinate Judicial Service at one time. In this case there is no dispute, and could not be any, that respondents Nos. 2 and 3 had rightly ranked senior to respondent No. 4, in the post of the Superior Judicial Service. The question relates to the seniority of the petitioners, the three direct recruits, vis-a-vis respondents Nos. 2 and 3 who may be placed in one category and respondent No. 4 whose case, as I shall presently show, is different from that of the other two. The proviso to Rule 16 (e) says that "when a direct recruit and promoted officer are appointed on the same date, the promoted officer shall be senior to the direct recruit." This also is not the position here. We are concerned in this case with the interpretation of the main part of clause (e) of Rule 16 which reads thus:—

"Seniority of direct recruit vis-a-vis promoted officer shall be determined with reference to the dates from which they may have been allowed to officiate continuously. in posts in the cadre of the Service or in posts outside the cadre on identical time-scale of pay and of equal status and responsibility or in posts of higher scale of pay and of higher responsibility in or outside the cadre."

One of the contentious questions raised at the Bar in regard to the interpretation of clause (e) of Rule 16 is as to what is the meaning of the expression "may have been allowed to officiate continuously" occurring in the said clause. Argument on behalf of the State and respondent No. 4 was that a notional, continuous officiation in a post in the cadre of the service or outside it will give preference to the promoted officer in the matter of seniority over the direct recruit provided there were vacancies in which he could or might have been allowed to officiate continuously. I am not prepared to accept this argument. In my opinion, the expression aforesaid means actual and continuous officiation and not a fictional or notional one. The expression "may have been allowed" must mean "may have been allowed as a fact"; it cannot mean that because of the vacancies being there in the posts a subsequently promoted officer could or might have been allowed to officiate continuously earlier. Such an interpretation would lead to very anomalous, unjust and discriminatory results. As I have said above, it takes a considerable time even after the occurring of a vacancy in the post of the Service in making the appointment by direct recruitment from the Bar. By the time the appointment is finalised, the vacancy against which advertisement is made has to be and is filled up so that the work of the Courts may not suffer. Many other vacancies are likely to occur — and, as a matter of fact, occur before a member of the Bar is appointed to the service. Mr. Chagla also had to concede that such a notional or fictional officiation cannot be made available to a direct recruit merely because there were vacancies against which he could be appointed earlier. Since a direct recruit before his actual appointment was not holding any post under the Government, it is impossible to take the view that he could have been allowed to officiate continuously in a post in the cadre of the Service or outside it. The position of a man in the Subordinate Judicial Service is no better. He cannot be deemed to have officiated continuously in a higher post of Additional District Judge when actually he did work as a Subordinate Judge. He could not be empowered retrospectively to act as an Additional District Judge when, as a matter of fact, he acted as a Subordinate Judge. To give seniority to a promoted officer on the basis of a fictional or notional officiation will cause undue and patent hardship to a direct recruit. If at the time of his appointment there were a number of vacancies in the posts of the Service, all promoted officers — promoted after him — can take advantage of this fictional officiation and rank above him. On this basis not only respondent No. 4 but also the other three officers whose names were recommended for promotion in the letter of the High Court dated 3-3-1960 could and should have been given seniority over the petitioners. This by itself explains the absurdity in the interpretation sought to be put on behalf of respondents 1 and 4 to clause (e) of Rule 16.

It may bear repetition to say that the petitioners applied for appointment against vacancies which occurred by 31st of January, 1959. They were appointed against three of the vacancies out of nine which had occurred from November, 1959 to February, 1960. And if they are to be pushed down by the promoted officers appointed after them on the basis of the fictional or notional officiation, which as argued on behalf of respondent Nos. 1 and 4, can be made available only to the promoted officers and not to others, it will be, to my mind, grossly unjust and discriminatory to do so. Only under one circumstance a promoted officer can take advantage of his officiation in the post earlier than his substantive appointment and that is this. If he has been allowed to officiate in a leave vacancy and in continuation of such officiation, which also has the advantage of the note appended to the rule, namely,—

“A period of leave or the annual vacation of the Civil Courts will not be treated as an interruption for the purpose of this sub-rule”, he is promoted to the substantive post, he will rank senior to the direct recruit appointed before the substantive appointment of the promoted officer but after he started officiating in the leave vacancy. To give more advantage than this, on the principle of a vacancy being there, to a promoted officer will be very anomalous. Respondent No. 4 officiated in a leave vacancy from 17-6-1959. If he could have been appointed to the substantive post on and from 9-11-1959, he could have ranked senior to any of the direct recruits who could have come in between the dates — 17th of June and 9th of November, 1959. But when he was appointed substantively to the post on 19th of September, 1960, it is difficult to fill up the long gap of about a year by this fictional or notional method as has been done by respondent no. 1 in his case. Mr. Chagla contended that the case of respondent No. 4 is not different from that of respondents 2 and 3.

14. The case of respondents 2 and 3, however, stands on a different footing. They were on special posts of Deputy Registrar of the High Court and Secretary of the Legislative Assembly. In the Governmental administration, taking recourse of the upgrading of posts, if it can be so done without doing violence to any other law or principle, is so common that it can almost be taken to be a settled practice or rule to do so. In case of respondents 2 and 3, the State Government were pleased to upgrade the posts which they were holding from the 17th of June, 1959 till the posts were held by them. The result of the upgrading of the posts was that they were allowed actually to officiate continuously in the upgraded posts either in the cadre of the Service or in posts outside the cadre on identical time-scale of pay and of equal status and responsibility within the meaning of Clause (e) of Rule 16 of the Rules. The upgrading of a post stands on a footing quite obviously different from allowing fictional or notional officiation to a promoted officer as in the case of respondent no. 4.

15. I shall now consider what is the effect of the upgrading of the two posts held by respondents 2 and 3. They were performing duties in special posts. Although they had become due for promotion to the Superior Judicial Service, the High Court as well as the Legislative Department felt the necessity of retaining their services. They were, therefore, not relieved to take their appointment in due course to the Service. Recommendations were made by the High Court for upgrading the two posts as early as in April and August, 1959. Even when clear substantive vacancies occurred, the same demand for upgrading their posts was repeated in the Court's letter dated 3-3-1960. The order of the State Government, however, was not issued prior to 6-9-1960. When issued, it, in terms, upgraded the posts held by respondents 2 and 3 in the rank and scale of pay of Additional District and Sessions Judge. Under sub-rule (2) of Rule 3 the State Government have the power, from time to time, after consultation with the High Court, to amend the Schedule appended to the Rules, fixing the strength of the Service and the number and character of posts. To my mind, the effect of the upgrading of the posts was to amend the Schedule appended to the Rules and include in it temporarily with effect from the 17th June, 1959 the posts of the Deputy Registrar and the Secretary of the Legislative Assembly till those posts were held by Respondents 2 and 3. That the Schedule could be amended retrospectively will be borne out by the decision of the Supreme Court in B. S. Vadera v. Union of India, AIR 1969 SC 118. In that case, the Indian Railway Establishment Code had been issued by the President in exercise of the powers vested in him by the proviso to Article 309 of the Constitution. Rule 157 of the Code conferred full powers on the Railway Board to make rules of a general application to non-gazetted railway servants under their control. In exercise of the said power, the scheme (annexure 4 to the writ application before the Supreme Court) was actually framed on February 5, 1957 and the amended scheme (annexure 7) was framed on March 30, 1963. Both of them were made retrospectively effective from December 1, 1954, the date of the initial constitution of the Service under consideration there. Considering the question whether the Railway Board had, while acting under Rule 157, power to make a rule—in that case the schemes—giving effect from an anterior date, the Court by a unanimous judgment held that the Board had such power, because in absence of an Act of an appropriate Legislature under the main part of Article 309 the rule-making authority under the proviso has power to make a rule both prospectively and retrospectively. Mr. Basudeva Prasad argued that the effect of the upgrading of the posts held by respondents 2 and 3 was to amend the Schedule appended to the Rules. If it was so, as I am inclined to think, it was, it could very well be done retrospectively.

16. Mr. Basudeva Prasad also contended that even though the Rules made under the proviso to Article 309 of the Constitution could be amended retrospectively, as held by the Supreme Court in B. S. Vadera's case, AIR 1969 SC 118 approving the Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court in Ram Autar Pandey v. State of U. P., AIR 1962 All 328, the Government has no power to make changes in the service conditions of their personnel with retrospective effect by mere executive instructions, as held by the Punjab High Court in Suresh Kumar v. Union of India, AIR 1969 Punj and Har 257. The power to amend the rule retrospectively was noticed in paragraph 19 of that judgment also not only with reference to the Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court but also the Full Bench decisions of the Kerala High Court in C. K. Madhvan Nair v. Registrar, High Court of Kerala, AIR 1968 Ker 17 and V. Hari Haran Pillai v. State of Kerala, AIR 1968 Ker 42. In Suresh Kumar's case, AIR 1969 Punj and Har 257 however, the seniority list of the lower division clerks prepared and approved earlier according to Government executive instructions was changed according to new instructions issued subsequently for fixing seniority amongst lower division clerks. As a result of this, the appellants before the Court were reverted and ranked lower in the scale. In such a situation, it was held on the facts of that case that—

“Rights which have already accrued to a Government servant and the benefits which he might already have enjoyed under or by virtue of a pre-existing executive instruction or administrative direction cannot be taken away with retrospective effect by another executive instruction or a mere administrative direction.”

The position in the instant case is quite different. The posts held by respondents nos. 2 and 3 could be upgraded, as, for the reasons already stated, they were. It was not a question of changing the seniority of the petitioners by executive instruction or mere administrative direction. According to Rule 16 (e) of the Rules the said two respondents having officiated continuously in the upgraded posts had to rank senior to the petitioners. The unreported decision of the Supreme Court in the Income Tax Officer v. M. C. Ponnose, Civil Appeals Nos. 942 and 943 of 1966, D/- 28-7-1969 = (AIR 1970 SC 385) a copy of which was given to us, can also be of no avail to the petitioners as against respondents 2 and 3. Distinguishing B. S. Vadra's case, it was held that the notification dated August 14, 1963 could not be a retrospective operation invest the Tahsildar with the powers of a Tax Recovery Officer from April 1, 1962 under Section 2 (44) of the Income-tax Act, 1961 read with sub-rule (2) of Rule 7 of the Income-tax (Certificate Proceedings) Rules 1962. There was no question of investing respondents 2 and 3 with any new or fresh power by the upgrading of the posts. In case of respondent no. 4, however, the unreported decision of the Supreme Court can be pressed in aid of the petitioners. For the purpose of seniority only he could not be deemed to have officiated in the post of an Additional District Judge when actually he did not officiate. The powers and the jurisdiction of the Additional District and Sessions Judge being higher than those of a Subordinate Judge and Assistant Sessions Judge could not obviously be conferred upon respondent no. 4 with retrospective effect.

17. Learned Counsel for the petitioners, however, urged that the Schedule could not be amended without publication of a notification in the official Gazette nor could it stand amended unless the order of the State Government fulfilled the requirement of Article 166 of the Constitution. He also submitted that without a communication of the order to the persons affected, it was not effective. I have no difficulty in rejecting all these arguments. Rule 3 (2) which empowers the State Government to amend the Schedule only lays down that they have to do it after consultation with the High Court which undoubtedly in this case was made, rather it was on the insistence of the High Court that the posts were upgraded. It does not require that the amendment of the Schedule has to be published in the Gazette. Nor any other rule was brought to our notice making it incumbent upon the State Government to publish the amendment of the Schedule in a Gazette. Ordinarily and generally when the sanctioned strength of the Service will be increased or decreased, publication in the official Gazette may be made. But on the special facts of a particular case if, for a particular officer, in the exigency of the situation a particular post has got to be upgraded, the effect of which is to temporarily add that post to the sanctioned strength of the Service, publication in the Gazette is not necessary. Nor the order of upgrading the post was necessary to be communicated to the petitioners as they cannot be said to be the persons affected by the order, in the sense it was so held by Mudholkar, J., in the case of Bachhittar Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1963 SC 395 delivering the judgment on behalf of the Court. Nor, in my opinion, it is correct to say, as was argued by the learned Counsel for the petitioners, on the basis of the said authority, that the order has to be expressed in the name of the Governor as required by Cl. (1) of Article 166, otherwise it will be an invalid order. Relying upon earlier decisions of the Court in D. M. Pangurkar v. State of Bombay, AIR 1952 SC 181, State of Bombay v. Purushottam Jog Naik, AIR 1952 SC 317 and Ghaio Mall and Sons v. State of Delhi, AIR 1959 SC 65 as also on reference to Bachhittar Singh's case, AIR 1963 SC 395 it has been pointed out in R. Chitralekha v. State of Mysore, AIR 1964 SC 1823 in the majority judgment of the Court delivered by Subba Rao, J., as he then was, that directory and not mandatory in character and, if they are not complied with it can be established as a question of fact that the impugned order was issued in fact by the State or the Governor."

In the instant case such a fact having not been challenged was not necessary to be investigated. I may also add that the order was not only communicated to the Accountant General, Bihar, but also copies of the letter dated 6-9-1960 (annexure D to the writ application), as that annexure itself shows, were forwarded to the Registrar, High Court, with reference to his letter No 8177 dated the 17th August, 1959, i. e., annexure X/2 to the counter-affidavit of respondents no. 2, as well as to the other departments concerned. It was so done, as annexure D shows, "by the order of the Governor of Bihar". In my opinion, therefore, reading annexure D as a whole, it is possible to take the view that requirement of Article 166 had been substantially complied with. The order contained in annexure D by itself was not fixing any seniority to the prejudice of the petitioners. The order, therefore, was not necessary to be communicated to them. On the basis of the order and in pursuance of it, when seniority list (annexure E) was prepared, it must have been duly published in the Civil list and this must be deemed to have been communicated to the petitioners. Every order of upgrading of a post or appointment of an officer to the Service either by direct recruitment or by promotion need not be communicated to other officers concerned either appointed before or after.

18. Mr. Basudeva Prasad, in support of his submission that the order of upgrading the posts held by respondents 2 and 3 was necessary to be published in the Gazette, placed reliance upon the cases of Johnson v. Sargant, (1918) 1 KB 101; Shaloor v. Emperor, AIR 1944 Nag 40 and Babulal v. King Emperor, AIR 1915 Nag 218 which were all followed in Harla v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1951 SC 467. The point decided in all these cases is very different and based upon a principle which has no resemblance to the question at issue in this case, Bose, J., delivering the judgment of the Court, observed in Harla's case, AIR 1951 SC 467 at p 468 (1) —

"In the absence of any special law or custom, we are of opinion that it would be against the principles of natural justice to permit the subjects of a State to be punished or penalised by laws of which they had no knowledge and of which they could not even with the exercise of reasonable diligence have acquired any knowledge. Natural justice requires that before a law can become operative it must be promulgated or published."

To equate the amendment of the Schedule with a penal law is not justified either on principle or on the language of the Rules.

19. If I am right in my view that the result of the upgradation of the two posts held by respondents 2 and 3 was to temporarily add those posts in the Schedule appended to the Rules, it is manifest that the said respondents were allowed to officiate continuously in the upgraded posts of the officers appointed to the Superior Judicial Service because they were actually working in those posts from long before the 17th of June, 1959. No fresh notification appointing them to the Service was necessary as was argued on behalf of the petitioners. Learned Counsel on their behalf during the course of argument at one time strenuously urged that respondents 2 and 3 were never appointed to the Service. It was difficult — rather impossible to accept such an argument when, as a matter of fact, after reversion to the general list both the respondents have held the posts of District and Sessions Judge for a number of years. If the view I have expressed above in regard to the amendment of the Schedule appended to the Rules be taken to be doubtful or not correct, continuous officiation of respondents 2 and 3 can also be supported for the purpose of clause (e) of Rule 16 of the Rules "in posts outside the cadre on identical time-scale of pay and of equal status and responsibility." The effect of the upgradation of the two posts was that the posts remaining outside the cadre were manned by respondents 2 and 3 and on identical time-scale of pay and of equal rank or status and consequently of equal responsibility. The term 'rank' or 'status' will be found used in the correspondence of the High Court resulting eventually in the order of the State Government contained in Annexure D to the writ application. Learned Counsel for the petitioners drew our attention to the statement of respondent no. 2 in paragraph 8 of his counter-affidavit wherein he said—

"The publication of this upgrading order of Government in the Gazette was not necessary under any rule or law. Since the deponents and opposite party nos. 2 were not to exercise any new power or to do any work in these upgraded posts which they had not been exercising or doing from before the 17th June, 1959, there was no question of their fresh appointments to these upgraded posts or its publication in the Gazette."

He submitted that the statement aforesaid shows that the posts were not of equal status and responsibility, for the purpose of pay the mere making them of identical time-scale was not sufficient to confer seniority on respondents 2 and 3 above the petitioners as the use of the word 'and' shows that the posts were also required to be of equal status and responsibility. The very fact of upgrading the posts in the rank and scale of pay of the Additional District and Sessions Judge made the posts as those of identical time-scale of pay and of equal status and responsibility. The statement of respondent

no. 2 in paragraph 8 of his counter-affidavit merely refers to the nature of the work which respondents 2 and 3 were doing before upgrading of the posts. While doing the same work they were found fit for being appointed as Additional District and Sessions Judge. They could be allowed to serve on the post by raising its status. The effect of the upgrading, therefore, was to allow them to officiate continuously in posts of higher grade which on their upgrading assumed the status and responsibility of that of the post of an Additional District Judge.

20. One question, however, deserves consideration in connection with the alternative view which I have expressed above with reference to the latter part of Cl. (e) of R. 16 of the Rules and that is this. Could respondents 2 and 3 be allowed, as they were, to officiate continuously in equivalent posts outside the cadre from a date, i. e., 17th of June, 1959 if there were no vacancies in the cadre posts? There seems to be some confusion in this regard as to when a post in the cadre will be deemed to be vacant. Can a post of an Additional District and Sessions Judge be held to be vacant on the retirement of a District and Sessions Judge? Arguments were advanced at the Bar even on this footing as also on the other basis that the post of an Additional District and Sessions Judge will be vacant only when an officer of that grade in that post is appointed to act as District and Sessions Judge on the retirement of such an officer. Personally speaking, I consider the latter view to be more sound and reasonable. Apart from the strength of Service, the two kinds of posts, namely, of District and Sessions Judge cannot be of the same grade for all purposes. It is evident that the post of an Additional District and Sessions Judge, although not subordinate to, is of a grade lower than, that of a District and Sessions Judge. It is in that context that the word 'promotion' occurring in Article 233 of the Constitution will be intelligible. In the same cadre advancement of an officer from the post of an Additional District Judge to that of a District Judge will also be a promotion. So viewed, in my opinion, the vacancy in the cadre for appointment to the post of an Additional District Judge does not occur merely on the retirement of a District Judge, it occurs only when on such retirement an Additional District Judge is promoted and made to act as a District Judge. The vacancy in the post of a District Judge, to my mind, cannot be equated with a vacancy in the post of an Additional District Judge. It would thus be noticed that the first vacancy out of the nine vacancies which occurred in November, 1959 to February, 1960 started to occur on 9-11-1959 when Mr. M. P. Verma, as he then was, was allowed to officiate as a District Judge, as correctly stated in Court's letter dated 10-5-1960 (annexure X/4 to the counter-affidavit of respondent no. 2). Similar is the statement in

Court's letter dated 3/3/1960 (annexure X/5) with only this difference that the first vacancy is said to have occurred on 1-12-1959 in that letter on appointment of Shri Jugal Kishore Prasad as a District Judge with effect from that date, while the ninth and the last one was stated to have been caused on the appointment of Mr. M. P. Verma as District Judge of newly created judgship of Singhbhum. It appears, however, that as a matter of fact before Mr. M. P. Verma was transferred as District Judge of the newly created judgship of Singhbhum to take over charge there on 4-2-1960, he was appointed as District Judge of some other district (of Monghyr as I was informed) with effect from 9-11-1959, and that is the reason that the last item of the ninth vacancy mentioned in annexure X/5 has become the first item of the same nine vacancies mentioned in annexure X/4. The Court, it seems, have always proceeded—and if I may say so—rightly in the matter of treating the vacancy in the post of Additional District Judges only when actually such a vacancy has occurred on the appointment of an officer working in that Post as District Judge. The view of the State Government as evidenced in their impugned order dated 24-1-1968 contained in annexure B to the counter-affidavit of respondent no. 4 that the vacancy occurred on 1-11-1959 on the retirement of Mr. Anant Singh, as he then was, from the post of a District Judge does not seem to me to be correct. If it were possible to take such a view then it could be said in favour of respondents 2 and 3 that on the sanction of the two posts of Peripatetic District and Sessions Judge in May, 1959 which posts remained vacant all throughout until they were filled up in February, 1960 by two retired District Judges, two posts in the cadre were vacant and when they were allowed to officiate continuously in equivalent posts outside the cadre on and from the 17th June, 1959, they were allowed to do so at a time when two cadre posts were vacant. But I do not feel persuaded to subscribe to such a view. In my opinion no post of Additional District Judge can be said to be vacant in the cadre which could be filled by respondents 2 and 3 on 17-6-1959 as the two additional posts which were sanctioned in view of the amendment of the Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887 were allowed to be filled up by two other officers, namely, Sarvashri A. N. Sahay and R. B. P. Sinha. The other posts which fell vacant in the grade of Additional District Judge in the cadre fell vacant only from 9-11-1959 onwards. Nine such posts fell vacant from that date upto 6-2-1960. And, that seems to be the reason that the Court finally, in their letter dated 3-3-1960, as reiterated in their letter dated 10-5-1960, suggested to fill up two out of the nine posts by the upgrading of the two special posts held by respondents 2 and 3, as recommended earlier in the two

Court's letter dated 25-4-1959 and 17-8-1959 and three by the appointment of direct recruits as recommended in Court's letter dated 1-10-1959. Even if it be assumed that the upgrading of the posts from June 17, 1959 was not quite regular, there is no difficulty in taking the view in favour of respondents 2 and 3 that the upgrading of the special posts held by them was regular and perfectly justified from 9-11-1959 in the case of respondent no. 2 and 1-12-1959 in the case of respondent no. 3, as the other three posts which fell vacant on 1-12-1959, 11-12-1959 and 16-12-1959 will be deemed to have been filled up by appointment of the three petitioners on 21-4-1960. Even on taking a technical view of the matter, therefore, it would be manifest that in any event respondents 2 and 3 would be senior to the petitioners.

21. The case of respondent no. 4, however, stands on a different footing. His name along with other three officers was recommended for appointment in the substantive vacancies which occurred between 11-1-1960 and 6-2-1960 for the first time in the Court's letter dated 3-3-1960. Even that recommendation was conditional, as, on the basis of two-third and one-third quota, the Court, on accounting, had decided that the said four posts were eligible to be filled up by direct recruits but since that would take time, the four vacancies were recommended to be filled up for the time being from Subordinate Judicial Service. As a matter of fact the direct recruits to those four posts, as usual, came much later. Respondent no. 4 was appointed substantively to the post of Additional District Judge on 19-9-1969, and in no view of the matter, he could be given a fictional seniority by the State Government from 1-11-1959 as done by them in their impugned order dated 24-1-1968. There could be no question of upgrading the post of a Subordinate Judge to that of an Additional District Judge. Under the Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887, the powers and the pecuniary jurisdiction of the two courts are evidently different. Upgrading of a post of a Subordinate Judge or allowing respondent no. 4 to officiate continuously in that post deeming it to be a post of an Additional District Judge was not possible for obvious reasons. I fail to understand then how it was possible for the State Government to say in their letter dated 24-1-1968 (annexure B to the counter-affidavit of respondent no. 4) that the State Government had been pleased to decide that respondent no. 4 would rank below respondents 2 and 3 but above the petitioners and "for this limited purpose, he will be deemed to have been officiating as Additional District and Sessions Judge with effect from 1st November, 1959". For the reasons already given, such a deeming officiation for the purpose of determination of seniority within the meaning of Clause (e) of Rule 16 of the Rules was neither legitimate nor permissible under the Rules. Viewed from a practical and equitable aspect, one may appreciate the grievance of respondent no. 4—as I do—that having joined the Judicial Service on the same day on which respondents nos. 2 and 3 joined and even though vacancies did occur between November, 1959 and 1960 to one of which he could be appointed, as ultimately was done in September, 1960, by appointment of the three direct recruits, he has to part company in the matter of seniority from respondents 2 and 3 and give way to the petitioners. The sympathy for respondent no. 4 is watered down when the same, for the reasons as adverted to by me above, is extended to the petitioners. They had applied to be appointed at a time when even respondents 2 and 3 were not eligible to be promoted in any substantive vacancy of the Superior Judicial Service, yet their actual appointment came a year later and they had to lose seniority to many including respondents 2 and 3 for the reasons already stated. The said two respondents being in special posts could legitimately be given seniority over the petitioners by the upgrading of those posts from a back date.

It is a matter of sheer chance which one may characterise as misfortune, that respondent no. 4 could not be given the same advantage as at the time when his promotion became due to the substantive post, he was not working in any special post. Whenever direct recruits are appointed, they always interpose for the purpose of seniority between two promoted officers whose seniority before their promotion has been in juxtaposition, merely by the fact of the direct recruits being appointed between the appointments of the said two promoted officers. After all, in service such chances or occasions are unavoidable and one has to reconcile to such a situation as occurred in the case of respondent No. 4. However, sympathetic I may feel for him, I have not been able to persuade myself to hold that the decision of the State Government in regard to his seniority over the petitioners is legal or valid. On the facts and in the circumstances of the case, I have got to hold that the order of the State Government dated 24-1-1968 fixing the seniority of respondent no. 4 over the petitioners is not only illegal but also ultra vires as I shall show hereinafter.

22. In the view I have expressed on merits in regard to the case of respondents 2 and 3 as against the petitioners, it is not necessary to go into the question as to whether mere determination of seniority one way or the other violates Article 16 of the Constitution. Nor is it essential, in regard to the impugned order determining the seniority of respondent no. 4 for the purposes of the writ application under Article 226 of the Constitution, to find any violation of fundamental right.

23. I have no difficulty in rejecting the ingenious argument of Mr. Basudeva Prasad that since the matter of promotion of a Subordinate Judge is included in the power and control of the High Court under Article 235 of the Constitution, his promotion to the higher rank of Additional District Judge is within the exclusive control of the High Court and the Governor cannot make appointment by promotion to the post of Additional District Judge under Article 233 of the Constitution. It is well settled by several decisions of the Supreme Court that on a harmonious construction of Articles 233 and 235 appointment of persons to be and the posting—meaning the first posting on such appointment and promotion of District Judges which expression includes Additional District Judges in any State is within the power of the Governor who has to exercise that power in consultation with the High Court. Apart from the three matters aforesaid, the entire control over district courts or courts subordinate thereto vests in the High Court. Clause (1) read with Clause (2) of Art. 233 clearly suggests that appointment to the Superior Judicial Service can be from two sources, namely, Subordinate Judicial Service, as held by the Supreme Court in Chandra Mohan v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1966 SC 1987, and the Bar as envisaged by the second clause. When S. K. Das, J. speaking for the Court in Rameshwar Dayal v. State of Punjab, AIR 1961 SC 816 said—

“Article 233 is a self-contained provision regarding the appointment of District Judges. As to a person who is already in the service of the Union or of the State, no special qualifications are laid down and under Cl. (1) the Governor can appoint such a person as a District Judge in consultation with the relevant High Court. As to a person not already in service, a qualification is laid down in Clause (2) and all that is required is that he should be an advocate or pleader of seven years’ standing,” and when Subba Rao, C. J., said in Chandra Mohan's case, AIR 1966 SC 1987—

“There are two sources of recruitment namely (i) service of the Union or of the State and (ii) members of the Bar.”, under Article 233 of the Constitution, nobody seems to have thought of suggesting that appointment under Article 233 could be from one source only, namely the Bar and the promoted officers could be taken only by the High Court in exercise of their power under Article 235. This argument is too obviously wrong to merit any detailed discussion. He built up the whole argument on the footing of one sentence occurring in column 2 at page 1708 in the decision of the Supreme Court in the High Court, Calcutta v. Amal Kumar Roy, AIR 1962 SC 1701, wherein the words are:

“It is, therefore, clear that after the coming into force of the Constitution, the High Court is the authority which has the power of promotion in respect of persons belonging to the State Judicial Service, holding any post inferior to that of a District Judge.”

The word ‘promotion’ simpliciter in the same cadre has also got a meaning in the sense of conferment of more powers or promotion to the next grade or the like. Promotion to a higher rank strictly speaking is an appointment it is appointment by promotion.

24. Learned Counsel for the petitioners, however, was on a firm ground when he submitted with reference to the case of respondent no. 4 that the power to determine seniority vests in the High Court under Article 235, Government had no such power. Mr. Chagla combated this point strenuously.

25. In the State of West Bengal v. Nripendra Nath Bagchi, AIR 1966 SC 447 Hidayatullah, J., as he then was held that “the control which is vested in the High Court is a complete control subject only to the power of the Governor in the matter of appointment (including dismissal and removal) and posting and promotion of District Judges”. Mr. Chagla submitted that determination of seniority of an officer is a term of contract of service or is a condition of service and hence it is outside ‘control’ envisaged by Article 235 of the Constitution because the conditions of service are to be determined by the Governor in the case of District Judge and in the case of others subordinate to him by the Governor in accordance with rules made by him in that behalf after consultation with the State Public Service Commission, and with the High Court. It is true that the fixation of seniority rule being a part of the Rules governs the conditions of service of the Superior Judicial Officers. So far Mr. Chagla is correct. But who is to fix or determine the seniority in accordance with the Rules? That power obviously is not covered under Article 233 but is inherent in the power of control envisaged by Article 235. If ‘control’ could include disciplinary control as held in Nripendra Nath Bagchi's case, AIR 1966 SC 447 by the Supreme Court after rejecting a similar argument, it is not correct to say that the control vesting in the High Court under Article 235 of the Constitution will not have within its sweep or embrace the power to fix or determine seniority. The High Court, however, will have to do so in accordance with the Rules framed by the Governor under the proviso to Article 309 of the Constitution.

26. In State of Assam v. Ranga Muhammad, AIR 1967 SC 903 Hidayatullah, J., as he then was, had again the occasion to consider the ambit of the power of the High Court under Article 235 of the Constitution vis-a-vis the power of the Governor under Article 233. Giving a restricted meaning to the word ‘posting’ occurring in Article 233, it was held that it could not include 'transfer' the word means "the assignment of an appointee or promotee to a position in the cadre of District Judges". The power of transfer, even though it can be said to be related to the contract or condition of service, was held to vest in the High Court and not in the Government. Learned Counsel on the basis of the decision of the Supreme Court in State of Orissa v. Sudhansu Sekhar Misra, AIR 1968 SC 647, also submitted that the strength of the ratio of the decisions of Hidayatullah, J., in the two cases referred to above has been diluted later by that Court. In my opinion if I may say so with respect nothing of the kind has been done by Hegde J., in the Orissa case. That the power of the Governor under Art 233 is in regard to three matters only — appointment, posting and promotion of District Judges, and the control not only over the subordinate judiciary but also upon members of the Superior Judicial Service extends over other matters is firmly established by the two decisions of the Supreme Court. But the said power, according to the decision of the Supreme Court in Orissa case, could not be exercised so as to encroach upon, or interfere with the power of the Government in their exclusive domain. In exercise of the power of transfer of a superior judicial officer, the High Court could not foist any officer on the Government to work in the Secretariat.

27. Learned Counsel for the State has cited a Full Bench decision of Kerala High Court in N. Srinivasan v. State of Kerala, AIR 1968 Ker 158 and submitted that determination of seniority comes within the power of the Government as it is a condition of service of the officer concerned. Raman Navar, J., giving the leading judgment on behalf of the Bench, said at p. 161 (Col. 2), to which our attention was drawn by the learned Counsel, that "the power to regulate such conditions conferred by Article 309 is altogether untrammelled by anything in Article 233 or 231". Undoubtedly it would be so. In that case the question was of fixing the age of superannuation and in that connection it was further said that "the tenure of a civil servant is undoubtedly a condition of his service". To fix the age of superannuation, therefore, would be within the power of the Governor.

28. Learned Counsel for the State pointed out that the State Legislature had plenary powers to enact laws under items 3 and 41 of List II of the Seventh Schedule appended to the Constitution, the former being in matters relating to administration of justice, constitution and organisation of courts except the Supreme Court and the High Court and the latter for State Public Services. He, therefore, submitted that under Article 162 of the Constitution the executive power of the State Government being co-extensive with the legislative power, will include the power to determine the seniority of a judicial officer. The argument so baldly put, if accepted, would make the provisions of Article 233 nugatory. All the powers of control over all kinds of courts and officers presiding over them shall be the executive power of the State, High Court will have no power. But it is to be pointed out that Article 162 is subject to the other provisions of the Constitution and is, therefore, subject to the power of the High Court vested in them under Article 235.

29. Mr. Chagla further submitted that any matter which entails financial expenditure or liability must come within the power of the Government and since determination of seniority involves such a matter, it cannot but be within the power of the State Government. The financial aspect of the matter is important when appointments are made either by promotion from the Subordinate Judicial Service or by direct recruitment. Extra financial burden is cast upon the State when new posts are added to the existing cadre either permanently or temporarily or when posts held by judicial officers are upgraded. But once a decision is taken in regard to the matter of appointment, addition to the strength of the cadre or upgrading of a post, which undoubtedly has to be taken by the Government, their power is exhausted. The fixation or determination of seniority of the officers thereafter does not involve any question of finance and does not entail any financial expenditure. Determination of seniority according to the Rules governing the service conditions is a matter which comes in the general control of the courts and the officers.

30. The next contention put forward on behalf of the State is that the word 'posting' in Article 233 includes within its ambit, and means, fixation of the place of the person posted in the cadre. I am unable to accept this argument as sound. As already stated, 'posting' means assignment of job and in common parlance it means giving of a post to a person appointed and the place of first posting, it cannot mean a place in the graduation list which has got to be determined in accordance with the Rules. In the light of the several decisions of the Supreme Court, I have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that it is within the exclusive power of the High Court on their administrative side under Article 235 of the Constitution to determine the seniority of a judicial officer including a person belonging to the Superior Judicial Service. It is conceded at the Bar that respondent no. 4 had no right of appeal from the decision of the High Court under the law regulating the conditions of his service, even assuming that a right of appeal to the State Government could be granted from the decision of the High Court taken on their administrative side, although I must hasten to say that in the set up of our present Constitution it seems doubtful whether the State Government can be considered to be an authority superior to the High Court in matters where the latter have got exclusive power. The order of the State Government dated 24-1-1968 contained in annexure B to the counter-affidavit of respondent no. 4 is ultra vires also as the State Government had no power to decide the seniority as against the decision of the High Court, which decision was communicated to the State Government twice when the High Court recommended for rejection of the representation of respondent no. 4. It is, however, obvious that on this ground also the petitioners will not be entitled to any relief as against respondents nos. 2 and 3. It would appear from the letter of the Registrar of the High Court dated 20-8-1964 to the Chief Secretary to the Government of Bihar, a copy of which is annexure X to the counter-affidavit of respondent no. 2 that the High Court had communicated their decision and view while forwarding the representation of the petitioners to the Government that there was no ground made out for placing them above respondents nos. 2 and 3 in the gradation list.

31. Lastly, Mr. Chagla endeavoured to bring the case of respondent no. 4 within an omnibus rule which he characterised as a 'hardship rule' framed by the Governor by issuing a notification dated 28th of November, 1956 under the proviso to Article 309 of the Constitution. The said rule reads as follows:

"Where the State Government are satisfied that the operation of any rule regulating the conditions of service of State Government servants, or any class of such Government servants, causes undue hardship in any particular case, they may by order dispense with or relax the requirements of that rule to such an extent and subject to such conditions as they may consider necessary for dealing with the case in a just and equitable manner."

I am of the opinion that if the power to determine seniority vests in the High Court under Article 235 of the Constitution, it is not within the power of the State Government to take recourse to the rule aforesaid and upset the decision of the High Court. What the Government cannot do directly, they cannot do indirectly. Further, it seems to me that it is not open to the State Government in exercise of their power under the above rule to dispense with or relax the requirements of Rule 16 (e) of the Rules so as to cause prejudice and affect the civil rights of other officers which they acquired under that rule. I may also add that the facts which I have stated above with reference to the cases of the parties can never lead to the conclusion that they caused undue hardship in the particular case of respondent no. 4 so as to justify dealing with his case only in a manner different from others. Such a hardship as was caused to respondent no. 4 cannot be said to be undue. It just occurs in many cases as it did occur in the case even of the petitioners as also of the other three officers who were recommended for promotion with respondent no. 4 in the letter of the High Court dated 3-3-1960. It is just a hardship which comes in the very nature of things involved in the matter of service.

32. For the reasons stated above, I hold that the order of the State Government dated 6-9-1960 contained in annexure D and the seniority list, a copy of which is annexure E to the writ application, cannot be quashed. The petitioners are entitled to no relief as against respondents nos. 2 and 3. They are however, entitled to relief against respondent No. 4. The order of the State Government, respondent no. 1 contained in their letter dated 24-1-1968, a copy of which is annexure B to the counter-affidavit of respondent no. 4 is quashed by grant of a writ of certiorari, as it related to the determination of the seniority of respondent no. 4 vis-a-vis the petitioners. A writ of mandamus would issue against the State Government, respondent no. 1 directing them not to give effect to the said order dated 24-1-1968. The application is, accordingly, allowed to the extent indicated above but in the circumstances I shall make no order as to cost.

MISRA, C. J.:— 33. I agree. I may, however, add that the practice followed that on retirement of a District Judge a vacancy occurs in the cadre of Superior Judicial Service and that it may be filled up by recruitment in any of the modes provided in R. 5 of the Bihar Superior Judicial Service Rules, 1946, is correct. There is no difference between the post of an Additional District Judge and the District Judge except in the time scale of pay as provided in Rule 7. Barring this difference, the cadre is the same as is provided in Rule 2 which says — "In these rules, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context, 'cadre' means the cadre of the Bihar Superior Judicial Service." and Rule 4 provides for the manner in which the post shall be filled up and Rule 5 states further that "Appointments to the Bihar Superior Judicial Service, which shall, in the first instance, ordinarily be to the post of Additional District and Sessions Judge, shall be made by the Governor in consultation with the High Court—". Thus, though an Additional District Judge becomes a District Judge only when the High Court is satisfied about his fitness for such appointment and the Government accept their recommendation, yet since the cadre is one, viz., Bihar Superior Judicial Service, as soon as a District Judge retires, a vacancy must be held to occur in the cadre.

34. Allied to this question is another consideration which is that when a post not borne on the cadre of Service is upgraded in the interest of an officer who would be promoted to the cadre but who is serving under the Government on a different post, upgradation is the method adopted so that the officer may continue on the post outside the cadre without having to suffer any loss in emoluments or otherwise. This does not necessarily mean that such upgradation amounts to addition of that post to a cadre and thus amendment of the Schedule in terms of Rule 3. This is done as a matter of departmental exigency and the Government have ample power to take recourse to this method by creating an ex-cadre post in which category alone such upgraded post can be fitted. In that view of the matter, it will not be necessary to take recourse to any formality by way of a gazette notification etc. My learned brother, however, has held that even if it were treated as temporary addition to the cadre strength, no formalities of a gazette notification etc. would be necessary. It is a proposition in which I concur:

G. N. PRASAD, J.:— 35. I agree, for the reasons set out at length by my learned brother Untwalla, J., that respondent No. 4 has no lawful claim to seniority over the petitioners who, in their turn, have no lawful claim to seniority over respondents nos. 2 and 3. I, however, agree with my Lord, the Chief Justice, that the upgradation of the posts of the Deputy Registrar of the Patna High Court and the Secretary of the Bihar Legislative Assembly made in terms of the Government Order dated the 6th September, 1960 (Annexure 'D' to the writ application) did not have the effect of amendment of the Schedule envisaged in Rule 3 of the Bihar Superior Judicial Service Rules, 1946. It had only the effect of rendering those two posts fit for a short duration to be manned by officers holding the rank and status of Additional District and Sessions Judge. But I am of the opinion that a vacancy in the rank of District and Sessions Judge does not ipso facto create a vacancy in the rank of Additional District and Sessions Judge. I would refer in this connection to Rule 5 which provides, inter alia, that appointments to the Bihar Superior Judicial Service shall, in the first instance, ordinarily be to the post of Additional District and Sessions Judge. The use of the word "ordinarily" in Rule 5 shows that appointment of a person directly to the post of District and Sessions Judge is not ruled out, and if such an appointment is made on any special occasion, there would be no vacancy in the cadre of Additional District and Sessions Judge. If, however, an appointment of a District and Sessions Judge is made by promotion of an Additional District and Sessions Judge, then that would cause a vacancy in the cadre of the Additional District and Sessions Judges. In other words, there is no automatic vacancy in the cadre of the Additional District and Sessions Judges in consequence of a vacancy in the cadre of District and Sessions Judges. It is true, as my Lord has said, that the cadre is one, viz., the cadre of the Bihar Superior Judicial Service, as Rule 2 (a) also provides. But for all practical purposes, the cadre is divisible into two, one of District and Sessions Judges and other officers of equivalent rank and the other of Additional District and Sessions Judges. It will be noticed that in two communications of the High Court to the Government, namely, the letter dated the 25th April, 1959 (Annexure 'X-1' to the counter-affidavit of respondent No. 2) and the letter dated the 17th August, 1959 (Annexure 'X-2' to the said counter-affidavit), mention was made of vacancies "in the cadre of Additional District and Sessions Judges."

36. With these observations I agree to the order as proposed by Untwalla, J.

Order accordingly.

END

that the denial of the tenancy in the written statement cannot be taken advantage of in that suit but can be taken advantage of only in a subsequent suit to be filed by the landlord, does not appeal to us. It will lead to unnecessary multiplicity of legal proceedings if the landlord is obliged to file a second suit for ejectment of the tenant on the ground of forfeiture entailed by his denial of his character as a tenant in the written statement and not allowed to avail of that plea in the suit in which the written statement has been filed especially when it has been pleaded in the plaint that the defendant had denied his character as a tenant of the plaintiff orally before the institution of the suit as was pleaded in the two suits out of which the present appeals have arisen.

7. The relevant portion of Section 111(g) of the Transfer of Property Act reads as under:—

"a lease of immovable property would be determined by forfeiture in case the lessee renounces his character as such by setting up a title in a third person or by claiming title in himself."

According to this section it is not necessary that the renunciation of the character as lessee should be in writing before the institution of the suit. It is correct that no cause of action will accrue to the landlord to eject the tenant on the ground of forfeiture of tenancy unless the forfeiture had taken place prior to the institution of the suit. That renunciation can be either in writing or verbal as has been mentioned in Paragraph 1391 at page 666 of Volume 23 of Halsbury's Laws of England, Third Edition. The material portion of that paragraph reads as follows—

"There is implied in every lease a condition that the tenant shall not do anything that may prejudice the title of the landlord; and that if this is done, the landlord may re-enter for breach of this implied condition. Thus it is a cause of forfeiture if the tenant denies the title of the landlord by alleging in writing or, in the case of a tenancy from year to year, either in writing or verbally that the title to the land is in himself or another; or if he assists a stranger to set up an adverse title, as where he acknowledges the freehold title to be in him or delivers the premises to him in order to enable him to set up a title. In the case of a tenancy from year to year, the effect of such denial of title is that the tenancy may be forthwith determined by the landlord without notice to quit."

8. The matter can be looked at from another angle. When the tenant denies his character as the tenant of the landlord in his written statement, he can be taken to be putting an end to the tenancy, thus giving right to the landlord to claim possession from him. This principle is expressed thus in Platt on Leases:—

"The holding being from year to year subject to the mutual will of landlord and tenant to determine it on giving the usual 6 months' notice, evidence of a disclaimer ..... is evidence of an election to put an end to the tenancy and supersede the necessity for such notice ..... Hence verbal or written denials of a tenancy have rendered a notice to quit unnecessary, but it does not appear that they have effected a forfeiture of the term."

The denial of the relationship of landlord and tenant by the tenant in his written statement to a suit for ejectment determines a tenancy forthwith, thus giving the right to the landlord to the possession of the leased property, when the lease is not for a fixed period but from year to year or at will as in the present cases. A year to year tenancy or a tenancy at will gets determined by such a denial or renunciation of title. It was asserted in the plaints that the defendants had denied the title of Smt. Malaro and had also refused to make any payment of rent to her or to the plaintiff. This assertion was not denied in the written statements. On the other hand, the defendants asserted that Smt. Malaro was not the owner and they were in possession in their own right and whatever they have been paying to her was merely by way of maintenance and not by way of rent etc. From this assertion in the written statements it is clear that they had denied the title of Smt. Malaro and the plaintiff as their landlord before the institution of the suit and had set up an adverse title in themselves in clear and unequivocal terms. In view of these pleadings of the parties, the defendants had clearly forfeited their tenancy which entitled the plaintiff to obtain possession of the lands from them by means of the suits which he filed. The judgment of the learned Single Judge, is, therefore, correct and we have not been persuaded by the learned counsel for the appellants to take a different view. It is not disputed by the learned counsel for the appellants that if Section 111(g) of the Transfer of Property Act were applicable to the State of Punjab, the denial of the character as tenants by the defendants in their written statements would have entailed forfeiture entitling the plaintiff-respondent to the decrees of possession against the defendants as were prayed for by him.

9. For the reasons given above, there is no merit in these appeals which are dismissed with costs.

MEHAR SINGH, C. J.: 10. I agree.

N C. Jain, for Petitioner; H. N. Mehtani, Asst. Advocate-General (Haryana), for Respondent.

JUDGMENT:— The petitioner was convicted by a Judicial Magistrate at Karnal of an offence under Section 409 of the Indian Penal Code and was sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for a year and a fine of Rs. 50/- or, in default of payment of fine, to further rigorous imprisonment for one month. His appeal having been dismissed by Shri S. R. Seth, Additional Sessions Judge, Karnal, on the 8th of October, 1968, he has come up in revision to this Court.

2. The facts of this case are now admitted on all hands and are these. The petitioner was attached as a peon to the Tehsil Office at Karnal but was suspended from service. During the period of suspension and between the dates 19th of February, 1963, and 9th of March, 1965, he realised a sum of Rs. 592.47 from five persons named Qabaz, Jit, Thal Singh, Tola Ram and Dhani Ram, all residents of village Pundrak in Tehsil Karnal, from whom various amounts were due to the Government on account of loans received by them earlier for the purchase of fertilizers. In respect of the amounts (totaling Rs. 592.47) the petitioner issued receipts to the loanees abovementioned and the same are Exhibits P. W. 8/F. B. D. C. and E respectively. The petitioner, however, did not deposit the money into the treasury and the embezzlement was detected when the notices were issued to the said loanees and they produced the receipts obtained by them from the petitioner before the Tehsildar, Karnal, whereafter the petitioner paid up the amount of Rs. 592.47 to the Government.

3. Apart from the question of sentence the only point raised by Shri N. C. Jain, learned counsel for the petitioner, is that the offence involved does not fall within the ambit of Section 409 of the Indian Penal Code inasmuch as an offence of that type must be committed by a public servant which the petitioner was not during the relevant period by reason of his suspension from service. Reliance is placed by him on The Queen v. Dinanath Gangooly, (1872) 8 Beng LR (App) 58 in which Kemp and Jackson, JJ. quashed the conviction recorded against a police officer under suspension of an offence covered by S. 29 of the Police Act (5 of 1861) on the ground that he had ceased to be a police officer for the purposes of the Act by reason of his suspension at the relevant point of time. That case, however, is of no help to Shri Jain as it proceeded on an interpretation of Section 8 of the Police Act according to which the certificate appointing a person to the police force ceases to have effect whenever the person named therein is suspended or dismissed or otherwise removed from employment. It was in view of the clear provisions of that section that it was held that the offender could not be legally convicted under Section 29 of the Police Act. In the present case we are not at all concerned with any of the provisions of the Police Act.

The relevant provision is contained in Section 21 of the Indian Penal Code which lays down the definition of a public servant. It is conceded by Shri Jain that the petitioner, earlier to his suspension, was a public servant. He contends that it was his suspension alone which deprived him of that status. Section 21, however, does not say that suspension from office would have any such effect. On the other hand, Explanation 2 appended to the section and reading as follows:

"Wherever the words 'public servant' occur, they shall be understood of every person who is in actual possession of the situation of a public servant, whatever legal defect there may be in his right to hold that situation" would embrace not only public servants properly so-called but also persons in the employment of the Government who carried defective appointments. The term was, therefore, meant to be used in a wide sense and I am of the opinion that a public servant under suspension would not cease to be a "public servant" within the meaning of Section 21 of the Code. No infirmity can under the circumstances be said to attach to the conviction of the petitioner.

4. On the question of sentence I am inclined to show leniency in view of the fact that the petitioner paid up the embezzled amount to the Government although it was subsequent to the detection of the commission of the offence by him. He has already undergone about 24 months' rigorous imprisonment. Accordingly I reduce the sentence to imprisonment already undergone and a fine of Rs. 500/-. The sentence in default of payment of fine shall be rigorous imprisonment for six months.

Order accordingly.

ORDER:— This is a reference by the Second Additional Sessions Judge, Ludhiana, dated 22nd October, 1968, whereby the order passed by the Judicial Magistrate First Class, Ludhiana, dated 19th August, 1968, was recommended to be set aside.

2. The facts giving rise to this reference are that Pushpa Rani made an application against her husband Baldev Raj Kumar under Section 488 of the Criminal P. C. claiming maintenance for herself and her child. Having obtained a decree for judicial separation against his wife Baldev Raj Kumar made an application in the proceedings under Section 488 of the Criminal P. C. initiated against him by his wife Pushpa Rani praying that the proceedings against him be dropped in view of the decree for judicial separation obtained by him from a competent Civil Court. This application of the husband was dismissed by the impugned order. Being aggrieved Baldev Raj Kumar filed revision petition before the Sessions Court on the basis of which the present reference has been made to this Court recommending the quashing of the order of the learned Magistrate dated 19th August, 1968, disallowing the application of the husband in so far as the proceedings relating to the grant of maintenance to the wife are concerned.

3. In order to examine the effect of the decree for judicial separation obtained by the petitioner, a reference will have to be made to sub-section (4) of S. 488 and sub-section (2) of S. 489 of the Criminal P. C. which are in the following terms:

"488(4)—No wife shall be entitled to receive an allowance from her husband under this section if she is living in adultery, or if, without any sufficient reason, she refuses to live with her husband, or if they are living separately by mutual consent."

"489(2)—Where it appears to the Magistrate that, in consequence of any decision of a competent Civil Court, any order made under Section 488 should be cancelled or varied, he shall cancel the order or, as the case may be, vary the same accordingly."

4. A reading of the above provisions would show that Section 489 (2) empowers the Magistrate to cancel or vary an order for maintenance in consequence of a decision of a Civil Court. This provision would imply that if there is inconsistency between the decision of the Criminal Court and that of the Civil Court, the decision of the Civil Court would prevail. Under Section 489 (2) all that the Magistrate has to see is as to whether any change in the order is called for in consequence of the decision of a competent Civil Court and if a change is called for he shall carry out that change either by cancelling the order or by varying it in accordance with the decision of the Civil Court. The Legislature seems to have given more importance to the decision of the Civil Court while embodying this provision. In Jetha Singh v. Mst. Gian Kaur, Criminal Revn. No. 937 of 1963 decided by Bedi, J., on 16-3-1964 (Punji) it was observed that if a ground exists on which the petitioner could get the maintenance order cancelled there was no reason why the order under Section 488 of the Criminal P. C. should be made if the same ground exists.

5. Under Section 10 of the Hindu Marriage Act, the husband is entitled to a decree for judicial separation on the ground that the wife has deserted him for a continuous period of not less than two years immediately preceding the presentation of the petition under Section 10 of the Act. The expression 'desertion' has been defined to mean the desertion of the petitioner by the other party to the marriage without reasonable cause and without the consent or against the wish of such party, and includes the wilful neglect of the petitioner by the other party to the marriage. From this it necessarily follows that if a decree for judicial separation has been passed against the wife it would imply that the wife has no reasonable ground for not living with the husband. In such a case sub-section (4) of S. 483 of the Criminal P. C. would come into operation and the wife would not be entitled to maintenance.

6. On behalf of the respondent reliance was placed on Mailappa Chettiar v. Sivagami Achi, 1964 (1) Cri LJ 242 (Mad) in which it was held that the mere fact that the Civil Court had given an inconsistent finding is by itself not a sufficient ground to cancel the order of maintenance made by the Criminal Court. The Madras case was considered by Raju, J. in Dahyalal Amathalal Bhagat v. Bai Madhukanta, AIR 1965 Guj 247, and it was observed as under:—

"With great respect, for the reasons already given, having regard to the wording of Section 10 (1) (a) and the Explanation to Section 10 (1) of the Hindu Marriage Act and having regard to the wording of sub-section (4) of S. 483, Criminal P. C., it is very difficult to agree with the learned Single Judge of the Madras High Court. Criminal proceedings under Section 483, Criminal P. C., are somewhat summary. The Legislature has, therefore, given more importance to the Civil Court decisions. If there is inconsistency between the decision of the Criminal Court and the decision of the Civil Court, in such a matter the decision of the latter prevails, although, ordinarily, the decision of the Civil Court is irrelevant in a criminal proceeding."

I am in respectful agreement with the view taken by Raju, J., in Dahyalal Amathalal Bhagat's case, AIR 1965 Guj 247. This view also flows from the unreported ruling of Bedi, J. in Jetha Singh's case, Cri. Revn. No. 937 of 1963, D/-16-3-1964 (Pun). In Ravendra Kaur v. Achant Swarup, AIR 1966 All 133, the view taken by the Allahabad High Court was followed in preference to the Madras view in Mailappa Chettiar's case, 1964 (1) Cri LJ 242 (Mad) and it was observed as under:

"Learned counsel for the applicant relied on a single Judge decision of the Madras High Court in the case of (1963) 2 Mad LJ 82 = (1964) 1 Cri LJ 242, in which it was held that the mere fact that the Civil Court had given an inconsistent finding is by itself no sufficient ground to cancel the order of maintenance made by the Criminal Court. With respect I differ from that view and accept the view taken by this Court in the case referred to above."

7. For the foregoing reasons, I accept this reference and set aside the order of the Judicial Magistrate dated 19th August, 1968, and dismiss the application of the wife for the grant of maintenance to her. The application of the respondent claiming maintenance for the minor child shall, however, proceed.

Reference allowed.

MEHAR SINGH, C. J. AND
B. R. TULI, J.

Sh. Bal Mukand, Plaintiff-Appellant v. Joint Hindu Family Firm known as Munna Lal Ramji Lal and others, Defendants-Respondents.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 295 of 1965, D/- 24-12-1969, from judgment of Gurdev Singh J. in S. A. O. No. 53 of 1963, D/- 7-10-1964.

(A) Negotiable Instruments Act (1881), S. 4, Illustration (b) — Promissory note — Essentials of. AIR 1938 All 619, Dis-sented from.

Before a document can be treated as a promissory note it should be promissory note both in form and in intent. If indebtedness is acknowledged in a document in a defined sum of money payable on demand that is enough to make the document a promissory note and the document need not necessarily say that the debtor promises to repay the amount. Merely because the document says that payment is to be made when demanded the undertaking to repay the amount does not become conditional. The absence of the words 'I promise to pay' makes no difference in the tenor of the instrument provided it fulfils other conditions of a promissory note. (Para 4)

Where the document is an instrument in writing, it contains an unconditional undertaking to pay because the payment is to be made under it on demand, it is signed by the maker, and it says that a certain defined sum is to be paid all the requirements of Section 4 are fulfilled and the document squarely comes within the scope of illustration (b) to that section. Moreover, when the party who has advanced money on basis of the document has described it as promissory note in the plaint and has based its claim on that basis, intention to treat the document as promissory note becomes clear.

Goyal, for Respondents.

MEHAR SINGH, C. J.: The plaintiff sued the defendants to recover Rs. 1,400/- as principal, with Rs. 300/- as interest, a total of Rs. 1,700/-, on the basis of what he himself described in his plaint as a promissory note of Poh Badi 4,2015 Bk., corresponding to December 30, 1958. The document is a separate piece of paper and bears the stamp of 20 Paise. If it is a promissory note, the stamp should have been of 25 Paise, and, if it is an acknowledgment, it should have been of 10
Paise.

2. The language of the document is — “Age rupya chuda sau (ank 1400/-) rokri liya jia ka biaj dar 12 ane sainkra dena mange tab dena.” The ending words ‘mange tab dena’ in English translation mean ‘payment to be made when demanded’. An objection being raised on the side of the defendants as to the admissibility of this document in evidence on the ground that it being a promissory note does not bear proper stamp and hence is not admissible in evidence, it prevailed with the learned trial Judge on the ground that the document has in it promise by the defendants to pay the amount stated in it on the demand of the plaintiff. So the learned trial Judge dismissed the claim of the plaintiff by his judgment and decree of March 27, 1963.
In appeal, the learned District Judge was of the opinion that the words ‘mange tab dena’ in the document did not import any promise to pay and were merely a recital of liability of the defendants to pay. He sought support for his view from Firm Ratanji Bhagwanji & Co. v. Prem Shanker, AIR 1938 All 619, in which this is what the learned Judge observed at page 620—

“The document of acknowledgment, dated 30th November 1932, is in these terms:

I have taken from you Rs. 1000 on 19th
January, 1932, and Rs. 100 on 3rd February, 1932, total Rs. 1100. Whenever you ask for it I have to pay it together with interest.

(The actual words are: jab mango tab biyaj sahit deneka hai). Below this is affixed a one anna stamp and on the stamp appears the signature of Jata Shanker on behalf of the firm. Although in its judgment the learned Munsif held that this document is a promissory note, the endorsement on the back of it in the handwriting of the learned Munsif himself is as follows:

“This is an acknowledgment and need not be impounded’. This endorsement is dated 14th December, 1935, the date on which the judgment in the case was pronounced. The endorsement was made in consequence of a report by the office that the document was a promissory note and should have borne a stamp of four annas, but as it bore a stamp of only one anna it was liable to be impounded. The lower appellate Court does not appear to have considered whether this document is a promissory note or a mere acknowledgment. In my opinion it is not a promissory note because it does not contain an unconditional undertaking to pay. It only acknowledges that the two items of money mentioned therein have been borrowed and that the executant has to repay them on demand. There is no promise to pay, but only an admission of liability to pay. I translate the words deneka hai as ‘I have to pay or I am liable to pay’ and not as ‘I promise to pay’.”

So the learned Judge accepted the appeal of the plaintiff and remanded the case back to the trial Court for disposal of it in accordance with law after admitting the document in question in evidence. In second appeal by the defendants, the learned Single Judge has by his judgment and decree of October 7, 1964, reversed the order of the first appellate Court, restoring the decree of the trial Court, and thus dismissing the suit of the plaintiff, being of the opinion that the words as referred to above in the document mean promise to pay on demand. The learned Single Judge has considered not only Prem Shanker's case, AIR 1938 All 619 but also a few other cases to which reference will presently be made. This is a plaintiff's appeal under clause 10 of the Letters Patent from the judgment and decree of the learned Single Judge.

3. So the only question for consideration is whether the document in question is or is not a promissory note, or whether it is an acknowledgment? In Section 4 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 (Act 26 of 1881), the expression 'promissory note' is defined in this manner—"A 'promissory note' is an instrument in writing (not being a bank-note or a currency-note) containing an unconditional undertaking, signed by the maker, to pay a certain sum of money only to, or to the order of, a certain person, or to the bearer of the instrument". Illustration (b) to this section says—"I acknowledge myself to be indebted to B in Rs. 1,000 to be paid on demand, for value received." It is apparent that if the acknowledgment of indebtedness is in a defined sum of money payable on demand that is enough and the document need not necessarily say that the debtor promises to repay the amount. Here the document is an instrument in writing, it contains an unconditional undertaking to pay because the payment is to be made under it by the defendants to the plaintiff on demand, which may have proceeded immediately the next moment this document came into existence, it is signed by the maker, and it says clearly that a certain defined sum was to be paid to the plaintiff by the defendants under this instrument. It fulfils all the requirements of Section 4 of Act 26 of 1881, and squarely comes within the scope of Illustration (b) to that section.

4. The learned counsel for the plaintiff contends that the undertaking to repay the amount in this case by the defendants was not an unconditional undertaking but was a conditional undertaking because the document says that they are to make the payment when demanded. He seeks support from Muthu Gounder v. Perumayammal, AIR 1961 Mad 347, but in that case the document provided payment after two years, and, on facts, the case is not quite parallel. However, it is on this observation of the learned Judge in that case upon which the learned counsel places reliance—"Now, in the present case, the unconditional promise to pay, which would otherwise exist if the promisor had merely agreed to pay on demand, is qualified and made into a conditional one by making it payable after a period of two years; or conversely the unconditional promise which would exist even if the money is made payable at the end of two years is made conditional by the stipulation for a demand thereafter." It will be seen that this observation of the learned Judge deals with the condition of two years before the expiry of which the payment was not to be made, and the learned Judge merely points out that even after that it had to be made by a demand. On facts, therefore, the learned Judge did not find that the document there was unconditional undertaking to pay a certain sum of money. So this case does not advance the argument on the side of the plaintiff.

The learned counsel then falls back on Prem Shanker's case, AIR 1933 All 619, which undoubtedly supports the argument on his side. That case was, however, considered by a Division Bench, consisting of Shah, C. J. and Baxi, J., of the Saurashtra High Court in Shah Chimanlal Jagjivandas v. Khambhla Savji Bechar, AIR 1955 Sau 74, and the learned Judges did not accept the ratio of that case observing—"In that case the document was practically in identical terms with the present document and the material words were 'jab mango tab biyai sahit deneka hai'. The words 'deneka hai' were translated by the learned Judge as 'I have to pay' or 'I am liable to pay' and not as 'I promise to pay', and he declined to treat it as a promissory note on the ground that there was no promise to pay but only an admission of liability to pay. But illustration 2 to Section 4(a), Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, which defines a promissory note, shows that an acknowledgment of indebtedness for a certain sum of money coupled with the words 'to be paid on demand' is a promissory note and in Mohammad Akbar Khan's case, AIR 1936 PC 171, their Lordships recognized that the illustration showed that the words 'I promise' or 'I undertake' are unnecessary. With great deference to the learned Judge of the Allahabad High Court, therefore, the absence of the words 'I promise to pay' makes no difference in the tenor of the instrument, and an acknowledgment of liability to pay a specific sum of money on demand is sufficient for holding the document to be a promissory note provided it fulfils other conditions of a promissory note", and earlier the learned Judges after referring to some cases including two cases decided by the Privy Council AIR 1936 PC 171, and Karam Chand v. Firm Mian Mir Ahmad, AIR 1933 PC 121 observed that "These authorities clearly establish that before a document can be treated as a promissory note it should be promissory note both in form and in intent." I respectfully agree with the learned Judges in this last mentioned case. In the present case the document answers to the form of a promissory note as in Section 4 and illustration (b) to it in Act 26 of 1881. It is a document by itself and is as such negotiable within the meaning and scope of Section 13 of the same Act, and so the observations of the learned Judge in Ambalal Purotamtandas and Co. v. Jawaharlal Purotamtam Dave, AIR 1953 Cal 758, have no real bearing on the facts of the present case because in that case the entry was in the account-book of the party.

5. It has already been shown that the form of the document in this case conforms to the requirements of Section 4 and of illustration (b) to it of Act 26 of 1881. On the question of intention of the parties, however, curiously enough neither the trial Court nor the Court of first appeal has said one single word, and even in the judgment of the learned Single Judge there is nothing on this. Intention is always a question of fact and as it is the right of the Court of first appeal to be the final Court of fact, whose decision in such matters is not open to question in second appeal in view of Section 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure, ordinarily such a question would be left to such a Court for disposal.

In the circumstances of the present case, however, no Court has attended to this aspect and it is not consistent with the justice of the case so far as the facts and circumstances of the present case are concerned to remit the matter now to the Court of first appeal merely for giving decision on the intention of the parties whether or not they intended the document in question to be a promissory note. The reason is that in the plaint itself the plaintiff has described this document as a promissory note and made a claim against the defendants on the basis of it as a promissory note. The learned counsel for the plaintiff urges that a wrong description of this type by a plaintiff is not conclusive as against him, but then when the plaintiff appeared in the witness-box, he never took this stand that he had wrongly or by mistake described this document as a promissory note in his plaint. It is apparent and obvious evidence of the intention of the parties that they intended this document to be a promissory note and not only did the plaintiff so intend but he also came to base his claim on it clearly saying that it is a promissory note and he is basing his claim on that promissory note. It is in these circumstances that it will not be in the interest of justice to remit this case back to the Court of first appeal for decision of this question of fact in regard to the intention of the parties with regard to this document. In the facts of the present case it must be held that the parties intended the document in question to be a promissory note.

6. On the approach as above, this appeal of the plaintiff is dismissed with costs affirming the judgment and decree of the learned Single Judge.

BAL RAJ TULI, J.: 7. I agree.

JUDGMENT: This order will dispose of two connected Regular Second Appeals Nos. 1155 and 1212 of 1965.

2. On 2nd August, 1961, by means of a deed, Exhibit D. 2, Dhera Singh sold agricultural land measuring 22 kanals 6 marlas situate in village Moranwali, District Hoshiarpur, along with share in the Shamilat Deh Patti and one-third share in the well known as Nurpurwala with Persian wheel for Rs. 10,000/-, in favour of Birkha Singh and his three brothers Kirpal Singh, Harjit Singh and Sansar Singh, sons of Harnam Singh. The sale-deed was registered on 8th November, 1962. This sale led to two suits for pre-emption, one filed by Surjan Singh on 18th August, 1962, on the ground that he was the father's brother's son of the vendor and the other by Jagat Singh on 21st September, 1963, alleging that he was the son of the vendor. Both the suits were consolidated by the trial Court.

3. The vendees contested the suits on a number of pleas, but in the present appeal we are only concerned with one of them, namely, that the suits had been filed beyond limitation. The case of the defendants was that the sale-deed was executed on 2nd August, 1961, and the possession of the property was also delivered to the vendees on the same day, with the result that the suits should have been filed within one year from that date and that not having been done, the suits should have been dismissed on the ground of limitation. This plea of the defendant-vendees prevailed with the trial Judge and both the suits were dismissed.

4. Against the decision of the trial Court, only Surjan Singh went in appeal before the learned Senior Subordinate Judge. Jagat Singh did not institute any appeal. He was, however, made a respondent in the appeal of Surjan Singh. He put in an application under Order 41, Rule 33, Code of Civil Procedure, praying that he was entitled to the possession of the land in dispute by pre-emption as his suit was within limitation and although, he had not filed an appeal against the decision of the trial Court within limitation due to illness, he was entitled to have an order passed in his favour even in the appeal filed by Surjan Singh, because the trial Court had consolidated the two suits and tried them together.

5. The contention of Surjan Singh before the lower appellate Court was that the trial Judge had erroneously held his suit to be barred by time. Some of the properties sold, according to him, were not capable of delivery of physical possession and, therefore, the limitation for filing a suit for pre-emption commenced from the date of the registration of the sale-deed, i.e., 8th November, 1962, under Article 10 of the Limitation Act. He had filed the suit on 18th August, 1962, and the same was within time. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the entire property sold was not capable of delivery of physical possession, because it comprised six Khasra numbers in their entirety and one-half share in three other Khasra numbers together with share in Shamilat Deh Patti and one-third share in the well known as Nurpurwala with Persian wheel. Out of the suit property, only six Khasra numbers were capable of delivery of actual possession and regarding the rest, physical possession was not possible. That being so, under Article 10 of the Limitation Act, where the subject-matter of sale did not admit of physical possession, the limitation for filing a suit for pre-emption commenced from the date when the instrument of sale was registered. He was further of the view that the mere fact that Surjan Singh had stated that actual possession was delivered to the vendees on the date of sale would not make the entire property sold as being capable of delivery of physical possession and the finding of the trial Court that the time for filing the suit began to run from 2nd August, 1961, i.e., the date of sale, was erroneous in law. According to the learned Senior Subordinate Judge, both the suits of Surjan Singh and Jagat Singh, having been filed within one year of the registration of the sale-deed, were within limitation.

6. As regards the application of Jagat Singh under Order 41, Rule 33, Code of Civil Procedure, the same, according to the learned Senior Subordinate Judge, was without any merit. Jagat Singh had not filed an appeal against the decision of the trial Court by which his suit for pre-emption had been dismissed. The interests of Surjan Singh and Jagat Singh were distinct and independent and separate suits for pre-emption had been filed by them. Since Jagat Singh did not institute an appeal against the dismissal of his suit by the trial Court, he cannot be given the benefit of the provisions of Order 41, Rule 33, Code of Civil Procedure, in the appeal filed by Surjan Singh. As a result, the learned Senior Subordinate Judge accepted the appeal of Surjan Singh and decreed his suit on payment of Rs. 9,000/-. Against this decision, two appeals have been filed in this Court — one by the vendees and it is Regular Second Appeal No. 1155 of 1965 and the other by Jagat Singh, the other pre-emptor, which is Regular Second Appeal No. 1212 of 1965.

7. As regards the appeal filed by the vendees, the argument raised by their learned counsel was that it was mentioned in the sale-deed that possession of the property sold had been delivered to the vendees. It was also admitted by Surjan Singh, pre-emptor, himself that the land sold was in possession of the vendees from the date of sale. Similarly, Harnam Singh, the father of the vendees, who had transacted the deal on behalf of his sons, had admitted in cross-examination that the possession of the land sold was delivered to him on the date of sale and that no part thereof had remained in possession of the vendor. Under these circumstances, according to the learned counsel, the suit for pre-emption should have been brought within one year from the time when the purchasers took, under the sale sought to be impeached, physical possession of the whole of the property sold. In other words, the suit should have been filed within one year from 2nd August, 1961, when the vendees took physical possession of the entire property sold.

8. There is no manner of doubt that the property sold included share in Shamilat Deh Patti as well. That being so, the whole of the property sold was not capable of physical possession within the meaning of Article 10 of the Limitation Act and therefore, the pre-emption suit should have been filed within one year from the date of the registration of the sale-deed under that very Article.

9. It was held by a Division Bench of the Punjab Chief Court in Maluk Singh v. Muhammad, 65 Pun Re. 1889—

"In a suit for pre-emption, held (following the previous rulings of the Court) that where the sale in question includes a share in the Shamilat, even though the greater part of the property sold may consist of a separate holding, the whole subject-matter of the sale is not capable of physical possession within the meaning of Act XV, Schedule II, of the Limitation Act, and the period of limitation in such a case is one year from the date of registration of the deed of sale."

10. This ruling was followed in Lehna Singh v. Bhagat Singh, 68 Pun Re 1918 = (AIR 1918 Lah 383 (2)). No authority taking a contrary view was brought to my notice by the learned counsel for the appellants. It was, however, urged by him that there was in fact no Shamilat Patti or Shamilat Deh in the village, where the suit land was situate, in August 1961, when the sale-deed was executed, because by that time the Punjab Village Common Lands Regulation Act, 1953, had come into force, whereunder all the rights, title and interest in the Shamilat Deh had vested in the Panchayat, having jurisdiction over the village. No such point, however, was taken by the vendees either in the written statement or in the Courts below. This point was not even raised in the grounds of appeal in this Court. In the sale-deed, it was mentioned that the vendor was selling a share in the Snamilat Patti as well and this sale-deed was accepted by the vendees themselves. Under these circumstances, the vendees cannot be permitted to raise this point for the first time in this second appeal, especially when it might involve the determination of questions of fact as well.

11. In view of what I have said above, I would hold that the learned Senior Subordinate Judge had rightly held that the suit of Surjan Singh had been filed well within limitation. The appeal, consequently, fails and is dismissed. The parties are, however, left to bear their own costs in this Court as well.

12. Now coming to the other appeal filed by Jagat Singh, in the first place, it is not understood as to how that appeal lies. Jagat Singh had, as already mentioned above, filed an application under Order 41, Rule 33, Code of Civil Procedure, before the learned Senior Subordinate Judge and the same was dismissed by him by his order dated 27th July, 1965. There was no decree passed by the learned Judge against him. It is against a decree that a second appeal could have been filed by Jagat Singh. His suit had been dismissed by the trial Court. He did not go up in appeal against the dismissal of his suit by the trial Judge. It was only if he had filed an appeal and the same had been rejected by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge that he could file a second appeal against the decree passed by the lower appellate Court. If his application under Order 41, Rule 33, Code of Civil Procedure, had been rejected by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge, he could file a revision petition against that order, but no second appeal is competent against that order. The appeal, therefore, deserves to be dismissed on that ground alone.

13. This apart, if Jagat Singh's suit had been dismissed by the trial Court and he did not go up in appeal against that decision, the same became final. In the other suit of Surjan Singh, which was also dismissed by the trial Judge, he had gone up in appeal before the learned Senior Subordinate Judge. Since both the suits, namely, one filed by Surjan Singh and the other by Jagat Singh, had been consolidated by the trial Court, Surjan Singh had to implead Jagat Singh as a respondent in the appeal instituted by him. In the application under Order 41, Rule 33, Code of Civil Procedure, filed by Jagat Singh in that appeal, he could not be granted the relief asked for by him, because the result of that would have been that his suit, which had been dismissed by the trial Court and which decision had become final, would have been decreed and he would have got a decree for possession of the land by pre-emption even in preference to Surjan Singh. Undoubtedly, Jagat Singh could not take the benefit of the provisions of Order 41, Rule 33, Code of Civil Procedure in a different suit filed by Surjan Singh against the dismissal of which he had gone up in appeal. Learned counsel appearing for Jagat Singh could not refer to any decided case in which under similar circumstances, Order 41, Rule 33, Code of Civil Procedure, had been applied. The rights and interests of Jagat Singh and Surjan Singh were quite different and distinct and it was, therefore, that they had to file separate suits for getting relief. If Jagat Singh got satisfied with the dismissal of the suit by the trial Court and did not go up in appeal, he could not get his suit decreed by making an application under Order 41, Rule 33, Code of Civil Procedure, in the other suit filed by Surjan Singh. His application had, therefore, been correctly rejected by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge.

14. The result is that this appeal also fails and is dismissed. The parties are, however, left to bear their own costs in this Court.

Appeals dismissed.

H. L. Sarin, Senior Advocate with M/s. A. L. Bahl, H. S. Awasthi, for Appellants; N. K. Sodhi, for Respondents.

MEHAR SINGH, C. J.: This will dispose of two appeals Nos. 273 and 274 of 1964, under Cl. 10 of the Letters Patent, the first by Nagin Chand and the second by Ramesh Chand, to which the main opposite party is their third brother Shadi Lal respondent, from the judgment and decree, dated September 6, 1963, of a learned Single Judge accepting two appeals by the respondent from the appellate decrees of the first appellate Court, which had reversed the decree of the trial Court and decreed the two suits, one by each one of the two appellants, against the respondent. So the learned Single Judge dismissed the suits of the appellants.

2. The two appellants and Shadi Lal respondent are three brothers. They were having a partnership hosiery business in Ludhiana, with the name and style of their partnership as Jain Bodh Hosiery. On March 31, 1959, the three brothers dissolved the partnership. The appellants went out of the partnership leaving the business of Jain Bodh Hosiery with Shadi Lal respondent. The dissolution deed is Exhibit D 1 of that date. Clauses 2 and 3 of the same read — "2. That entire business assets of the firm along with the goodwill and liabilities have been taken over by the parties of the First part and parties of the Second and Third parts shall have no concern absolutely with the affairs of 'Messrs. Jain Bodh Hosiery' hereinafter. 3. Income-tax and Sales-tax and other taxes cases of the firm have not yet been settled and there might be some other liabilities unexpected at this time. If any liability will arise all the partners (retiring as well as continuing) will pay according to the share." The first party was Shadi Lal respondent, the remaining two parties to this document were the two appellants. It has been admitted at this stage in these appeals that after the dissolution of the partnership between the three brothers, the two appellants went into the very same business, but independently. So that on and from the date of dissolution of the partnership on March 31, 1959, the three brothers started hosiery business, but separately. Shadi Lal respondent continuing it in the name of the original firm and each one of the two appellants taking a new name of his business. However, all the three continued in hosiery business. Sometime after the dissolution of the partnership between the three brothers, there came a control over the raw material that they were using in their hosiery business. The Central Government having made, under the provisions of the Essential Commodities Act, 1955 (Act 10 of 1955), the Woollen Yarn (Production and Distribution) Control Order, 1960, the Textile Commissioner framed a scheme for distribution of wool yarn by fixing quotas, the basis for distribution with regard to the same having been adopted at the time with reference to the actual consumption of yarn by various manufacturers during the years 1956-57, 1957-58 and 1958-59. It will be seen that the basis for allotment of quota of yarn, a controlled commodity, by that time came to be the actual consumption of such wool yarn by the manufacturers during the three years preceding the dissolution of the firm of three brothers. The Textile Commissioner, according to the scheme of distribution, having passed on the distribution of wool yarn to the Hosiery Industry Federation, each one of the two appellants instituted a separate suit against the Federation, Shadi Lal respondent and the other appellant, for permanent injunction restraining the Federation to allot and Shadi Lal respondent to accept quota of wool yarn beyond one-third share of this respondent, because, according to the two appellants, either has been entitled to half of the remaining two-third share of the wool yarn quota. The two main matters for consideration before the learned trial Judge were whether either appellant was entitled to one-third share of the quota of wool yarn, and whether Civil Court had jurisdiction in the suits of the type, out of which these appeals have arisen. The learned Judge dismissed the claims of the appellants, but, on appeals by the appellants, the learned Judge in the first appellate Court reversed the decrees of the trial Court and granted a decree as claimed by each one of the appellants, finding the two main matters of controversy, as above, in favour of that particular appellant. It was Shadi Lal respondent who was in second appeal in this Court and a learned Single Judge by his judgment and decrees of September 6, 1963, reversed the decrees of the first appellate Court, restoring those of the trial Court, thus dismissing the suit of each one of the appellants. The learned Single Judge proceeded on the basis that "It is not possible to frame a comprehensive definition of 'goodwill' as its actual content would continue changing with the change in the business methods and activities, but one thing is not in my opinion in doubt and that is that the goodwill of a business house includes every advantage that accrues to the business house in the future on account of its business activity in the past. Such an advantage was deliberately agreed to be made over by the two plaintiffs-respondents to Shadi Lal appellant at the time of the dissolution. The allocation of yarn quota was certainly an advantage that accrued to the firm after the dissolution of the previous partnership and it accrued on account of the previous business activity of the firm. It is thus an advantage included in the goodwill of the firm of which Shadi Lal appellant was the owner after the 31st March 1959." As stated, it is the appellant in each appeal who has come in appeal under clause 10 of the Letters Patent from the judgment and decree of the learned Single Judge dismissing his suit.

3. It is clear from what has already been stated that the facts are not in dispute. The three brothers dissolved their hosiery business partnership on March 31, 1959. Each one of the three brothers then entered into the very same hosiery business, but independently. Shadi Lal respondent, under the terms of the dissolution deed, continued his business in the name of the old firm, Jain Bodh Hosiery, and each one of the appellants took a new name to his hosiery business. After the dissolution of the partnership and sometime in 1960 on account of statutory control over distribution of wool yarn, according to the scheme of such distribution, allotment of quotas of yarn, raw material for hosiery business, was made on the basis of manufacturers' consumption in the three years preceding the year of the dissolution of the partnership of the three brothers. The quota of yarn having come to be controlled by the year 1960 according to law, raw material for hosiery business was obviously not available to businessmen of this type in the open market. They had, therefore, to obtain quota under the relevant scheme from the proper authority or the proper body, such as the Federation in this case, who had been given the facility of distributing such quota. The basis for the allotment of quota, as stated, was the actual use of the raw material by the manufacturers in three years preceding the date of the dissolution of the three brothers' partnership. Each one of the three brothers could, on the basis of manufacture of hosiery goods during the three years preceding the year of dissolution of their partnership, lay claim to one-third of the quota that was his share of the business of the partnership, the dissolution of the partnership in this respect having no effect whatsoever. If this was not so, the dissolution in the wake of this new unexpected development about the control of wool yarn would have thrown two out of three former partners, the two appellants, out of business, a contingency never in the contemplation of the parties when they came to execute the dissolution deed, Exhibit D. 1, on March 31, 1959. Obviously, in the circumstances, the whole of the quota could not possibly have been claimed by Shadi Lal respondent alone merely on the basis of having the right to use the name of the old firm for the purposes of his business. So naturally argument turned to the meaning and scope of the word 'goodwill' before the learned Single Judge, and it is with reference to the same, as has already been shown, that the learned Judge has come to the conclusion that the quota that was available to firm Jain Bodh Hosiery was available to it as a part of its goodwill, which having, under the dissolution deed, passed to Shadi Lal respondent alone, the appellants have no claim to any share in it.

4. In Volume 29 of Halsbury's Laws of England, Third Edition, page 360, paragraph 715, this is the meaning given to goodwill — "The goodwill of a business is the whole advantage of the reputation and connection formed with customers together with the circumstances, whether of habit or otherwise, which tend to make such connection permanent. It represents in connection with any business or business product the value of the attraction to customers which the name and reputation possesses." In Volume 28 of the same treatise, at page 580, paragraphs 1139 and 1140, this is what is stated with regard to goodwill — "The goodwill of the business carried on by a partnership forms part of the assets to be realised upon distribution. If the goodwill is not sold, each partner may use the name of the firm, if by doing so he does not hold out the other partners as being still partners with him. If a partner agrees to retire and his partners buy his share but do not take any express assignment of the goodwill, they are not entitled to continue the use of his name as part of the style of the firm, and where a business is carried on under the name, solely or with any addition, of an outgoing partner who is still living and not bankrupt, a purchaser of the business including the goodwill is not entitled to use the name of the outgoing partner in such a way as to suggest that he is still connected with the business, unless the right to use the firm name is expressly assigned. Where the goodwill becomes on dissolution the property of one of the partners (either by purchase in the ordinary way or pursuant to a provision in the articles), the outgoing partner or partners may not carry on a similar business in the name of the old firm ..... An agreement that on dissolution the partnership assets shall be taken by one partner includes goodwill, and it must be valued on the footing that the outgoing partner is entitled to carry on a similar business." In Commrs. of Inland Revenue v. Muller & Co's Margarine, Ltd., (1901) AC 217 at page 223, Lord Macnaghten, delivering his speech in the House of Lords observed — "What is goodwill? It is a thing very easy to describe, very difficult to define. It is the benefit and advantage of the good-name, reputation, and connection of a business. It is the attractive force which brings in custom. It is the one thing which distinguishes an old established business from a new business at its first start. The goodwill of a business must emanate from a particular centre or source. However widely extended or diffused its influence may be, goodwill is worth nothing unless it has power of attraction sufficient to bring customers home to the source from which it emanates. Goodwill is composed of a variety of elements. It differs in its composition in different trades and in different business in the same trade. One element may preponderate here and another element there." In New Gujarat Cotton Mills Ltd. v. Labour Appellate Tribunal, AIR 1957 Bom 111, Shah J., delivering the judgment of the Division Bench, observed at page 115 — "..... the goodwill of a business is inclusive of positive advantages such as carrying on the commercial undertaking at a particular place and in a particular name, and also its business connections, its business prestige, and several other intangible advantages which a business may acquire." In Dulaldas Mullick v. Ganesh Das Damani, AIR 1957 Cal 220, P. B. Mukharji J., delivering the judgment of the Division Bench, observed that "Goodwill represents business reputation which is a complex of personal reputation, local reputation and objective reputation of the products of the business. Which one of these elements will predominate will depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. Except where the reputation of a business and where the product of the business more than its proprietor have won widespread popularity and universal approval and except in the case of well-known patents and manufacturing processes in which event the personal and objective reputations predominate, it is the local reputation or the attribute of locality which forms the largest content of goodwill in almost every other business. Specially is the attribute of locality the most important consideration in the business of an ordinary trader or a dealer." While there is emphasis in these statements on what is goodwill, on the name, the place of business, reputation, connection of a business, and the attractive force to bring in custom, none of the authorities referred to has even hinted in the least that procurement of raw material for running and maintaining a manufacturing business is a part of its goodwill. It is a basic requirement for the existence of such a business. When it has been procured and run through a manufacturing process, the products will attract custom because of the reputation of the business as from its name and as from its situation in a particular locality. I find it rather difficult to agree with the learned Single Judge that procuring raw material for a manufacturing business is an advantage which is part of the goodwill of such business. Normally, if there was no statutory control, raw material in the shape of wool yarn would have been available to all the three parties in the open market, and it is because this raw material has become a controlled commodity that each one of the three parties have had to resort to the allotment of quota of wool yarn for its hosiery manufacturing business. The allotment of quota of wool yarn was not because of the name of the old firm or because of the situation of that firm in a particular locality, nor because of anything connected with its reputation as a business house specially attracting custom. The basis of its allotment has been the consumption of wool yarn for manufacture during the three years preceding the date of dissolution of the partnership of the parties. It is the consumption of wool yarn for this particular purpose which has entitled a party to share in the raw material for manufacture, in this case wool yarn, which, as has been stated, but for statutory control would have been available in the open market. The availability of the raw material in the open market could not possibly be said to be part of the goodwill of the original partnership firm, and it is difficult to accept that it has become part of the same simply by reason of statutory control and its distribution according to a statutory scheme. So it is not an advantage or benefit which is born of the goodwill of the partnership under the name of Jain Bodh Hosiery. If this were so, a matter to which reference has already been made, it would mean that the two appellants would immediately go out of business on the coming into force of the Woollen Yarn (Procurement and Distribution) Control Order of 1960. Actually the sole object of that order was to ensure fair distribution, among manufacturers of woollen products, by giving them ratably raw material as wool yarn so that they may be able to continue their manufacturing business. For the matter of distribution some method had to be evolved and obviously the basis made was the three years' consumption of raw material, those three years happening to be the three years preceding the date of dissolution of the partnership between the parties in these cases. So that it is evident that the claim to raw material as wool yarn under the statutory scheme as quota for continuing their hosiery business in the case of each appellant cannot be said to have been lost because any such claim is inconsistent with the goodwill of the original partnership remaining with Shadi Lal respondent under the dissolution deed, Exhibit D. 1. It has to be particularly noted that this dissolution deed does not debar the appellants from doing the very same business of hosiery manufacture in their own capacity and, as stated, the admitted fact is that ever since the dissolution of the partnership they have been independently under the new names of their firms carrying on the very same business. Mere transfer of the goodwill of the original partnership to Shadi Lal respondent could not be read as having debarred them from entering into and continuing the very same business. This is apart from the fact that Shadi Lal respondent has never questioned the right of the appellants to entering into and running the very same business. So an opportunity to procure raw material in the shape of wool yarn by the appellants was, in my opinion, not part of the goodwill of the partnership Jain Bodh Hosiery, which goodwill was left with Shadi Lal respondent in consequence of dissolution of that partnership firm.

5. In the approach as above, the appeals of the appellants are accepted and, reversing the decrees of the learned Single Judge, the decrees of the first appellate Court are restored, so that the claims of the appellants stand decreed in the terms of the decrees of the first appellate Court, but, in the peculiar circumstances of these appeals, there is no order in regard to costs.

(A) Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Rules (1955), R. 102, Cls. to B who was by then dead — Appellants, heirs of B not served with notice nor appeared before Managing Officer — Order nullity — Appearance by appellants before appellate and revisional authorities incapable of validating order. C. W. No. 2917 of 1965, D/- 23-10-1969 (P. & H.), Reversed.

Managing Officer finding excess land being allotted to B issued notice to B under Rule 102 to show cause against cancellation of allotment of excess area. B was then dead. The notice was neither served on the appellants nor did they appear before Managing Officer. Order cancelling the allotment was passed, on appeal.

Held, (i) Proviso to R. 102 being mandatory order of cancellation without compliance of the proviso is without jurisdiction; (ii) hearing afforded to the appellants at appellate and revisional stages was no substitute for the hearing before the Managing Officer before passing the order under Rule 102, (iii) the original order of Managing Officer was a nullity which could not be validated by the hearing afforded to the appellants at appellate and revisional stages C W No. 2917 of 1965, D/- 23-10-1969 (P & H.), Reversed (AIR 1942 FC 3, Followed) (Para 4-6)

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 226 — New plea — Omission to raise jurisdictional point before departmental authority — No bar to urging that point in writ proceedings.

On the admitted facts of this case it is difficult to hold that a patently invalid order should be sustained merely because a fatal defect therein was not pleaded by the appellants in departmental proceedings. AIR 1961 SC 647 & AIR 1959 SC 559, Foll. (Para 7)

B. S. Jawanda and B. S. Wasu, for Appellants; Sukhdev Khanna for Advocate-General (Punjab) (for Nos. 1 to 4) and P. S. Mann (for Nos. 5 and 6), for Respondents.

R. S. NARULA, J.: 3 Standard Acres and 13½ Units of agricultural land was allotted to Buta Singh, a displaced person. In village Begumpur, Hadbast No. 129 (sic), tahsil Phillaur, district Jullundur, according to his entitlement. Shri S. D. Katyal, Assistant Registrar-cum-Managing Officer, Rehabilitation Deptt., Punjab, found that the valuation of the area actually allotted to Buta Singh against his abovementioned entitlement came to 6-8 Standard Acres against 3-13½ Standard Acres worked out by the field staff. This mistake was found to have occurred because of some action of the Consolidation Department and not on account of any error on the part of the Rehabilitation Department. Shri S. D. Katyal thought that the allottee had received allotment in excess of his entitlement to the extent of 2-10½ Standard Acres. A show-cause notice is therefore, stated to have been issued to Buta Singh who had admittedly died before the issue of the notice. The notice issued to Buta Singh is stated to have been received by his son Milkha Singh. Whether Milkha Singh actually received the notice or not, the fact remains that even he did not appear in response to the notice, which was addressed to his dead father. Admittedly no notice was ever issued to any of the appellants and none was served on appellants Nos. 1 and 2, the other sons of Buta Singh. By an ex parte order, dated March 29, 1963 (copy Annexure 'A' to the writ petition), the Managing Officer cancelled the allotment of Buta Singh to the extent of 2-10½ Standard Acres in the abovementioned village. It may be remembered that the order was passed in ignorance of the factum of death of Buta Singh and had been passed against a dead person. When the appellants came to know of the order, they preferred an appeal against the same which was rejected by the order of Shri Gurdial Singh, Assistant Settlement Commissioner with powers of Settlement Commissioner, dated December 16, 1964.

A further petition for revision of that order filed by the appellants was dealt with by Shri J. M. Tandon, Chief Settlement Commissioner, Punjab, Jullundur, on September 1, 1965. The area which had been retrieved from the appellants in pursuance of the order of the Managing Officer having been found by the Chief Settlement Commissioner to be more than what could be taken away from them under the impugned order, the case was remanded to the Naib Tahsildar (Sales)-cum-Managing Officer, Nakodar, with a direction to find out the quantum of land which was to be retrieved in implementation of the cancellation order. Respondents Nos. 5 and 6 who had in the meantime bid for the retrieved area at an auction were given the option to treat the entire auction in their favour as cancelled or to retain the balance of the area along with the proportionate price of the land which had to be restored in the name of Buta Singh. It was in the abovementioned circumstances that the three sons of Buta

Singh, the appellants before us, filed Civil Writ 2917 of 1965, in this Court,

2. The first contention advanced on behalf of the appellants before the learned Single Judge at the hearing of the writ petition was to the effect that the cancellation of the allotment without giving the allottee a reasonable opportunity of being heard, as provided in Rule 102 of the Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Rules, 1955, was illegal and all the impugned orders were, therefore liable to be set aside. It was not disputed at any stage that the notice of the proposed cancellation was issued to a dead person, that the same was not served on appellants Nos. 1 and 2, and that no notice was issued to any of the appellants and none of them appeared before the Managing Officer. The contention of the appellants was rejected by the learned Single Judge on two grounds, viz. :—

- (i) that there was no merit in the contention of the appellants as they had been heard at the appellate and the revisional stages; and
- (ii) that the point of non-service of notice had not been raised by the appellants before the departmental authorities.

3. The only other argument addressed to the learned Single Judge on behalf of the appellants was that even if the impugned orders of cancellation were upheld, the petitioners were entitled to purchase the excess area and the department was bound to give them an option to do so. The learned Judge held that this matter had to be dealt with according to the rules and instructions of the department and all that could be done by this Court was to direct the authorities concerned to consider the application of the writ petitioners for purchase of their land after keeping in view the rights of the auction-purchasers. It is against the judgment of the learned Single Judge dismissing the writ petition of the appellants on the abovesaid two grounds that the present appeal has been filed by the unsuccessful writ petitioners under Cl. 10 of the Letters Patent of this Court.

4-6. Mr. Baldev Singh Jawanda, learned Advocate for the appellants, submitted that both the grounds on which the main contention of the appellants on the merits of the controversy was rejected by the learned Single Judge are erroneous in law. The cancellation of the allotment was admittedly made under Rule 102. The order could be deemed to have been passed only under Cl. (d) of that rule. It is only R. 102 which authorised the Managing Officer to cancel the allotment in the circumstances enumerated in Cls. (a) to (d) of that rule. The exercise of jurisdiction under that rule is, however, subject to the statutory proviso to that rule which is in the following terms:—

“Provided that no action shall be taken under this rule unless the allottee or the lessee, as the case may be, has been given a reasonable opportunity of being heard.”

The requirements of the proviso are mandatory. Any order passed under Rule 102 without satisfying the requirements of the proviso would be without jurisdiction. The first contention of Mr. Jawanda, the learned counsel for the appellants, is that the hearing afforded to the appellants at the appellate and revisional stages was no substitute for the hearing required to be afforded by the Managing Officer before passing an order under Rule 102. Counsel is no doubt supported in this submission by an authoritative pronouncement of their Lordships of the Federal Court in Suraj Narain Anand v. North-West Frontier Province, AIR 1942 FC 3. In that case it was held as follows:—

“In theory as well as in practice, there is a well-marked difference between a decision given by an officer who acts in the consciousness that he is primarily responsible for the investigation and decision of the case and the act of one who is expected only to satisfy himself that another officer who had the primary responsibility has properly dealt with the case. The distinction seems to us one of substance, and is not merely formal or technical.”

6. With the greatest respect to the learned Single Judge, we are unable to agree in the face of the abovementioned pronouncement of the Federal Court that the mandatory requirements of the proviso to Rule 102 could be said to have been satisfied by the hearing afforded to the appellants at the appellate and revisional stages. Moreover, in my opinion, the original order of the Managing Officer which had been passed against a dead person was, in the nature of things, a nullity; and a nullity could not be made valid by its being upheld by the appellate or revisional authorities.

7. We also find great force in the second submission of the learned counsel for the appellants. He has argued that the non-raising of a fundamental and jurisdictional point of this nature before the departmental authorities is not an absolute bar to the matter being urged for the first time in writ proceedings. A point of law not raised before the Industrial Tribunal was allowed to be raised by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in an appeal by special leave against the award of the Tribunal in Alembic Chemical Works Co. Ltd. v. The Workmen, AIR 1961 SC 647, on the ground that it arose on admitted facts. In Badri Prasad v. Nagarmal, AIR 1939 SC 559, their Lordships of the Supreme Court held that no Court can enforce as valid that which competent enactments have declared shall not be valid, nor is obedience to such an enactment a thing from which a Court can be dispensed by the consent of the parties, or by a failure to plead or to argue the point at the outset. Each case depends on its own facts in this respect. On the admitted facts of this case, we are unable to hold that a patently invalid order should be allowed to hold the field merely because a fatal defect therein was not pleaded by the appellants in the departmental proceedings.

8. Both the grounds on which relief was refused to the appellants by the learned Single Judge having thus been found by us to be not sustainable on the facts of this case, the impugned order of the Managing Officer, dated March 29, 1963 (Annexure 'A'), and the orders of the appellate and revisional authorities upholding the same have to be set aside as being violative of the statutory proviso to R. 102 and we accordingly quash the same.

9. In the view we have taken of the main point canvassed before us on behalf of the appellants, it is really not necessary to go into the second point relating to the right claimed by the appellants to purchase any area which may ultimately be found to be with them in excess of their entitlement. In fairness to the learned counsel for the appellants, it may be noticed that he wanted to argue on the basis of a Single Bench judgment of this Court in Ram Singh v. The Chief Settlement Commr. (Rural) Punjab, 11 R. (1963) 1 Punjab and Haryana 554, that his clients have a legal right to acquire such land by purchase. As observed by the learned Single Judge these matters have to be raised before the appropriate departmental authorities to whom the appellants shall have to apply for permission to purchase the excess area, if any, which may ultimately be found to be with them.

10. For the foregoing reasons this appeal is allowed though without any order as to costs; the orders of the Managing Officer, the appellate authority and the Chief Settlement Commissioner, are set aside, and it is left open to the appropriate Managing Officer to take up, if necessary, the question of determination and cancellation of any area allotted to the appellants in excess of their entitlement after giving due notice and adequate opportunity to the appellants to show cause against the proposed action in accordance with law.

MEHAR SINGH, C. J. : 11. I agree.

Appeal allowed.

D. K. MAHAJAN, J.:— This order will dispose of Civil Writ Petitions No. 2820.
 2858, 3090 and 3091 of 1969. The petitioners are mainly Directors of the Cooperative Banks and have filed the present petitions under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution of India, to challenge the vires of Punjab Co-operative Societies (Amendment) Ordinance, 1969 (Ordinance
 No. 10 of 1969) which Ordinance has later on been made Law (Punjab Co-operative Societies (Amendment) Act, 1969) (Punjab Act 25 of 1969). Sections Nos. 4, 7, 10 and 11 of the Ordinance and now Sections Nos. 4, 6, 9 and 10 of the Act, are being challenged in these petitions. The main grounds of attack which were argued before us are:—

- (1) That the Punjab Legislature is not competent to make Law pertaining to Banking Corporations. Co-operative Societies doing banking business are Banking Corporations and, therefore, the Amending Ordinance and the Amending Act, which have replaced it, are ultra vires the Constitution so far as the Banking Co-operative Societies are concerned.

- (2) That the exercise of the power by the State Legislature in enacting the Amending Act and the promulgation of the Ordinance by the Governor are a colourable exercise of power so far as the Banking Co-operative Societies are concerned.
- (3) That the Ordinance as well as the Amending Act are violative of Articles 14 and 19 of the Constitution of India.

2. It may be mentioned that only the first ground of attack was really pressed. The two grounds of attack have been merely stated to be rejected. We have been unable to see how the Act or the Ordinance are a colourable exercise of power, whereas the complete answer to the 3rd ground of attack is furnished by Art. 31-A of the Constitution of India. Therefore, we only propose to deal with the facts of Civil Writ Petition No. 2820 of 1969 in order to bring out the controversy pertaining to the first ground. It is conceded that whatever our decision is in this petition it will conclude the other three petitions. We have not thought it necessary to advert to the facts of the remaining three petitions.

3. In Civil Writ No. 2820 of 1969, the petitioners are the Directors of Central Co-operative Bank Ltd., Ropar — hereinafter called the Bank. This Bank was registered under the Punjab Co-operative Societies Act, 1961. Petitioners Nos. 1, 2, 4 & 5, namely, Sant Sadhu Singh, S. Jagir Singh, S. Gurdev Singh & S. Sarwan Singh respectively, were elected Directors of the Bank in an election held on the 9th of May, 1969. They were elected unopposed. Petitioner No. 3, Dr. Roy Bikram Chand, was elected unopposed on the 13th of August, 1968, whereas petitioner No. 6, S. Karam Singh, was elected as a Director of the Bank on the 27th of September, 1968. According to the bye-laws of the Bank the Board of Directors is elected for a period of three years and 1/3rd of the Directors retire annually in rotation. The Bank was established in the year 1927 with a nominal capital. Its present working capital is over two crores. The Punjab Government have also subscribed to the share capital of the Bank to the extent of about 20 lacs. It has also nominated three Directors as members of the Board of Directors under Section 26 of the Punjab Co-operative Societies Act, 1961. It is claimed that by reason of the Ordinance and the Amending Act, the rights and powers of the share-holders in managing the co-operative Banks have been considerably curtailed and the Registrar of the Co-operative Societies has taken over completely the control of the Societies. It is also averred that the reason for the Ordinance and the Amending Act is to deprive the control which was with the Congress Party and make it over to the Akali Party.

4. Reverting to the main ground of attack, namely, that the Punjab Legislature has no power to enact a Law pertaining to Co-operative Societies doing Banking business, it is not disputed that the Ordinance as well as the Amending Act are fully within the competence of the State Legislature so far as the other co-operative Societies (i.e. Societies not engaged in Banking business) are concerned. In order to appreciate the contentions that have been advanced by the learned counsel for the petitioners, it will be proper to refer to Schedule VII, List I, Entries Nos 43, 44 and 45, List II, Entry No 32. These entries are reproduced below for facility of reference.

"List I

Entry No 43 Incorporation, regulation and winding up of trading corporations, including banking, insurance and financial corporations but not including co-operative societies

No 44 Incorporation, regulation and winding up of corporations, whether trading or not, with objects not confined to one State, but not including universities,

No 45 Banking.

"List II

Entry No 32 Incorporation, regulation and winding up of corporations, other than those specified in List I, and universities; unincorporated trading, literary, scientific, religious and other societies and associations, co-operative societies"

5. On the basis of these entries the argument of the learned counsel for the petitioners is that entry No 43 clearly confers the power of regulation of Corporations including Corporations doing banking business in the Central Parliament and only those Co-operative Societies are excluded from entry No 43 which are not doing the business of banking. This fact, according to the learned counsel, finds further support if entry No 32, List II is taken into consideration. That entry only brings those Corporations within the purview of the legislative power of the State Legislature which are not specified in List I. As Banking Corporations are specified in List I, Entry No 43, any legislation pertaining to banking, necessarily falls within the ambit of List I, regarding which only the Central Parliament can legislate. It is also urged that in view of entry No 45 List I any legislation which affects banking would have to be undertaken by the Central Parliament and it will not be within the competence of State Legislature to legislate about matters pertaining to banking.

6. So far as the State counsel is concerned, his contention is that no matter what business the Co-operative Societies are doing including the banking business, they were specifically taken out from entry No. 43, List I and are put in List II, Entry No 32. Therefore, the State Legislature has full powers to legislate about Co-operative Societies irrespective of the fact whether they are doing banking business or not.

7. It is common ground that Co-operative Societies are Corporations. This has been conceded by the learned counsel representing both the parties in view of Supreme Court decision in Board of Trustees, Ayurvedic and Unani Tibia College, Delhi v State of Delhi (New Delhi Administration), AIR 1962 SC 458, that a Co-operative Society is a Corporation and we have, therefore, proceeded on that basis.

8. Before proceeding to deal with the respective contentions of the learned counsel for the parties, it may be mentioned that any legislation regarding the banking business as such can only be undertaken under entry No. 45, List I, whereas regulation of Corporations doing Business of Banking falls under entry No 43. But Co-operative Societies are excluded from this entry and have been put in entry No. 32, List II, Schedule VII. This is also evident from the Banking Companies Act, as amended up to date, and the Reserve Bank of India Act. The Co-operative Societies doing banking business are put on par so far as entry No 45, List I is concerned, with other banking institutions. While construing entry No. 45, the Federal Court of India in Bank of Commerce, Ltd., Khulna v. Nripendra Nath Datta, AIR 1945 FC 7, observed as follows:—

"On a reasonable construction, the entry must be limited to laws which affect the conduct of the business of banks qua banks."

Their Lordships were considering entry No. 38, List I of the Government of India Act, 1935, which is in these terms:—

"Banking, that is to say, the conduct of banking business by corporations other than corporations owned or controlled by a Federated State and carrying on business only within that State."

9. This entry more or less corresponds to entry No. 45 in List I, Schedule VII of the Constitution of India. The entry corresponding to entries Nos. 43 and 44 in List I, Schedule VII of the Constitution of India is entry No. 33 in List I of the Government of India Act, 1935. Entry No. 33 is in the following terms:—

"Corporations, that is to say, the Incorporation, regulation and winding-up of trading corporations, including banking, insurance and financial corporations, but not including corporations owned or controlled by a Federated State and carrying on business only within that State or co-operative societies, and of corporations whether trading or not, with objects not confined to one unit."

10. Their Lordships of the Supreme Court in Gujarat University, Ahmedabad v. Krishna Rangnath Mudholkar, 1963 Supp (1) SCR 112 at page 141 = (AIR 1963 SC 703 at page 716), in the matter of construction of entries in Schedule VII observed:—

"Item No. 66 is a legislative head and in interpreting it, unless it is expressly or of necessity found conditional by the words used therein, a narrow or restricted interpretation will not be put upon the generality of the words. Power to legislate on a subject should normally be held to extend to all ancillary or subsidiary matters which can fairly and reasonably be said to be comprehended in that subject."

11. In Banarasi Dass v. The Wealth Tax Officer, Special Circle, Meerut, AIR 1965 SC 1387, their Lordships of the Supreme Court relying on United Provinces v. Mst. Atiqa Begum, AIR 1941 FC 16, observed that the relevant words used in the entries of the Seventh Schedule must receive the widest interpretation. It was also observed:—

"Another rule of construction which is also well established is that it may not be reasonable to import any limitation in interpreting a particular Entry in the List by comparing the said Entry or contrasting it with any other Entry in that very List. While the Court is determining the scope of the area covered by a particular Entry, the Court must interpret the relevant words in the Entry in a natural way and give the said words the widest interpretation. What the Entries purport to do is to describe the area of legislative competence of the different legislative bodies, and so, it would be unreasonable to approach the task of interpretation in a narrow or restrictive manner."

12. In Calcutta Gas Co. (Proprietary) Ltd. v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1962 SC 1014, their Lordships, while reiterating the earlier propositions, observed:—

"But some of the entries in the different lists or in the same list may overlap and sometimes may also appear to be in direct conflict with each other. It is then the duty of the Court to reconcile the entries and bring about harmony between them. The underlying principle in such cases is that a general power ought not to be so construed as to make a nullity of a particular power conferred by the same Constitution and operating in the same field, when by reading the former in a more restricted sense effect can be given to the latter in its ordinary and natural meaning. Thus, every attempt should be made to harmonize the apparently conflicting entries not only of different Lists but also of the same List and to reject that construction which will rob one of the entries of its entire content and make it nugatory."

13. Keeping in view these principles, the meaning and scope of entry No. 43 has to be ascertained. The contention of the learned counsel for the petitioners is that the various provisions in the Ordinance, which has been replaced by the Amending Act, impinge on the business of banking inasmuch as the entire control of the management is more or less vested with the Registrar and the right of the shareholders to elect their representatives has been taken away. This is so. It is evident that entry No. 43 and entry No. 45 relate to different heads of legislation. Whereas entry No. 45 gives the power to the Central Legislature to legislate qua banking business, entry No. 43, on the other hand, gives power to the Central Legislature to legislate regarding corporations. It is immaterial whether those Corporations were doing the banking business or not. In other words, Central Legislature is competent to legislate with regard to Corporations engaged in the business of banking, in view of entry No. 43, List I. But so far as the Co-operative Societies are concerned, they were taken out of the ambit of entry No. 43 and put in entry No. 32, List II. The word 'regulation' in entry No. 43 is of a wide import and would include how a Co-operative Society is to work. In other words, it will include the constitution of a Co-operative Society and any matter relating to its constitution would naturally be the subject-matter of legislation by the State Legislature.

In a broad sense, the controlling of the working of a Society doing banking business will in some measure concern the business of banking and thus may bring it within the ambit of entry No. 45, List I. Thus there would be some overlapping. But in order to give a harmonious construction to both the entries, Nos. 43 and 44, it must be held that only business of banking as such falls within the ambit of entry No. 45; whereas the incorporation of the Corporations and other matters relating to them fall within the ambit of entry No. 43. Therefore, the constitution of the Societies and their working would have fallen within the ambit of entry No. 43 but for the fact that Co-operative Societies are excluded from its purview. The very fact that in entry No. 43, Corporations engaged in the business of banking are specifically mentioned, it clearly follows that Co-operative Societies doing that business were taken out of entry

No. 43, List I. and deliberately put in entry No. 32, List II. In view of the clear wording of the two entries, I am unable to agree with the contention of the learned counsel for the petitioners, that the State Legislature has no jurisdiction to regulate the functioning of the Co-operative Societies engaged in the business of Banking.

14. For the reasons recorded above, these petitions fail and are dismissed. There will be no order as to costs.

S. S. SANDHAWALIA, J.:— 15. I agree.

Petitions dismissed.

D. D. Jain, for Advocate-General, Punjab, for Appellant; Amar Dutt as Amicus Curiae, for Respondents.

KOSHIAL, J.:— Section 397 of the Indian Penal Code reads:

"If, at the time of committing robbery or dacoity, the offender uses any deadly weapon, or causes grievous hurt to any person, or attempts to cause death or grievous hurt to any person, the imprisonment with which such offender shall be punished shall not be less than seven years."

The question referred to the Full Bench involves the interpretation of the word "uses" occurring in the section and has arisen thus. Chand Singh, Nazir Singh and Gurdev Singh were jointly tried by Shri Banwari Lal Singal, Additional Sessions Judge, Bhatinda, for an offence under Section 397 of the Indian Penal Code. The case for the prosecution was that on the 22nd of February, 1965, they waylaid certain residents of village Kalian Sukha in Police Station Notbana while armed with a pistol, a gandasa and a gandhali respectively and after Chand Singh accused had given a threat to the victims that he would shoot them if they made any noise, the victims were robbed. No allegation was, however, made that any of the accused levelled or brandished his weapon at the victims or otherwise handled it, apart from having it on his person during the course of the robbery. The learned Additional Sessions Judge found the case against Gurdev Singh to be doubtful and acquitted him. In respect of the two other accused he held:

"In this case there is no evidence that Modan Singh, Gurdial Kaur or Hamir Kaur were given any injuries by the accused. There is no evidence either that the accused used the deadly weapons at the time of the occurrence nor there is evidence that they attempted to cause death or grievous hurt to the aforesaid witnesses. In this case the accused put the witnesses Modan Singh, Gurdial Kaur and Hamir Kaur in fear of causing injuries to them when they removed their ornaments. The accused committed extortion by putting the aforesaid persons in fear of death and hurt and wrongfully restrained Modan Singh. In these circumstances I am of the view that both the accused Chand Singh and Nazir Singh are proved guilty under Section 392, Indian Penal Code. I consequently convict both the accused under this section."

Being dissatisfied with the acquittal of Chand Singh and Nazir Singh under Section 397 of the Indian Penal Code, the State preferred to this Court Criminal Appeal No. 943 of 1966 which came up for hearing before a Division Bench consisting of my learned brother Jindra Lal, J. and myself. On the authority of Nagar Singh v. Emperor, AIR 1933 Lah 35, Chandra Nath v. Emperor, AIR 1932 Oudh 103, Inder Singh v. Emperor, AIR 1934 Lah 522 = 35 Pun LR 555, In re Somanna, AIR 1941 Mad 708 and Govind Dipaji More v. State, AIR 1956 Bom 353, it was contended before the Division Bench that the words "uses any deadly weapon" occurring in Section 397 of the Code should be construed in a wide sense so as to include not merely acts of cutting, stabbing and shooting, etc. as the case may be, but also of carrying a deadly weapon for the purpose of overawing the person robbed so that if the offender merely armed himself with a deadly weapon during the course of a robbery and did not perform any further act in respect of it, his case would be covered by the provisions of Sec. 397. All the cases above mentioned with the exception of AIR 1933 Lah 35 as well as Nazar Shah v. Emperor, AIR 1926 Sind 150, were, however, distinguished by me as a member of another Division Bench consisting of Sodhi J. and myself in State v. Puran Singh Criminal Appeal No. 1087 of 1966, D/-3-6-1968 (Punj) with the following observations:—

"We are afraid, however, that none of these authorities supports the case of the State inasmuch as in every one of them the weapon in question was actually handled by the culprit concerned in such a manner as to cause an apprehension in the mind of the victim that he would be subjected to its actual operation if he did not submit to the demand of the offender. In the Sind authority an actual blow with the handle of the weapon was inflicted on the victim. In each of the Bombay & Madras cases, the victim was relieved of property 'at the point of knife'. In the case from Lahore a gun was the weapon in question and was fired in the air, obviously to scare the victim and to make the threat given by the offender fully effective. In the Oudh case the victim was robbed at the point of a revolver. The facts of the instant case are materially different in so far as there is no allegation that the gun and the gandasa, with which Puran Singh and Ajmer Singh were respectively armed, were so much as moved from the position which they occupied with respect to the bodies of their holders. If either of these weapons had been pointed or brandished at any of the victims, such act of the offender may have been construed as a user of the weapon but we have not been shown any authority laying down that mere possession of a weapon during robbery amounts to its user within the meaning of Section 397 of the Indian Penal Code. Nor can we otherwise agree with the contention put forward on behalf of the State as, in the absence of a special definition, the word 'uses' occurring in Section 397 of the Indian Penal Code must be given its ordinary dictionary meaning which, admittedly, would not embrace mere possession."

It was further observed by me then:—

"This view gains support also from the language of Section 398 of the Indian Penal Code in which the word 'possession' has been employed in relation to an attempt to commit robbery. That section states:—

"If, at the time of attempting to commit robbery or dacoity, the offender is armed with any deadly weapon, the imprisonment with which such offender shall be punished shall not be less than seven years."

"It is obvious that the Legislature intended to differentiate between mere possession and actual user of a weapon during the course of a robbery. Had it been otherwise, as is contended by the learned counsel for the State, the word 'possession' would have occurred in Section 397 as it occurs in the next succeeding section. We have no hesitation, therefore, in repelling the contention raised on behalf of the State."

(It may be pointed out here that in these observations the mention at two places of the word "possession" is obviously due to a slip, a reference having really been intended at both the places to the word "armed").

The State appeal in Criminal Appeal No. 1087 of 1966, D/-3-6-1968 (Punj) was, therefore, dismissed.

Although Criminal Appeal No. 1087 of 1966, D/-3-6-1968 (Punj) was the only Division Bench authority of this Court brought to our notice at the hearing of Criminal Appeal No. 943 of 1966, we were of the opinion that in view of the importance of the question it should be finally decided by a larger Bench and that is how it was referred to a Full Bench.

2. Arguments have been addressed to us at length by Shri D. D. Jain, on behalf of the State and Shri Amar Datt appearing amicus curiae for the respondents. After giving my most anxious consideration to the same, I have come to the conclusion that the view expressed by me in Criminal Appeal No. 1087 of 1966, D/-3-6-1968 (Punj) (supra) is correct.

3. For a proper discussion of the subject, the provisions of Sections 392, 393, 394 and 398 may also be set out here in extenso:

"392. Whoever commits robbery shall be punished with rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine, and, if the robbery be committed on the highway between sunset and sunrise, the imprisonment may be extended to fourteen years"

"393 Whoever attempts to commit robbery shall be punished with rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine"

"394 If any person, in committing or in attempting to commit robbery, voluntarily causes hurt, such person and any other person jointly concerned in committing or attempting to commit such robbery shall be punished with imprisonment for life or with rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine"

"398 If, at the time of attempting to commit robbery or dacoity, the offender is armed with any deadly weapon, the imprisonment with which such offender shall be punished shall not be less than seven years"

It would be seen that Section 392 prescribes the punishment for simple robbery and Section 393 for a simple attempt to commit robbery. Section 394 deals with slightly aggravated forms of the offences mentioned in Sections 392 and 393 while Sections 397 and 398 cover cases of still more aggravated forms of robbery and an attempt to commit it respectively and prescribe a minimum punishment of rigorous imprisonment for seven years. On behalf of the State, it is pointed out that if the word 'uses' as occurring in Section 397 is not given a very wide meaning so as to include the act of being armed for the purpose of overawing, the anomaly would follow that while in the case of a mere attempt to commit a robbery, the fact that the offender is armed with a deadly weapon would attract the minimum punishment provided for in Section 398, the case of a completed offence of robbery by the same offender would fall only within the ambit of the general Sec. 392 which deals with simple robbery, and not under Section 397. The anomaly would no doubt be there but it appears to me that on a proper construction of Sec. 397 the wider meaning cannot be given to the word "uses".

4. In Criminal Appeal No 1087 of 1966, D/-3-6-1968 (Punji) (supra) I had occasion to point out that in the absence of a special definition, the word "uses" occurring in Section 397 must be given its ordinary dictionary meaning which, admittedly, would not embrace mere possession. However, a display of an arm calculated to overawe others would be something more than mere possession and may well be covered by the ordinary dictionary meaning of the word "use". Webster's Third

New International Dictionary gives, inter alia, the following meanings of the verb "use":

"* * * to put into action or service; have recourse to or enjoyment of; Employ * * * to carry out a purpose or action by means of; make instrumental to an end or process; apply to advantage; turn to account. Utilize * * *"

According to Corpus Juris Secundum (Volume XC1-pp. 518-519) the verb "to use" is variously defined as:

"to employ, to employ for any purpose; to employ for the attainment of some purpose or end; to avail one's self of; to convert to one's service; to put to one's use or benefit, to employ for the accomplishment of a purpose to derive service from; to use so as to derive service therefrom; to put into service or make use of; to put to a purpose; to turn to account."

It cannot thus be said that when an offender wears arms so as to overawe others, he does not, in a wide sense of the word, "use" them. The word has, however, to be construed in reference to the context in which it appears so that the language employed in the succeeding Section 398 becomes important. That section employs the term "armed" which again must be given its dictionary meaning in the absence of a special definition. According to Webster's Third New International Dictionary, "armed" means, inter alia, furnished with weapons of offence or defence. If this meaning is adopted for the interpretation of Section 398, an offender, who has on his person, whether displayed or concealed, a deadly weapon, at the time of attempting to commit robbery or dacoity would be liable to punishment under the section. It may be debatable whether the section at all applies to a case of concealed arms but there can be no doubt that a display of an arm by an offender attempting to commit robbery would fall within the ambit of the section. And if the interpretation put on the word "uses" occurring in Sec. 397 is to be as wide as has been contended on behalf of the State, then the question would arise as to why the Legislature adopted two different words in two sections occurring in the same Chapter of the Code and following one another, to signify the same thing. The fact that the Legislature employed the word "uses" in Section 397 and the word "armed" in Section 398 indicates unmistakably that the intention was to differentiate between the case of a person who merely carries a weapon and of one who makes a further use of it. Had it been otherwise, the word "armed" would have been employed in S 397 as it was in Section 398.

5. For the construction that I have put on the word "uses", support is available in AIR 1932 Oudh 103, cited by Shri Jain himself and I may quote at length therefrom:

"This construction no doubt leads to this anomaly that whereas the legislature has prescribed a minimum punishment of seven years in cases of an attempt to commit robbery by an offender who is armed with a deadly weapon, yet there is no such minimum punishment prescribed when the offence has been completed by the same offender. In the latter case where the offender is armed with a deadly weapon but has not used it, he can be dealt with only under Section 392 and it is possible for him to get off with a smaller punishment than if he had stopped short of an attempt to commit the offence. I can only make note of this anomaly. It is for the legislature to remove it. But the fact that such an anomaly arises cannot justify my interpreting Section 398 against the clear language of the section so as to make it applicable to a case in which an offence of robbery or dacoity is an accomplished fact. However, I am of the opinion that as in cases where the offender is armed with a deadly weapon, the legislature has prescribed the minimum sentence of seven years for an offence of an attempt to commit robbery, it would not be proper to inflict a lesser punishment if the offender is found guilty of robbery. Section 392 provides that in cases of simple robbery the punishment may be for a term which may extend to ten years. It no doubt allows the Court discretion as regards the minimum punishment to be awarded but when the offence is attended with circumstances which would make the attempt to commit it punishable with the minimum sentence of seven years, it would not be a proper exercise of discretion to award a lesser sentence when the offence has been accomplished."

6. A similar view was taken in Kartar Singh v. State of Vindhya Pradesh, AIR 1952 Vind Pra 42:

"The mere fact of carrying a fire-arm or other deadly weapon will not attract Section 397, I. P. C. That section does not say 'carries or is armed with' but says 'uses any deadly weapon, or causes grievous hurt or attempts to cause death or grievous hurt to any person'. The distinction between 'using' and 'to be armed' is a material distinction and has been observed in the wording of Sections 397 and 398, I. P. C. The latter section covers attempts only to commit dacoity or robbery when 'being armed' is by itself sufficient. But if it is a case of committing robbery or dacoity the weapon has to be used or it should be an overt act, which amounts to attempting to cause death, or a grievous hurt, or of actually causing grievous hurt."

I may make it clear here that I do not at all suggest that the weapon with which an offender is armed during a robbery or dacoity must be used for actually cutting, stabbing or shooting before he can be said to have "used" it. On the other hand, I am of the opinion that the word "uses" should be given the widest possible meaning subject to the limitation that it is not equated with the word "armed". If this connection I pointed out in Criminal Appeal No. 1087 of 1966, D/-3-6-1968 (Punj) (supra):

"If either of these weapons had been pointed or brandished at any of the victims, such act of the offender may have been construed as a user of the weapon * * * * *"

I would repeat this opinion here and say that if the offender levels, points or brandishes the weapon at his victim or does any other overt act in relation to it which act involves something more than mere wearing or carrying of the weapon, he would be deemed to have "used" the weapon within the meaning of S. 397.

7. I may now deal with the authorities relied upon for the State. In Nga I v. Emperor, (1912) 13 Cri LJ 267 (Low Bur), the appellant took a gaung baung from the complainant by overawing him with a dagger with which, however no stabbing was done and which was merely raised threateningly so as to compel the complainant to part with his property. Thus although the act of the appellant involved something more than mere carrying of the weapon for the purpose of overawing the person robbed, it was held that such a carrying would be covered by the term "uses" occurring in Section 397. At the time of admitting the appeal, Twomey, J. observed thus:

"It may be argued that to 'use' a stabbing weapon is to stab some person with it, to 'use' a cutting weapon is to cut some person with it, and to 'use' a gun is to shoot at some person with it. According to this narrow interpretation, brandishing a dagger or levelling a gun at a man might be regarded as merely threatening to use or preparing to use it, not as actually using it. But it is not clear that the word 'uses' in Section 397 should be interpreted with such strictness. The very next Sec. 398 imposes a minimum punishment of seven years' imprisonment on persons convicted of merely carrying a deadly weapon when attempting to rob. It seems probable that the Legislature intended to impose the same minimum where the robbery is actually completed. I am inclined to think, therefore, that the word 'uses' in Section 397 should be construed in a wide sense so as to include not merely cutting, stabbing, shooting (as the case may be) but also carrying the weapon for the purpose of overawing the person robbed."

It is no doubt at first sight remarkable that wider language is employed in Section 397 ('uses any deadly weapon') than in Section 398 ('is armed with any deadly weapon'). The explanation is apparently that in attempted robberies, it is often difficult to prove any 'use' of the deadly weapon except the mere fact that the accused carried it, whereas in a case of completed robbery it generally happens that the accused not only carries the deadly weapon but also overawes the person robbed or even stabs, cuts or shoots at him.

The wider view of Section 397 is supported by a passage in Maxwell's Interpretation of Statutes, 4th Edition, page 419:— 'If a man walks with a gun with intent to kill game, he 'uses' the gun for that purpose without firing, within the statute which makes using a gun with that intent penal.' English and American authorities are given for this interpretation."

The case was later decided by the learned Judge as follows:

"If the accused had merely attempted to take the complainant's property by overawing him with a dagger but (owing to infirmity of purpose on his own part or resistance on the part of the complainant) had not carried out his design, he would undoubtedly be liable to the minimum punishment provided in Sec. 398. The Legislature cannot have intended that if the criminal goes a step farther and actually accomplishes his purpose, he should thereby establish a claim to more lenient treatment. It cannot have been intended that a criminal should be urged to complete his criminal purpose by the reflection that if he stops short at an attempt, he must get seven years, while if he completes the offence he may get off with imprisonment for two or three years."

I have already conceded that the interpretation adopted by me leads to an anomaly but then I cannot agree with the view that the meaning of the word "use" can be so stretched as to cover a case of mere carrying of arms nor do I think that Twomey, J. meant to place any such interpretation on the word. In view of the facts before him, I think he merely meant to say that the case with which he was dealing would be covered by Section 397 even though the dagger had not been employed for actual cutting or stabbing. I may further state with all respect to him that I do not see eye to eye with him in the explanation given by him for the employment of different language in the two sections, 397 and 398. Even if it be accepted that in cases of attempted robbery it is often difficult to prove any use of the deadly weapon except the mere fact that the accused carried it while in cases of completed robbery it generally happens that the deadly weapon is not only carried but is employed to overawe

the person robbed, it would be no reason for the employment by the Legislature of different words in the two sections, if the meaning conveyed is the same. I may also point out that the language employed in Section 397 ("uses any deadly weapon") is not wider as was assumed by Twomey J. but narrower than the one employed in Section 398 ("is armed with any deadly weapon").

The citation from Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes (which is relied upon before us independently of (1912) 13 Cri LJ 267 (Low Bur). and is repeated at page 270 of the 11th edition of the treatise also does not appear to advance the cause of the State as the case mentioned therein was not one under Section 397 of the Indian Penal Code which has to be interpreted in a special sense in view of the language employed in the succeeding section. Had the word "armed" not been employed in Section 398, I would have had no difficulty in falling in line with Twomey, J.

Another reason why I do not find myself in agreement with Twomey, J. is that even if the widest possible meaning is given to the word "uses", the anomaly does not disappear; for, if a person attempts robbery while concealing a deadly weapon on his person, he would be liable to the minimum punishment prescribed in Section 398 even though if he completed the robbery, his case would stand covered not by Section 398 but by Section 392 unless the word "armed" is construed in a narrow sense as meaning "armed ostentatiously".

8. (1912) 13 Cri LJ 267 (Low Bur) appears to be the basic authority in support of the contention of Shri Jain and AIR 1926 Sind 150, merely follows it. It may be stated, however, as was pointed out by me in Criminal Appeal No. 1087 of 1966, D/- 3-6-1968 (Punjab) that in the Sind case there was an actual blow with the handle of the axe given by the offender to the victim of the robbery and it was in that view of the matter that the case was held to fall under Section 397.

AIR 1932 Oudh 103, takes the same view of the matter as mine, although it does lay down that it would be putting much too narrow an interpretation upon the words "uses any deadly weapon" occurring in Section 397 to say that a person does not use a revolver unless he fires it and that the words are wide enough to include a case in which the person levels his revolver against another person in order to overawe him. The case is no authority for the proposition that merely because the offender is armed at the time of committing a robbery, he would be guilty of an offence under Section 397.

The same remarks apply to Public Prosecutor v. Nagappan Servai, AIR 1941 Mad 718, in which the weapon in question was a knife with which hurt was caused to the victim, to AIR 1956 Bom 353, wherein the victim was deprived of cash at the point of a knife and to AIR 1934 Lah 522, in which the gun in question was fired in the air to scare the victim. Incidentally I may mention that the authority last cited appears to support the view taken by me although it holds that Section 397 covers the case of a person who "displays a deadly weapon to frighten his victims or their neighbours or who makes use of any deadly weapon for other similar purposes". One of the offenders in that case was armed with a kirpan. About him Jai Lal, J. who decided the case observed:

"The case of Nazir Singh, however, does not appear to be covered by Section 397, Indian Penal Code, as it has not been established that he made any use of the kirpan."

Obviously by using the expression "displays a deadly weapon to frighten his victims", the learned Judge meant that the offender should perform some overt act in relation to the weapon carried by him, apart from the act of being merely armed with it.

In AIR 1933 Lah 35, Agha Haidar, J. relying on AIR 1926 Sind 150 (supra) held that a robber who was armed only with a chhavi at the time of the robbery would undoubtedly inspire his victim with fear and paralyse the latter's power of resistance and that his case would fall within the ambit of Section 397. The judgment is a short one and I would respectfully differ from it for the reasons already stated.

In In re Theval Servai, AIR 1938 Mad 477, the appellants were armed with aruvals and in holding their case to fall within the provisions of Section 397 Horwill, J. held:

"* * * It is true that no injuries were caused by the aruvals; but it does not seem that the accused were merely in possession of aruvals. They held them in such a manner that P. W. 2, who was compelled to give up the jewels, was fully aware that the accused were armed with these aruvals. If robbers so exhibit dangerous weapons as to intend that by their exhibition of them, the persons robbed or sought to be robbed are likely to be further intimidated and that the commission of robbery might be facilitated the robbers can be punished under Section 397, although they did not actually inflict blows with these weapons. The application of Section 397 by the learned Assistant Sessions Judge was therefore correct."

It would appear, though it is not clear from the judgment, that the accused were not merely ostensibly armed with aruvals but made some further use of them in order to frighten their victims. If, however, that was not the case, I would respectfully differ from the view taken by Horwill, J. for the reasons given above.

The only other authority relied upon by Shri Jain is Shiv Narain v. State, (1964) 66 Pun LR 173, wherein Dua J. observed as follows:—

"My attention has in this connection been drawn to the language used in Section 398, Indian Penal Code, where the expression used is 'armed with any deadly weapon' as against the expression 'uses any deadly weapon' as used in Section 397. Prima facie the argument appears to be attractive. There are, however, decided cases where it has been held that the expression 'uses a deadly weapon' includes the carrying of a weapon for the purpose of overawing the person robbed. The argument urged on behalf of the appellants even otherwise is unsubstantial on the present record, as, in the case in hand, the guns have been used and this evidence has not been criticised before me."

It is clear that no definite opinion on the interpretation of Section 397 was expressed by Dua J. whose observations, even otherwise, are obiter.

9. In view of what I have said, I would answer the question referred to the Full Bench thus:

The phrase "uses any deadly weapon" occurring in Section 397 of the Indian Penal Code means performs in relation to the deadly weapon an overt act involving something more than merely wearing or carrying it, even though such wearing or carrying may be for the purpose of overawing others.

10. Before parting with this judgment I must express my appreciation of the assistance given to us by Shri Amar Datt, learned counsel for the respondents. He not only argued the point involved from various angles but did so ably and with lucidity.

HARBANS SINGH, J.: 11. I agree.

JINDRA LAL, J.: 12. I have had the benefit of perusing the answer proposed to be given in this reference by my learned brother, Koshal J., with whom my learned brother, Harbans Singh, J., has agreed. I regret my inability to agree to that answer and give my reasons for the same.

13. The question referred to the Full Bench involves the interpretation of the words "the offender uses any deadly weapon" occurring in Section 397, Indian Penal Code, which is in the following terms:—

"If, at the time of committing robbery or dacoity, the offender uses any deadly weapon, or causes grievous hurt to any person, or attempts to cause death or grievous hurt to any person, the imprisonment with which such offender shall be punished shall not be less than seven years."

14. I have no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that in the present case the accused had used their deadly weapons for the commission of the crime. My learned brother, Koshal J., has set out in his answer the meaning given to the word 'use' in Webster's Third New International Dictionary as under:—

to put into action or service have recourse to or enjoyment of: employ to carry out a purpose or action by means of make instrumental to an end or process apply to advantage turn to account utilize

Koshal J. has also noticed the definition of the words "to use" in Corpus Juris Secundum (Volume XCI-pp 518-519) as under—

"to employ, to employ for any purpose; to employ for the attainment of some purpose or end, to avail one's self of; to convert to one's service, to put to one's use or benefit, to employ for the accomplishment of a purpose, to derive service from, to use so as to derive service therefrom, to put into service or make use of, to put to a purpose, to turn to account."

In my view, therefore, the word "uses" in the context must mean making use of for the commission of an offence under Section 397, Indian Penal Code. I would follow with respect the meaning given to the word "uses" in Section 397, Indian Penal Code, by a Division Bench of the Bombay High Court in AIR 1956 Bom 353. A perusal of that judgment shows that the accused entered a shop with an open knife in his hand and at the point of the knife he demanded a sum of Rs 40 from one Umedmal. Umedmal denied that he had any money but the accused showed the knife to Umedmal with one hand and with the other hand picked up a currency note of Rs 5 from the Galla and went away after giving a threat to Umedmal and his companion Mangilal. On these facts it was held that an offence under Section 397, Indian Penal Code, had been made out. Their Lordships observed as under:—

"The word 'uses' in Section 397 is not intended to mean that the knife must be actually used for stabbing any person. If it is used for the purpose of producing such an impression upon the mind of a person that he will be compelled to part with his property, that will amount to using the weapon within the meaning of Section 397."

It is obvious that any other meaning given to the word "uses" in Section 397,

Indian Penal Code, would lead to an anomaly specially with respect to what is contained in Section 398. To my mind, if a person is induced with the help of a deadly weapon to part with the property, the accused certainly ought to be punished under Section 397, Indian Penal Code. One can think of a large number of cases where the weapon is not moved from its original position and not even handled but the requisite fear is induced in the mind of a victim with the result that he parts with his property.

Supposing an open knife is kept on a nearby table or a loaded pistol is kept nearby and the accused makes it quite plain to his victim that if necessary he will make 'use' of the weapon, then certainly the accused has used the weapon as contemplated in Section 397, Indian Penal Code. I am aware of the authorities which are against this view and which have been set out in the answer proposed to be given by my learned brothers. There are, however, observations to the contrary in some authorities in addition to the one cited by me above. In (1912) 13 Cri LJ 267 (Low Bur), it was held as under:—

"The words 'uses a deadly weapon' in Section 397, Indian Penal Code, include the carrying of a weapon for the purpose of overawing the person robbed."

Section 398 provides a minimum punishment for those who attempt to commit robbery 'armed with a deadly weapon' and the Legislature cannot have intended that a criminal should be urged to complete his purpose by the reflection that if he stops short at an attempt, the minimum imprisonment that can be inflicted on him under Section 398 is seven years, while if he completes the offence, he will not come within the provisions of Section 397, but may be sentenced to two or three years' imprisonment under Section 392."

In that case of course the weapon was raised threateningly to compel the complainant to part with his property. But the conclusion that I have come to is that there need be no movement of the deadly weapon, because movement of a weapon only indicates to the victim the intention of the accused. This can be achieved without moving the weapon at all and can even be done by a gesture. I can well imagine a person who has a pistol in a holster on his shoulder looking at the holster in a meaningful manner and asking the victim for his gold watch. If the victim parts with the gold watch in such circumstances I do not see any reason why it cannot be said that the accused has 'used' a deadly weapon for the achievement of his purpose. The legislature has deliberately used different words in Sections 397 and 398, Indian Penal Code, and Courts must try to harmonise the intent of the legislature and to reconcile the two sections. This can only be done if a wider meaning is given to the word "uses" than the one contended for by the learned counsel for the respondents.

The canon of statutory interpretation certainly is that ordinarily the Courts must give the dictionary meaning to the words used in a Statute unless by necessary implication that meaning cannot be given. In the present case, the dictionary meaning supports, in my view, the intent of the legislature which must have intended the word "uses" in Section 397, Indian Penal Code, to have a much wider scope than the word "armed" in Section 398. It appears to me that to fall within the ambit of Section 398, Indian Penal Code, an accused must be armed himself. He cannot be held guilty if his companion is armed or because an arm is lying nearby. The word 'uses' in Section 397, Indian Penal Code, has a wider import — the accused need not be armed himself and it is enough that he has made use of a deadly weapon. This is the only way in which Sections 397 and 398, Indian Penal Code, can be reconciled and harmonised. Maxwell on The Interpretation of Statutes, Eleventh Edition, at p. 193 says—

"Whenever the language of the legislature admits of two constructions and, if construed in one way, would lead to obvious injustice, the courts act upon the view that such a result could not have been intended, unless the intention had been manifested in express words."

Again at page 221, it is stated—

"Where the language of a statute, in its ordinary meaning and grammatical construction, leads to a manifest contradiction of the apparent purpose of the enactment, or to some inconvenience or absurdity, hardship or injustice presumably not intended, a construction may be put upon it which modifies the meaning of the words, and even the structure of the sentence. This may be done by departing from the rules of grammar, by giving an unusual meaning to particular words, by altering their collocation, or by rejecting them altogether, under the influence, no doubt, of an irresistible conviction that the legislature could not possibly have intended what its words signify, and that the modifications thus made are mere corrections of careless language and really give the true meaning."

15. It may be noted that the effort of the Courts should be to reconcile and harmonise the different provisions of the statute rather than to read it in such a way as to lead to absurdity.

16. Giving a restricted meaning to the word "uses" in Section 397, Indian Penal Code, does lead to an absurdity which cannot, in this case, be imputed to the legislature.

17. The anomaly would disappear if the word "uses" is given its proper meaning as indicated by me, i.e., that the necessary fear has been induced in the mind of the victim. Supposing an attempt is made at robbery while a person has kept a pistol near him, it may possibly be contended that he was not armed with the pistol but that could not detract from what I have stated above. All the authorities relevant to the point have been set out and discussed by my learned brother, Koshal J., and I need not refer to them again. The question is of first impression and as to what the legislature intended by the use of the word "use" in the Section under consideration. In my view, the proper dictionary meaning should be given to the word and given such meaning the word "uses" is of very wide connotation and cannot be legitimately restricted to its narrow meaning, i.e., the making actual physical use of it. I would, therefore, answer the question by saying that the word "uses" in Section 397, Indian Penal Code, is not intended to mean that the deadly weapon must be actually used for injuring a victim, if it is used for the purpose of producing such an impression upon the mind of the victim that he will be compelled to part with his property, that will amount to using the weapon within the meaning of Section 397, Indian Penal Code.

BY THE COURT— 18. The reply of the Full Bench will be as proposed by Mr. Justice Koshal in paragraph 9 of his judgment. The case will now go back to the D. B. for further action.

Answer accordingly.

1 Punj 564, Kishan Singh v. State of Punjab 4

B. S. Gupta, for Petitioner; S. Sarup for Advocate-General (Haryana) (for Nos. 1 & 2) and H. R. Aggarwal (for Nos. 3 to 5), for Respondents.

JUDGMENT: The petitioner, Bhagwana, and respondent 3, Jagde, are landowners in village Jandli Kalan, tehsil Fatehabad, district Hissar, while respondents 4 and 5, Roop Chand, and Chhabil Dass, are residents of village Khazuri-Jati. Both the villages adjoin each other. The lands of the petitioner and respondents 3 to 5, along with some others, are irrigated through an outlet R. D. 41250 (T. L-Tail Left), Khazuri Distributary of the Fatehabad Branch System. Respondents 3 to 5 irrigate their lands through a watercourse running along the line between rectangles Nos. 186 and 200, 201 and 200, 203 and 204 and 203 and 219, marked as L M B C on the copy of the Chak-plan attached to the petition as Annexure 'A'. This watercourse L M B C is working since the time Khazuri Distributary came into operation. The lands of the petitioner situate in Rectangles Nos. 199 and 205 are irrigated from a watercourse running along the eastern line of Rectangle No. 199 and Killa Nos. 5 and 6 of Rectangle No. 205 marked as L A.

2. On May 14, 1964 respondents 3 to 5 gave an application to the Sub-Divisional Canal Officer, respondent 2, praying, (i) that the existing watercourse L A be extended to the point marked A on the Chak-plan (Annexure 'A') along the eastern line of Killa Nos. 15, 16 and 25 of Rectangle No. 205, and (ii) that the abandoned watercourse A B be sanctioned so that it may join upto point C. Respondents 3 to 5 are the only persons interested in this matter but they secured the signatures of a number of other persons on the application. On receipt of this application the Sub-Divisional Canal Officer, respondent 2, referred the application to the Zildar, Bhuna, for a report after investigation. The Zildar, Bhuna, on September 18, 1964, recorded the statement of Jagde Lambardar, respondent 3, in support of the application and also obtained the signatures of Pandit Roop Chand, respondent 4, thereon. There is said to be a statement purporting to have been made by the petitioner on October 29, 1964 on the file of the case to the effect that the petitioner is not agreeable to the suggestion of extending the existing watercourse along Killa Nos. 15, 16 and 25 of Rectangle No. 205. Underneath this statement it has been noted that the petitioner refused to sign his statement. The petitioner alleges that he never knew about the investigation being made by the Zildar nor did he appear before him nor did he make any such statement. His grievance is that the Zildar made the record to favour respondents 3 to 5. On November 8, 1964, the Zildar, Bhuna, sent his report to the Sub-Divisional Canal Officer, recommending the extension of the existing watercourse as prayed for by respondents 3 to 5 in their application dated May 14, 1964. On receipt of the above report, the Sub-Divisional Canal Officer, on December 1, 1964, issued notices purporting to be under Section 30-A of the Northern India Canal and Drainage Act, 1873 (hereinafter called the Act), fixing December 22, 1964, as the date for hearing of the objections before him as Suniana Rest House. The petitioner states that although he was the most vitally affected person by the proposed action of the Sub-Divisional Canal Officer, no notice was ever sent to or served upon him nor were the mandatory provisions of law complied with. On December 22, 1964, the Sub-Divisional Canal Officer announced his decision sanctioning the watercourse L A and B C under Sections 30-A to 30-F of the Act subject to confirmation and modification by the Divisional Canal Officer, Tohana, respondent 1, as requested by respondents 3 to 5. A copy of the order is Annexure 'B' to the writ petition.

3. Thereafter, the Sub-Divisional Canal Officer submitted the papers of the case to the Divisional Canal Officer, Tohana, respondent 1, for his approval under Section 30-B (2) of the Act. The petitioner came to know about this matter from a person of his village and since he was adversely affected by the proposed recommendation of the Sub-Divisional Canal Officer, he approached the Divisional Canal Officer by way of appeal (although there is no provision of law providing for an appeal) in the hope that he would get justice from the Divisional Canal Officer who was to sanction that scheme proposed by the Sub-Divisional Canal Officer. The Divisional Canal Officer sanctioned the scheme by his order dated February 7, 1965 and a copy of this order is Annexure 'C' to the writ petition. The petitioner then filed the present writ petition in this Court on March 4, 1965, which was admitted the following day.

4. He has challenged the entire proceedings culminating in the order dated February 7, 1965, passed by the Divisional Canal Officer, respondent 1, as being void, illegal and without jurisdiction for the following reasons:—

"(i) That in a recent authority reported in (1965) 67 Pun LR 212, it has been held by this Hon'ble High Court that before any action under Section 30-A of the Act can be taken, regular procedure prescribed in Sections 30-A(2) and 30-B to 30-D read with the relevant rules framed by the State Government must be followed.

In the present case where action has been admittedly taken under Section 30-A of the Act, the above mentioned mandatory provisions of law have been completely ignored.

(ii) That no draft scheme at all was prepared by the Sub-Divisional Canal Officer, although it was incumbent upon him to do so as required by the provisions of Section 30-A(1).

(iii) That even if the notice dated 1-12-1964 issued by respondent 2, in itself be taken as a draft scheme prepared by him, it failed to comply with the essential mandatory requirements of Sec. 30-A(2) of the Act which reads:

'Every scheme prepared under sub-section (1) shall, amongst other matters, set out the estimated cost thereof, the alignment of the proposed watercourse or realignment of the existing watercourse, as the case may be, the site of the outlet, the particulars of the share-holders to be benefited and other persons who may be affected thereby, and a sketch plan of the area proposed to be covered by the scheme.'

The aforesaid notice does not mention at all (i) the estimated cost of the proposed scheme, (ii) the alignment of the proposed watercourse, (iii) the particulars of the share-holders to be benefited and persons affected thereby and (iv) a sketch plan of the area proposed to be covered by the scheme.

These details were not mentioned in the notice deliberately by the Sub-Divisional Canal Officer, respondent 2, with a view to push through the scheme to benefit respondents 3 to 5 illegally.

(iv) That clause (1) of Section 30-B of the Act provides that—

'Every scheme shall, as soon as may be, after its preparation be published in such form and manner as may be prescribed by rules made in this behalf inviting objections and suggestions with respect thereof within 30 days of the publication'; and definite modes of publication of the scheme have been provided by Rule 2 of the Rules made to carry out the provisions of Sections 30-A to 30-G of the Act.

None of these requirements was followed; so much so that only about 15 days' time was given to invite objections with regard to the matter in hand whereas it was mandatory for the Sub-Divisional Canal Officer to give clear 30 days from the date of publication for that. This will be apparent from a bare look at the file. Notice dated 1-12-1964 issued by respondent 2 speaks for itself.

(v) That it has been judicially held time and again that the provisions like Sections 30-A to 30-F and the rules made to carry out those provisions are mandatory in character and an exact compliance of them all is absolutely necessary to give jurisdiction and authority to the canal authorities to pass orders under Section 30-A of the Act.

(vi) That the levels of the land through which the watercourse LAA' passes are 8.6, 8.8 and 9.0 upto the point A and thereafter the level is 12.7 upto A'. This means that the level of the land through which AA' passes is about 4 feet high as compared to the land through which LA passes. On the other hand the existing watercourse IMB passes through the land which is of the same level.

As a result of the difference of 4 feet as mentioned above, the digging and maintenance of the extended watercourse 'AA' would mean the spoilage of the whole of the petitioner's land. As a result the petitioner would suffer an irreparable loss and injury.

(vii) That the order in question could not be legally passed even on technical grounds of better irrigation. This has been done only because Shri Manphool Singh, Congress M.L.A. from Tohana Constituency exerted his political pressure and prevailed upon the Divisional Canal Officer, respondent 1, to favour respondents 3 to 5.

(viii) That the result of the passing of the order in question would be that respondents 3 to 5 will irrigate their lands through both the watercourses, namely LMB and LAA'B receiving water from the same outlet, namely RD 41250 T.L. and this would mean a decrease in the supply of water to the petitioner's land.

In this way the respondents would be getting undue advantage and harm the interests of the petitioner."

5. Separate returns to the writ petition have been filed by respondent 1 and respondents 3 to 5. In the return filed by respondents 3 to 5 some preliminary objections have been taken.

6. The first objection is that besides respondents 3 to 5 there are several other right-holders whose list is attached as Annexure 'R-1' to the return, who are affected by the decision in this writ petition because their lands will also be irrigated by the disputed watercourse. Those persons not having been made parties to the writ petition it is liable to be dismissed. I do not find any merit in this objection. It is not stated that these persons were mentioned in the scheme as the persons interested in or affected by the proposed scheme. The record has not been produced before me to verify this fact. It is the case of the petitioner that although the lands of other persons are irrigated by this watercourse the persons really interested are respondents 3 to 5 and the petitioner. There is not sufficient material on the record of this case to dismiss this writ petition on this ground.

7. The second preliminary objection is that the petitioner along with his brother Bir Singh instituted a civil suit in the Court of a Subordinate Judge at Hissar, for a permanent injunction restraining the defendants of that suit from digging the watercourse which is a matter in issue in the writ petition. The plaintiffs applied for a temporary injunction restraining the defendants from digging the watercourse. The learned Subordinate Judge passed an order that in case the watercourse had been sanctioned by the Canal authorities, the defendants had the right to dig the same. No reference to the suit was made in the writ petition and since this material fact was suppressed the writ petition should be dismissed on this ground. Again, I find myself unable to accede to this request. This writ petition is only on behalf of Bhagwana and Bir Singh and Bhagwana are not brothers as is clear from the plaint, a copy of which has been filed by respondents 3 to 5 along with their written statement. Bhagwana is the son of Matu while Bir Singh is the son of Kanshi. Bhagwana swore the affidavit to be filed in support of the writ petition on February 22, 1965. His counsel drafted the writ petition on the basis of the sworn affidavit and issued notices of motion to the respondents on February 26, 1965 intimating that the petition would be filed in this Court on March 4, 1965 when prayer for ad interim stay would be made. According to that notice he filed the writ petition in this Court on March 4, 1965. It appears that Jagde respondent 3, and his two brothers threatened to dig the watercourse probably because they had come to know that the petitioner was going to file a writ petition. That suit was filed to restrain the defendants from digging the watercourse. The suit was not directed against respondents 1, 2, 4 and 5 of the writ petition and was not filed to have the orders of respondents 1 and 2 set aside. In view of these facts, I do not think that it was necessary to make a mention of that suit in the writ petition. The learned Single Judge declined to issue the stay order on the ground that the suit was pending and a temporary injunction had been refused. I do not think it fair to dismiss the writ petition on that ground.

8. The next preliminary objection is that the writ petition is not competent as the petitioner did not pursue other remedies available under the Act but it is not shown what other remedy was available to the petitioner. This objection is also repelled.

9. On merits, it has been pleaded that the procedure prescribed under Sections 30-A and 30-B of the Act was followed in principle although not exactly. Sections 30-A and 30-B of the Act as were in force in 1964 when the impugned orders were passed by respondents 1 and 2 read as under —

"30-A (1) Notwithstanding anything contained to the contrary in this Act and subject to the rules prescribed by the State Government in this behalf, the Sub-Divisional Canal Officer may, on his own motion or on the application of a share-holder, prepare a draft scheme to provide for all or any of the matters, namely —

- (a) the construction, alteration, extension and alignment of any watercourse or realignment of any existing watercourse;
- (b) reallocation of areas served by one watercourse to another,
- (c) the lining of any watercourse;
- (d) any other matter which is necessary for the proper maintenance and distribution of supply of water from a watercourse.

(2) Every scheme prepared under subsection (1) shall, amongst other matters, set out the estimated cost thereof, the alignment of the proposed watercourse or realignment of the existing watercourse, as the case may be, the site of the outlet, the particulars of the shareholders to be benefited and other persons who may be affected thereby, and a sketch plan of the area proposed to be covered by the scheme.

30-B. (1) Every scheme shall, as soon as may be, after its preparation be published in such form and manner as may be prescribed by rules made in this behalf inviting objections and suggestions with respect thereof within 30 days of the publication.

(2) After considering all objections and suggestions that may have been received by the Sub-Divisional Canal Officer, the Sub-Divisional Canal Officer shall submit the scheme with such amendments as be considers necessary together with his remarks on the objections and suggestions received by him, to the Divisional Canal Officer for his approval.

(3) The Divisional Canal Officer may direct the Sub-Divisional Canal Officer to furnish such information as he may require for the purpose of approving the scheme submitted to him under this section.

(4) The scheme submitted by the Sub-Divisional Canal Officer may be approved by the Divisional Canal Officer either as it was submitted to him by the Sub-Divisional Canal Officer or in such modified form as he may consider fit."

The petitioner has categorically stated in his petition that no scheme as envisaged by Section 30-A(2) of the Act was framed and the notice of the scheme was issued on December 1, 1964 and even if that notice is considered as the proposed scheme, it did not mention (i) the estimated cost of the proposed scheme, (ii) the alignment of the proposed watercourse, (iii) the particulars of the shareholders to be benefited and the persons affected thereby and (iv) a sketch of the plan of the area proposed to be covered by the scheme.

10. In the return filed by respondent 1 it is stated in reply to this allegation that a drawing, showing the existing and proposed watercourses, was prepared which was shown to all the persons before inspecting the watercourse in question and announcing the decision. Khaka-plan was also shown by the Zileadar while making his recommendation for sanction of the watercourse. Khaka-plan showing all the details except No. 1 — an estimated cost of the proposed scheme — was prepared and shown to all persons affected. It is further stated that irregularity in not giving the estimated cost in the draft scheme does not invalidate the scheme as it was not a new scheme but only the extension of the existing watercourse. It is pertinent to note that it has not been denied that the particulars of the shareholders to be benefited and the persons affected thereby were not stated nor is it denied that the sketch plan of the area proposed to be covered by the scheme had not been published along with the scheme. All that is stated is that a Khaka-plan was prepared which was shown by Zileadar to the right-holders while making his recommendations and it was shown to all persons affected. The record of the case has not been produced for my inspection to verify whether a proper scheme had been prepared or not. From the return it is quite clear that a proper scheme in accordance with Section 30-A(2) was not prepared or published.

11. Section 30-B(1) provided that the scheme should be published and the right-holders affected should be given 30 days' time to file their objections. In this case it is stated that the notice was issued inviting the objections on December 1, 1964 and the date for hearing the objections was fixed as December 22, 1964. It is not stated in the return as to when this notice was published in accordance with Section 30-B and the Rules made under the Act for this purpose but even if the scheme was published within a day or two of issuing the notice, it did not give the right-holders 30 days' time to file their objections. A mandatory provision of Section 30-B(1) of the Act was thus violated prejudicing the petitioner. The result was that the petitioner was not able to file his objections before the Sub-Divisional Canal Officer who decided the matter before the expiry of the period of objections allowed by the Act and made his recommendation to the Divisional Canal Officer. The petitioner filed an appeal stating his objections to the scheme recommended by the Sub-Divisional Canal Officer which was to be sanctioned by the Divisional Canal Officer. No such appeal lay under Section 30-B of the Act but the Divisional Canal Officer has mentioned in his order that the objections of the petitioner were heard on January 25, 1965. It is however, not mentioned what those objections were and why he did not find any force in them. The impugned order does not at all deal with those objections. It cannot, therefore, be said that the opportunity to be heard allowed to the petitioner by the Divisional Canal Officer removed the defect of the Sub-Divisional Canal Officer not affording him due opportunity to file the objections under Sec. 30-B(1) of the Act. Moreover, the denial of opportunity at the initial stage cannot be cured by an opportunity of being heard afforded at a later or higher stage particularly when no appeal lay in this case. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the scheme as sanctioned by the Divisional Canal Officer is not in accordance with law. The error of law is apparent on the face of the order of respondent 2 as it is clear from that order that 30 days' time for filing objections was not given to the petitioner. The impugned orders are, therefore, liable to be set aside.

12. For the reasons given above, this petition is accepted with costs and the impugned orders of the Sub-Divisional Canal Officer and the Divisional Canal Officer, copies of which are Annexures 'B' and 'C' to the writ petition, are hereby quashed. This order will not debar respondent 1 from preparing and sanctioning another scheme, if considered necessary, in accordance with law. Counsel's fee Rs. 100/-.

Petition allowed.

H. L. Sibal, Advocate-General (Punjab) with S. C. Sibal, for Appellant; B. S.
Khoji, for Respondents.

JUDGMENT:— This appeal is directed against the judgment and decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Chandigarh, dated 16-5-1969, granting a declaratory decree to the respondent Shamsher Singh against the State of Punjab to the effect that his removal from the service as Subordinate Judge in the State of Punjab under the impugned order Exhibit P.2 is illegal and that he continues to be in service in the State of Punjab as Subordinate Judge.

2. Shamsher Singh respondent was appointed as Subordinate Judge in the Punjab Civil Service (Judicial Branch) on 1-5-1964 by the Governor of Punjab under Art. 234 of the Constitution of India read with the Punjab Civil Service (Judicial Branch) (First Amendment) Rules, 1963. He was appointed on probation but before the completion of his probation period, his services were terminated on 24-4-67, vide orders Exhibit P.2. The said order was passed on the recommendation of the High Court, Exhibit D.3 dated 14-4-1967. The order of termination of the services of the plaintiff was signed by Shri G. Balakrishnan of the Services Department of the Punjab Government, and was communicated to him on 29-4-1967. The plaintiff raised a number of pleas in the suit which pleas were controverted by the appellant State of Punjab in the written statement.

3. On the pleadings of the parties the learned trial Judge framed the following 13 issues:—

1. Whether the suit is bad for misjoinder of parties as alleged?

2. Whether the termination of the services of the plaintiff is by an authority subordinate to the Governor? If so, what is its effect?

3. Whether the order terminating the services of the plaintiff was notified according to law? If not, what is the effect?

4. Whether the notice to show cause why the services of the plaintiff should not be terminated issued by proper authority?

5. Whether the order of termination is punitive and is not within the scope of Rule 9 of the Government Servants (Punishment and Appeal) Rules as alleged?

6. Whether the order of termination of services is based on vague allegations and on inadmissible evidence both on grounds of facts and law as alleged?

7. Whether the order of termination of services should have been passed on the recommendation of the High Court and whether the High Court did recommend the termination of services? If not, what is the effect?

8. Whether before terminating the services of the plaintiff his explanation was considered and the order was passed according to the Government Servants (Punishment and Appeal) Rules?

9. What is the effect of absence of permanent allotment of the plaintiff under Section 82 of the Punjab Reorganisation Act?

10. Whether the rules of P. C. S. Judicial Branch dealing with the services of the plaintiff were framed according to law?
11. What is the effect of not imparting training to the plaintiff as alleged?
12. Whether the order is discriminatory as alleged in para 21 of the plaint?
13. Relief.

4. Issue No. 1 was decided in favour of the appellant State of Punjab. The learned trial Judge found issue No. 2 in favour of the plaintiff and came to the finding that the services of the plaintiff were terminated by the Chief Minister, an authority subordinate to the Governor, who was the appointing authority of the plaintiff. Issue No. 3 was found by the learned trial Judge against the plaintiff-respondent. Under issue No. 4 it was found by the learned trial Judge that the show cause notice having been issued by the Chief Secretary to Govt. Punjab was not the proper notice and, therefore, this issue was also found in favour of the plaintiff-respondent. Under Issue No. 5 it was found that the plaintiff is not entitled to invoke the protection of Art. 311 of the Constitution of India and, therefore, this issue was decided against the plaintiff. Issues Nos. 9, 10 and 12 were not pressed before the learned trial Judge by the learned counsel for the plaintiff and all these three issues were decided against the plaintiff.

Issue No. 6 was also decided against the plaintiff. Issue No. 7 was decided in favour of the State Government. Issue No. 8 was also decided in favour of the Government. Issue No. 11 was found against the plaintiff-respondent. As a consequence of the findings mentioned above, the learned trial Judge decreed the suit of the plaintiff and granted him a declaratory decree against the State of Punjab quashing the removal of the plaintiff from the post of Subordinate Judge of the Punjab State.

5. Mr. H. L. Sibal, the learned Advocate-General, Punjab, assailed the finding of the learned trial Judge on issues Nos. 2 and 4. He contended that the finding arrived at by the learned trial Judge on issue No. 2 is contrary to law and the same is liable to be set aside. The learned Advocate-General straightway conceded that there are some provisions in the Constitution where the Governor or the President are enjoined to act upon their individual discretion and not with the aid of the Council of Ministers. But he contended that provisions of Art. 154 read with Arts. 163 and 166 of the Constitution clearly provide the democratic machinery through which the executive powers of the State which is vested in the Governor shall have to be exercised.

The learned Advocate-General contended that no doubt the provision of Art. 233 of the Constitution, whereby the appointments of District Judges in a State have to be made by the Governor of the State in consultation with the High Court, does postulate individual discretion of the Governor, therefore, he has no hesitation in conceding that as far as the question of appointment and removal of the District Judges is concerned, it is within the individual discretion of the Governor that the orders have to be passed by him and not by the State Government as such. He contended that the provisions of Art. 234 of the Constitution are differently worded. His contention is that as far as the question of appointment and removal of the persons other than the District Judges in the Judicial Service of a State is concerned, the Governor of a State does not act in his individual discretion but in fact in accordance with the rules framed by him in consultation with the State Public Service Commission and the High Court exercising jurisdiction in relation to such a State and it is the State Government who is to pass such orders.

6. The learned counsel further pointed out the provisions of General Clauses Act, 1897, Section 3, Cls. 59, 60 (a), 60(b) and 60 (e) where it is provided that in respect of anything done after the commencement and before the commencement of the Constitution, the State Government shall mean in a Part A State, the Governor; in a Part B State, the Rajpramukh, and in a Part C State, the Central Government. The learned Advocate-General further pointed out that the Governor of Punjab framed the Punjab Civil Services (Judicial Branch) Rules, 1951, in exercise of the powers conferred by Art. 234 read with the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution of India, and Rule 7 deals with the appointment of the persons to the Punjab Civil Service (Judicial Branch). His contention is that in fact it is the State Government who is to make the appointment and, therefore, the State Government is also competent to remove the person so appointed to the Punjab Civil Service (Judicial Branch).

He contended that in view of the Rules of Business of the Punjab Government, 1966, framed by the Governor of Punjab, it was the Chief Minister who was competent to dispose of the cases relating to the administration of justice as he was in charge of the said portfolio and the orders having been passed by the said authority and issued in the name of the Governor of Punjab, keeping in view the provisions of Art. 166 of the Constitution, it cannot be said that the orders have been issued by an authority subordinate to the Governor, who is the appointing authority. The learned Advocate-General, for this proposition, has relied upon a ruling reported as Mohammad Ghouse v. State of Andhra, AIR 1957 SC 246, and he contended that the finding of the learned trial Judge on issue No. 2 is erroneous and should be reversed.

7. Mr. B. S. Khoji, the learned counsel for the respondent, contended that the provisions of Art 234 are in the same terms as that of Art. 233 of the Constitution. He relied upon the rulings cited by the learned trial Judge and contended that the finding of the learned trial Judge on issue No. 2 is in accordance with law and the same should not be set aside.

8. After considering the respective contentions of the learned counsel for the parties, and after going through the case law referred to in the judgment and also after examining Mohammad Ghouse's case, AIR 1957 SC 246 (supra), we are of the opinion that the contention of the learned counsel for the appellant has to be accepted. The facts in Mohammad Ghouse's case, AIR 1957 SC 246 (supra) are that Mohammad Ghouse, appellant before the Supreme Court, was recruited to the Madras Provincial Judicial Service as District Munsif in 1935. While he was posted as Subordinate Judge at Masubpatnam, Krishna District, he heard the arguments in a case pending before him and reserved the judgment. Before he had pronounced the judgment, a transfer application was filed in the High Court of Madras for transferring the said suit to some other Court on the ground that the appellant was attempting through his brother to take bribe from the parties. The said case was transferred and the High Court started investigation into the allegations made in the affidavit in the stay petition which resulted into an enquiry and a number of charges were framed against him.

The appellant filed a petition under Art. 226 of the Constitution of India in the High Court of Madras for quashing the order of suspension dated 23-1-1954 on the ground, firstly, that in accordance with the rules applicable to him, the enquiry could only be held by a Tribunal to which the Government might have referred the matter and, therefore, proceedings which culminated in his suspension, were without jurisdiction, and, secondly, that the order in question was void and it was in contravention of Art. 311 of the Constitution. It is the second contention with which we are now concerned.

9. In para 8 of the judgment, the contention raised on behalf of the appellant that the appointing authority of the appellant was the Governor of the Province and it was the Governor alone who could dismiss or remove him from the service and the order of suspension made by the High Court was in contravention of the provisions of Art. 311 of the Constitution, was repelled. Their Lordships of the Supreme Court while repelling this contention held that:—

"The facts are that Balakrishna Ayyar, J. sent his report on the enquiry into the charges against the appellant, and expressed his opinion that he should be dismissed or removed from service. The High Court approved of it, and passed an order on January 28, 1954, suspending him until further orders. The report was then sent to the Government for action, and, in fact, the Andhra Government has issued a notice to the appellant on August 12, 1954, to show cause why he should not be dismissed or removed from service. Thus, it is the appropriate authority under Article 311 that proposes to take action against the appellant, and it is for that authority to pass the ultimate order in the matter."

10. No doubt, there is no detailed discussion as to the scope of the provisions of Art. 234 as compared with the provisions of Art. 233 of the Constitution, but the decision of their Lordships of the Supreme Court is binding upon us and we have no option but to follow the same. Thus we find that their Lordships found that it was the Andhra Government which issued a notice to the appellant to show cause as to why he should not be dismissed or removed from service and the State Government was found to be a proper authority for the purposes of taking action under the provisions of Art. 311 of the Constitution in connection with the Subordinate Judge.

11. The judgments relied upon by the learned trial Judge are not relevant to the facts of the present case. Manmohan Singh Tandon v. Manmohan Singh Gujral, 1969 Ser LR 194 = (AIR 1969 Punj 331) a Division Judgment of this Court, is not quite relevant to the facts of the present case as their Lordships in that case were considering the case of the appointment of a District Judge under Art. 233 (1) of the Constitution. Similarly, in State of West Bengal v. Nripendra Nath Bagchi, AIR 1966 SC 447, their Lordships of the Supreme Court were considering the scope of Arts 235 and 311 of the Constitution. This was also a case of dismissal of a District and Sessions Judge.

In case reported as Javantilal Amratlal Shodhan v. F. N. Rana, AIR 1964 SC 648, their Lordships held that in view of the provisions of Art. 258 (1) of the Constitution, the President of India can entrust the State functions which are vested in the Union and not those which are vested in him as President. In Jyoti Prakash Mitter v. Hon'ble Mr. Justice H. K. Bose, Chief Justice, Calcutta, AIR 1965 SC 961, it was held by their Lordships that under Art. 217 (3) of the Constitution, the question of determination of age of the High Court Judge vests exclusively in the President of India in his individual discretion. No doubt that there are certain specified constitutional powers of the Governor on one hand and the executive powers of the State Government headed by the Governor on the other, in the Constitution of India, but it has not been shown to us that the provisions of Art. 234 of the Constitution belongs to the category where the Governor has to act in his individual discretion.

The only case decided by the Supreme Court which throws light on the issue involved in this case is Mohammad Ghouse's case, AIR 1957 SC 246 (supra) and a similar contention as has already been raised on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent, was repelled by the Supreme Court in that judgment. Following this authority of the Supreme Court, we have no option but to accept the contention of the learned Advocate General, Punjab, and reverse the finding of the learned trial Judge on issue No. 2. Thus we find that the order terminating the services of the plaintiff-respondent was not issued by an authority subordinate to the appointing authority of the plaintiff-respondent.

12. In view of our finding on issue No. 2, the finding of the learned trial Court on issue No. 4 cannot stand. If the State Government is the appropriate appointing and removing authority of a Subordinate Judge, it is not shown to us as to why the show cause notice issued by the Chief Secretary to the State Government was invalid. It may be mentioned that this show cause notice was issued by the Chief Secretary to Government, Punjab, on the recommendation of the High Court, therefore, we reverse the finding of the learned trial Court on issue No. 4 also.

13. Faced with this situation, the learned counsel for the respondent raised the following additional points. The learned counsel contended that the finding of the learned trial Court on issue No. 5 is erroneous. There were three charges in the show cause notice which charges relate to a misconduct on the part of the plaintiff. He contended that in fact a regular enquiry should have been instituted against the plaintiff and his services could not be terminated under Rule 9 of the Punjab Civil Services (Punishment and Appeal) Rules, 1952. The learned counsel for this contention relied on State of Uttar Pradesh v. C. S. Sharma, AIR 1968 SC 158, and contended that in view of the serious allegations being levelled against him in the show cause notice, which are in the following terms, a regular enquiry should have been instituted.

"(2) While posted at Sultanpur Lodhi:

(i) You decided the case titled as 'Prem Sagar v. Sohan Lal' without affording full opportunity to the plaintiff to lead evidence.

(ii) In the case 'Sohan Lal v. Prem Sagar' the decree-holder made an application for execution on 17-4-1965, without enclosing therewith a copy of the judgment and that of the Jamabandi of the land to be attached. You, without obtaining office report, ordered on the same date, that warrants for possession be issued. You also incorporated some additions in the original judgment and the warrants of possession, later on with different ink and thus behaved in a most irresponsible manner. The District Judge, Kapurthala, in his report stated inter alia as under:—

"The Sub Judge Shri Shamsher Singh also it appears was inclined to help the opponents of Shri Prem Sagar. In the complaint case when the complainant (Shri Prem Sagar) had examined the witnesses and had closed his evidence, there was no occasion for the complaint to be sent to S. H. O. Sultanpur, for investigation under Section 202, Criminal P. C. The learned Sub Judge had not properly tried the suit instituted by the opponents of Prem Sagar. Three issues suggested by Shri Prem Sagar, who was defendant in that suit, were not framed. The other issues in that suit were framed on 7-4-1965. After that no evidence was allowed to be led in that suit. The suit instituted by the opponents of Shri Prem Sagar, which was for possession of the land, was decreed prematurely.

The more objectionable procedure was followed in the execution proceedings. Although arguments were heard in the suit on 17-4-1965, but the judgments were announced the same day and the execution application was entertained the same day and the learned Sub Judge had without taking report of the office ordered the warrant for possession to be issued the same day. It appears that the warrant was issued without delay, because it was taken to Kapurthala on the same day and endorsement of the Collector was obtained on the same date. In the warrant, the learned Sub Judge had written with his own hand the words 'Trees, well, crops and other rights attached with the land.' Although the words 'crops' did not find place in the suit, but it was added in the typed judgment by the learned Sub-Judge with his own pen, and then this word was incorporated in the warrant also."

(iii) You misused your position as a Judicial Magistrate by proclaiming that you would get one Om Parkash Agriculture Inspector, involved in a case, if he did not co-operate with Shri Mangal Singh, Block Development Officer, Sultanpur, who was a personal friend of yours. As a result of a complaint by the aforesaid Om Parkash, a warning was administered to you."

14. We are unable to accept this contention of the learned counsel for the respondent. In accordance with the provisions of Rule 9, where it is proposed to terminate the employment of the probationer whether during or at the end of the period of probation, for any specific fault or on account of the unsatisfactory record or unfavourable reports implying the unsuitability for the service, the probationer shall be apprised of the grounds of such proposal and given an opportunity to show cause against it, before orders are passed by the authority competent to terminate the appointment. It is not the case of the plaintiff that he was being dismissed from the service. Of course, if he was being dismissed from the service on the allegations of misconduct, then a regular enquiry was necessary and should have been held before his services could be terminated. But here is a case of a probationer whose conduct was being watched during the probationary period and about whom the opinion had to be formed whether he completed the probation period successfully or was he unsuitable for holding the post.

In the present case the authorities concerned watched the working of the plaintiff during the period of his probation and came to the conclusion that he was not suitable to be retained in the service. For the purposes of Rule 9, a show cause notice was issued and his explanation was considered by the High Court before a recommendation was made to the State Government for terminating his services. No stigma is attached by the impugned order and the plaintiff cannot be debarred from seeking any other employment in the Government for that reason. Of course if the plaintiff would have been dismissed on the ground of misconduct or some such charge, a regular enquiry was essential.

15. C. S. Sharma's case, AIR 1963 SC 153 (supra), on which the learned counsel for the plaintiff-respondent relies, is distinguishable on facts. In that case, Shri Sharma was dismissed on the basis of an ex parte preliminary enquiry held against him. In the present case, no preliminary ex parte enquiry was held against the plaintiff-respondent. It was in these circumstances that their Lordships of the Supreme Court have held that the order terminating the services of the petitioner was bad as the proper opportunity was not afforded to Shri Sharma, and he was being dismissed on the basis of an enquiry which offended the provisions of Art. 311 (2) of the Constitution.

16. The learned counsel for the plaintiff-respondent next contended that the finding of the learned trial Court on issue No. 8 is erroneous. He contended that the plaintiff had submitted his preliminary explanation to the High Court and in reply to the show cause notice he mentioned that he did not want to say anything except what he had already stated in his preliminary explanation. He contended that the copy of the preliminary explanation was not forwarded by the High Court to the State Government and, therefore, it was not before the State Government that (when—Ed.) the final orders were passed. In this view of the matter the learned counsel for the respondent contended that the finding of the learned trial Judge on this issue is likely to be reversed.

17. We are unable to agree with this contention of the learned counsel for the respondent. There is no doubt about the fact that the preliminary explanation of the plaintiff was considered by the High Court and after considering the same, a reference, copy of which is marked as Exhibit D.1, was made by the Registrar of the High Court to the Chief Secretary to the Government of Punjab wherein this fact was mentioned that the Hon'ble the Chief Justice and Judges of the High Court had been reviewing the work and conduct of Shri Shamsher Singh, plaintiff-respondent, with reference to the record of his service, reports of the District and Sessions Judges, the results of enquiries into complaints against him, the latest annual confidential report received from the District and Sessions Judge, Jullundur and had gone through the preliminary explanation submitted by Shri Shamsher Singh, and that their Lordships were of the considered view that this officer had failed to make a satisfactory grade in service as his work and conduct had been consistently listed as 'below average'. Therefore, it was recommended that the proceedings should be taken against him for terminating his services.

When a final show cause notice was given by the Chief Secretary to Government, Punjab, it was open to the plaintiff-respondent to have reiterated what he had submitted in his preliminary explanation or to have attached a copy of the said explanation along with his final explanation. Merely because the copy of the preliminary explanation was not forwarded by the High Court to the State Government, would not warrant a finding that the explanation given by the plaintiff was not before the appointing authority. In fact the reply given by the plaintiff to the show cause notice issued by the Chief Secretary to Government, Punjab, was before the State Government, copy of which is marked as Exhibit D.2, and it was after the consideration of the explanation that the impugned orders were passed. Thus there is no merit in this contention of the learned counsel for the plaintiff-respondent.

18. The learned counsel then contended that the final recommendation of the High Court to the State Government was not made in the meeting of the Hon'ble Judges. This contention of the learned counsel is again without any merit. The preliminary explanation submitted by the plaintiff-respondent was considered in the meeting of the Hon'ble Judges of the High Court and in his final explanation no new facts were mentioned by him which could be worthy of any consideration. In this situation, it cannot be held that the explanation submitted by the plaintiff-respondent to the show cause notice was not considered by the High Court.

19. The learned counsel for the respondent next contended that the Punjab Civil Services (Judicial Branch) Rules, 1951, having not been framed by the Governor himself under the provisions of Art. 234 of the Constitution, were ultra vires and, therefore, the appointment of the plaintiff is not governed by any such rules. We see no merit in this contention of the learned counsel for the respondent as well. The opening part of the rules clearly postulates that the said rules are being framed in exercise of the powers conferred by Art. 234 read with the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution of India, after consultation with the State Public Service Commission and the High Court of Punjab providing for the appointment of persons as Subordinate Judges in the Punjab Civil Service (Judicial Branch) and regulating the recruitment and the conditions of service of persons appointed thereto. This contention of the learned counsel is again without any merit.

20. No other point is pressed by the learned counsel for the appellant or by the learned counsel for the respondent.

21. For the reasons recorded above, this appeal is allowed, the judgment and decree of the learned trial Judge are set aside and the suit of the plaintiff-respondent stands dismissed. However, keeping in view the facts and circumstances of this case, there will be no order as to costs.

Appeal allowed.

Letters Patent Appeals Nos. 500, 501 of 1969 and 25 and 26 of 1970, D/- 23-4-1970, from judgment of Second Appeal No. 1350 of 1969, D/- 29-7-1969.

Contract Act (1872), Section 64 —
"Benefit under the contract" — Meaning of.

The mother as a natural guardian of a minor sold the land belonging to the minor. According to the sale-deed the mother received from the vendees certain amounts as earnest money in cash and the balance was left in trust with the vendees. The amounts which were left in trust had to be paid by the vendees at the time of purchase of the land by the mother for the minor as per her representation to the vendee which was recorded in the sale-deed. The vendees, however, did not bring about the purchase of the land for the minor by his mother nor any stipulation for the land or with regard to that land was made by the vendees. The mother purchased the land for the minor with the consideration received from the vendees. The minor on attaining majority filed a suit against the vendees and his mother for possession of the land sold by means of the sale-deed, but he did not disown purchase of the land. The question for consideration was whether the vendees were entitled to receive back only the sums paid by them to the mother or they were entitled to receive the land which was purchased with that money for the minor.

Held, the benefit under the contract of sale received by the minor from the vendees was only in the form of cash consideration and not the land purchased with that consideration and, therefore, the vendees were entitled to only the sums paid by them. The purchase of the land for the minor and the sale of the land in favour of the vendees were not one integrated transaction so that it could not be said that the land purchased was the benefit received by the minor from the vendees under the contract of sale. There was no stipulation that in case the minor on attaining majority avoided the sale in their favour, the vendees would be entitled to the lands purchased with the consideration paid by them. Moreover, the minor on attaining majority had accepted the purchase of the land and the contract of that purchase could not be said to be a part of the voidable contract of sale with vendees. BAL RAJ TULI, J.: This judgment will be read in four connected appeals under Clause 10 of the Letters Patent (L. P. A. No. 500 of 1969 Devinder Singh v. Smt. Shiv Kaur and other, L. P. A. No. 501 of 1969, Devinder Singh v. Kapur Singh and others, L. P. A. No. 25 of 1970, Devinder Singh v. Smt Shiv Kaur and others and L. P. A. No. 26 of 1970, Devinder Singh v. Kapur Singh and others), which have arisen out of two suits filed by Devinder Singh against the respondents and which were consolidated. L. P. A. No. 500 of 1969 was filed against the judgment of the learned Single Judge dated September 24, 1969, deciding R. S. A. 1350 of 1969. There was some typographical mistake in the said judgment and for the correction of the same an application under Section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure was filed, which was allowed by the learned Single Judge on November 28, 1969 with the result that the judgment was corrected. L. P. A. No. 25 of 1970 was then filed against the judgment of the learned Single Judge dated September 24, 1969, as amended on November 28, 1969. In substance both the appeals are against the same judgment. Similar is the case with regard to L. P. A. No. 501 of 1969 and L. P. A. No. 28 of 1970.

2. The facts are not in dispute and can be stated in a short compass. Devinder Singh is the son of Bhagat Singh who died in Pakistan. He was a minor in 1957 and his mother Smt. Dalbir Kaur sold 48 Kanals of land belonging to the minor situate in village Dhoqri, tahsil and district Jullundur, to Smt. Shiv Kaur and Smt. Kartar Kaur for a sum of Rs 7000/- on November 29, 1957. The vendees sold 10 Marlas of land to defendant 5 (Khushia son of Nathu) and Smt. Kartar Kaur sold another piece of land measuring 10 Marlas in favour of defendant 4 (Parkash son of Tulsii). These subsequent vendees were made defendants to the suit. The number of the suit in respect of the land sold in favour of Smt. Shiv Kaur and Kartar Kaur was 63 of 1967.

3. Smt. Dalbir Kaur effected a second sale of the minor's land measuring 64 Kanals 1 Marla for a sum of Rs 9000/- in favour of Kapur Singh and others on December 10, 1957. The suit in respect of this land filed by Devinder Singh was numbered as 64 of 1967.

4. No permission was obtained from the Court under Section 8 of the Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act, 1956 for effecting the above two sales by Smt. Dalbir Kaur, the natural guardian of Devinder Singh plaintiff with the result that the sales effected by Smt. Dalbir Kaur were voidable at the instance of Devinder Singh as provided in Section 8(3) ibid. Devinder Singh minor on attaining majority filed suits against the vendees and his mother Dalbir Kaur for possession of the land sold by means of the sale-deeds mentioned above. The suits were contested by the defendants and it was pleaded that, with the consideration received from the vendees, Smt. Dalbir Kaur purchased land measuring about 112 Bighas, being 8/17th share of 233 Bighas 19 Biswas, in the name of Devinder Singh in Tehsil Samana, district Patiala, on February 5, 1958, and the sale-deed in respect thereof was registered on the following day. The other co-vendees with the minor Devinder Singh were his maternal uncles at the time of the purchase of that land. The defendant-vendees paid the balance amount due from them under the sale deeds dated November 29, 1957, and December 10, 1957, by bank drafts, which were passed on to the vendors of the land at Samana. In the first sale-deed dated November 29, 1957, it is mentioned that Smt. Dalbir Kaur had received Rs 1000/- as earnest money in cash and the balance amount of Rs 6000/- would be paid by the vendees at the time when she purchases land in Patiala region for the minor within a week. In the other sale-deed dated December 10, 1957, it was mentioned that she had received Rs. 1700/- on account of earnest money in cash and the balance amount of Rs 7300/- was left in trust with the vendees to be paid to her at the time of purchase of the land with her real relatives within two weeks.

5. The question of law that has arisen and which has been argued at length by the learned counsel for the parties is whether the defendant-vendees are entitled to receive back only the sums of Rs 7000/- and Rs 9000/- paid by them to Smt. Dalbir Kaur, the mother of Devinder Singh minor, which was the consideration for the sales, or they are entitled to receive the land which was purchased with that money by Smt. Dalbir Kaur for the minor in Tehsil Samana, district Patiala. The answer to this question depends on the interpretation to be placed on Section 64 of the Indian Contract Act (Act 9 of 1872), which reads as under:—

"When a person at whose option a contract is voidable rescinds it, the other party thereto need not perform any promise therein contained in which he is promisor. The party rescinding a voidable contract shall, if he has received any benefit thereunder from another party to such contract, restore such benefit, so far as may be, to the person from whom it was received."

6. It is the second sentence of this section which is applicable to the facts of the present cases. On the language of this sentence it is quite clear that the vendees in the instant cases are entitled to the benefit received by Devinder Singh from them under the contracts of sale dated November 29, 1957, and December 10, 1957. What requires determination is the meaning of the word 'benefit' under the voidable contracts which Devinder Singh avoided. From the language of the sale-deeds, it is also quite clear that the consideration for the sales was the amounts of Rs. 7000/- and Rs. 9000/- and not any land that might be purchased by Smt. Dalbir Kaur with that amount. It is true that the amounts which were left in trust with the vendees had to be paid by them at the time of the purchase of the land by Smt. Dalbir Kaur for the minor, as per her representation to the vendee, which was recorded in the sale-deeds. The defendant-vendees, however, did not bring about the purchase of the land in Tehsil Samana for the minor Devinder Singh by his mother Dalbir Kaur. That transaction of purchase of land was brought about by the brothers of Smt. Dalbir Kaur. The land purchased in Tehsil Samana measured 238 Bighas 19 Biswas in which the minor's share was 8/17th and the share of other co-vendees was 9/17th. The sale consideration was Rs. 33,500/- so that the price of 8/17th share of Devinder Singh came to Rs. 15,764.70. There is no doubt that Smt. Dalbir Kaur purchased the land for Devinder Singh in Tehsil Samana with the consideration received from the defendant-vendees but this fact alone does not make the contracts of sale of Devinder Singh's land in favour of the defendant-vendees and the purchase of land for him by his mother in Tehsil Samana as one integrated transaction so that it may be said that the land purchased in Tehsil Samana was the benefit received by Devinder Singh from the defendant-vendees under the contracts of sale entered into by his mother with them on November 29, 1957, and December 10, 1957.

7. On behalf of the defendant-vendees reliance has been placed on a judgment of a Division Bench of the Madras High Court in Chinnaswami Reddi v. Krishnaswami Reddi, 35 Mad LJ 652 = (AIR 1919 Mad 650), wherein Kumaraswami Sastri, J., observed as under:—

"Ordinarily, the benefit which a party receives when he sells the property is the price which the vendee pays. Any profits which the vendor might make with the moneys would be too remote in estimating what he has to return in case he is entitled to avoid the sale and elects to do so. Where however for the protection of a purchaser contracting with a guardian or a qualified owner, a particular dealing with the money was in the direct contemplation of the parties such as the purchase of other lands with the consideration and the money is so applied, the benefit which the other party obtains will be the land or other property acquired with the consideration. There must, in my opinion, be something more than a mere application of the consideration in a particular way in order to entitle the purchaser to claim restoration of the properties acquired with the consideration paid by him. Section 35 of the Transfer of Property Act makes this clear. It requires that the benefit received should be part of the same transaction and should be direct. The authorities cited by the learned Advocate-General do not support the view that the purchaser is entitled to follow up properties purchased with the consideration irrespective of whether there was any arrangement or not."

8. These observations, in my opinion, do not help the learned counsel as the learned Judge himself pointed out that there must be something more than a mere application of the consideration in a particular way in order to entitle the purchaser to claim restoration of the properties acquired with the consideration paid by him and that the benefit received should be part of the same transaction and should be direct. In the instant cases it cannot be said that the purchase of land in Tehsil Samana was part of the same transaction as the sales of land in favour of the defendant-vendees or that the purchase of land was in any way directly connected with the said sales. The last sentence of the learned Judge makes it further clear that the purchaser is not entitled to follow up properties purchased with the consideration irrespective of whether there was any arrangement or not. In the instant cases, in the sale-deeds with the defendant-vendees, there was no stipulation or arrangement that in case the minor on attaining majority avoided the sales in their favour, the vendees would be entitled to the lands purchased with the consideration paid by them, nor was there any condition that the sales in their favour were to be null and void in case Smt. Dalbir Kaur did not purchase any land for the minor with the consideration received from them. In the Madras case, the decree for the land purchased with the consideration received from the vendees was not allowed because it had been found as a fact that the purchase of the lands at Sriperumbudur was not in the contemplation of the parties, at the time of the sale to the plaintiff. In the instant cases, there is no doubt that the purchase of some land in Patiala region was in the contemplation of Smt. Dalbir Kaur but no stipulation for that land or with regard to that land was made by the defendant-vendees, as has been pointed out above. No assistance, therefore, can be derived from this decision of the Madras High Court.

9. The learned counsel for the defendant-vendees has then relied upon a Division Bench judgment of the Kerala High Court in Cheriathu Varkey v. Meenakshi Amma 1964 Ker LT 952. That judgment is distinguishable on facts. In that case the mother of the minors sold some properties belonging to her and the minors to the second defendant and with a part of the consideration received she purchased some other properties in her name and in the names of the minor-plaintiffs on the same day. The plaintiffs disowned the acquisition of the latter properties and contended that the sale of their properties in favour of defendant 2 was for no necessity and sought to set aside the alienation and recover the properties which had been sold by their mother to defendant 2. The suit of the plaintiffs was decreed but the counsel for defendant 2 pleaded that in cancelling the alienation as regards the plaintiffs' share, the benefit conferred on the plaintiffs' estate by that alienation should be directed to be surrendered to the alienee-defendants. This plea was accepted and the alienee-defendants too were held entitled to recover 3/4th of plaint B schedule properties with mesne profits from the date of their eviction from the property decreed with a further direction that they would be paid compensation for their improvements on the property from where they were ousted. In making this decree in favour of defendant 2 the learned Judges followed the decision of the Madras High Court in 35 Mad LJ 652—(AIR 1919 Mad 650) (supra). In the instant case the acquisition of land in Tehsil Samana has not been disowned or avoided by Devinder Singh. He has accepted the purchase of that land and the contract of that purchase cannot be said to be a part of the voidable contracts of sale with the defendant-vendees.

10. On behalf of the appellant, the learned counsel has relied upon a judgment of Privy Council in Muralidhar Chatterjee v. International Film Co. Ltd., AIR 1943 PC 34, wherein the following observations occur:—

"Sections 64 and 65 do not refer by the words 'benefit' and 'advantage' to any question of 'profit' or 'clear profit' nor does it matter what the party receiving the money may have done with it. To say that it has been spent for the purposes of the contract is wholly immaterial in such a case as the present. It means only that it has been spent to enable the party receiving it to perform his part of the contract — in other words, for his own purposes."

11. No assistance can be had from this judgment as the defendant-vendees are not seeking to recover any 'profit' or 'clear profit' from the plaintiff-appellant in the garb of 'benefit'. They lay their claim to the land acquired by the plain-tiff's mother for him in Tehsil Samana on the ground that it had been purchased with the consideration paid by them and the plaintiffs' estate benefited by the acquisition of that land and that benefit was directly in the contemplation of the parties at the time of the sales. This argument is fallacious as the utilisation of the consideration paid by the defendant-vendees does not amount to the benefit derived from them under the voidable contracts of sale with them which the plaintiff-appellant avoided, as he was entitled to do. The benefit under those contracts of sale received by the minor (plaintiff-appellant) from the defendant-vendees was only in the form of cash consideration and not the land purchased with that consideration in Tehsil Samana.

12. The learned counsel for the appellant has then referred to a Single Judge judgment of the Kerala High Court in Chandrasekhara Pillai v. Kochu Koshi, 1961 Ker LT 1018, in which the consideration for sale of the suit property as per Exhibit I was Rs. 862/- made up of a cash consideration of Rs. 10/- and a sum of Rs. 789/- to be advanced for an assignment, Exhibit II, in the name of 2nd defendant's tavazhi, of a mortgage on a property belonging to Velayuda Kurup, the husband of the 2nd defendant, and Rs. 63/- for paying for a puravallpa, Exhibit III taken from Velayuda Kurup in regard to the same property. Thus, excepting the cash consideration of Rs. 10/-, the rest of the price was for investment on a mortgage of property that belonged to Velayuda Kurup, the husband of the 2nd defendant and the father of plaintiffs 1 and 2 and the 3rd defendant. The sale of the suit property was avoided and the counsel for the alienee contended that, in the event of rescission of the sale, the plaintiffs' tavazhi should be directed to surrender the mortgage rights they had acquired with the consideration of the impugned sale. Reliance was placed on Sections 64 and 65 of the Indian Contract Act. After setting out those sections, the learned Judge observed:—

"These sections require only that, when a transaction is avoided, or found to be void, the party, who had received any benefit or advantage thereunder, shall restore the same to the person from whom he received it. The benefit or advantage received by the plaintiffs' tavazhi under the impugned sale was only the sum that the tavazhi received as consideration for the sale, namely, the sum of Rs. 852/-, leaving out of account the cash consideration of Rs. 10/-, not shown to have been utilised for the tavazhi. The plaintiffs' tavazhi is bound to restore the same to the 1st defendant before they recover the property from him.

The further contention that the plaintiffs' tavazhi should surrender the mortgage right which they acquired with that amount does not appear to be warranted by law. The acquisitions of the mortgage rights under Exhibits II and III were not benefits received under Exhibit I, but were benefits derived by a further investment which the plaintiffs' tavazhi made with that amount. As observed by the Privy Council in AIR 1943 PC 34 (supra), Sections 64 and 65 do not refer by the words 'benefit' and 'advantage' to any question of 'profit' or 'clear profit', nor does it matter what the party receiving the money may have done with it. Whether the investment made by the vendor with the consideration paid under the impugned sale ended in a profit or a loss, is of no consequence to the alienee. He can neither claim the benefit of the investment nor be bound by the loss resulting therefrom. He is concerned only with what he paid, and nothing more. I would, therefore, repel the claim for a surrender of the mortgage rights taken by the plaintiffs' tavazhi with the price paid under Exhibit I and direct the plaintiffs' tavazhi to restore the sum of Rs. 852½/- only to the 1st defendant before they take the property from him."

13. For the reasons given above, I hold that the plaintiff-appellant Devinder Singh is entitled to a decree for possession of the lands claimed by him in the suits subject to his paying Rs. 7000/- and Rs. 9000/- to the respective vendees, provided the land claimed in the suits is found to be the land allotted to the vendees, in lieu of the lands sold to them by Dalbir Kaur, in consolidation proceedings. In the suit filed by Devinder Singh against Smt. Shiv Kaur and others the land sued for was mentioned as measuring 102 Kanals 8 Marlas whereas the land sold measured 48 Kanals. The first appellate Court has observed that it was necessary to find out whether the entire land in suit had been allotted to the vendees of that suit in lieu of the land sold by Smt. Dalbir Kaur, but the necessity for determining the identity of the land was not felt in view of the compromise entered into by the parties before him according to which Smt. Kartar Kaur was to deliver possession of land measuring 22 Kanals 11 Marlas to the plaintiff-appellant and Smt. Shiv Kaur was to deliver possession of 23 Kanals 7 Marlas of land to him, and regarding the rest of the land the plaintiff's suit was to stand dismissed. The particulars of the land, the possession of which was to be delivered to Devinder Singh by Smt. Shiv Kaur and Kartar Kaur, were given in the statements of parties and were incorporated in the decree passed by the first appellate Court. This compromise was conditional, that is, it was to be effective in case the plaintiff-appellant was held entitled to the decree in suit. Since the first appellate Court held that the plaintiff-appellant was entitled to the decree sought for by him, the suit was decreed in terms of the compromise entered into by the parties before him. Since I have also come to the same conclusion, the plaintiff-appellant is entitled to the decree passed in his favour by the first appellate Court. I accordingly accept L.P.A. 500 of 1969 and L.P.A. 25 of 1970 and setting aside the judgment and decree passed by the learned Single Judge restore the decree passed by the first appellate Court on July 29, 1969. In view of the complicated nature of the point of law involved in the appeals, I leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

14. In the other suit against Kapur Singh and others, there has been no compromise. There is a dispute with regard to the land to the possession of which the plaintiff-appellant is entitled. In paragraph 3 of the plaint, the plaintiff stated that in lieu of the land described in paragraph 1 of the plaint and entered in the sale deed dated December 10, 1957, the land described in the heading of the plaint and entered in the jamabandi for the year 1961-62 was allotted to defendants 1 to 5 in consolidation proceedings and the plaintiff-appellant was, therefore, entitled to the possession of that land. The reply to this paragraph of the plaint by the defendants was:—

"Para 3 of the plaint is not admitted as correct and the plaintiff is put to proof." No issue, however was framed on this part of the case and no evidence was led to show that the allegations in paragraph 3 of the plaint were correct. The learned Single Judge observed in his judgment that in case his decision was not affirmed in appeal, this matter would have to be put in issue and determined. With this observation I entirely agree. I accordingly frame the following issue:—

"What was the land allotted to defendants 1 and 2 in consolidation proceedings in lieu of the land purchased by them from Smt. Dalbir Kaur as guardian of the plaintiff by sale-deed dated December 10, 1957?"

15. The case is remitted to the learned trial Court with a direction to try this issue by affording an opportunity of leading evidence to the parties, and to return the evidence to this Court together with its findings thereon and the reasons therefor within four months from today. L. P. As. Nos. 501 of 1969 and 26 of 1970 may be set down for hearing after the receipt of the report from the trial Court.

with Sukhdev Khanna, for Appellants;

NARULA, J.:— The only ground on which the learned Single Judge, against whose judgment this appeal has been preferred, allowed the writ petition of Raghwant Singh and Gurdev Singh respondents and quashed the order of the Additional Director, Consolidation of Holdings, Punjab, was that the petition under Section 42 of the East Punjab Holdings (Consolidation and Prevention of Fragmentation) Act (50 of 1948) (hereinafter called the Act) which was entertained and allowed by the Additional Director had been filed beyond the period of limitation prescribed by Rule 18 of the East Punjab Holdings (Consolidation and Prevention of Fragmentation) Rules, 1949. It is the common case of both sides that no objection as to limitation was raised by the writ petitioners or any one else on any of the dates of hearing of the application under Section 42 of the Act. While allowing the writ petition, the learned Single Judge had followed the judgment of Mahajan, J., D/- 8-4-1963, in Deendar v. State of Punjab, Civil Writ No. 1458 of 1962 (Punj). In that case, the question of limitation had been raised before the Additional Director and he had merely waived the time limit in order to redress the grievance of the petitioner. Mr. B. S. Dhillon, who appears for the appellants, submits that he has no quarrel with the proposition of law laid down in Deendar's case, Civil Writ No 1458 of 1962, D/- 8-4-1963 (Punj) as subsequently confirmed in various subsequent decisions of this Court, but his only argument in support of the appeal is that it was not open to the writ petitioners to raise the question of limitation for the first time in their petition under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution. Mr. Dhillon is no doubt supported in this submission by at least three Division Bench judgments of this Court. In Bhagat Singh v. Addl. Director, Consolidation of Holdings, Punjab, Jullundur, (1966) 68 Pun LR 496, it was held by my Lord the Chief Justice and Pandit, J. that where the question of the revision under the Act being barred by time is not raised before the Director of Consolidation, the same cannot be raised before the High Court for the first time in proceedings under Article 226 of the Constitution. A similar question was again referred to a Division Bench consisting of Shamsher Bahadur, J. and myself in Sewa Singh v. State of Punjab, ILR (1967) 2 Punj and Har 89. Shamsher Bahadur, J., who spoke for the Division Bench, held that failure to raise an objection of limitation by a party which could have done so would be a bar to the certiorari petition made to quash such an order. The Bench held that except for a patent or inherent defect of jurisdiction, an objection which would oust the jurisdiction of a quasi-judicial tribunal ought to be raised in the first instance before the tribunal itself. The third case in which this point came up for consideration was decided by S. B. Capoor, J. and myself in Thambu v. Addl. Director Consolidation of Holdings, (1968) 70 Pun LR 301 = (AIR 1968 Punj 282). It was held that where an objection as to an application under Section 42 of the Act being barred by time was not raised before the Additional Director, he was not bound to take notice of it suo motu and the proceedings held before him were not a nullity. In the course of the judgment of the Division Bench prepared by me, it was observed that a petitioner who does not raise a legal defence to an action before the tribunal where the action is brought should not ordinarily be permitted to raise the said defence for the first time in a writ petition.

2. Mr. Harbans Lal Sarin, who appears to support the judgment of the learned Single Judge, submits that the decisions of the previous three Division Benches on the point in issue need reconsideration on the ground that on the principles of Section 3 of the Limitation Act, it is the duty of the Additional Director to take notice of the question of limitation suo motu and that if the Additional Director fails in so doing, his decision lacks inherent jurisdiction and should be quashed ex debito iustitiae by a writ in the nature of certiorari. He has referred to the judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Joy Chand Lal v. Kamalaksha Chaudhury, AIR 1949 PC 239, wherein it was held that where a subordinate Court by its own erroneous decision on a point of limitation or on a point of res judicata invested itself with a jurisdiction which in law it did not possess, the High Court had the power to interfere in revision under Section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The observations of their Lordships of the Supreme Court in Pandurang Dhondi Chougule v. Maruti Hari Jadhav, AIR 1966 SC 153, were then referred to. P. B. Gajendragadkar, C. J., as he then was, speaking for the Court observed in that case as follows:—

"It is conceivable that points of law may arise in proceedings instituted before subordinate Courts which are related to questions of jurisdiction. It is well settled that a plea of limitation or a plea of res judicata is a plea of law which concerns the jurisdiction of the Court, which tries the proceedings. A finding on these pleas in favour of the party raising them would oust the jurisdiction of the Court, and so, an erroneous decision on these pleas can be said to be concerned with questions of jurisdiction which fall within the purview of Section 115 of the Code. But an erroneous decision on a question of law reached by the subordinate Court which has no relation to questions of jurisdiction of that Court, cannot be corrected by the High Court under Section 115."

3. On the other hand Mr. Dhillon has placed reliance on the law laid down by the Supreme Court in Ittyavira Mathai v. Varkey Varkey, AIR 1964 SC 907. In the course of the judgment of the Supreme Court prepared by Mudholkar, J., it was held as below:—

"All that the decision relied upon (Magbul Ahmad v. Onkar Pratap Narain Singh, AIR 1935 PC 85) says is that Section 3 of the Limitation Act is peremptory and that it is the duty of the Court to take notice of this provision and give effect to it even though the point of limitation is not referred to in the pleadings. The Privy Council has not said that where the Court fails to perform its duty, it acts without jurisdiction. If it fails to do its duty, it merely makes an error of law and an error of law can be corrected only in the manner laid down in the Civil Procedure Code. If the party aggrieved does not take appropriate steps to have that error corrected, the erroneous decree will hold good and will not be open to challenge on the basis of being a nullity."

The legal proposition which emerges from the study of the abovementioned decisions of the Supreme Court is that though a decision on a question of limitation relates to the question of jurisdiction of the Court deciding the question, but an order based on an erroneous decision of such a question or an order passed without suo motu noticing such a bar and deciding it, is not an order without jurisdiction and cannot, therefore, be declared as a nullity so as to be liable to be quashed.

ed in certiorari proceedings. An order of a tribunal on a question of limitation, as indeed on any other legal question, would no doubt be liable to be set aside if it is either based on extraneous considerations or based on no evidence whatever, or contains an error of law apparent on its face. But in that case it would not be liable to be set aside because it is without jurisdiction, but because it suffers from an error of law apparent on its face. In this view of the matter, it appears to us that the order of Additional Director of Consolidation of Holdings was not liable to be set aside by this Court in exercise of its jurisdiction under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution merely because in the opinion of this Court the application on which the order had been passed was presented to the State Government long after the expiry of the period of limitation. If the objection had been raised before the Additional Director, the applicant under Section 42 of the Act might have applied for condonation of delay, and if the applicant was able to show sufficient cause for not filing the application within time, the delay might have been condoned. In the alternative, the applicant might even have convinced the Additional Director that the application had been filed within time. In any event, we are bound by the earlier three Division Bench judgments referred to above, and following the same we must hold that the question of limitation not having been raised before the Additional Director, it was not open to the writ petitioners to raise the same for the first time in the writ petition. The impugned order under Section 42 of the Act was quashed by the learned Single Judge solely on the ground of limitation, and as we have held that it is not open to this Court to allow the question of limitation being raised for the first time in certiorari proceedings, we have to accept this appeal and to set aside the order of the learned Single Judge.

4. We accordingly allow this appeal, set aside the order of the learned Single Judge, and dismiss the writ petition of respondents 1 and 2, but leave the parties to bear their own costs.

Rajinder Sachar with R. K. Chhibbar and V. P. Prashar, for Appellants; V. P. Sharda, for Respondents.

JUDGMENT: Jaimal Kaur respondent No 6 and the two appellants before me, all of them being real sisters to each other and daughters of one Sunder, brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen for possession of a house and land measuring 34 bighas 15 biswas, 4 biswasis pulkhta situated in Bhaini Bringan, Tehsil and District Ludhiana, against respondents Nos. 2 to 5 who are admittedly collaterals of the said Sunder, on the ground that the deed of relinquishment executed on the 15th of February, 1947, by Shrimati Dhan Kaur defendant-respondent No. 1, the widow of the said Sunder, in favour of respondents Nos. 2 to 5 was void and ineffective, the plaintiffs being preferential heirs of Sunder as compared to his widow. The trial Court decreed the suit. In appeal Shri A. N. Bhanot, Additional District Judge, Ambala, maintained the decree in so far as it related to the house but set the same aside with regard to the land which was proved to be ancestral property qua respondents Nos. 2 to 5.

2. The present second appeal was filed on the 28th of October, 1959, and when it came up for hearing before me on the 12th of December, 1969, Mr. Sharda, learned counsel for respondents Nos. 2 and 3, stated that Amar Singh respondent No. 4 had died on the 30th of March, 1964. The parties were allowed to file their respective affidavits with regard to the factum and date of Amar Singh's death and there is no dispute now that the same were correctly stated by Mr. Sharda. An application under Rule 4 of Order XXII of the Code of Civil Procedure read with Section 151 thereof, however, has been filed on behalf of the appellants praying that the legal representatives of Amar Singh respondent No. 4 be brought on the record with a finding that the appeal had not abated. The sole reason put forward in support of the prayer for condonation of the delay is that the appellants live in village Thakarwal which lies at a distance of over 20 miles from the village of respondent No. 4 and that the latter died while he was serving in the Army outside his village so that the appellants did not come to know of his death before their counsel informed them thereof in December, 1969, after the same had been brought to the notice of this Court. These facts, it is contended by Mr. Sachar for the appellants, are sufficient for the condonation prayed for. In my opinion, however, this contention has no force. Mere ignorance of the death of a party does not furnish sufficient ground for setting aside an abatement after the expiry of the periods mentioned in Articles 120 and 121 of the Limitation Act, XXXVI of 1963 (Articles 177 and 171 respectively of the Indian Limitation Act, IX of 1908). In so holding, Tek Chand, J., with whom the other two Judges agreed in Firm Dittu Ram Eyedan v. Om Press Co. Ltd., Fazilka, AIR 1960 Punj 335 (FB), observed:—

"Before ignorance of death can be deemed to be a good ground, there must exist good grounds for ignorance not attributable to negligence. When law imposes an obligation on a person to bring legal representatives of deceased opponent on the record, within the prescribed period, mere want of knowledge of death will be insufficient to secure him against consequences of abatement of his suit or appeal; he has further to show absence of want of care. When reasonable vigilance is a duty, unqualified ignorance cannot be deemed venial. Want of information may be overlooked if want was not induced by neglectful indifference or blameworthy remissness. Allowing oneself to remain in the dark cannot be treated as a persuasive ground for condonation of delay."

Expressing the view that it was for the applicant to make out cogent grounds for excusing delay either by positive evidence led in this behalf or from the circumstances justifying such a conclusion, Tek Chand, J., held:

"The burden cannot be cast upon the opposite party who secures a valuable advantage by the lapse of period of limitation, to adduce proof of facts and circumstances showing negligence or want of good faith on the part of the applicant. In the absence of circumstances or proof of want of negligence, a bald statement that the applicant was ignorant of the death cannot be deemed sufficient for revival of the suit or appeal."

In Munshi Ram v. Radha Kishen, AIR 1924 Lah 461, an application under Order XXII, Rule 9, of the Code of Civil Procedure was made three years after the death of a party. The cause alleged in the affidavit filed in support of the application was that the parties were living in different districts and their residences were separated by a distance of 200 miles, but this was not considered to be a sufficient reason for excusing the delay in making the application after such a long period. This case was quoted with approval in AIR 1960 Punj 335 (FB) (supra), and the facts in the present case where the delay covers a period of more than five years and the distance between the village of the appellants and that of the deceased is only 20 miles, constitute a stronger reason for turning down the prayer of condonation. The appeal must, therefore, be held to have abated against the deceased respondent.

3. The only question which remains to be decided is as to whether the appeal can proceed as against the surviving respondents. This point is also covered by authority. In Swaran Singh Puran Singh v. Ramditta Badhava, AIR 1969 Punj & Haryana 216, the plaintiffs were the sister's sons of the deceased and claimed a joint decree for possession against his collaterals alleging that they (the plaintiffs) were his preferential heirs. The suit was dismissed by the trial Court as well as by the first appellate Court. During the pendency of the plaintiffs' second appeal before the High Court one of the collaterals died and as no application to bring his legal representatives on the record was brought within the time allowed by law in that behalf, the appeal was held not only to have abated as against the deceased respondent but to have become incompetent as a whole. Mehar Singh, C. J., and Narula, J., who decided the case, relied on the dicta of their Lordships of the Supreme Court in the State of Punjab v. Nathu Ram, AIR 1962 SC 89, to the following effect:

- (a) If the decree under appeal is joint and indivisible, the appeal against the other respondents also will not be proceeded with and will have to be dismissed as a result of the abatement of the appeal against the deceased respondent.

- (b) The view taken by the Courts in some cases previously to the effect that the abatement of the appeal against the deceased respondent will have the result of making the decree affecting his specific interest to be final and that the decree against the other respondents may be suitably dealt with by the appellate Court is incorrect. The specification of shares or of interest of the deceased respondent does not affect the nature of the decree and the capacity of the joint decree-holder to execute the entire decree or to resist the attempt of the other party to interfere with the joint right decreed in his favour.
- (c) The abatement of an appeal means not only that the decree between the appellant and the deceased respondent has become final, but also as a necessary corollary that the appellate Court cannot in any way modify that decree directly or indirectly.

In following this authority, the Division Bench turned down an argument that the suit of the plaintiffs should be visualised as such number of separate suits as there were collaterals, with the following observations —

"The fact remains that they filed one suit for a joint decree for possession against all the defendants and having done so they cannot now argue that the suit should be deemed to be for separate decrees for possession of undivided specified shares in the property in question for the purposes of deciding the question of abatement."

These observations by which I am bound apply with full force to the facts of the present case. Following them, therefore, I hold that the appeal has become incompetent as a whole and cannot now be proceeded with against the surviving respondents.

In the result, the appeal is dismissed as having abated. There will be no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

MAHAJAN, J :— The Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, Jammu & Kashmir & Himachal Pradesh at Patiala, has moved this Court under Section 66 (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, asking us to issue a Mandamus to the Tribunal concerned to refer the following two questions of law for our opinion:—

"(i) Whether on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the Tribunal was legally justified in entertaining the so-called Memorandum Book which was never admitted or produced in the assessment proceedings?

(ii) If the answer to the first question is in the affirmative, whether on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the requirement of the first proviso to Section 10 (2) (vii) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, was satisfied by the entries in the Memorandum Book?"

2. The assessee, an individual, carried on contract business for the supply of ballast. He employed his own trucks for the purpose of the contract business. No accounts of his business were produced by him. His income from such business was assessed by applying a rate on the receipts and depreciation on the trucks. In the assessment year 1960-61, the assessee claimed a loss of Rs 50,679/- under Section 10 (2) (vii) of the Act. This loss was allowed by the Income-tax Officer by his order dated the 12th of July, 1961. The assessee appealed against the order of the Income-tax Officer on certain other matters. During the course of the hearing, the Appellate Assistant Commissioner noticed that loss of Rs. 50,679/- arising in the sale of trucks had been wrongly allowed. He took the view that the assessee had not maintained account-books and so the condition for allowing the loss under the first proviso to Section 10 (2) (vii) of the Act was not satisfied; inasmuch as the amount should have been actually written off in the books of the assessee. Accordingly, a notice was issued to the assessee to show cause why his income should not be enhanced by the amount of Rs. 50,679/-. After hearing the assessee, the Appellate Assistant Commissioner enhanced the amount of income by the figure of the loss claimed, by his order dated the 15th of March, 1963. The assessee then appealed to the Tribunal; and the Tribunal reversed the decision of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner and agreed with the Income-tax Officer in allowing the amount of Rs. 50,679/- as loss.

3. The contention before the Tribunal by the Revenue was that the Memorandum Book produced by the assessee was not a book within the meaning of Section 10 (2) (vii). This contention was negatived by the Tribunal. The Revenue then moved the Tribunal for reference of the questions already referred to above. This application was rejected by the Tribunal by its order dated the 4th of December, 1964, with the observations that, "on the facts of this case, it could not be stated that the Tribunal was not legally justified in entertaining the said note-book and using it as a piece of evidence in deciding the case." It is in these circumstances that the present petition has been preferred.

4. It may be said at the outset that a question of law does arise. But in view of the clear pronouncements of the Madras and Bombay High Courts in P. Appavu Pillai v. Commr. of Income-tax, Madras, (1965) 58 ITR 622 (Mad) and Commr. of Income-tax, Bombay City II. v. London Hotel, (1968) 68 ITR 62 (Bom), we decline the prayer for Mandamus. Normally speaking, if a matter is settled by a High Court in this country, that should be enough for the purposes of the Revenue, unless this Court comes to a conclusion that that decision is patently erroneous. This avoids multiplicity of decisions on the same question and is really a commendable course. We do not see anything wrong with the view adopted by the Madras High Court. The Revenue has so far taken no steps to assail its correctness by taking the matter to the Supreme Court. That view appeals to commonsense and reason. This is what the learned Judges said while dealing with Section 10 (2) (vii) of the Act:—

"* * * * * The expression "books of the assessee" in the context in which it appears in Section 10 (2) (vii) cannot give any indication of the particular type of accounts which the assessee should maintain. That the accounts maintained by the assessee are defective, in the sense that they do not lead to a correct assessment of the income, profits and gains of the business, has nothing whatever to do with the allowance that can be granted under Section 10 (2) (vii). * * * * *

In the present case, the Memorandum Register was produced which showed the relevant entry regarding the purchase and sale of vehicles wherein the loss had been calculated and written off within the meaning of Section 10 (2) (vii). The decision of the Madras High Court is fully applicable to the facts of the present case.

5. In this view of the matter, we see no reason to grant the application for mandamus. The application is dismissed but there will be no order as to costs.

Des Raj and others, Appellants v. Vinod Kumar Lal Chand, Respondent.

Ex. Second Appeal No 498 of 1967. D/- 11-2-1970. from judgment of Harbans Singh Actg., C. J., D/-17-7-1969.

Civil P. C. (1968), S. 11 — Res judicata — Principles of — Scope — Suit for pre-emption decreed with direction to deposit balance of pre-emption money by particular date — Delay of two days in depositing money due to treasury being closed — No objection taken by vendee to the framing of decree in trial Court or in lower appellate Court or even in second appeal — Objection to late deposit is deemed to have been waived and objection to framing of decree contrary to the directions in the judgment is res judicata. (Para 4)

N. L. Dhingra and M. S. Dhillon, for Appellants; K. L. Sachdeva, for Respondent.

MAHAJAN, J.:— This execution second appeal has been placed before us in view of the order of Harbans Singh, Acting, C. J., dated the 17th July, 1969. The matters which the learned Judge wanted to be settled by a larger Bench, in our opinion, do not arise as will presently appear from the narration of facts. As the whole case has been placed before us, we have dealt with it and disposed of the same.

2. The land in dispute was sold by Smt. Rallp Devi, the grandmother of the present respondent. This sale was pre-empted by Vinod Kumar who was the grandson of the vendor. His suit was decreed by the trial Court on the 31st of August, 1962, with regard to two-third of the land on payment of Rs. 19,333-33. A direction was given in the decree that the balance of the pre-emption money had to be deposited by the 10th of November, 1962. The money could not be deposited by the 10th of November, 1962, because the Treasury was closed and, in fact, the deposit was made on the next working day, that is, the 12th of November, 1962. Against the decree, that was prepared, two appeals were preferred: one by the plaintiff-pre-emptor and the other by the defendant-vendee. The vendee's claim in appeal before the learned District Judge was that the pre-emption should have been allowed on payment of Rs. 29,000 and not on Rs. 19,333-33, as was done by the trial Court. On the other hand, the pre-emptor's claim in appeal was that he was entitled to pre-empt one-third of the land.

The learned District Judge allowed the pre-emptor's appeal and dismissed the vendee's appeal, with the result that a decree in favour of the pre-emptor was passed on payment of Rs. 29,000. The pre-emptor was given time to make good the balance to make up the amount of Rs. 29,000 by the 6th of August, 1963. This was done within time. Against the decision of the learned District Judge, the vendee appealed. He contested the decision of the lower appellate Court on the ground, that possession by pre-emption could only be allowed to the extent of two-third of the land sold. This plea prevailed with this Court, with the result that the trial Court's decree was restored.

3. When the pre-emptor proceeded to execute the decree, an objection was raised before the executing Court that as the pre-emption money, namely, Rs. 19,333-33 had not been deposited on the 10th of November, 1962, the pre-emption suit should be deemed to have been dismissed; and, therefore, no decree could be passed and there was nothing to execute. This objection was rejected by the executing Court and so also by the appellate Court. Both the Courts proceeded on the view that the pre-emption money was in deposit in the Court before the 6th of August, 1962, and as the trial Court's decree had merged with the decree of the District Judge the deposit was within time. The vendee is dissatisfied with this decision and has come up in appeal to this Court.

4. It is not necessary to deal with the matters raised in the order of Harbans Singh, Acting C. J., which led the learned

Judge to refer the matter to a Division Bench. In our opinion, the appeal stands concluded on a narrow ground which escaped notice. The ground, on which we have proceeded to dismiss the appeal, is purely one of law; and in order to appreciate our decision, the following facts have to be kept in view. Under the trial Court's decree, the balance of the pre-emption money had to be deposited by the 10th of November, 1962. It was not deposited on that date, but was deposited on the 12th of November, 1962. The reason for this delay was that the Treasury was closed on the 10th as well as on the 11th of November, 1962. In any event, if the deposit made on the 12th of November, 1962, was not a good deposit, the suit should have been dismissed and not decreed. However, a decree was framed and two appeals against that decree were preferred — one by the pre-emptor and the other by the vendee. No objection was taken to the framing of the decree by the vendee in the trial Court or in the lower appellate Court. Both the parties proceeded on the assumption that the decree had been validly framed. The vendee could have non-suited the plaintiff-pre-emptor on this ground. This ground was available to him in appeal. Therefore, two results follow:—

- (1) that the objection to late deposit has been waived; and
- (2) that the objection to the framing of the decree contrary to the directions in the judgment has become res judicata.

The matter does not rest here. Even in second appeal, no objection to the decree on this ground was taken. In this situation, it is idle to suggest that the decree, which has now become final inter partes, is, in any manner, defective. The defect, if any, in the decree has been cured by the application of the rules of res judicata and waiver.

5. For the reasons recorded above, this appeal fails and is dismissed, but there will be no order as to costs in this Court only.

SANDHAWALIA, J.:— 6. I agree.
Appeal dismissed.

in the progress of the suit. The Court, in which the suit is pending, is therefore duty bound to revive the proceedings either suo motu or at the instance of the plaintiff who has filed the suit.

BHANDARI, C. J.— These three references have been made by Jagat Narayan, J., in revision petitions filed in this Court and a common question of law regarding interpretation of Sections 5 and 6 of the Rajasthan Relief of Agricultural Indebtedness Act, 1957 (Act No. 28 of 1957) (hereinafter called the Act) has been raised in them. These sections run as follows:—

“5. Abatement or stay of suit or insolvency petition.— (1) Whenever a suit or an insolvency petition against a debtor shall have been brought or made and pending in a competent Court and such debtor or the person who brought or made such suit or petition applies to such Court in this behalf, the Court shall—

(i) abate such suit or petition if it is satisfied on affidavit or otherwise that an application to the Debt Relief Court under Section 6 or Section 6A has been made and admitted and is pending, or

(ii) stay proceedings in such suit or application if it is satisfied as aforesaid that the defendant or the opposite party, as the case may be, is a debtor within the meaning of this Act:

Provided that, in the case of an application for stay under clause (ii), the Court shall fix a period, not exceeding ninety days, within which the application to the Debt Relief Court shall be made.

(2) If any such suit or petition as is referred to in sub-section (1) shall have been pending—

(i) against a member of a Scheduled Caste or a Scheduled Tribe, at the date of the applicability of this Act to such castes or tribes appointed under Section 2-A, and

(ii) in other cases at the date of the commencement of this Act, an application for stay of proceeding under sub-section (1) may be made within six months of the date of such applicability or such commencement, as the case may be.

6. Application to Debt Relief Court:—

(1) Any debtor, who is liable for debts individually or jointly with another person, may file an application before the Debt Relief Court having jurisdiction in the area in which he ordinarily resides or earns his livelihood praying for the determination of his debts.

(2) Such an application, praying for the determination of the debts outstanding against a debtor, may also be filed by his creditor or his surety, whether such debtor is liable for such debts individually or jointly with another person.

(3) Every application under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) shall be signed and verified in accordance with Order VI, Rule 15, of the First Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 (Central Act V of 1908) and shall contain the following particulars, namely:—

(a) a statement that the debtor is an agriculturist or a member of a Scheduled Caste or a Scheduled Tribe,

(b) the place where he normally resides,

(c) a statement of all debts outstanding against him, including those referred to in Section 4, as nearly as may be ascertainable and the names and addresses of his creditors,

(d) a statement of all his property, including claims due to him, together with a specification of the value of his property, and the place or places at which any such property is to be found, and

(e) such other particulars as may be prescribed.

(4) In cases covered by Clause (ii) of sub-section (1) of Section 5 an application under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) of this Section, as the case may be, shall be filed within the period fixed under the proviso to sub-section (1) of Section 5.

(5) All applications pending before Debt Relief Court at the commencement of the Rajasthan Relief of Agricultural Indebtedness (Amendment) Ordinance, 1961 (Ordinance No. 7 of 1961), shall continue and be deemed to have been presented under this section.

(6) The suit or insolvency petition in which proceedings may have been stayed under Clause (ii) of sub-section (1) of Section 5 shall abate—

(i) if no such application as is referred to in sub-section (4) is filed, or

(ii) if such an application is admitted and notice of such admission has been received by the court concerned.

(7) If such an application is rejected the debtor shall not be entitled to file another application in any Debt Relief Court and any proceedings stayed under sub-section (1) of Section 5 shall be resumed.”

2. In Civil Revision No. 209/66 Pyarelal had filed a suit against Smt. Rani Raman Kumari for the recovery of Rs. 1066.76 in the court of Munsif East, Jaipur City. The defendant filed an application in that suit contending that she was an agriculturist and was a debtor within the meaning of Section 2 (cc) of the Act and that she would file an application under Section 6 of the Act in the competent Debt Relief Court and that till then the suit be stayed. The court accepted that she was a debtor and stayed the proceedings in the suit. Shrimati Rani Raman Kumari then filed an application under Section 6 (1) of the Act before the Munsif Dausa praying for determination of her debts. On 2nd August, 1964 counsel for the plaintiff admitted in the court of Munsif, East Jaipur City that the defendant had filed an application under Section 6 (1) of the Act and on this admission the court passed the order that in view of the admission, the suit be stayed and added that the suit be struck off from its number and be consigned to the record room. There is no express order of the abatement of the suit. On 23rd December, 1964 the Debt Relief Court decided that Rani Raman Kumari was not a debtor within the meaning of the Act and her application under Section 6 (1) of the Act was not maintainable. Thereupon on 24th March, 1965 the plaintiff filed an application in the court of Munsif, East Jaipur City, that the suit filed by him be restored to its original number and that further proceedings be taken thereon. The learned Munsif by his order dated 5th May, 1965 relying on the authority of this Court in Karansee v. Bastichand, 1964 Raj LW 442 dismissed the application on the ground that the suit could not be restored as it had abated. The plaintiff filed a revision application in this Court which came for hearing before Jagat Narayan J. The learned Judge has taken the view that Karansee's case 1964 Raj LW 442 required to be reconsidered. He formulated the following question and referred the case to a larger bench:—

"Whether the Civil Court can revive proceedings abated under Sections 5 and 6 of the Rajasthan Relief of Agricultural Indebtedness Act, 1957."

3. The facts in Civil Revision No. 382/66 are similar except that the court in which the suit was filed had passed an express order of abatement of the suit.

4. Similar question arose in an execution case out of which Civil Revision No. 353/66 has arisen.

5. The answer to the question referred to us depends on the meaning to be given to the word "abate" in Section 5 (1) (i) and Section 6 (6) of the Act. In 1961 Raj LW 412, Jagat Narayan, J. has taken the view that the dictionary meaning of "abate" was "to put an end to" and that in this sense this expression was used in Order 22 of the Code of Civil Procedure. He pointed out that the expression "abate" was used in a sense different from stay and that it did not mean merely a stay for an indefinite period as contended by the creditor in that case. He further pointed out that before the amendment of the Act by the amending Act "The Rajasthan Relief of Agricultural Indebtedness (Amendment) Act, 1960 (Rajasthan Act No. 33 of 1960)", there was a provision only for the stay of proceedings but the legislature deliberately put the provision for abatement of the suit by the amending Act. For all these reasons he held that when a suit or execution application has abated by virtue of Sections 5 and 6 of the Act, it could not be revived and that the remedy of the creditor or decree-holder was to file new suit or new execution application as the case may be.

6. Let us examine the scheme of the Act when it lays down that under certain circumstances, a suit or insolvency petition shall abate. Broadly speaking, the purpose behind Sections 5 and 6 is to confer exclusive jurisdiction on Debt Relief Court of the area in which the debtor ordinarily resides or earns his livelihood to determine all his debts and to grant him appropriate relief in accordance with the provisions of the Act. For this purpose a summary remedy has been provided and it consists in making an application by the debtor for determination of his debts as provided in Section 6 (1). But by the Amending Act (Act No. 33 of 1960) this remedy may also be filed by the creditor or the surety of the debtor. Cases may arise in which a suit or insolvency petition has already been brought or made in a competent court against a debtor. Section 5 (1) (ii) provides that in such a case if the debtor or the person who brought or made such suit or insolvency application applies to that court for stay of proceedings, it may stay the proceedings in such suit or application provided it is satisfied by affidavit or otherwise that the defendant or the opposite party as the case may be is a debtor within the meaning of the Act. At the same time, it may fix a period not exceeding ninety days within which the application to the Debt Relief Court has to be made. If such an application is not made either by the debtor or by the creditor, the consequences will be that the suit or the insolvency petition in which proceedings have been stayed shall abate. It is so provided in sub-section (6) (i) of Section 6 of the Act. This appears to be a bit harsh and unjust to the creditor because it may turn out to be a case in which the creditor had opposed the application of a debtor under Sec 5 (1) for stay of proceedings on the ground that the defendant or the opposite party as the case may be was not a debtor within the meaning of the Act and yet while filing the application under Section 6 (2) he is asked to take up the position that the defendant or the opposite party is a debtor. But the reason may be that stay of proceedings have been ordered by the court in which the proceedings were pending after satisfaction that the defendant or the opposite party as the case may be is a debtor within the meaning of the Act and the creditor must take appropriate steps by filing revision application or otherwise for setting aside that finding of the court otherwise he must obey that finding and go to the Debt Relief Court which has been granted exclusive jurisdiction in the matter. The other types of cases may be where there is already an application pending under Section 6 (1) or Section 6(2) and thereafter a suit or an insolvency petition has been brought against the debtor. Section 5 (1) (i) says that in such a case, the debtor or the person who brought or made such suit or petition may apply for abatement of such suit or application. Section 5 (1) (i) lays down that abatement of suit or insolvency application be ordered when the court in which it is pending is satisfied that an application to the Debt Relief Court has been made, and admitted and is pending.

7. Unfortunately in the Act there is no provision what procedure is to be followed for admission of an application under S. 6. We are inclined to take the view that an application under Section 6 cannot be declared to be admitted unless the court is satisfied that the application is either made by a person who is a debtor within the meaning of the Act or by his creditor or his surety and such application has been brought in a competent Court. It appeared to us more in consonance with the scheme of the Act as well as with justice and equity that such preliminary matters must be decided before an application is declared to be admitted. But the Act appears not to have been artistically drafted. The heading of Section 7 says that there is some sort of preliminary procedure to be followed in such cases, but the section opens by saying that the preliminary proceeding is to be followed upon the admission of an application under Section 6 or Section 6A and that procedure is that all the creditors of the applicant are to be joined as parties to the proceedings and the Debt Relief Court is to pass an order fixing the date of hearing. There is no indication in the Act that the objection whether the Court is competent to decide the matter or whether the person whose debts are to be determined is or is not a debtor within the meaning of the Act is to be decided first. In some other Acts of other States of similar nature there is such provision. For example, we may refer to Section 17 of the Bombay Agricultural Debt Relief Act. We should have remedied this defect by laying down that such preliminary matters must be decided after giving notice to all creditors of that person and then only the application is deemed to be admitted. But the opening words of Section 7 are that even such notices are to be given after admission and thus no room is left for us to give such interpretation. We may by the way point out that in the expression "all creditors of the applicant", the use of the word "applicant" is not appropriate when the application under Section 6 has been filed not by the debtor but by the creditor or his surety. Perhaps this was not noticed while amending Section 6 by the amending Act otherwise Section 7 should also have been amended.

8. Having pointed out these defects in drafting, let us revert to Sections 5 (1) (i) and 6 (6) of the Act. Section 5 (1) (i) lays down that if the Court in which the suit or insolvency petition is pending is satisfied that an application under Section 6 or 6A has been made and admitted and is pending, it may order abatement of such suit or insolvency petition. Similarly, S. 6 (6) (ii) says that if an application under Section 6 is admitted and notice of such admission has been received by the court concerned, then the suit or insolvency proceedings which had been stayed under Clause (ii) of sub-section (1) of Section 5 shall abate. We have to determine what is the meaning of the word "abate" in these sub-sections.

9. Ordinarily, it is the duty of a court or a tribunal which has been created for deciding certain disputes between the parties to decide those disputes finally. But circumstances may arise when such final determination may not be possible. Confining ourselves to suits, we find that in the Civil Procedure Code there are provisions for dismissal and abatement in such cases. For example, it is provided in Rule 2 of Order 9 Civil Procedure Code that where on the day fixed in summons for the defendant to appear and answer, it is found that the summons has not been served properly upon the defendant in consequence of the failure of the plaintiff to pay the court-fee or postal charges, the court may make an order that the suit be dismissed. Similarly, provision in Rule 3 of the same Order is that where neither party appears when the suit is called for hearing, the court may order that the suit be dismissed. When a suit is dismissed, ordinarily the court dismissing the suit becomes functus officio and the remedy of a party lies in an appeal for getting the order of dismissal set aside. But under Rule 4, that very court is competent to set aside the order of dismissal. The suit of the plaintiff had been dismissed because of the default committed by the plaintiff, yet he has the remedy to satisfy the court that there was sufficient cause for him for having committed such default and he may get an order of dismissal of the suit set aside. Thus even dismissed suits can be restored. The suit had been dismissed for the reason that further proceedings could not be taken thereon on account of default committed by plaintiff. But the plaintiff may come forward to satisfy the court that for sufficient cause his default should be condoned and the proceedings in the suit may be revived.

10. Let us come more closely to the point and examine in what sense the word "abate" has been used in Order XXII of the Code of Civil Procedure.

11. Order XXII, Rule 3, Civil Procedure Code provides that where one of two or more plaintiffs dies and the right to sue does not survive to the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs alone, or a sole plaintiff or sole surviving plaintiff dies and the right to sue survives, the Court, on an application made in that behalf, shall cause the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff to be made a party and shall proceed with the suit. Then it is provided that where within the time limited by law, no application is made under sub-rule (1), the suit shall abate so far as the deceased plaintiff is concerned. Similarly, there is a provision under O XXII, R. 4 for the abatement of suit as against the deceased defendant. Under Order XXII Rule 9 the plaintiff or the person claiming to be the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff may apply for an order to set aside the abatement or dismissal, and if it is proved that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from continuing the suit, the court shall set aside the abatement or dismissal upon such terms as it thinks fit. Thus the abatement of suit under Order XXII is not of such a nature that the proceedings in that suit cannot be continued under any circumstances, or in other words, that suit may be revived if certain conditions provided in Order XXII, Rule 9, Civil Procedure Code, are satisfied. We mean to point out that the order of abatement of suit under O XXII is not of such a nature that it cannot be vacated by that very court. On the other hand, if certain conditions are satisfied, the proceedings in that suit may be continued. It is not final dismissal of the suit in the sense that there can be no continuance of the proceedings in any contingency whatsoever after abatement.

12. We find no difficulty in adopting this meaning of the expression "abate" while dealing with Sections 5 and 6 of the Act. Now what does Section 5 say? Section 5 (1) (i) says that the court shall abate the suit if it is satisfied on affidavit or otherwise that an application to the Debt Relief Court under Section 6 or Section 6A has been made and admitted and is pending. This Section gives effect to the general rule of law that if two courts of concurrent jurisdiction are seized of the matter, the legislature may prohibit the other court from taking any proceedings in the matter. When it is said in Section 5 (1) (i) that the court shall abate the suit, it means that the court will stop taking all further proceedings in the suit and may consign it to the record room. In Section 6 (6) of the Act, such abatement is to be ordered in the suit in which the proceedings may have been stayed under Clause (ii) of sub-section (1) of Section 5 if no such application as is referred to in sub-section (4) is filed, or if such application is admitted and notice of such admission has been received by the court concerned. In all the cases before us, the abatement has taken place under Sec. 6 (1) (ii). Now, it may turn out that the application filed by a person claiming himself to be a debtor within the meaning of Section 2 (cc) of the Act may be dismissed on the objection taken by his creditors that he is not a debtor within the meaning of the Act or the court in which the application is filed is not competent to entertain the application or that the application does not comply with the provisions of Sec. 6 (3). What is to be done after such abatement? The Debt Relief Court dismissing or rejecting the application must withdraw the notice of the admission of the application which it had sent to the court concerned and even if it does not expressly withdraw such notice, it must be deemed to have done so by dismissing or rejecting the application of that person. What is the effect then on the abatement of the suit after such notice of admission has been withdrawn by the Debt Relief Court? Will the order of abatement remain in force even after the notice is withdrawn or deemed to be withdrawn? Such cannot be the consequences. In effect the Debt Relief Court informs the court in which the suit is pending that it was not right in sending the notice of admission to the court in which the suit is filed and it further informs that court of the rectification of that mistake. Even if no express information is sent, then by rejecting the application of that person who has filed the application under Section 6 (1) of the Act, the Court must be deemed to have sent such notice. Obviously the order of abatement could not have been operative had this mistake been not made by the Debt Relief Court. As soon as the court rectifies this mistake by rejecting the application, it means to convey to the court that so far as it is concerned, it places no hurdle in the progress of the suit. The court, in which the suit is pending, is therefore duty bound to revive the proceedings either suo motu or at the instance of the plaintiff who has filed the suit.

13. Our answer to the question is that the proceedings in the suit can be revived on the rejection of the application of the debtor. We need not make any pronouncement whether the order of abatement can or cannot be vacated in a case in which no such application has been filed as is referred to in sub-section (4) of Section 6 of the Act and the abatement of suit takes place by virtue of the force of sub-section (6) (i) of Section 6.

14. Our answer to the question is that civil Court can revive the proceedings abated under Section 5 (1) (i) or Section 6 (6) (ii) of the Act if the order of admission of the application under Section 6 has been set aside by the Debt Relief Court itself or by any other Court competent to set aside that order.

Order accordingly.

B. C. Chatterji, Addl. Advocate General, for State; H. P. Gupta, for Appellants; M.
Mridul, for Respondents.

JUDGMENT: These are two special appeals under Section 18 of the Rajasthan High Court Ordinance, one by the State of Rajasthan and the other by the Rajasthan State Electricity Board, Jaipur (hereinafter to be referred to be the Board) against the order of a learned Single Judge of this Court dated 17th October, 1968, quashing the order Ex. 1 dated 29th June, 1967, of the Chairman of the Board, retiring the respondent Shri Shrikishan from service and further directing the respondent State Govt. and the Board not to give effect to the order qua the petitioner Shri Shrikishan. Both these appeals shall be disposed of by this common order.

2. The relevant facts may be briefly stated as follows:—

The respondent Shri Shrikishan is a resident of Kishangarh and was born on 1-7-1910. He joined Government service in the erstwhile State of Kishangarh as a wireman in the State Power House. With the formation of Rajasthan, the respondent became the employee of the State of Rajasthan. He was a Head Line-man with effect from 1-4-1950. Sometime in the year 1957, (on 28-6-1957) the Rajasthan State Electricity Board was constituted, in pursuance of the relevant provisions of the Electricity Supplies Act, 1948 (hereinafter to be referred to as the Act). After the formation of the Board the State Government issued directions under Section 78-A of the Act vide order Ex.A dated 12th February, 1958, placing the services of the employees of the Electrical & Mechanical Department excluding the Electrical Inspectorate of the State at the disposal of the Board. This order indicated the manner of regulation of the service conditions as follows:—

(1) The services of the Govt. employees of the Electrical and Mechanical Department both permanent and temporary shall be provisionally placed at the disposal of the Rajasthan Electricity Board with effect from 1st July, 1957.

(2) The Board shall be required to permit each Government servant to exercise option either to:—

(a) accept the new grades and service conditions framed by the Board under its regulations; or

(b) Continue in the present grades and service conditions except in regard to conduct and discipline rules; or

(c) obtain relief from Government service by claiming pension or gratuity as may be admissible on abolition of posts under the Rajasthan Service Rules (Rules 215 to 226).

(3) In case of permanent Govt. servant of the Electrical and Mechanical Department opting to continue in the service of the Board subject to these existing conditions, the grant of pension is guaranteed by the Government subject to an arrangement to be made with the Board.

(4) The Government servants are to be permitted to avail themselves of leave earned under the Government after their transfer to the Board to draw the salary therefore, in accordance with an arrangement to be made with the Board."

It does not appear from the record whether the Board took any action to create new grades or service conditions but it is a common ground that there arose no occasion for the employees provisionally transferred to exercise any option provided in Clause (2) of the order Ex. A. It may be incidentally mentioned that sometime in the year 1963 the Board prepared the draft standing orders for laying down the conditions of the service of the employees providing the age of superannuation of its employees at "55" and submitted them before the certifying officer in accordance with the Standing Orders Act, 1946. The Union of the workers opposed the certification of the standing order proposed by the Board and suggested the fixation of the age of superannuation at "60" and not "55". The Certification Officer did not certify the order about the age of superannuation and we are told that the age of superannuation was left to be determined by the past practice. On 13th June, 1967, the Government of Rajasthan issued orders bearing No F I (42) FD (Exp-Rules) 67-1 amending Rule 56 of the Rajasthan Service Rules (hereinafter to be referred to as the Service Rules) and substituting "55" years as the age of superannuation in place of "59" years. The said order was endorsed to the Chairman of the Board. In pursuance of that order, on 20th June, 1967, Chairman of the Board, issued the order Ex. 1 retiring the respondent Shri Shrikishan from service. Aggrieved by this order, the respondent Shri Shrikishan submitted writ petition in this Court on the following grounds:—

1. That he was not employee of the State and could not have been retired in terms of Government Notification dated 13-6-1967 by which the State Employees were retired. Consequently, the order Ex. 1 could not be issued.

2. The respondent Shri Shrikishan also referred to the absence of the certification of the standing order in relation to superannuation age and contended that in the absence of a standing order duly certified he could not have been retired by the Board.

3. The writ was opposed by the appellants. The reply of the Board was that the services of the respondent like other employees of the Power Houses were provisionally placed at the disposal of the Board and that he was only on deputation with the Board and never came to be absorbed in the service of the Board and that he could be retired on reaching the age of 55 years in terms of the Service Rules as amended in June, 1967. It was also urged that even after the transfer of the Power Houses by the State Government to the Board, the State Government continued to exercise disciplinary control over employees whose services were placed at the disposal of the Board. In the reply as also by means of a separate application the Board also contended the Court should not exercise its extraordinary jurisdiction having regard to a serious dispute on a question of fact between the parties viz. whether the petitioner was or was not an employee of the State. The State filed a separate reply more or less on the same lines.

4. The writ came up before a learned Single Judge in the first instance on 22-8-

1968. On that day the counsel for the Board submitted that he had documentary evidence to produce for showing that the respondent Shri Shrikishan continued to be a Government servant in spite of his services having been placed at the disposal of the Board in terms of order Ex. A. The Court then expressed the opinion that the decisive thing for seeing whether the respondent Shri Shrikishan continued in Government service or not will be to find out whether his lien was kept with the Government or whether any permanent post was kept for him on which his lien was suspended. Ife, therefore, directed the counsel for the Board to gather information about the lien of Shri Shrikishan with the Government in the first instance and directed that the question whether a further opportunity should be given to the counsel for the Board to adduce evidence in the shape of other documents for establishing the continuance of the respondent in the service at a later date.

The Board subsequently on 28-8-68 produced a copy of letter No. F.4 (95) Pow/67 dated 26th August, 1968 written by the Assistant Secretary to the Government (Power Department) and addressed to the Secretary, Rajasthan State Electricity Board Jaipur, stating "their services have not been transferred to the Board and they still hold a lien under the Government". The principal question was formulated by the learned Judge as follows:—

"Whether the petitioner (respondent here) was a State employee and he was not absorbed in the service of the Board, but continued to be on deputation with the Board so that he could be retired on the basis of the Government notification issued on 13-6-67 in terms of Rule 56 of the Rajasthan Service Rules, 1951, as they stood amended on 13-6-67?"

In answering the question, the learned Judge examined the language of the order Ex. A of 1958 in the light of the Service Rules, particularly, Rule 18 relating to the lien of Government servants and 14f relating to the deputation of Government servants to foreign employments, and recorded the following conclusions:—

(1) "Therefore, to my mind, the only choice left with a Government servant whose services were placed at the disposal of the Board, in terms of order Ex. A was either to continue in service with the Board on terms that the Board might offer or on his old terms or to go home and to ask for post retirement benefits from the Government."

(2) Emphasising that it was the duty of the Board to have given this option, to the employees concerned and its omission for 10 long years, he observed that "that does not lie in its mouth to say that the employee is not its employee. By logic of events that had overtaken what was laid down in the order Ex. A, the parties concerned namely, the Board and the employees concerned will be taken to have established a relationship of master and servants as between themselves by conduct."

(3) Referring to letter dated 26-8-68 (Ex. C) the learned single Judge observed:—

"The letter written by one respondent to another, even if one of the respondents is the Government during the pendency of the writ petition and after the query has been made by the Court itself on 22-8-68 has evidentiary value."

(4) The learned single Judge also relied upon the stand taken by the Board in Mohanlal v. State, AIR 1966 Raj 1 holding that Mohanlal a similar employee was treated as an employee of the Rajasthan State Electricity Board after the Power Houses were transferred to the Board. The learned Judge further pointed out that the case went up to the Supreme Court at the instance of the Board (Electricity Board Rajasthan v. Mohanlal, AIR 1967 SC 1857) and the judgment of the Court was affirmed vide order 3-4-1967.

Reaching the conclusion that the respondent was no longer the employee of the State, the learned single Judge held that the order Ex. 1 could not have been issued by the Chairman of the Board. The learned single Judge consequently allowed the writ petition with costs and quashed the order Ex. 1. The State Government and the Rajasthan State Electricity Board have filed the present appeals.

5. At the outset, we think it proper to emphasise the following facts which hardly admit of any controversy:—

(1) That by Government's order dated 12th February, 1958 (Ex. A) their services were only provisionally placed at the disposal of the Board. There is no subsequent order of the Government either terminating their services or otherwise indicating that they ceased to be Government employees.

(2) That there was no exercise of any option in terms of Clause (2) of Ex. A by the respondent Shri Shrikishan and there is no order of the Board appointing or absorbing the respondent as permanent employee of the Board.

6. We consider it proper to point out at this stage that we have not been able to understand how the order Ex. A imposed a duty on the Board to have given option to the State employees whose services were provisionally placed at the disposal of the Board. There are also no materials on record whether the Board created new grades or conditions of service and whether there arose any occasion for the exercise of option in terms of Clause 2 (b) of Ex. A. We consider, there was no adequate justification for the basic assumption made by the learned single Judge in this behalf. Prima facie, these facts do not lead to an inference that the respondent, like other employees, continued to be in the service of the Board. The learned Judge however, relied upon Rules 18 and 141 of the Service Rules and reached a contrary conclusion. The question before us is whether on a proper and reasonable interpretation and construction of these rules the conclusion reached by the learned single Judge is sustainable?

7. Rule 18 of the Service Rules provides that "A Government servant's lien on a post may in no circumstances be terminated, even with his consent if the result will be to leave him without a lien or a suspended lien upon a permanent post." The rule is intended to safeguard the rights of the Government servant and to impose a corresponding duty upon the Government and it cannot be reasonably interpreted to imply not only loss of lien and further a termination of the services of the State employees simply because the Government while provisionally transferring the respondent mentioned no specific permanent post on which his lien could be retained. A rule creating a very valuable right in favour of the employees cannot be permitted to be availed of to lead to the serious consequences of loss of service on the basis of actual or presumed contravention of the rule by the State.

The rule on the other hand, should and does enable a State employee to compel the Government to take appropriate steps for the retention of his lien including the creation of a supernumerary post. A contrary view contended for by the respondent and relied upon by the learned single Judge will lead to a serious invasion on the rights of the Government servants and cannot be reasonably countenanced. Having regard to the language of the rule and the materials on record, we are unable to agree with the learned single Judge that the right of the respondent in respect of his lien on Government service was extinguished and that the respondent lost his service also. In our opinion the learned single Judge was hardly justified in being influenced by reference to Rule 18 in interpreting the impugned order Ex. 1.

8. Rule 141 of the Service Rules as it stood in 1958, prohibited transfer of a Government servant to foreign service without his consent. It, however, does not state expressly or by necessary implication that a transfer by the Government in disregard to the rule is bound to have the effect of terminating the services of the Government servant. On the basis of the rule the Government servant could object to the transfer and insist upon his right to remain with the Government and the Government will be bound to allow the objection and to cancel the transfer. It may be that the Government may not have any job on which to retain the employee in consequence of abolition of post and may have no alternative but to terminate the services of the employee after giving necessary benefits under Rr. 215 to 226 of the Rules. But it cannot be assumed in the absence of express or implied orders of the Government or proper materials that the Government by effecting transfer terminated or intended to terminate the services of its employees.

It must be emphasised that there is nothing on record to show that the respondent, in any way, objected to the transfer. On the other hand, he acquiesced in the order of transfer and consequently, there arose no question for the termination of the respondent's service. The learned Judge thought that as the Government servant had no real option to object to the transfer on account of the liability of the termination of his services as provided in Clause "C" of Ex. A, the transfer should be treated as compulsory without the consent of the respondent and other employees and that it had the effect of termination of the employment of the respondent with the Government and his consequent absorption by the Board. We find it difficult to accept this conclusion. To us, the position appears to be as follows—

In the year 1958 after the creation of the Board the Rajasthan Government was anxious about the services of the persons in the Mechanical and Electrical Department. The Government therefore, placed their services provisionally at the disposal of the Board evidently retaining them in State Service. The Government contemplated that the Board may create new grades and new conditions of service and, therefore, gave option to the employees to accept new grades and service conditions and be absorbed in the service of the Board or to continue in the service of the State on old terms. Of course, Cl. "c" of para 2 of Ex. A did provide that in case of a Government servant refusing to accept the transfer and to serve under the Board he could claim relief from the Government by claiming pension or gratuity, as may be admissible on abolition of the posts under the Rajasthan Service Rules (Rules 215 to 226). This option given to the Government servant by itself cannot imply termination of Government service.

It may be that the Government servants might not have objected to the transfer in view of the likelihood of their services being terminated under clause "c" of Ex. A. To say this, however, cannot imply that the transfer of the respondent was necessarily without his consent and that it resulted in the termination of the respondent's services in the Government and his absorption by the Board. The counsel for the respondent vehemently contended that the order Ex. A in view of Clause "c" should be interpreted to imply the impossibility of the employees to remain in service with the State and the absorption of the employees in the service of the Board that they had given simply an option to accept new grades and conditions if and when created by the Board or to remain in service with the Board, on conditions of service as were in force under the State.

We regret, we cannot accept this interpretation. In the instant case the order clearly states for the provisional transfer of their services. It further guarantees pension. Clause 2-c meant an option to the employee to either accept the provisional transfer while continuing in State service or to accept termination of service on the basis of abolition of post with necessary benefits. It may imply a temporary inability on the part of the State to retain the employees with jobs under it but not an inability to retain them in service or to provide work and jobs to them in future. On a proper interpretation of Ex. 1, we are of opinion that the Government servants had option to get themselves absorbed in the service of the Board by accepting new grades and service conditions, if any, created by the Board or to continue in the service of the Government on the old service conditions. Differing from the learned single Judge we reject the contention of the respondent's counsel.

9. We may mention here that Rule 141, Rajasthan Service Rules was amended in 1960 by F. D. Order No. F.7 (a) (31) F.D.A./Rules 60 dated 12-8-1960. The amended rule runs as follows:—

"141. No Government servant may be transferred to foreign service against his will provided that this rule shall not apply to the transfer of a Government servant to the services of a body incorporated or not, which is wholly or substantially owned or controlled by the Government to service paid from a Panchayat Samiti/Zila Parishad Fund constituted under the Rajasthan Panchayat Samitis and Zila Parishads Act, 1959 (Act No. 37 of 1959)."

10. The Rajasthan State Electricity Board is substantially controlled by the Government and under the amended rule, Government became empowered to transfer the services of the respondent to the State Electricity Board on deputation without his consent on 12-8-1960. This amendment regularised the deputation of the respondent even if his implied consent is not inferred.

11. Further, the impugned order provides for the reversion of the employees to the service of the State before retiring them. A supernumerary post is created for each employee on which he reverts and from which he retires.

12. Rule 17 (b) of the Rajasthan Service Rules provides that Government may suspend the lien of a Government servant on a post which he holds substantively if he is transferred to foreign service and Rule 17 (f) provides for the revival of the lien on his reversion to service under the State. The lien of all Government servants whose services were transferred to the State Electricity Board should have been suspended under the above rule. The failure to do so cannot have the result of terminating their services under the State. Their lien was neither terminated nor suspended expressly. In these circumstances, it can only be deemed to have been suspended. For that was the correct order which should have been passed. It will thus be seen that there is no reason to treat the respondent as being otherwise than on deputation with the State Electricity Board.

13. The learned Single Judge relied upon the case of AIR 1966 Raj 1 in support of his conclusion that the respondent should be treated as an employee of the Board. It is true that Mohanlal was mentioned as an employee of the Board in the above judgment which was also upheld by the Supreme Court. In our opinion, the respondent cannot derive much help from this case. Mohanlal was an employee of the Mechanical Department and his services were provisionally placed at the disposal of the Board. In 1960 he was deputed as Assistant Engineer, Electrical, in the Public Works Department (Buildings and Roads) by order of the Government dated 27th January, 1960. Subsequently by another order of the Government dated 24th November, 1962, he was transferred back to the Board.

It appears that during the period he was on deputation in the Public Works Department there were a number of persons who were junior to him in the pre-existing Electrical and Mechanical Department and like him who were serving in the Electricity Board, had been appointed to higher posts in disregard of his seniority. He filed a writ petition to challenge the promotion of his juniors and to enforce his seniority. The writ was allowed. The facts of his provisional transfer of services to the Board and his subsequent transfer to the Public Works Department of the State and further retransfer to the Board point out that he was being treated as a State employee. There was no controversy in that case whether he should be treated as a permanent employee of the Board or of the State. In fact, the observations of his being an employee of the Board appear to have been made on admissions, there being no controversy or issue. Such observations being casual, cannot be binding while deciding the present case.

14. In the light of the foregoing discussion, we have no alternative but to come to the conclusion in disagreement with the learned single Judge, that the respondent having continued in Government service was validly retired by the Chairman of the Board in terms of Government Notification dated 18th June, 1967, and the learned Judge was not justified in quashing the order of the Chairman. In this view of the matter, it is hardly necessary to consider the controversy in relation to the standing orders.

15. The appeals are allowed. The decision of the learned single Judge is set aside. Parties to bear their own costs.

Appeals allowed.

V. P. TYAGI, J.

Kunjbehari Lal, Petitioner v. The Regional Assistant Labour Commissioner, Jaipur and others, Respondents.

Civil Writ Petn. No. 145 of 1967, D/- 11-7-1969.

(A) Payment of Wages Act (1936), Section 15 (2) — Claims arising out of deductions from wages — Jurisdiction of Authority appointed under Section 15 is to determine the actual wages to be paid to employees and not the potential wages.

In view of the definition of wages under Section 2 (vi) of the Payment of Wages Act the Authority under that Act has the jurisdiction to decide what actually the terms of the contract between the parties were, that is to say, to determine the actual wages of the employees but it had no jurisdiction to determine the question of the potential wages which the employee ought to have got. AIR 1955 SC 412, Relied on. (Para 14)

Therefore the authority appointed under the Payment of Wages Act has no jurisdiction to decide a claim that the employer has not paid to its employees the minimum wages fixed under the Minimum Wages Act which according to claimant amounts to deduction of wages. (Para 14)

(B) Minimum Wages Act (1948), Sec. 20 — Claims — Fixation of minimum wages by notification under Section 3 — Employer failing to recognise rights of employees accrued to them by virtue of notification — Dispute can be raised before Authority appointed under Section 20 (1) only within six months from date of notification. D. P. Gupta, for Petitioner; S. K. Tewari, Dy. Govt. Advocate, for Respondents.

ORDER:— Petitioner Kunjbehari Lal, a quarry-holder, has filed this petition under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution challenging the order passed by the Regional Assistant Labour Commissioner, Jaipur, who was working as an Authority under the Payment of Wages Act, 1936 (hereinafter called the Act) for Alwar area.

2. The facts giving rise to this litigation are as follows:

Respondent No. 2 Labour Enforcement Officer, Jaipur, who was in charge of the office of Inspector under the Act, moved an application under Section 15 of the Act before respondent No. 1, the Authority appointed under the Act, that the petitioner illegally deducted Rs. 2929 54 Paise from the wages of the employees employed by him at his quarries. This claim was raised by the Labour Enforcement Officer for a period from May, 1965 to September, 1965. The ground on the basis of which this claim was made by the said officer was that the State Government had fixed the wages under the Minimum Wages Act but the contractor, namely, the petitioner did not pay to the labourers who worked at his quarry at the rates so fixed under the Minimum Wages Act by the Government of Rajasthan. The petitioner raised certain preliminary objections before respondent No. 1. One of the objections was that the respondent No. 1 had no jurisdiction to entertain a dispute under the provisions of the Act which ought to have been raised under Section 20 of the Minimum Wages Act. The other preliminary objections, which have not been pressed before me, need not be mentioned here. Respondent No. 1, after hearing the arguments of both the parties, decided this objection of the petitioner against him and held that he had jurisdiction to entertain such a claim under the provisions of the Act. It is against this order dated 27th December, 1966 that the present writ application has been filed with a prayer that the order passed by respondent No. 1 may be quashed as the respondent had no jurisdiction to entertain any claim of respondent No. 2 under the provisions of the Act.

3. The only question that has been urged before me is that the labour working at the quarry of the petitioner was of casual nature that was employed for the purpose of crushing or breaking those pieces of stones which were not used for building purposes. According to the petitioner, mostly females were engaged by him who used to work only for two hours in a day and that too at their sweet will when they could make themselves free after finishing their household work and therefore they were paid piece-rate wages. It is also averred by the petitioner that this work was done merely as an incidental work to the main mining operation and therefore those employees who were crushing or breaking the stones were not in the regular employment of the petitioner and were not working daily at the quarry. It is also averred that the Government of the State of Rajasthan by a notification dated 24th of February, 1965 had fixed minimum wages at Rs. 60/- per month or Rs. 2-31 np. per day for those employees who were engaged on daily wage system but no minimum piece rate wage was fixed by the Government under the Minimum Wages Act.

The employees engaged by the petitioner did not claim the minimum wages as fixed by the Government of Rajasthan and did not move any authority under Section 20 of the Minimum Wages Act. It was the respondent No. 2, the Labour Enforcement Officer, Jaipur, who was working as an Inspector under the Payment of Wages Act and who raised this claim after the expiry of six months from the date of the notification issued by the Government of Rajasthan under the Minimum Wages Act fixing the minimum wages of the labourers. According to the petitioner, this claim was made before respondent No. 1 by respondent No. 2 on 10th of March, 1965 which date falls outside the period of limitation fixed under Section 20 of the Minimum Wages Act for making any claim to get the minimum wages. In this manner, it is contended that the respondent No. 2 wanted to by pass the provisions of Section 20 of the Minimum Wages Act under which he could not put up his claim as being time-barred and now wants to get things which he could not have otherwise got under the Minimum Wages Act.

4. A reply has been filed on behalf of respondent No. 2 wherein it has been admitted by him that the employees of the petitioner on whose behalf the claim had been put up by the replying respondent were piece-rated workers and these so-called casual workers were paid the wages according to the work done by them on piece-rate basis. It was, however, submitted that payment of wages less than the wages fixed under the Minimum Wages Act falls within the category of deduction under the Act and, therefore, respondent No. 2 was entitled to put up a claim for the amount mentioned in his application filed before respondent No. 1.

5. From the pleadings of the parties, it is clear that the employees of the petitioner for whom this dispute has been raised were of casual nature and that they were paid wages according to the work done by them on piece-rate basis. It is also not disputed that the Government did not fix any minimum wages for such workers, but Section 17 of the Minimum Wages Act provides that where an employee is employed on piece work for which minimum time rate and not a minimum piece-rate has been fixed under this Act, the employer shall pay to such employee wages at not less than the minimum time rate. This provision shows that an employee working on the basis of piece-rate wages could claim minimum rate of wages for time worker which in the language of the Minimum Wages Act is known as a minimum time rate.

6. The real question that has been raised for the determination of this Court in this petition is whether by making an application under Section 15 (2) of the Act the respondent No. 2 could ask an Authority appointed under the Act to declare that the employees were entitled to get their wages at the rate of the minimum wages fixed by the Government of Rajasthan under S. 3 of the Minimum Wages Act. Section 15 (2) of the Act provides:

"Where contrary to the provisions of this Act any deduction has been made from the wages of an employed person, or any payment of wages has been delayed, such person himself, or any legal practitioner or any official of a registered Trade Union authorised in writing to act on his behalf, or any Inspector under this Act, or any other person acting with the permission of the authority appointed under sub-section (1), may apply to such authority for a direction under sub-section (3):"

7. The case of the respondent No. 2 before the Authority under the Act was that the petitioner had deducted from the wages of the employed persons because, according to him, the petitioner did not pay to his employees in accordance with the minimum wages fixed under the Minimum Wages Act. It is not disputed that whatever amount was paid to the employees as wages for the period in question it was not in accordance with the rate fixed between the employer and the employees. Even before me this dispute has not been raised that the payment was not made in accordance with the agreed wages between the labour and the employer. The grievance of the respondent No. 2 is that after the minimum wages were fixed by the State Government, it was the duty of the petitioner to have paid his employees in accordance with the provisions of the notification issued by the State Government under the Minimum Wages Act fixing the minimum wages for the workers at the quarry.

8. In this connection, reference may be made to certain provisions of the Minimum Wages Act of 1948. Under Section 3 of this Act, the appropriate Government, which is the State Government of Rajasthan in this case, has been authorised to fix the minimum wages for the employees employed in an employment specified in Parts I and II of the Schedule of that Act. A procedure has also been provided therein for the appropriate Government to arrive at the minimum wages to be fixed thereunder.

9. Section 20 of this Act provides:

"(1) The appropriate Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette appoint any Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation or any officer of the Central Government exercising functions as a Labour Commissioner for any region, or any officer of the State Government not below the rank of Labour Commissioner or any other officer with experience as a Judge of a Civil Court or as a stipendiary Magistrate to be the Authority to hear and decide for any specified area all claims arising out of payment of less than the minimum rates of wages or in respect of the payment of remuneration for days of rest or for work done on such days under clause (b) or clause (c) of sub-section (1) of Section 13 or of wages at the overtime rate under Section 14, to employees employed or paid in that area."

10. Sub-section (2) provides that:

"Where an employee has any claim of the nature referred to in sub-section (1), the employee himself, or any legal practitioner or any official of a registered trade union authorised in writing to act on his behalf, or any Inspector, or any person acting with the permission of the Authority appointed under sub-section (1), may apply to such Authority for a direction under sub-section (3)."

11. A proviso has been added to this sub-section which reads as follows:—

"Provided that every such application shall be presented within six months from the date on which the minimum wages or other amount became payable."

12. From these provisions, I find that under the scheme of the Minimum Wages Act, minimum wages are fixed in accordance with the procedure laid down in the Act by the appropriate Government for the employees employed in an employment specified in Part I or Part II of the Schedule to that Act and that if an employer makes a payment of the wages which are less than the minimum rates of wages fixed under the Minimum Wages Act, then the claims that may arise therefrom may be put up by the persons mentioned in sub-section (2) of Section 20 of that Act before the authority created under sub-section (1) of Section 20. The Legislature has also provided a time limit for raising a claim under the provisions of the Minimum Wages Act and it is six months from the date on which the minimum wages or other amount became payable. It is not disputed that the State Government in this case had fixed the minimum wages for the stone-breakers and stone-crushers by issuing a notification on 4th March, 1965 and according to that notification, a worker on the quarry, who was engaged for stone-breaking or stone-crushing could claim Rs. 60/- per month or Rs. 2.31 nP. for a day as minimum wage under the minimum wages fixed by the Government.

Mr. Gupta argued that according to this notification the wages of the employees of the petitioner calculated at the rates fixed under the Minimum Wages Act became payable to them from the date the said notification was issued by the Government and if the employer (petitioner) failed to recognise the rights of the employees which accrued to them by virtue of the said notification then according to the proviso a dispute in that respect could be raised before an authority appointed under Section 20 (1) of the Minimum Wages Act only within six months from the date of the said notification. His grievance is that the Inspector did not care to file any claim under the Minimum Wages Act before the Authority constituted under Section 20 of that Act, and now by making a claim under Section 15 of the Act the Inspector wants indirectly to raise the dispute on behalf of the employees of the petitioner under the Minimum Wages Act for which the time prescribed under proviso to Section 20 of the said Act had already expired. I find force in this argument of Mr. Gupta and the real question that virtually arises in these circumstances is whether such a dispute that wages should have been paid by the petitioner to his employees at the rate the Government had fixed the minimum wages under the Minimum Wages Act could be raised before an Authority constituted under the Act.

13. The decision of this dispute depends upon whether non-payment of the minimum wages fixed by the State Government under the Minimum Wages Act would be covered under the term "deduction" under Section 7 of the Act? This brings me to the consideration of the definition of the term "wages" as given in the Act. Section 2 (vi) of the Act describes 'wages' as follows:

"'wages' means all remuneration (whether by way of salary, allowances or otherwise) expressed in terms of money or capable of being so expressed which would, if the terms of employment, express or implied, were fulfilled, be payable to a person employed in respect of his employment or of work done in such employment, and includes —"

14. From this definition of the term "wages" the Authority under the Act could see only as to what was the remuneration under the terms of the contract of employment payable to a person employed in respect of his employment or of work done in such employment. This definition suggests that the Authority under the Act has the jurisdiction to decide what actually the terms of the contract between the parties were, that is to say, to determine the actual wages of the employees but it had no jurisdiction to determine the question of the potential wages which the employee ought to have got. In my opinion, the claim raised by the Inspector in this particular case falls in the latter category. By making such a claim before an Authority under the Act the Inspector virtually wants the Authority first to adjudicate that the employees were entitled to get the minimum wages and then to pass an order for the payment of such potential wages which, in my opinion, does not fall within the ambit of the jurisdiction of respondent No. 1. I am fortified in my view by the judgment of the Supreme Court in A. V. D'Costa, Divisional Engineer, C. I. P. Rly. v. B. C. Patel, AIR 1955 SC 412, wherein the majority held that the jurisdiction of the Authority under the Act is to determine the actual wages to be paid and not the potential wages.

By adopting this method, the Inspector wants that the Authority created under the provisions of the Act should first assume jurisdiction as an Authority created under the Minimum Wages Act and then pass an order that the payment should have been made in accordance with the minimum rates fixed by the State Government under the Minimum Wages Act. In my opinion, this course is not open to the respondent. The respondent No. 1, therefore, had no jurisdiction to decide this question while dealing with the claim of the respondent No. 2 whether the employees in this case were entitled to get their wages at the rate fixed by the Government under the Minimum Wages Act as it obviously falls within the jurisdiction of the Authority created under Sec. 20 of the Minimum Wages Act. Since this question was never raised by the employees of the petitioner before a competent authority under the provisions of the Minimum Wages Act, the respondent No. 2 cannot now be permitted to raise that issue indirectly before respondent No. 1. Unless this fact was determined by a competent authority that the minimum wages fixed by the Government governed the wages of the employees of the petitioner also, the question of deduction from the wages of the employees does not arise simply because the payment was not made by the employer to the employees at the rate of the potential wages they were entitled to receive under the provisions of the Minimum Wages Act. In this view of the matter, the claim put by the respondent No. 2 before respondent No. 1 on behalf of the labour employed by the petitioner could not be entertained by respondent No. 1.

15. The order impugned passed by respondent No. 1 cannot, therefore, be sustained and it is hereby quashed. No order as to costs.

Petition allowed.

JAGAT NARAYAN, C. J.:— This is an appeal by the plaintiff against a decree of the Senior Civil Judge, Udaipur, dismissing his suit for recovery of money.

2. The plaintiff was a contractor whose tender for the construction of buildings for the Collectorate and other offices at Bhilwara was accepted on behalf of the State. The work was completed on 28-4-1955. It appears that there was some dispute between the contractor and the Executive Engineer incharge of the work as to the payment to which the former was entitled. On 27-12-1955 the plaintiff wrote a letter (Ex. 3) to the Executive Engineer which runs as follows:—

"I regret I cannot sign the bill in full and final settlement of all my dues, for which I have already claimed.

I request you to please pay me the dues as billed by you as an advance in Hand Receipt on running bill.

This may kindly be done early so that I may not waste my time here."

3. The final bill (Ex. A-2) was prepared and payment was made on it on 10-2-1956. The receipt given by the contractor on this final bill runs as follows:—

"Received Rs. 42261/15/6 and deposited Rs. 279/8/6 of stones dues and Rs. 3169/- as security deposit and balance of Rupees 38813/7/- received by cheque.

Sd/- Inder Sahay
11-2-1956
Contractor."

4. It appears that some correspondence took place between the contractor and the P. W. D. authorities after the contractor had accepted final payment. Only two letters have been filed by the plaintiff in this connection. One is from the Chief Engineer dated 14-5-1957. It refers to two applications dated 20-3-1956 and 23-4-1957 sent by the contractor to the Chief Engineer. The Chief Engineer asked the contractor to contact the Superintending Engineer, Udaipur, directly in the matter. This letter is at page 63 of the Paper Book. The other letter is (Ex. 7) dated 31-10-1958 from the Superintending Engineer to the contractor. It was sent in reply to his letter dated 1-10-1958 and runs as follows:—

"Since you have accepted the final bill without any objection, no claims can be entertained at this stage."

5. The present suit was filed on 13-4-1959 after serving a notice under Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The trial Court held that Article 56 of the Old Limitation Act was applicable and the suit was barred by limitation by three days. It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that this finding is erroneous.

6. The plaintiff relies on the copy of a letter (Ex. 1) bearing the date 10-2-1956 to show that he accepted the final payment under protest. The State denied having received this letter. Two witnesses were examined by the plaintiff to prove secondary evidence of this letter. One was the plaintiff himself. He admitted that the final payment was received by him on 10-2-56 (the date given under the plaintiff's signature on final bill Ex. A-2 is 11-2-56 which is obviously erroneous). and alleged that at the time of receiving the final payment, he handed over the original of letter Ex. 1 to the Executive Engineer after getting it written by Kartaram. Kartaram however stated that he was not present when the final payment was received by the plaintiff. He alleged that he wrote the original of letter Ex. 1 and gave it to the plaintiff who signed it and handed it over to the Executive Engineer in his presence. There is thus material contradiction between the statement of the plaintiff and Kartaram on the point as to when this letter was handed over to the Executive Engineer. The plaintiff admitted that no letter of protest was delivered to the Executive Engineer prior to receiving final payment. The Executive Engineer came forward and stated that no letter of protest was delivered to him having contents like that of Ex. 1 either at the time of receiving the final payment by the plaintiff or after it. We are accordingly satisfied that copy Ex. 1 is not the secondary evidence of any letter which was ever handed over to the Executive Engineer. Further we hold that although the contractor had earlier made a protest that the final bill which was being prepared was not correct, he accepted payment on the final bill without any protest.

7. The trial Court applied Article 56 of the old Limitation Act to the suit which runs as follows:—

"56. For the price of work done by the plaintiff Three years. When the work is done." for the defendant at his request, where no time has been fixed for payment.

The contention on behalf of the appellant is that Article 115 of the old Limitation Act is applicable because the contractor not only did the work for the defendant but also supplied the material. He relied on the following decisions:—

Mohd. Ghasita v. Siraj-ud-din, AIR 1922 Lah 198 (FB), Sita Ram v. Mt. Mahmudi

"115. For compensation for the breach of any contract, express or implied, not in writing registered and not herein specially provided for.

We are of opinion that this Article has no application to the present case. The contract was for completed work. The facts of AIR 1922 Lah 198 (FB), AIR 1934 Lah 475 are distinguishable. In AIR 1963 Cal 277 no doubt Art 115 was applied to such a case. But at the same time it was held that the time under Art 115 ran from the date of intimation by Government of the amount which would be allowed on the final bill. Even if Article 115 is applicable, time under it began to run from 10-2-1956 when the payment was made on the final bill to the plaintiff. The plaintiff had earlier protested that the final bill prepared was not correct but Begum, AIR 1934 Lah 475 and M. L. Dal-miya and Co. v. Union of India, AIR 1963 Cal 277.

8. Article 115 runs as follows:—

Three years. When the contract is broken or (where there are successive breaches) when the breach in respect of which the suit is instituted occurs, or (where the breach is continuing) when it ceases."

despite this the Department did not alter it. When the plaintiff signed this final bill, he came to know of the decision of the Department and time began to run under Art. 115, assuming that Article to be applicable from 10-2-1956. The suit was barred by limitation on 13-4-1959 when it was filed after allowing for two months' time for notice under Section 80, C. P. C.

9. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal. Having regard to the circumstances of the case, we leave the parties to bear their own costs of the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Rana Hemant Singhji, Dholpur, Petitioner v. Commissioner of Income-tax Rajasthan, Jaipur, Respondent.

Income-tax Ref. Case No. 5 of 1966, D/-2-12-1969

Income-tax Act (1922), Section 2 (4-A) Clause (ii) — Capital assets — Personal effects — Test — Use of article must be of personal nature — Mere placing of treasure before Goddess while performing puja does not make treasure item of personal use.

In order to constitute an article to be part of personal effects, it is necessary that the article must be associated with the person of the possessor and must, more or less have intimate relation with the possessor. It is necessary that the article must be in personal use. But any kind of use will not be sufficient to constitute a property as 'personal effects'. The use must be of personal nature though such use may be occasional. A. K. Sen with Devasingh Randhawa, for Petitioner; Sumnerchand Bhandari, for Respondent.

BHANDARI, C. J.: — The Income-tax Appellate Tribunal Delhi Bench 'A' (hereinafter HM/HM/D693/70/VBB/M called the Tribunal) has made this reference to this Court under Section 66 (1) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (hereinafter called the Act). His Highness Maharaja Udal Bhan Singhji, Ruler of Dholpur died issueless on 22nd October, 1954. After his death, the movable property possessed by the deceased Maharaja Udal Bhan Singhji was sealed by the Government of India. Maharaja Rana Hemant Singhji (hereinafter called the assessee) was thereafter recognised as the successor to the deceased Maharaja and the assets which the Government of India had sealed were released and handed over to Rajmata, the guardian of the assessee. Part of the assets consisting of gold sovereigns, old silver rupee coins and silver bars were sold for Rs. 20,91,785/-. The Income-tax Officer, Bharatpur while assessing the assessee for the assessment year 1958-59 computed Rs. 3, 44,303 as capital gains on these sales taking into account the market value of the assets sold as on 1st January, 1954 as given hereunder:—

(See table of assets on page 271)

The assessee objected to the taxation of the said amount on the ground that the various articles — sovereigns, silver coins and silver bars — were held for the personal use of the assessee and the members of his family and as such they fell within clause (ii) of Section 2 (4A) of the Act. The Income-tax Officer negatived this objection raised on behalf of the assessee. The assessee filed an appeal before the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, B—Range, Jaipur, but was unsuccessful. The assessee filed an appeal to the Tribunal. The Tribunal also rejected the appeal.

2. On the application of the assessee, the following question has been referred by the Tribunal to this Court:—

“Whether on the facts and in the circumstances of the case the assets sold were capital assets within the meaning of Section 2 (4A) chargeable to capital gains tax under Section 12-B of the Income-tax Act, 1922?”

3. The main point which has been urged before this Court on behalf of the assessee is that the said articles were the personal effects of the assessee and were excluded by virtue of the definition of capital assets under Sec. 2 (4A) from being included in capital assets. The relevant part of the definition of capital assets in Section 2 (4A) runs as follows:—

“(4-A) “Capital asset” means property of any kind held by an assessee, whether or not connected with his business, profession or vocation, but does not include —

(i) .....
(ii) personal effects, that is to say, moveable property (including wearing apparel, jewellery, and furniture) held for personal use by the assessee or any member of his family dependent on him;

(iii) .....”

It is contended that according to the custom of the family, these articles were taken out twice a year for Puja once for Mahalakshmi Puja and again on Diwali and thus they formed part of the property meant for Puja and was thus articles of personal use. In support of this, the assessee has filed an affidavit of Shri Harisingh, Chief A. D. C., of the assessee. Reference in this connection may be made to the judgment of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner has given the finding that the silver bars were never used for Puja. The Tribunal has taken the view that the use of these articles in the manner mentioned by the assessee did not mean that these items were held by the assessee for his personal use and they did not fall within clause (ii) of Section 2 (4-A) of the Act.

4. We are of the view that the Tribunal has taken the correct view. In order to constitute an article to be part of personal effects, it is necessary that the article must be associated with the person of the possessor and must more or less have intimate relation with the possessor. In Section 2 (4-A) (ii) personal effects have been explained as any moveable property held for the personal use by the assessee or any member of his family dependent on him. In a sense, the definition is wider inasmuch as if any article is in personal use even of any member of the family of the assessee who is dependent on him, it may constitute personal effects of the assessee, but it is necessary that the article must be in personal use. Law does not say that any kind of use will be sufficient to constitute a property as “personal effects”. The use must be of personal nature though such use may be occasional. A treasure placed before Goddess Laxmi while performing Puja would not make such treasure an item of personal use.

Learned counsel for the assessee has relied on K. D. Joseph v. Esther Phillips, 1934 AC 348 in which “personal effects” have been explained in connection with the construction of a will. It has been observed:

“The question is whether the bequest on its true construction is only of things which can properly be treated as personal effects, that is to say, physical chattels, having some personal connection with the testator such as articles of personal or domestic use or ornament, clothing, furniture and so forth which would not include money or securities for money or whether in the actual contents it extends to the choses in action represented by the pass books and the promissory notes.” But these observations do not in any way support the case of the assessee. On the other hand, they lend support to the view taken by the Tribunal.

5. If mere placing of treasure before Goddess Lakshmi when it is worshipped on Diwali or some other occasion is to constitute personal effects, then a person will escape payment of wealth-tax as Section 5 (1) (viii) lays down that wealth tax shall not be payable by an assessee on “furniture, household utensils, wearing apparel, provisions and other articles intended for the personal or household use of the assessee.”

6. In interpreting the provisions of the Act also, we cannot adopt the view that merely because the gold sovereigns, silver coins and the bullion were placed before Goddess Lakshmi at the time of Puja, they become articles of personal use of the assessee.

7. It is contended by learned counsel for the assessee that if the assessee has made any collection which might give him solace or pleasure whenever he looks at the collection, such collection must be deemed to be personal to the assessee and that collection may be taken as "personal effects". It is too wide a construction of the expression "personal effects" and it is not possible for us to accept it.

8. For the aforesaid reasons, we answer the reference in the affirmative. We assess Rs. 200/- as costs to be paid by the assessee to the Department.

Answer in the affirmative.

Dr. Harumal and others, Appellants v. Smt. Sahjadi Bibi, Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 139 of 1965 and Second Appeal No. 160 of 1967, D/- 14-8-1969.

(A) Civil P. C. (1903), Section 100 — Suit for ejectment — Second appeal lies — 1960 Raj LW 070 and 1960 Raj LW 670 and 1957 Raj LW 497 and 1955 Raj LW 520, Foll. (Para 4)

(B) Transfer of Property Act (1882), Sections 106 and 109 — Date of commencement of tenancy — Date when tenant has been originally let in is decisive — Transfer of the property does not affect it — Tenancy cannot be deemed to have commenced on the date of transfer — Notice terminating tenancy with the expiry of date of transfer invalid — Section 109 supports the view.

The date of commencement of a tenancy is the date on which the tenant has been initially let into possession of the property and it does not get changed on the property being sold by the original owner. The date of transfer cannot be deemed to be the date of commencement of the tenancy. Hence a notice by the owner (transferor) terminating the tenancy must expire with the month of tenancy taking the date of letting in and not the date of transfer as the date of commencement of the tenancy. A notice terminating it with the expiry of the date of transfer is invalid and ineffective. The provision under Section 109, T. P. Act also supports this view in that the transferee possesses only those rights which were possessed earlier by the transferor and will be subject to all those liabilities to which the transfer was subject before the transfer. 1959 Raj LW 81, Foll.; (1965) 67 Punj LR 243, Ref. (Para 7)

(C) Transfer of Property Act (1882), Section 106 — Tenancy at will, what is — Section 106 does not apply to such tenancy.

Where the tenants undertake to give vacant possession of the premises whenever the landlords may desire them to do so the tenancy so created is a tenancy-at-will. In a case like that, no notice within the meaning of Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act is at all necessary to terminate the tenancy. AIR 1964 Raj 79, Foll. (Para 9)

Therefore, in a case where there was no evidence as to what was the contract between the lessor and the lessee and the parties only pleaded as to the date of commencement of the tenancy and that the rents were being paid monthly,

Held, that the tenancy was not one at will. (Para 15)

(D) Administration of Evacuee Property Act (1950), Sections 4 (2), 9, 12, 56 (2) — Administration of Evacuee Property Rules, Rule 14 (2) and (4) — Power of Custodian to cancel allotment or to terminate lease is subject to restrictions — Powers are only administrative and for managing evacuee properties — Powers do not get transferred to purchasers of such properties — Custodian's power to eject persons without notice under Section 106, T. P. Act cannot be availed of by the purchaser — (T. P. Act (1882), Section 106). (Paras 13 and 14)

JUDGMENT: These are two connected appeals arising out of two suits for ejectment instituted by the landlord Smt. Sahjadi Bibi against Dr. Harumal and Sugnomal (deceased) respectively. It appears that Sugnomal died during the pendency of the suit and is now represented by his heirs, Sita Devi and others. The facts and the questions of law involved in both the appeals are identical and, therefore, it would be convenient to decide them by a common judgment.

2. Dr. Harumal and the deceased Sugnomal were admitted as tenants by the Custodian of Evacuee Property on 28-1-48 in the second and third storeys respectively of the house in question. The rent settled with Dr. Haru Mal was Rs. 3 per month and that with Sugnomal Rs. 6/8/- per month. The plaintiff Sahjadi Bibi purchased this property from the Competent Officer, Ajmer, on 26-9-53, and, thereafter on 18-11-53 she gave notices to both the tenants to vacate the property as the same was required by her for personal use and occupation. By these notices, the tenancy was terminated from the midnight of 25th December, 1953. Since the tenants failed to quit, the respondent filed the suits against both of them for ejectment and arrears of rent in the court of the Munsif, Ajmer.

The tenants resisted the plaintiff's suit inter alia on the ground that notice of termination of tenancy was not in order as it did not expire with the end of the month of the tenancy. This objection found favour with the Munsif, Ajmer and accordingly the suits for ejectment were dismissed. The plaintiff filed appeals in the court of District Judge, Ajmer, in both the cases. The appeals were transferred in the court of Civil Judge, Ajmer, who held that the notices for ejectment were valid. Consequently the appeals were allowed and the suits for ejectment were decreed. It may be relevant here to state that all the issues in both the cases, except issue No. 5, refer to the question of property having been damaged by the tenants and issue No. 6 regarding the validity of the notices, were decided in favour of the plaintiff by the trial court and the suit for ejectment was dismissed only on the ground of bad notice. In the first appellate court only the question of validity of notice was argued and so also before me. The only point, therefore, I am called upon to decide is whether the notice given by the plaintiff landlord in each of the two cases terminating the tenancy from the midnight of 25th December, 1953, is valid.

2. Learned counsel for the appellant has submitted that the tenancy in each case commenced from 28th January, 1948 and, therefore, the notice should have expired with the end of the month of the tenancy that is on 28th. The suits were instituted on 28th December, 1953. It is urged that the plaintiff's case in the plaint was that the defendant was admitted as a tenant from 28-1-48 and consequently the tenancy should have been terminated with the end of the month of the tenancy. On the other hand learned counsel for the respondent has supported the judgment of the lower appellate court and has urged that the tenancy was at will and it was not necessary to serve a notice expiring with the end of the month of the tenancy. In the alternative it is argued that the tenancy between the plaintiff and the defendants was created only when the plaintiff purchased the property from the Competent Officer on 26-9-53 and looked at from that point of view, the notice is valid.

4. I may observe here that the learned counsel for the respondent also raised a preliminary objection that no second appeal lay in these cases, but subsequently gave it up when the learned counsel for the appellant drew his attention to the following decisions of this Court:—

(1) Anand Singh v. Chandmal, 1960 Raj LW 676;

(2) Balchand v. Smt. Dhan Kanwar, 1960 Raj L W 670;

(3) Shivkumar v. Ballabhdass, 1957 Raj LW 497; and

(4) Gordhan Lal v. Nathu Lal, 1955 Raj LW 520.

5. The only point, therefore, which I am called upon to decide is whether the notice of termination of tenancy, which is exactly the same in both the cases is valid and proper.

6. The learned Civil Judge, Ajmer, has held that the Custodian of Evacuee Property was not bound to serve a notice under Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act in view of the provisions of Section 4 sub-section (2), Section 9 and Section 12 of the Administration of Evacuee Property Act, 1950 (which will hereinafter be called the Act). It has been held by the learned Civil Judge that the appellant was a tenant at will and his tenancy was not a monthly tenancy and consequently it was not necessary for the plaintiff who purchased the property from the Custodian Department to have complied with all the formalities of notice under Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act. In this view of the matter the learned Civil Judge, decreed the plaintiff's suit for ejectment also.

7. I may first deal with the alternative argument advanced by the learned counsel for the respondent that the tenancy between the appellants and the respondent commenced on 26-9-53 when the plaintiff-respondent purchased the property in question from the Competent Officer and therefore the notice expiring on 26th December, 1953, was valid. In support of his argument learned counsel for the respondent has relied upon Kartar Singh v. Barkat Ram, (1965) 67 Pun LR 243. In my opinion this decision does not help the respondent at all. There was no question involved in this case as to the commencement of the tenancy. It was simply observed in that case that on the date of the purchase of the property by the respondent, the appellant became his tenant. This does not mean that the tenancy of the tenant will also be deemed to commence from the date of the purchase of the property by the respondent.

On the other hand learned counsel for the appellants has relied upon Baburam v. Narayan Dass, 1959 Raj LW 81. In Baburam's case, 1959 Raj LW 81 the plaintiff Narayan Dass purchased the property occupied by the defendant as a tenant on 4-7-50 from Mangilal Ballabhdas and thereafter gave notice dated 23-12-54 for ejectment under Sec. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act. According to the defendant tenant the tenancy between him and Mangilal Ballabhdas commenced from the first of the month according to the Gregorian Calendar. It was observed that "if the tenancy between Babulal and Mangilal Ballabhdas commenced on the first of the calendar month, a new tenancy in favour of Narayan Dass could not be created on 4-7-50 simply because the property was transferred to him on that date." It was further observed that "if Narayan Dass wanted to terminate the tenancy, he should have given a notice expiring with the end of the month of the tenancy according to the contract between Mangilal Ballabhdas on the one hand and Baburam on the other." Thus this case clearly supports the contention of the counsel for the appellants.

In this connection I may also refer to Section 109 of the Transfer of Property Act, which clearly lays down that if the lessor transfers the property leased, or any part of interest therein, the transferee, in the absence of contract to the contrary, shall possess all the rights, and, if the lessee so elects, be subject to all the liabilities of the lessor as to the property or part transferred. It further lays down that the lessor shall not, by reason only of such transfer, cease to be subject to any of the liabilities imposed upon him by the lease, unless the lessee elects to treat the transferee as the person liable to him. It is thus quite clear from the provisions of this section that the plaintiff after the transfer of property in her favour possesses only those rights which were possessed earlier by the Custodian of Evacuee Property and was subject to all those liabilities to which the Custodian of Evacuee Property was subject before the transfer. Therefore, if the plaintiff wanted to terminate the tenancy she should have given the notice according to the contract between the Custodian of Evacuee Property on the one hand and the appellants defendants on the other. Thus there is no force in the contention of the learned counsel for the respondent that because his client purchased the property in question on 26-9-53, therefore, the appellants' tenancy must also be deemed to commence from 26-9-53. I am clearly of the opinion that the date of the commencement of the tenancy of the appellants will be considered to be that date on which the appellants were admitted as tenants by the Custodian of Evacuee Property.

There is no dispute between the parties that the appellants were admitted as tenants by the Custodian of Evacuee Property on 28th January, 1948. The notice given by the respondent to the appellants thus did not expire with the end of the month of tenancy as required under Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act and consequently if Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act applies to the present case, there is no escape from the conclusion that the notice given by the plaintiff-respondent for terminating the tenancy was bad and the suits for ejectment must fail on that account.

8. The learned Civil Judge, as already pointed above, has held that the appellants were tenants at will of the Custodian of Evacuee Property and, therefore, it was not necessary for the Custodian to give notice as required by Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act. If this is so, then the plaintiff is also not required to give a notice strictly according to Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act as she has only stepped into the shoes of the previous landlord, viz. the Custodian. It is, therefore, necessary to determine as to what was the nature of tenancy of the appellants qua the Custodian of Evacuee Property.

9. Learned counsel for the appellants has argued that there is nothing on the record to show that the appellants were tenants at will of the Custodian of Evacuee Property. It is urged that a tenancy at will is terminable by either party and the demand by the landlord for possession is sufficient. It was held in Ramnarain v. Kishorelal, AIR 1964 Raj 79 that where the tenants undertake to give vacant possession of the premises whenever the landlords may desire them to do so the tenancy so created is a tenancy-at-will. In a case like that, no notice within the meaning of Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act is at all necessary to terminate the tenancy.

It would, therefore, be necessary to find out as to what was the contract between the parties in this respect, that is, whether the appellants had undertaken to give vacant possession of the premises to the Custodian of Evacuee Property whenever the latter may have desired them to do so? I may state at once that there is not an iota of evidence from either side as to what was the contract in this respect. In the notice itself in each of the two cases the defendants were not taken to be tenants-at-will. It was alleged that they were tenants from 28-1-48 and paying monthly rent. There are exactly the same allegations in the plaint also.

Learned counsel for the appellants has argued that the plaintiff's allegation is that monthly rent was paid and no case of tenancy-at-will was ever alleged by her and, therefore, Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act comes into operation. In support of his contention learned counsel for the appellants has relied on Smt. Chhoti Dei v.

Gangadhar Misra, AIR 1953 Orissa 245. The only answer which the learned counsel for the respondent furnished was that irrespective of the question of any contract, the Custodian of Evacuee Property by virtue of the powers conferred upon him by the Administration of Evacuee Property Act, was competent to terminate the tenancy of the appellants whenever he desired to do so, and, therefore, the appellants must be deemed to be tenants-at-will. The same is more or less the reasoning of the first appellate court, which has referred to Section 4 (2), Sec. 9 and Section 12 of the Act in this connection.

10. For a proper appreciation of the argument of the learned counsel for the respondent, it would be necessary to examine the relevant provisions of the Administration of Evacuee Property Act. Section 4 reads as below:—

“4. Act to override other laws.— (1) The provisions of this Act and of the rules and orders made thereunder shall have effect notwithstanding anything inconsistent therewith contained in any other law for the time being in force or in any instrument having effect by virtue of any such law.

(2) For the removal of doubts, it is hereby declared that nothing in any other law controlling the rents of, or eviction from, any property shall apply, or be deemed ever to have applied, to evacuee property.”

11. Then we come to Section 9, which reads as under:—

“9. Power of Custodian to take possession of evacuee property vested in him.— If any person in possession of any evacuee property refuses or fails on demand to surrender possession thereof to the Custodian or to any person duly authorised by him in this behalf, the Custodian may use or cause to be used such force as may be necessary for taking possession of such property and may, for this purpose, after giving reasonable warning and facility to any women not appearing in public to withdraw, remove or break open any lock, bolt or any door or to do any other act necessary for the said purpose.”

12. Section 12 on which great deal of reliance has been placed by the learned counsel for the respondent prescribes the powers of the Custodian to vary or cancel leases or allotments of evacuee property. It may be reproduced here:—

“12. Power to vary or cancel leases or allotments of evacuee property.— (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force the Custodian may cancel any allotment or terminate any lease or amend the terms of any lease or arrangement under which any evacuee property is held or occupied by a person, whether such allotment, lease or arrangement was granted or entered into before or after the commencement of this Act.

Provided that in the case of any lease granted before the 4th day of August, 1917, the Custodian shall not exercise any of the powers conferred upon him under this sub-section unless he is satisfied that the lessee—

(a) has sublet, assigned or otherwise parted with the possession of the whole or any part of the property leased to him; or

(b) has used or is using such property for a purpose other than that for which it was leased to him; or

(c) has failed to pay rent in accordance with the terms of the lease.

Explanation.— In this sub-section ‘lease’ includes a lease granted by the Custodian and ‘agreement’ includes an agreement entered into by the Custodian.

(2) Where by reason of any action taken under sub-section (1) any person has ceased to be entitled to possession of any evacuee property, he shall on demand by the Custodian surrender possession of such property, to the Custodian or to any person duly authorised by him in this behalf.

(3) If any person fails to surrender possession of any property on demand under sub-section (2), the Custodian may notwithstanding to the contrary contained in any other law for the time being in force, eject such person and take possession of such property in the manner provided in Section 9.”

13. In view of the aforesaid provisions the learned Civil Judge has come to the conclusion that it was not necessary for the Custodian to give notice under Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act before varying or cancelling the lease. It may, however, be stated here that even the Custodian has not been given an unrestricted power to cancel any allotment or terminate any lease at his sweet will but is required to follow the procedure prescribed in the Rules made under Section 56 (2) of the Act, which reads as under:—

“56. Power to make rules.— (2) In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power such rules may provide for all or any of the following matters namely:—

(i) the circumstances in which leases and allotment may be cancelled or terminated or the terms of any lease or arrangement varied;”

Sub-rules (2) and (4) of Rule 14 of the Administration of Evacuee Property Rules further provide that in case of a lease or allotment granted by the Custodian himself, the Custodian may evict a person on any ground justifying eviction of a tenant under any law relating to the Control of Rents for the time being in force in the State concerned, or for any violation of the conditions of lease or allotment. But before cancelling, or varying the terms of a lease and before evicting a lessee the Custodian shall serve the person or persons concerned with a notice to show cause against the order proposed to be made and shall afford him a reasonable opportunity of being heard.

14. From the aforesaid provisions of the Act as well as the Rules made thereunder, it would be amply clear that certain statutory powers have been conferred upon the Custodian of Evacuee Property for management of the property, which also include power of terminating, cancelling or otherwise amending the terms of the tenancy. I find myself unable to accept the contention of the learned counsel for the respondent that all these powers with respect to the property in question, which the Custodian was competent to exercise stood transferred to the purchaser that is the plaintiff. These are administrative powers vested in the Custodian by virtue of his office and from the provisions referred to above, it cannot be concluded that there was a contract between the Custodian of the Evacuee Property on the one hand and the defendants-appellants on the other that the latter undertook to give vacant possession of the premises whenever the former may desire them to do so. It is noteworthy that even the Custodian is bound to serve the lessees concerned with a notice to show cause against the order of eviction proposed to be made by him and to give them an opportunity of hearing. It is idle to argue that these powers stood transferred to the plaintiff also when she purchased the property.

15. After a careful consideration of the rival contentions advanced on behalf of both the parties, I am clearly of opinion that the appellants are not tenants-at-will and, therefore, a notice of ejectment as required by Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act was necessary. The notices in both the cases admittedly did not expire with the end of the month of the tenancy. The tenancy has been terminated from the midnight of 25th whereas it should have been from the midnight of 28th. To my mind it appears that the respondent or whosoever was his adviser laboured under a misapprehension that since she had purchased the property on 26th September, 1953, the tenancy of the appellant shall also be deemed to be commenced from that date. This position, as I have already stated above, is incorrect. Thus there is no escape from the conclusion that the notices served by the respondent on the appellants were not according to Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act and were, therefore, illegal and void. The learned Civil Judge was, therefore, in error in decreeing the plaintiff's suit for ejectment.

16. I, therefore, allow both the appeals, set aside the judgments and decrees passed in both cases by the learned Civil Judge, Ajmer, and restore the judgments and decrees of the Munsif Ajmer, District Ajmer, and thereby dismiss the plaintiff's suits for ejectment against the appellants. Since the appeals have succeeded on a technical point, I hereby direct that both the parties shall bear their own costs throughout.

Appeals allowed.

AIR 1970 RAJASTHAN 276 (V 57 C 66)

L. N. CHHANGANI, J.

Lal Mohammed, Petitioner v. Regional Transport Authority, Jodhpur Region, Jodhpur and another, Respondents.

Civil Writ Petn. No. 274 of 1969 D/- 23-4-1970.

(A) Constitution of India, Article 226 — New point — New ground requiring investigation of facts cannot be raised. (Para 5)

(B) Motor Vehicles Act (1939), Section 60 (3) (as inserted in 1956) — Power to recover composition fee instead of cancelling permit — Passing of simultaneous order both under Section 60 (3) and (1) not contemplated.

Section 60 (3) enables the Transport Authority to impose, instead of severe punishment like suspension or cancellation of permit under Section 60 (1), a lesser punishment by recovery of composition fee and to compound minor breaches of law. It does not contemplate simultaneous order, both under sub-section (3) and under sub-section (1). Thus a conditional order that if fee is not given within prescribed time the permit shall stand cancelled is illegal. (1967) 2 Andh WR 353, Rel. on. (Paras 6, 7)

B. L. Maheshwari, for Petitioner.

ORDER:— This is a petition by Lal Mohammed under Article 226 of the Constitution of India praying for a writ in the nature of certiorari, prohibition, mandamus or any other writ, order or direction, to quash and set aside the order of the Regional Transport Authority dated 1-7-1968 and the order in appeal dated 22-2-1969.

2. The facts relevant for the disposal of this writ application may be briefly stated as follows:—

The petitioner is the holder of a non-temporary stage carriage permit on Jodhpur-Barmer route. The permit issued to him covers bus No. RJQ 1291.

A complaint was lodged against the petitioner for carrying passengers in excess of the seating capacity of the bus. The petitioner was served with a notice under Section 60 of the Motor Vehicles Act (hereinafter referred to as the Act) to show cause why the permit should not be cancelled. The petitioner appeared before the Regional Transport Authority at its meeting held on 1-7-1968 and offered to compound the breach of condition and to pay an amount of Rupees 300/-. The Regional Transport Authority agreed to compound the breach of the condition and to accept Rs. 300/- as compounding fee. It was, however, further resolved by the Regional Transport Authority that the petitioner should deposit the amount of Rs. 300/- within 15 days, failing which his permit shall stand cancelled.

HN/HN/D719/70/YPB/M

The petitioner did not deposit the amount of Rs. 300/- within 15 days. He, however, deposited the amount of Rs. 300/- on 28th September, 1968. After the deposit of Rupees 300/-, the petitioner received a notice from the Secretary, Regional Transport Authority, on 28-12-1968 intimating that the permit of the petitioner had been cancelled in pursuance of the aforesaid resolution of the Regional Transport Authority. The petitioner thereafter filed an appeal before the Transport Appellate Tribunal challenging the resolution of the Regional Transport Authority on various grounds. The Transport Appellate Tribunal dismissed the petitioner's appeal as time-barred. After the dismissal of the appeal, the petitioner filed the present writ application challenging the resolution of the Regional Transport Authority as also the order of the Transport Appellate Tribunal dismissing the appeal as time-barred, on various grounds which shall be referred to hereinafter. The petitioner also submitted an application for staying the operation of the resolution of the Regional Transport Authority. This application came up before a learned Single Judge of this Court on 28-3-69. The learned Judge in the absence of any opposition by the Regional Transport Authority, stayed the operation of the resolution of the Regional Transport Authority cancelling the petitioner's permit and allowed the petitioner to ply his bus.

3. The Regional Transport Authority and the Transport Appellate Tribunal have not cared to appear to oppose the writ application.

4. In support of the petition, the learned counsel for the petitioner advanced the following contentions:—

1. That the permit granted to the petitioner did not specify the maximum number of persons to be carried and there was no condition prohibiting the carriage of more passengers than the number specified.

2. That the Regional Transport Authority having agreed to accept an amount of Rupees 300/- from the petitioner in lieu of the cancellation or suspension of the permit under sub-section (3) of Section 60 of the Act, it could not have been simultaneously passed an order under sub-section (1) cancelling the permit even in the form of a conditional order stating that if the fine is not paid within 15 days, the permit shall stand cancelled.

3. That under sub-section (2) of Sec. 60 of the Act, the Transport Authority cancelling or suspending a permit is required to give to the holder of the permit in writing its reasons for taking action against him.

Rule 108 of the Rajasthan Motor Vehicles Rules, 1951 prescribes the period of limitation as 30 days from the date of the receipt of the order sought to be appealed against. Having regard to these provisions, it is contended that the petitioner's appeal was within limitation and the Transport Appellate Tribunal was not justified in rejecting the appeal as time barred.

4. That the petitioner had no knowledge that he was required to deposit the amount within 15 days and that the Regional Transport Authority had passed a mandatory order to the effect that in case the composition fee is not paid within 15 days, the permit shall stand cancelled. In support of this contention, he emphasised the fact that he voluntarily paid Rs. 300/- on 28th of September, 1968 before the receipt of the notice of the Secretary, Regional Transport Authority, intimating to him that his permit had been cancelled.

5. The first contention requires an investigation of facts. The petitioner did not raise any such controversy before the Regional Transport Authority. On the other hand, accepting the breach of law, he agreed to pay an amount of Rs. 300/- as compounding fee. I do not feel inclined to permit the petitioner to make a new ground in the writ application when the point cannot be properly and effectively decided without investigation of facts. The contention is, therefore, rejected.

6. The second contention raises the question of interpretation of sub-section (3) of Section 60 of the Act. Sub-section (3) was not enacted with the original Act. The result was that before the Amending Act of 1956 the Regional Transport Authority was constrained to cancel or suspend the permit for even a minor breach of the relevant laws. In the light of the experience of the working of the Act, the legislators thought it proper to dispense with the punishment of cancellation or suspension of permit in case of trivial breaches of the relevant laws and, therefore, added sub-section (3) enabling the Transport Authority to impose, instead of severe punishment like suspension or cancellation of the permit, a lesser punishment by recovery of composition fee and to enable the Transport Authority to compound minor breaches of law. The sub-section contemplates the following steps before an order under this section can be passed—

1. Firstly, there should be some breach of law for which a permit is liable to be cancelled or suspended.

2. The second step is the formation of opinion of the Transport Authority that having regard to the circumstances of the case it will not be necessary and expedient to suspend or cancel the permit and the determination of amount which the permit holder should be called upon to pay instead of cancellation or suspension of permit.

3. The offer of the permit holder to pay the amount sought to be recovered from him instead of cancellation or suspension of permit and the agreement by him to pay the amount.

7. After the completion of the three steps and in case the permit holder agrees to pay the amount then sub-section (3) contemplates an order in the following terms:—

"Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1), the transport authority may, instead of the cancelling or suspending the permit, as the case may be, recover from the holder of the permit the sum of money agreed upon."

From the above analysis of the sub-section, it is clear that the sub-section contemplates an order alternating with an order under sub-section (1) and that it does not contemplate simultaneous order, both under this sub-section and under sub-section (1) by giving the form of a conditional order. I am supported in this view by a judgment of the Andhra Pradesh in M. Ramakrishna Mudaliar v. Regional Transport Authority, Chittoor, 1967-2 Andh WR 353. Exercising powers under Section 68 of the Act, the Andhra Pradesh State framed Rule 244 reading as follows:—

1. "If a Transport Authority considers that instead of suspending or cancelling a permit under Clauses (a), (b) or (c) of sub-sec (1) of Section 60 the permit-holder may be given the option to pay a compounding fee under Section 60 (3) it shall issue a notice in Form CN to the permit-holder by Registered Post Acknowledgment Due or by delivering it to him in person.

2. The permit-holder shall be allowed ten days' time from the date of receipt of the Notice to pay the compounding fee. The Transport Authority may however, grant extension of time in exceptional cases." Form CN was prescribed, the relevant portion of which reads as follows:—

"The permit holder is hereby given the option under Section 60 (3) of the Act paying a compounding fee of Rs. .... in (words) ..... within ten days of the date of receipt of this notice into any Government Treasury. If payment is not made and the treasury receipt produced within the time stipulated action will be taken to suspend or cancel the permit."

Section 60 sub-section (3) of the Act and the Rule 244 along with the form CN came up for consideration in that case. A Bench of the Andhra Pradesh High Court referred to the decision of Gopal Rao Ekbote, J., in Writ Petn. No. 95 of 1965 (AP), Ch. Seshagiri Rao v. Transport Authority, decided on 25th July, 1966 and observed:—

".....the learned Judge on an exhaustive consideration of the entire question held that Section 60 of the Act does not contemplate the passing of two orders one under sub-section (3) and the another under sub-section (1) for the same offence and that sub-section (3) thereof does not contemplate any order of an interlocutory nature and that it contemplates the passing of an independent order. The learned Judge further held that the condition in Form CN goes beyond the rule-making power and that the same should be struck down as being ultra vires. We are in respectful agreement with the conclusions of the learned Judge in the said ruling."

In this view of the law, I hold that the Regional Transport Authority having agreed to accept the amount of Rs. 300/- from the petitioner, could not have simultaneously passed an order cancelling the permit by giving it a conditional form and the part of the resolution cancelling the permit on non-payment of fine is not sustainable being not warranted by law.

8. I need not pronounce any final opinion on the third contention of the petitioner by which he challenges the order of the Transport Appellate Tribunal holding the petitioner's appeal as time barred. The petitioner having filed an appeal and having secured no relief and the part of the resolution challenged by the petitioner being unsustainable, I feel justified in setting it aside in the exercise of extraordinary jurisdiction under Article 226 of the Constitution, having regard to the facts and the circumstances of the case.

9. It is also unnecessary to decide the fourth contention.

10. The writ application is allowed and the order of the Regional Transport Authority dated 1-7-1968 cancelling the permit and that of the Transport Appellate Tribunal dated 22-2-1969 dismissing the petitioner's appeal are set aside. There will be no order as to costs.

Petition allowed.

ORDER: This is a revision application by one of the defendants against an order of the trial court allowing the plaintiffs to produce evidence in rebuttal of the evidence produced by the defendants on issues 3, 4 and 5.

2. The dispute is relating to the properties which formerly belonged to the late Maharaja Guman Singh, who was the grandson of Maharaja Takhat Singh, Ruler of Jodhpur State. Guman Singh had 3 sons, Narpat Singh, Amar Singh and Raghunath Singh, out of whom Narpat Singh is the eldest. Narpat Singh has a son Inderjit Singh. During the life-time of Guman Singh, Narpat Singh took a second wife against the wishes of his father and was disinherited by him and Inderjit Singh was appointed as his successor. After the death of Guman Singh, Inderjit Singh was regarded as a successor. Narpat Singh was then alive. Maji Sahiba Smt. Jawahar Kanwar was appointed as his guardian and Raghunath Singh was appointed as the manager of the estate.

3. The present suit was instituted originally by Raghunath Singh claiming one-fourth share in the properties on the allegation that Guman Singh, his wife, and his sons constituted a joint Hindu family. In his capacity as Manager Raghunath Singh had made various admissions in writing in which it was stated that Guman Singh's properties constituted an impartible estate which descended by the rule of primogeniture and that a family arrangement was made by Guman Singh during his life-time. These admissions went against the case set up in the plaint by Raghunath Singh. He asserted in the plaint that these admissions were obtained fraudulently from him. The suit was contested by Narpat Singh and Inderjit Singh. Amar Singh and Maji Sahiba Smt. Jawahar Kunwar who had originally been impleaded as defendants were transposed as plaintiffs.

4. On the pleadings of the parties the following issues were framed:—

(1) Whether the various admissions of the plaintiffs in the application for appointment of guardian of minor Rajkumar Inderjit Singh and in the various affidavits filed by the plaintiffs in support of the application were obtained by fraud and misrepresentation of facts as well as of law as pleaded in paras 6 and 7 of the plaint and as such the admissions in the applications and affidavits are not binding on the plaintiffs?

(2) Whether the plaintiffs are entitled to get 1/4th share each in the disputed property?

(3) Whether the parties to the suit are not members of a joint Hindu family nor they are governed by principles of Hindu Law?

(4) Whether the suit property is impartible and succession to the same is governed by law of primogeniture and if so whether the suit for a partition is not maintainable?

(5) Whether Maharaj Guman Singh Ji made a family arrangement of the property in dispute as pleaded in para 2 (b) and additional plea in para 4 of the written statement of defendant No. 1 and if so whether the family arrangement made is valid?

(7) Whether the family arrangement was acted upon by the plaintiffs and the plaintiffs by their acceptance and conduct are bound by it and are estopped from challenging the same?

(9) Whether the plaintiffs are in joint possession of the property in dispute? If not whether the suit is not maintainable without payment of ad valorem court-fee?

(10) Whether the suit is not maintainable unless the plaintiffs get a succession certificate and have their various admissions set aside?

(11) Is the suit barred by Section 47 of the Rajasthan Land Reforms and Resumption of Jagirs Act 1952 and by Section 13 of the Rajasthan Jagir Decisions and Proceedings Validity Act, 1955?

(12) Whether defendant No. 4 Rajkumar Inderjit Singh was declared successor of Maharaja Guman Singh Ji by Additional Collector, Jodhpur, by his order dated April 13, 1959, and if so whether the suit by the plaintiffs is barred?

(13) Whether the notification dated 26th March, 1919 published in Jodhpur Raj Patra dated April 2, 1919, not admissible in evidence as not having been registered and being without authority?

(14) What shall be relief?

The burden of issues 1 and 2 which are issues of fact was placed on the plaintiffs. The burden of proving issues 3 to 5, 7 and 12 was placed on the defendants. Issues 10, 11 and 13 are legal issues.

5. Issues 2, 3, 4 and 5 are overlapping.

6. The plaintiffs led evidence on issues Nos. 1 and 2. Now issue No. 2 is a comprehensive issue which covers issues Nos. 3, 4 and 5 also. The burden of proving issues 3, 4 and 5 was wrongly placed on the defendants by the trial Court. The plaintiffs having come forward with the case in that plaint that the rule of primogeniture did not apply, that the family of Guman Singh was a joint Hindu family and that there was no partition or family arrangement, the burden lay on them to prove these allegations.

7. On behalf of the plaintiffs 4 witnesses were examined on issues Nos. 1 and 2. Raghunath Singh plaintiff, P. W. 1 stated in his statement that succession to the property of Guman Singh was not governed by the rule of primogeniture, that the family was a joint Hindu family and that there was no partition or family arrangement. The remaining 4 witnesses also stated that there was no partition or family arrangement. Ratan Singh P. W. 5 even stated that Guman Singh used to say in his life-time that he will divide the property into 3 shares for his 3 sons. This part of the evidence of this witness cannot be treated as evidence under issue No. 1. What could be proved under issue No. 1 was that the admissions of the plaintiff in writing were obtained by fraud. Whether or not those admissions were correct was not the subject-matter of issue No. 1.

8. Issues were framed in the suit on 24-9-1962. At that time this High Court was not entertaining any revision against any interlocutory order, because of a ruling of a Bench of 5 Judges in Purohit Swaroop Narain's case, ILR (1953) 3 Raj 483 = (AIR 1953 Raj 1373 (FB)). The defendants therefore had no remedy to get the issues rectified.

9. After concluding their evidence on issues Nos. 1 and 2 the plaintiffs stated that they were reserving a right to produce evidence in rebuttal on issues the burden of proof of which lay on the defendants.

10. After the defendants had led their evidence the plaintiffs applied for permission to produce evidence in rebuttal of the evidence led by the defendants. This prayer was opposed by the defendants. The learned Additional District Judge overruled the objection saying that the evidence of the witnesses of the plaintiffs was given under issue No. 1 only. As I have shown above this is erroneous.

11. On behalf of the defendants it is contended that the correct interpretation of Order 18, Rule 3 is that before examining any witness the party leading evidence should expressly reserve his right to produce evidence on the issues the burden of proof of which lies on the opposite party. Reliance was placed on the decision in Motibhai v. Umedchand, AIR 1956 Sau 52. The question which arose in that case for decision was whether before the date on which the party leading evidence starts examining his witnesses he is required under Order 18, Rule 3 to state that he would reserve his evidence on the other issues.

However in that case the decision in Nanhey Raja v. Kedar Nath, AIR 1953 Vin Pra 34 was also considered, in which it was held as follows:—

"The law does not prescribe a stage at which a party should apprise the Court of its exercising the option under Order 18, Rule 3. But it is only reasonable that this should be done, if possible, before it begins, and in any case before the other party begins its evidence, so that it might clearly note that the first party has not really finished."

12. And the opinion was expressed that Order 18, Rule 3 lays down that the party having a right to begin should exercise the option before he starts examining his witnesses. With all respect I am unable to subscribe to the view taken in the Saurashtra case. Order 18, Rule 3 runs as follows:—

"Where there are several issues, the burden of proving some of which lies on the other party, the party beginning may, at his option, either produce his evidence on those issues or reserve it by way of answer to the evidence produced by the other party; and, in the latter case, the party beginning may produce evidence on those issues after the other party has produced all his evidence, and the other party may then reply specially on the evidence so produced by the party beginning, but the party beginning will then be entitled to reply generally on the whole case."

13. It does not prescribe the stage at which the party leading evidence should apprise the Court of its exercising the option under Order 18, Rule 3. Although the Code contemplates that the party leading evidence should state his case, this is not done in actual practice. I am of the opinion that the provision under the above rule is sufficiently complied with if the party in question states before the other party begins its evidence that it is reserving its right to adduce evidence in rebuttal on the other issues. This it can do only if it has actually not led any evidence on those issues.

14. In the present case the issues were not correctly framed. The burden of proof of issue No. 2, which is a comprehensive issue, was placed on the plaintiffs and rightly so as pointed out by me above. But misunderstanding was caused by the framing of issues Nos. 3, 4 and 5 the burden of proof of which was placed on the defendants. If the issues had been correctly framed then the burden of proving these issues should have been placed on the plaintiffs. If they succeeded in proving that the parties were members of a joint Hindu family, that the estate was not an impartible one and that there was no family arrangement during the life-time of Guman Singh then it would follow as a result of the decision of these issues that the share of the plaintiff Raghunath Singh was one-fourth.

15. On account of the incorrect framing of the issues the plaintiffs might have been misled in not producing all the evidence on the matters covered by issues Nos. 3, 4 and 5 initially. I accordingly allow them to produce further evidence on these issues. They are entitled to produce rebuttal evidence on issue No. 7. Thereafter the defendants will be entitled to produce rebuttal evidence on issues Nos. 3, 4 and 5 only.

16. The revision application is decided as indicated above.

17. In the circumstances of the case, I leave the parties to bear their own costs of this revision application.

Order accordingly.

AIR 1970 RAJASTHAN 281 (V 57 C 68)

KAN SINGH, J.

Bhagwat Singhji, Petitioner v. Kesar Singhji, Respondent.

Criminal Revn. No. 398 of 1969, D/- 14-4-1970, against Order of Addl. S. J., Udaipur, D/- 5-8-1969.

Constitution of India, Articles 362, 363 — Article 362 does not restrict powers of legislature — Ex-ruler is not exempted from personal appearance in Court in absence of express provision in Criminal Procedure Code.

Article 362 recommends to the Parliament and the State Legislature, in making laws after the Constitution to have due regard to the guarantee or assurance given under any covenant or agreement. But if despite the recommendation that due regard shall be had to the guarantee or assurance given under the covenant or agreement, the Parliament or the Legislature of a State makes laws inconsistent with the personal rights, privileges and dignities of the Ruler of an Indian State, the exercise of the legislative authority cannot relying upon the agreement or covenant be questioned in any Court. Every provision in a Covenant will not have the status of a law. The provisions in a Covenant dealing with the rights or privileges of individuals, be they Ex-Rulers, cannot claim the status of a law and they will not be enforceable in Courts of law as such, unless there is legislative sanction in support of such provisions in the Covenant. (Paras 7, 12)

Article 362 only contains a recommendatory provision for the benefit of the Parliament or the State Legislatures in making the Laws and it does not, in any way, restrict the powers of legislation of the Parliament or the State Legislatures. It is a matter for the Parliament or the State Legislatures to see how far the so-called privileges of the erstwhile rulers were to be incorporated in any law. When the Criminal Procedure Code of the Central Legislature was extended to Rajasthan by the Part B States Act of 1961, no such privilege was incorporated in the Criminal Procedure Code. The Parliament only inserted Section 197-A which gives protection in the matter of launching prosecution against an erstwhile Ruler, but so far as an erstwhile Ruler of an Indian State advances claim for exemption from personal appearance as a complainant or as a witness no such privilege has been recognised by the Criminal Procedure Code or any other law made by the competent legislature.

ORDER:— The revision before me raises the question whether the former ruler of an Indian State is exempt from personal appearance as a complainant in a criminal case instituted by him on the basis of his so-called personal privileges saved by or arising from the covenant resulting in the integration of the Indian State of which the complainant was the ex-Ruler with the Union of States. For appreciating the point the relevant facts may shortly be stated as follows:—

2. The petitioner His Highness Maharana Shri Bhagwat Singhji lodged a complaint against Shri Kcsarsingh, the opposite party for an offence under Section 500 Indian Penal Code in the Court of the Munsiff Magistrate, First Class, Udaipur. The complaint was filed by His Highness Maharana Shri Bhagwat Singhji himself. Shri Kcsarsingh was an employee of his Highness Maharana Shri Bhagwat Singhji. The statement of His Highness Maharana Shri Bhagwat Singhji under Section 200, Criminal Procedure Code was recorded by the learned Magistrate at the Maharana's Palace at Udaipur where the learned Magistrate held his Camp, though at that stage he did not consider or decide the question relating to the alleged personal privilege of the Maharana for exemption from appearance in Court. When the accused appeared and the complainant was not himself present on a date of hearing, an objection was raised by the accused that the complaint be dismissed on account of the non-appearance of the complainant. At that stage the claim for exemption from personal appearance in Court was raised on behalf of the Maharana. The learned Magistrate went into it and by his order dated 9-12-1966 he negatived the claim and asked the petitioner to appear in person in Court, if he wanted to prosecute his complaint and he made it clear that if he did not choose to appear on a further date of hearing without a lawful excuse, provisions of Section 259, Criminal Procedure Code will come into play. Aggrieved of this order of the learned Magistrate the petitioner went up in revision to the Court of Session. The learned Additional Sessions Judge heard the revision application, but he dismissed it. It is in these circumstances that the present revision application has been filed in this Court.

3. I have heard learned counsel for the parties at sufficient length. Two cases have been brought to my notice, one of the Punjab High Court reported as Shaukat Ali Khao v. State of Punjab, AIR 1960 Punj 565, and another of the Madhya Pradesh High Court reported as Abdul Alim Khan v. Sagarmal, AIR 1963 Madh Pra 162, which deal with a question like the present one. The Punjab High Court has almost in similar circumstances upheld the claim of privilege on behalf of the ex-Ruler, while, on the other hand the Madhya Pradesh High Court has negatived such a claim. The problem thus now is as to which view is to prevail and I will deal with the two cases at the appropriate stage. However, before I do that I may briefly refer to the covenant on which the claim of privilege is based.

4. The former State of Mewar was first integrated with the United State of Rajasthan which had the seat of Government at Kota. The new United State of Rajasthan which was thus formed with the integration of the former Mewar State had its seat of Government at Udaipur. The United State of Rajasthan comprising of all the Indian States in what was formerly Rajputana was formed from 7-4-1949. Its covenant is available as Appendix XL to the White Paper on Indian States. I need not refer to the various articles, which provided for the composition of the New State and also lay down how the legislative power of the New State was to be exercised and by whom. Article XIII which deals with the personal privileges of the Ruler of each covenanting State runs as follows:—

"The Ruler of each Covenanting State, as also the members of his family, shall be entitled to all the personal privileges, dignities and titles enjoyed by them, whether within or outside the territories of the State, immediately before the 15th day of August, 1947." It is on this Article of the Covenant that the petitioner bases his claim. This raises the question as to how far this Article of the Covenant is enforceable in a Court of law.

5. The United State of Rajasthan which came into existence as a result of the aforesaid covenant ceased to exist with effect from 26-1-1950 when the Constitution of India came into force. Articles 362 and 363 make provision for matters relating to the Covenant with the erstwhile Rulers. I may read both the Articles:—

"Article 362. Rights and privileges of Rulers of Indian States. In the exercise of the power of Parliament or of the Legislature of a State to make laws or in the exercise of the executive power of the Union or of a State, due regard shall be had to the guarantee or assurance given under any such covenant or agreement as is referred to in Article 291 with respect to the personal rights, privileges and dignities of Ruler of an Indian State."

"Article 363. Bar to interference by Courts in disputes arising out of certain treaties, agreements, etc. (1) Notwithstanding anything in this Constitution but subject to the provisions of Article 143, neither the Supreme Court nor any other court shall have jurisdiction in any dispute arising out of any provisions of a treaty, agreement, covenant, engagement, sanad or other similar instrument which was entered into or executed before the commencement of this Constitution by any Ruler of an Indian State and to which the Government of the Dominion of India or any of its predecessor Government was a party and which has or has been continued in operation after such commencement or in any dispute in respect of any right accruing under or any liability or obligation arising out of any of the provisions of this Constitution relating to any such treaty, agreement, covenant, engagement, sanad or other similar instrument.

(2) In this Article:—

(a) "Indian State" means any territory recognised before the commencement of this Constitution by His Majesty or the Government of the Dominion of India as being such a State; and

(b) "Ruler" includes the Prince, Chief or other person recognised before such commencement by His Majesty or the Government of the Dominion of India as the Ruler of any Indian State."

6. The proviso to Article 131 also throws some light on the legal efficacy of the Covenant. While the enacting part of the Article defines the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in disputes between the Government of India and one or more States; or between the two or more States according to the proviso the said jurisdiction shall not extend to a dispute arising out of any treaty, agreement, covenant, engagement, sanad or other similar instrument which having been entered into or included before the commencement of this Constitution continued in operation after such commencement or which provides that the said jurisdiction shall not extend to such a dispute.

7. In Sudhansusekhar v. State of Orissa, AIR 1961 SC 198, their Lordships of the Supreme Court had pointed out that Article 362 recommends to the Parliament and the State Legislatures in making laws after the Constitution to have due regard to the guarantee or assurance given under any covenant or agreement. Their Lordships pointed out that Article 362 is not restricted to agreements relating to the privy purse and covered all agreements and covenants entered into by the Rulers of Indian States before the commencement of the Constitution whereby the personal rights, privileges and dignities of the Ruler of an Indian State were guaranteed. Nevertheless it does not import any legal obligation enforceable at the instance of the erstwhile Ruler of a former Indian State. Their Lordships added that if despite the recommendation that due regard shall be had to the guarantee or assurance given under the covenant or agreement, the Parliament or the Legislature of a State makes laws inconsistent with the personal rights, privileges and dignities of the Ruler of an Indian State, the exercise of the legislative authority cannot, relying upon the agreement or covenant, be questioned in any Court, and that is so expressly provided by Article 363 of the Constitution.

8. In Bhagwat Singh v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1964 SC 444, their Lordships pointed out that the personal rights, privileges and dignities of the Ruler of an Indian State guaranteed or assured under any covenant or agreement, entered into with the concurrence of the Government of India, which are recommended under Article 362 of the Constitution to be respected, avail the Rulers in their status as Indian citizens and not in recognition of any sovereign authority continuing to remain vested in them. In that case His Highness the Maharana of Udaipur had claimed immunity from proceedings under the Industrial Disputes Act and his claim was turned down.

9. I may now refer to the Punjab and Madhya Pradesh cases.

10. In the Punjab case the first information report for an offence under Section 408, Indian Penal Code was lodged by the Private Secretary to the Nawab of former Nalerkotla State which had integrated with the Pepsu Union. The Nawab was sought to be examined as a witness at the instance of the prosecution. The Nawab put in an application representing that he was immune from the ordinary process and was exempted from appearance in Court. The prayer of the Nawab was allowed and he was ordered to be examined on commission. The accused attacked the order in revision before the Court of Session, but was not successful. He then approached the High Court. The learned Judge held that the privilege of immunity from the ordinary process of Court of law had been safeguarded by Article 362 of the Constitution. The learned Judge referred to Para 240 in the White Paper and observed that the sovereign power at the time of integration of Indian States extended solemn assurance which later received constitutional recognition in Articles 362 and 363 guaranteeing the personal privileges and rights including protection from ordinary process of Courts to the Rulers of the integrating States. He accordingly came to the conclusion that personal appearance of the Nawab could not be insisted upon.

11. In the Madhya Pradesh case, the Nawab of Jaora whose State had integrated with what was then known as Madhya Bharat moved an application before the Magistrate in a complaint filed on behalf of the Nawab that he be examined as a witness on commission and insisting that as a former Ruler he was a privileged person exempt as of right from personal attendance. The learned Magistrate rejected the application. The Nawab then approached the High Court. The Punjab case aforesaid was cited before the learned Judge. The learned Judge came to the conclusion that a statement in the White Paper on States was relied on in the Punjab case, but according to him, a mere statement in the White Paper is not binding on the Court until it is shown that it was based on a constitutional or statutory provision. The Covenant of the former Ruler was a State Paper, but, according to the learned Judge, it did not become law unless it was made part of the Constitution or any Statute. The learned Judge referred to Section 133, Civil Procedure Code and Section 197-A, Criminal Procedure Code for the sake of analogy and held that unless the so-called privileges were embodied in any statute they could not be enforced in a Court of law.

12. Learned Counsel for the petitioner was not able to attack the reasoning given in the Madhya Pradesh case. There is no gainsaying the fact that every provision in a Covenant will not have the status of a law. There may be provisions in a Covenant which dealt with the transfer of territories or the formation of a new State and such provisions may be recognised by Courts as law partaking the character of an act of the State, but the provisions in a Covenant dealing with the rights or privileges of individuals, be they ex-Rulers, cannot claim the status of a law and they will not be enforceable in Courts of law as such, unless there is legislative sanction in support of such provisions in the Covenant.

13. Learned counsel for the petitioner referred me to some passages in the Halsbury's Laws of England, Third Edition, Vol. 7 and Oppenheim's International Law. In Halsbury's Laws of England in para. 307, it is stated that treaties concluded by the Crown are in general binding upon the subject without express parliamentary sanction but the previous consent of, or subsequent ratification by, the legislature is legally necessary to their validity in certain cases. It is further stated that thus though treaties relating to war and peace, the cession of territory or concluding alliances with foreign powers are generally conceded to be binding upon the nation without express parliamentary sanction, it is deemed safer to obtain such sanction in the case of an important cession of territory and it is pointed out that where private rights of the subject are interfered with by a treaty concluded in time of peace, it is apprehended that the previous or subsequent consent of Parliament is in all cases required to render the treaty binding upon the subject and enforceable by officers of the Crown. In all cases the Courts are competent to inquire into matters involving the construction of treaties and other acts of State; and the plea of an act of State, or that the matter involves the construction of treaties, affords no valid defence to an action against officers of the Crown for interference with the private rights of a British subject or of a resident alien friend. This passage, to my mind, draws a distinction between treaties relating to war and peace, cessation of territories on the one hand, and treaties affecting or dealing with the private rights on the other. The former are taken to be binding without express parliamentary sanction whereas the latter are not.

14. In Oppenheim's International Law Vol. I, at page 37, it is observed that there is wide divergence of doctrine as regards the International Law being the part of the Municipal Law. Then the learned author deals with the position in foreign countries. He points out that so far as Great Britain is concerned all such rules of customary International Law as are either universally recognised or have at any rate received the assent of the country are per se part of the law of the land. To that extent there is still valid in England the common law doctrine, to which Blackstone gave expression in a striking passage, that the Law of Nations is part of the law of the land and it has been repeatedly acted upon by Courts. Apart from isolated obiter dicta it has never been denied by Judges, but it was observed that this unshaken continuity of its observance suffered a reverse as the result of the dicta of some Judges in Franconia case though later in the case of West Rand Central Gold Mining Co. v. King, 1905-2 KB 391 this classical doctrine was reaffirmed. A little later it has been pointed out by the author himself that such treaties as affect private rights and, generally, as require for their enforcement a modification of common law or of a statute must receive parliamentary assent through an enabling Act of Parliament and to that extent binding treaties which are part of International Law do not form part of the law of the land unless expressly made so by the legislature. The author then discusses the position in the United States and other countries. These passages far from supporting the learned counsel go against his submission. To my mind, no principle of international law is involved in the present case. With the formation of the United State of Rajasthan the inhabitants of the different States became, from the date of the merger, the subjects of the United State of Rajasthan and they could not be described as the subjects of a particular State. As pointed out by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in Ram Babu Saxena v. State, 1950 Raj LW 232 = (AIR 1950 SC 155) after the execution of the Covenant the covenanting States nationally retained their personality for the purposes of succession to Rulership etc., but they did not exist as such. After the Constitution came into force there were no Indian States as such within the boundaries of the Union of India even notionally. Therefore, there could be no international relationship as could be subject of any international law or any principle to govern the relationship of the rulers in the new State. The Rulers became citizens of the new State and did not retain any trappings of sovereignty. With the Constitution coming into force there remained only one sovereign in India namely, the Indian people. To my mind, therefore, there is no room to bring in any principle of International Law in giving effect to the Covenants and the passages on which learned Counsel for the petitioner has relied and which I have already referred do not render any help in the matter. The Covenants can be looked into only to the extent they have been referred to in the Constitution and no further. As pointed out by their Lordships of the Supreme Court, Article 362 only contains a recommendatory provision for the benefit of the Parliament or the State Legislatures in making the Laws and it does not, in any way, restrict the powers of legislation of the Parliament or the State Legislatures. It is a matter for the Parliament or the State Legislatures to see how far the so-called privileges of the erstwhile rulers were to be incorporated in any law. When the Criminal Procedure Code of the Central Legislature was extended to Rajasthan by the Part B States Act of 1961, no such privilege as is claimed was incorporated in the Criminal Procedure Code. The Parliament only inserted Section 197-A which gives protection in the matter of launching prosecution against an erstwhile Ruler, but so far as an erstwhile Ruler of an Indian State advances claim for exemption from personal appearance as a complainant or as a witness no such privilege has been recognised by the Criminal Procedure Code or any other law made by the competent legislature.

15. In these circumstances the so-called claim or privilege based on the Covenant without there being any legislative sanction behind it cannot be recognised by the Courts. The Courts below were, therefore, not wrong in refusing to grant exemption from personal attendance to the petitioner as a complainant.

16. The revision application has no force and it is hereby dismissed.

Petition dismissed.

JAGAT NARAYAN, C. J. AND
R. D. GATTANI, J.Likhmi Chand and others, Appellants v.
Smt. Sukhdevi and others, Respondents.Civil Regular First Appeal No. 83 of 1962, D/- 8-5-1970 against judgment of Sr. Civil J., Churu, D/- 17-5-1962.

Hindu Succession Act (1956), Sec. 14 (2)
— Property of female Hindu — Hindu widow, having no title in joint family properties, allotted properties under agreement for residence during her lifetime — Case falls under Section 14 (2) and widow will not become full owner of property after coming into force of the Act. AIR 1965 Andh Pra 66, Dissented from.

Where a Hindu widow, having no sort of title in the joint family properties except her right of maintenance and residence in those properties, is allotted properties for her residence during her lifetime under an agreement prohibiting her from disposing of that property, then, the case falls under Section 14 (2) and the widow will not become full owner of those properties on the coming into force of the Act. AIR 1965 Andh Pra 66, Dissented from. Case law discussed.

(Paras 16, 20)

The widow, having a restricted life estate in the property under the agreement, will have no right to sell, mortgage or transfer those properties. If in such case in respect of those properties the widow executes sale deed the sale deed will be void. But it cannot be said that by executing sale deed her rights in the properties granted under agreement are extinguished altogether. The widow during her lifetime will remain the limited owner of those properties with rights restricted as indicated in the agreement.

S. C. Bhandari, for Appellants; R. K.
Rastogi, for Respondents Nos. 2 and 3.

JAGAT NARAYAN, C. J.:— This is an appeal by the plaintiffs whose suit for grant of some reliefs in respect of a 'Nohra' and a 'Haveli' situated at Bidasar was dismissed by the Senior Civil Judge, Churu.

2. The findings of fact arrived at by the trial Court are not disputed before us. The only question for determination before us is a pure question of law. The facts necessary for the decision of the question are these: One Askaran had a son Bhikamchand who died in his life-time leaving a widow Smt. Sukhdevi. Bhikamehand left a daughter Kan Kanwari who was not impleaded as a party to this suit. Askaran was separate from his brother Dhanraj but Askaran and Bhikamehand constituted a joint Hindu family. On the death of Bhikamehand his coparcenary interest in the joint family property went to Askaran by survivorship. Smt.
Sukhdevi had only a right of residence and maintenance in the joint family properties.

3. On 7-2-1928 Askaran executed a will in favour of his nephew Johrimal bequeathing all his properties on him. In view of this Smt. Sukhdevi asked for separate provision to be made for her maintenance and residence. It may be stated here that Bhikamchand was living with Askaran in the family dwelling house at Bidasar with his wife.
After his death Smt. Sukhdevi continued to live in the same family dwelling house in which her father-in-law was living.

4. Smt. Sukhdevi and Askaran appointed one Mool Chand Sethia as an arbitrator and he gave an award Ex. 2 on 9-7-1934.
This award was accepted both by Askaran and Smt. Sukhdevi and so far as the present case is concerned it constitutes an agreement between them. Under this award two alternatives were given to Smt. Sukhdevi. She could either take a 'Haveli' and a 'Nohra' described in the award at Bidasar for her residence, or a 'Haveli' with 'Bakhal' at Ladnu. The 'Haveli' offered to her at Bida-sar was different from the family dwelling house in which Askaran and Smt. Sukhdevi were residing at that time. The award went on to say that if she chose the house and 'Nohra' at Bidasar she would only get Rupees 37,000/- for her maintenance. If on the other hand she chose the 'Haveli' and the 'Bakhal' at Ladnu she was to get Rupees 45,000/- for her maintenance. The sum of Rs. 37,000/- or Rs. 45,000/- would become her absolute property but the immovable properties were given to her only for her life-time. Para 3 of the award runs as follows:—

"3. Out of the properties stated in para Nos. 1 and 2, whichever property Smt. Sukhdevi wants to take, she will reside till her lifetime in them or in it and she can use it in any way she likes. On necessity she will get its repairs done with her own money. She will have no right to sell, mortgage or transfer in any other way. After her death the properties stated in para No. 1 or 2 (whichever she might take) will revert to Askaran, his heirs and legal representatives. Her right will be only in her lifetime. She is authorised to undertake construction for necessity and convenience. She may increase or decrease apartments with her money. But she will not be authorised to destroy, deteriorate its usefulness and condition, etc."

5. Smt. Sukhdevi chose the 'Haveli' and the 'Nohra' at Bidasar which were given to her and she went to reside in them.

6. On 24-4-1945 Askaran died. On 11-4-1960 Smt. Sukhdevi sold the western half of the 'Nohra' to Mangatmal defendant No. 2 by a registered sale deed Ex. 5 for Rupees 10,000/- and the eastern half of it to Trilokchand defendant No. 3 by means of a registered sale deed Ex. 6 for Rs. 10,000/-. The purchasers were put into possession of the 'Nohra' as owners.

7. The present suit was filed by Johnmal and his sons and grandsons for the following reliefs—

"(a) That it be declared that the Haveli and Nohra described in the schedule annexed to this plaint belong to the plaintiffs and that the interest of the defendant No. 1 in these properties was created only to the extent of residence therein and use thereof during her lifetime, and further that she having relinquished her right of residence and user in the Nohra by transferring its possession to defendants Nos. 2 and 3 under sale-deeds dated 11th April, 1960, she has no more interest in the Nohra even during her lifetime;

(b) that it be declared that the two sale deeds dated 11th April, 1960 executed by defendant No. 1 in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in respect of western half and eastern half of the Nohra respectively are unauthorised and void and totally ineffective against the plaintiff's vested right of ownership in this Nohra;

(c) that the possession of the Nohra shown in the Schedule be given to the plaintiffs by ejecting defendants Nos. 2 and 3.

(d) That a permanent injunction may be granted against defendant No. 1 restraining her from transferring the Haveli and/or its possession to any person in any manner whatsoever."

8. The suit was resisted by all the defendants on the ground that on the coming into force of the Hindu Succession Act Smt. Sukhdevi became the full owner of the immovable properties allotted to her under the agreement entered into between her and Askaran. The trial Court held that Smt. Sukhdevi had become the full owner of the properties given to her under the agreement referred to above by virtue of Section 14 (1) of the Hindu Succession Act. He did not consider whether sub-section (2) of Sec. 14 was applicable.

9. The contention on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants before us is that as the properties were given to Smt. Sukhdevi under a written instrument which restricted her right, sub-section (2) of Section 14 is applicable and she did not become the full owner of these properties on the coming into force of the Act. On behalf of the respondents it was contended that sub-section (2) was not applicable. We have heard learned counsel for the parties and are of the opinion that sub-section (2) of Section 14 is applicable to the present case and the right of Smt. Sukhdevi is a restricted right, the terms of which are contained in agreement Ex. 2.

10. A widow's right to receive maintenance is one of an indefinite character which unless made a charge upon the property, is enforceable only like any other liability in respect of which no charge exists. But where maintenance has been made a charge upon the property, and the property is subsequently sold, the purchaser must hold it subject to the charge. (See Mulla's Hindu Law, 13th Edition, para 569). A widow has a right of maintenance in all joint family properties but she has no title of any sort in those properties till a specific property or a portion thereof is allotted to her for her maintenance.

11. She has a right of residence in the joint family house in which she resided with her husband during his lifetime. (See Para 573, Mulla's Hindu Law). But some other property can be allotted for her residence after she becomes a widow and then her right is transferred to that property. If specific property is allotted to the widow for her residence then she gets some sort of title to this property.

12. Section 14 of the Hindu Succession Act runs as follows:—

"14. (1) Any property possessed by a female Hindu, whether acquired before or after the commencement of this Act, shall be held by her as full owner thereof and not as a limited owner:

Explanation.—In this sub-section, 'property' includes both movable and immovable property acquired by a female Hindu by inheritance or device, or at a partition, or in lieu of maintenance or arrears of maintenance, or by gift from any person, whether a relative or not, before, at or after her marriage, or by her own skill or exertion, or by purchase or by prescription, or in any other manner whatsoever, and also any such property held by her as stridhana immediately before the commencement of this Act.

(2) Nothing contained in sub-section (1) shall apply to any property acquired by way of gift or under a will or any other instrument or under a decree or order of a civil court or under an award where the terms of the gift, will or other instrument or the decree, order or award prescribe a restricted estate in such property."

13. This section came up for interpretation before the Supreme Court in several cases which have been summarised in their decision in Mangal Singh v. Smt. Rattno, AIR 1967 SC 1786 and again in Civil Appeal No. 1937 of 1966 (SC), Badri Pershad v. Smt. Kanso Devi — decided on 26-8-1969 (unreported). In Mangal Singh's case, AIR 1967 SC 1786 it was observed:—

"It may be noticed that the Explanation to Section 14 (1) sets out the various modes of acquisition of the property by a female Hindu and indicates that the section applies only to property to which the female Hindu has acquired some kind of title, however restricted the nature of her interest may be. The words 'as full owner thereof and not as a limited owner' as given in the last portion of sub-section (1) of Section 14 clearly suggest that the legislature intended that the limited ownership of a Hindu female should be changed into full ownership."

14. With regard to sub-section (2) of Section 14 it was held that it is an exception to Section 14 (1) and will only apply where the title of the widow to the property in question was created by the instrument, etc., and will have no application to a case where the deed, etc., merely recognised a pre-existing right.

15. Now when a specific property is allotted to a widow for maintenance, a restricted title is created in her favour in that property. Before the allotment of a specific property for her maintenance she had no title of any sort to any of the joint family properties. In our opinion the words in the explanation to Section 14 (1) "in lieu of maintenance" apply to property specifically allotted to a widow for her maintenance and the words "or in any other manner whatsoever" cover specific property allotted to her for her residence.

16. In the present case we have to see whether Smt. Sukhdevi had any title of any sort to the Nohra or the Haveli in Bidasar before they were allotted to her under the written agreement Ex. 2. We are firmly of the opinion that she had no sort of title in these properties although they were joint family properties and she was entitled to exercise the right of maintenance and residence against them. Her title in the Nohra and the Haveli at Bidasar was only created under the written agreement Ex. 2. Prior to the written agreement she was residing in another property with her father-in-law and she was exercising her right of residence in that property. Therefore, she acquired some sort of title to the Nohra and the Haveli at Bidasar under agreement Ex. 2 and consequently the case falls under the exception enacted under sub-section (2) of Section 14.

17. A number of cases of this Court and of other High Courts were cited before us. Out of the cases which are relevant the following support the view which we have taken:—

Thatha Gurunadham Chetti v. Smt. Thatha Navaneethamma, AIR 1967 Mad 429; Smt. Prema Devi v. Joint Director of Consolidation, Gorakhpur, AIR 1970 All 238; Vaddaboyina Sesha Reddi v. Vaddaboying Tulasamma, AIR 1969 Andh Pra 300; Mali Bewa v. Dadli Das, AIR 1960 Orissa 81; Jaria Devi v. Shyam Sundar Agarwalla, AIR 1959 Cal 338; Damodhar Rao v. Bhima Rao, AIR 1965 Mys 290.

18. We are unable to subscribe to the view taken in Gadam Reddayya v. Varapula Venkataraju, AIR 1965 Andh Pra 66. In that case a widow by name Challamma adopted the plaintiff some time after her husband's death early in 1935. Shortly thereafter, there were some disputes between the plaintiff and Challamma which were ultimately referred to some mediators for settlement. Ultimately it ended in settlement evidenced by Ex. A-8 by and under which she was given four acres of wet land and one acre of dry land to be enjoyed by her for her life and the rest of the property to be taken by the plaintiff in recognition of his rights as an adopted son. In that case Chellamma had no sort of title to the five acres of land which was allotted to her under settlement Ex. A. 8 before that settlement had taken place because by virtue of the adoption her adopted son had become owner of all the properties owned by her. Therefore in our opinion Section 14 (2) would be attracted in the case, there being no pre-existing right in the widow to specific properties allotted to her under the settlement.

19. Cases in which the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937 is applicable are distinguishable as there the widow inherits the share of her husband in the joint family properties on his death and she has a pre-existing share in those properties. This title is a limited one but nevertheless it is a pre-existing title. Even if it is subsequently recognised by partition, by award or by a decree of the Court, Section 14 (2) is not attracted.

20. We accordingly hold that Smt. Sukhdevi did not become the full owner of the 'Nohra' and the 'Haveli' in dispute on the coming into force of the Hindu Succession Act because under the agreement Ex. 2 she had only a restricted life estate in the property. Under this agreement she is prohibited from selling, mortgaging or transferring these properties.

21. So far as relief (a) is concerned, it cannot be declared that the plaintiffs are the owners of the 'Haveli' and the 'Nohra' during the lifetime of Smt. Sukhdevi. Smt. Sukh-devi will remain the limited owner of these properties with rights restricted as indicated in agreement Ex. 2. She has no right to sell, mortgage or transfer these properties. The properties will revert after her death to the plaintiffs.

22. We are also not satisfied that by executing sale deeds in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 her rights in the properties granted to her under agreement Ex. 2 are extinguished altogether.

23. So far as relief (b) is concerned, we declare that the two sale deeds dated 11th April, 1960 executed by defendant No. 1 in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in respect of the western half and the eastern half of the 'Nohra' respectively are void and are not binding on the plaintiffs.

24. With regard to relief (c) we are not satisfied that the plaintiffs are entitled to possession over the 'Nohra' so long as Smt. Sukhdevi is alive. Learned counsel for the plaintiffs has expressed an apprehension that if defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are not evicted they might claim adverse possession over the 'Nohra' under the two void sale deeds dated 11-4-1960. To allay this apprehension Shri R. K. Rastogi has acknowledged on behalf of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 that their possession will be merely permissive if this judgment is finally upheld and the plaintiffs will be entitled to possession over the 'Nohra' after the death of Smt. Sukhdevi.

25. So far as relief (d) is concerned, we grant a permanent injunction restraining Smt. Sukhdevi from selling, mortgaging or transferring the 'Haveli' or the 'Nohra' in future.

26. The appeal of the plaintiffs is allowed in part as indicated above. In the circumstances of the case we allow the parties to bear their own costs of this appeal and the suit.

Order accordingly.

E N D

defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on the other had been in possession of separate parcels of land, of which the descriptions are respectively given in Schedules 2 and 3 of the plaint. In para 5 of the plaint it was specifically asserted that despite the possession of the plaintiffs and the defendants over different parcels of the joint land, "the suit land is joint property possessed separately." In face of such pleadings, the trial Court was in patent error in holding that the plaintiffs had admitted in the plaint that final partition had been effected between them and the defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

5. Under issue No. (2) the Court held that some of the persons to whom, according to the admission of plaintiff No. 1 Nitya Sadhu Jamatia as P. W. 1, a part of the land comprised in jote No. 75 had been sold by the plaintiffs had not been impleaded and, as such, suit for partition was not properly constituted. Shri R. Ghosh, appearing for the plaintiffs-appellants, contended that since the names of the various persons to whom the plaintiffs had sold some areas out of jote No. 75 were elicited by the defendants only during the course of the cross-examination of the plaintiff Nitya Sadhu Jamatia, the proper course for the trial Court to follow was to give an opportunity to the plaintiffs to amend the plaint by bringing those vendees on the record as defendants and that it was altogether illegal for the Court to dismiss the suit on the basis of non-joinder of certain necessary parties to the suit.

I have found substance in this submission of the learned counsel for the appellants. Rule 9 of Order 1, Civil P. C. provides that no suit shall be defeated by reason of the misjoinder or non-joinder of parties, and the Court may in every suit deal with the matter in controversy so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it. There are admittedly a number of cases in which the Court cannot, under the substantive law deal with the rights and interests of the parties actually before it in the absence of certain other persons. As an instance, I may mention that the Court cannot, in a suit by a co-trustee for possession of the trust property, grant any relief to the plaintiff in the absence of all other co-trustees on the record, the reason being that all the co-trustees represent a single and indivisible right which cannot be adjudicated upon and no effective decree can be passed by the Court in their absence. Likewise, a partition suit will not be legally constituted if all the co-owners of the properties involved in the suit are not brought on the record. In such cases, the obvious course open to the Court is to bring the necessary parties on the record under Rule 10 of Order 1.

Sub-rule (2) of Rule 10 enjoins that the Court may at any stage of the proceedings, either upon or without the application of either party, and on such terms as may appear to the Court to be just, order that the name of any person who ought to have been joined, whether as plaintiff or defendant, or whose presence before the Court may be necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit, be added. The combined reading of Rule 9 and Rule 10 (2) plainly yields the conclusions, (1) that a suit cannot be dismissed on the basis merely of non-joinder of parties, and (2) that power vests in the Court to bring on the record any person who is a necessary party to the suit and in whose absence it is not possible for the Court to effectually and completely adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit. It would follow that it was obligatory on the Court either to give an opportunity to the plaintiffs to implead those persons in the suit to whom some parts of the land covered by jote No. 75, according to the statement of Nitya Sadhu Jamatia plaintiff, had been sold, or to straightway implead those persons as parties on its own initiative. The Court was clearly not justified in dismissing the suit on the short ground that in the absence of all the co-owners on the record the suit was not properly constituted.

6. As a result, I allow the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the trial Court, and remand the case to the trial Court with the direction that it should be entered at its old number and an opportunity given to the plaintiffs to bring on the record such persons to whom any of them may have sold some parcels of the land covered by jote No. 75. Those persons then shall be summoned and the case tried afresh after framing additional issues as may arise from the pleadings of the persons newly brought on the record.

7. Before parting with the case, I would like to state that while discussing the trial Court's finding on issue No. (1) I should not be taken to have held that partition by metes and bounds as pleaded by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had not been proved. The only conclusion recorded by me is that on the basis of the pleadings adopted by the plaintiffs it is not possible to hold that such a partition had been effected. The trial Court would give its own finding afresh on that issue after taking into consideration the pleadings of the parties and all other data available on the record.

8. Taking all the circumstances into consideration, I have decided to leave the parties to bear their own costs of this appeal and order accordingly.

Order accordingly.

Civil Revn. No. 23 of 1967, D/- 30-3-1970, From order of Addl. Sub-J., Tripura, D/- 21-2-1967.

(A) Civil P. C. (1903), Order 17, Rules 2 and 3 — Case adjourned because Presiding Officer was on leave — Date adjourned is not for hearing of case — Decree passed on such date will fall under Rule 2 and not under Rule 3.

Where, after the plaintiff's evidence recorded on commission was filed, the case was adjourned, because the Presiding Officer was on leave, the adjourned date cannot be for the hearing of the case. In such case, it is obligatory for the Court to issue notice to defendant for appearance. Court passing a decree on plaintiff's evidence taken on commission, cannot be one under Order 17, R. 3 on contest and is liable to be quashed.

(B) Civil P. C. (1903), Order 3, Rule 1 — Fledar can move application on behalf of client.

A counsel, duly appointed by a defendant, has necessary sanction to move an application to set aside an ex parte decree passed against his client. The application need not be signed and filed by the defendant himself. AIR 1929 Lah 96 & AIR 1944 All 233, Rel. on.

M. R. Choudhury, for Petitioner; J. K. Roy,
for Respondent.

ORDER:— Durga Charan Saha Roy, the respondent in the present revision petition, filed Money Suit No. 37 of 1905 against the Nishi Kumar Das, the petitioner herein for the recovery of Rs. 165.75 in the Court of Munsiff, Belonia. The suit was fixed for recording parties' evidence on 21-5-1966. Before that date only the evidence of the plaintiff Durga Charan had been recorded on commission. When the case was called on 21-5-1966, none put in appearance on behalf of the defendant and so the suit was decreed on the basis of plaintiff's evidence taken on commission. A short while after on the same date, Shri Jadunandan Datta, the Advocate of the defendant, moved an application on behalf of the defendant for setting aside the decree, which he described as ex parte, and deciding the suit afresh on hearing the arguments of the parties' counsel. That application was dismissed on 12-8-1966 on the finding that the decree dated 21-5-1966 was not ex parte, it having been made under Rule 3 of Order 17 of the Civil Procedure Code, hereinafter called the Code, and that as such an application under O. 9, Rule 13 of the Code was not the proper remedy for getting rid of the decree. Having felt aggrieved, Durga Charan Saha Roy went in appeal to the Court of Shri S. M. Ali, Additional Subordinate Judge, Agartala. Shri S. M. Ali differed from the trial Court on the point that the decree had been made under Order 17, Rule 3, of the Code. In his opinion, that provision of the law was not attracted because the suit had been adjourned to 21-5-1966 not on the prayer of the defendant but in normal routine by the Court itself. He, therefore, held, speaking virtually, that the suit had been decreed ex parte. However, Shri S. M. Ali rejected the appeal on 21-2-1967 on the finding that the application for setting aside the ex parte decree had been made not by the defendant himself but by his counsel and that the counsel had no legal authority to do so. The instant revision petition is directed against the orders made by the trial Court on 12-8-1966 and the first appellate Court on 21-2-1967.

2. A reference to the order-sheet of the trial Court brings out that on 7-5-1966, the date preceding the one on which the suit was decreed, namely, 21-5-1966, the presiding officer of the Court was on leave. On that date it transpired that the Commissioner, appointed for recording the statement of the plaintiff, had submitted his report along with the relevant documents. Some official of the Court made an order adjourning the suit to 21-5-1966 for peremptory hearing. It does not take long to conclude that the Court official had no jurisdiction to fix the case for bearing, that being the exclusive privilege of the presiding officer. At the best, the Court official could have adjourned the case to some date for being put up before the presiding officer for proper orders. Therefore, 21st of May, 1966, could not be a date for hearing of the case in the eye of law, and as a consequence the suit could not be taken up by the Court for hearing in the absence of the defendant. It was the legal obligation of the Court to issue notice to the defendant for appearance. The decree made on that date cannot stand. The defendant can legitimately demand that that decree should be quashed and suit proceeded with.

3. The order made on 21-5-1966 is a brief one and so I am tempted to reproduce it in full. It runs as under:

"The plaintiff's side present. The defendant absent without taking any step.

I P. W. has been examined and cross-examined and the case of the plaintiff has been proved. Hence ordered that the suit be decreed on contest for Rs. 168.75 with costs."

Evidently, the proceedings in the Court on 7-5-1966 and 21-5-1966 do not establish that either the suit had been adjourned on the former date to the latter at the request of the defendant under Order 17, Rule 3, or that it was decreed on 21-5-1966 on contest. The defendant made no request to Court on 7-5-1966 to adjourn the case to 21-5-1966 and so that adjournment would fall under Order 17, Rule 2. The defendant being absent on 21-5-1966, the question of contest on his behalf could not arise and as such the Munsiff who decreed the suit was not fair in stating that the suit had been decreed on contest. Hence, I agree with the first appellate Court that the trial Court was wrong in holding that the suit had been decreed under Order 17, Rule 3, and that the proper course for the defendant to follow for challenging the decree made was to go in appeal rather than move an application under O. 9, Rule 13. I therefore feel satisfied that the defendant had the legal right to move an application under Order 9, Rule 13, because the suit must be considered in the eye of law to have been decreed ex parte despite the recital in the body of the order dated 21-5-1966 that it had been disposed of on contest.

4. This brings us to the consideration of the question whether Shri S. M. Ali was justified in rejecting the appeal on the basis that it was the defendant and not his counsel who could have moved an application under Order 9, Rule 13. The rights and the obligations of the Pleaders are defined in Order III of the Code. The expression "Pleader" is defined in Section 2 (15) of the Code to mean any person entitled to appear and plead for another in Court, and includes an advocate, a Vakil and an Attorney of a High Court. Rule 1 of Order III of the Code runs as under:

"Any appearance, application or act in or to any Court, required or authorised by law to be made or done by a party in such Court, may, except where otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force, be made or done by the party in person, or by his recognized agent, or by a pleader (appearing, applying or acting, as the case may be), on his behalf:

Provided that any such appearance shall, if the Court so directs, be made by the party in person."

On plain reading of this Rule I see no escape from the conclusion that a Pleader duly appointed by a party can move an "application" on his behalf provided there is no provision to the contrary in law respecting that application just as an application made by a pauper — vide Order 33, Rule 4, of the Code. Surely the document dated 21-5-1966 which was presented to the Munsiff's Court by Shri Jadunandan Datta, the Advocate of the defendant, soon after the suit was decreed falls in the description of an "application", inasmuch as the prayer made in that document was for setting aside the ex parte decree and Rule 13 of Order 9, envisages an application for such a prayer. Article 123 of the Limitation Act, 1963, prescribing the period for moving the Court for setting aside an ex parte decree forms part of Third Division of the schedule to the Act and that Division bears the heading "Applications". Part I of that Division, again, is headed "Applications in specified cases", and it is under that Part that Article 123 falls. Hence, there can be no manner of doubt that it was an "application" which Shri Jadunandan Datta had moved in the Munsiff's Court on 21-5-1966 praying for setting aside the ex parte decree. It would, therefore, follow that that Advocate had the necessary legal sanction to move the application on his own by virtue of the Vakalatnama which had been executed in his favour by the defendant. Consequently, Shri S. M. Ali was in error in holding that the Advocate could not have moved the application and that it was obligatory that the application should be signed and filed by the defendant himself.

5. The conclusion reached by me gathers support from the authorities reported in AIR 1929 Lah 96, Abdul Aziz v. Punjab National Bank, and AIR 1944 All 233, Jwala Devi v. Bhrigunath. The Lahore High Court held that the authority of the counsel depends on the terms of the power-of-attorney, if any, granted by his client, and in the absence of such an authority, on the intention of the parties, express or implied, and that the general practice in such cases is a good indication of implied authority. It was held further that the provisions of Rule 4 (2) of Order 3 are wide enough to cover the case of an application for restoration of a suit dismissed in default, as all proceedings in the suit are not ended so far as regards the party, merely by its dismissal in default or by an ex parte decree, which part of the proceedings is liable to be set aside on an application and the case restored to its original number. It might be appropriately mentioned here that when the suit of the respondent Bank in the reported case was dismissed in default, an application for its restoration was moved on the same date by the counsel on his own and without securing the signature thereon of any other authorised agent of the Bank. Therefore, the facts of this Lahore case are on all fours identical with those of the case in hand.

6. The Allahabad High Court held in the case of Jwala Devi, AIR 1944 All 238 (supra) that where the vakalatnama filed by the vakil for the defendant in a suit is in the usual terms giving the vakil the power to apply for execution of the decree, which would necessarily be a stage after the decision of the suit, in the absence of any expression indicating limitation on his powers it would be necessarily implied that the vakil has the authority to do everything that was essential for the proper conduct of the case, and if the case had been decided ex parte it must be held that there was an implied authority given to the vakil to have that order set aside and the case heard on merits. The application for setting aside the ex parte decree, it may be appositely stated, was signed by the vakil in whose favour the vakalatnama had been issued by the defendant and not by the latter himself. The facts of the Allahabad case are also, therefore, identical with those of the present case.

7. Shri J. K. Roy, appearing for the plaintiff-respondent, was unable to cite any authority to the contrary. I would, therefore, hold that Shri S. M. Ali was wrong in his conclusion that the application for setting aside the ex parte decree could not have been legally filed by the counsel of the defendant.

8. It was stated in the application filed by the counsel Shri Jadunandan Datta on 21-5-1966 that he had visited the Court early in the day and had learnt on enquiry that the plaintiff had not filed "any tadbir or hazira of the witnesses", that he was ready to argue the case, and that the case was called and decreed ex parte when he was busy in another Court. I see no adequate justification for not taking the counsel at his word, especially when it was not denied on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent during the course of arguments in this Court that no witness had come to the Court on behalf of the plaintiff on 21-5-1966 and when it is obvious that the suit was decreed only on the basis of the statement of the plaintiff which had been recorded on commission.

9. It is germane to point out that according to Rule 8 of Order 26 of the Code, evidence taken on a commission cannot be read as evidence in the suit without the consent of the party against whom the same is offered, unless —

(a) the person who gave the evidence is beyond the jurisdiction of Court, or dead or unable from sickness or infirmity to attend to be personally examined, or exempted from personal appearance in Court, or is a person in the service of the Government who cannot, in the opinion of the Court, attend without detriment to the public service, or

(b) the Court in its discretion dispenses with the proof of any of the circumstances mentioned in clause (a), and authorises evidence of any person being read as evidence in the suit, notwithstanding proof that the cause for taking such evidence by commission has ceased at the time of reading the same.

It was therefore obligatory for the plaintiff to satisfy the Court, before his evidence recorded on commission could be read as evidence in the suit, that his case fell within the ambit of clause (a) of Rule 8 or to secure a specific order from the Court under cl. (b) of that Rule. Nothing of the kind appears to have been done when the case was disposed of on 21-5-1966. Therefore, the Munsiff was clearly in error in decreeing the suit on the basis of plaintiff's evidence taken on commission. That evidence was not admissible for the reasons just mentioned.

10. As a result, I accept the revision petition, quash the Munsiff's order dated 12-8-1966 and that of the first appellate Court dated 21-2-1967, and on allowing the application dated 21-5-1966 set aside the ex parte decree. The case is remanded to the trial Court for disposal according to the provisions of law. The suit shall be re-entered at its old number. Taking all the circumstances into consideration, I leave the parties to bear their own costs in all the Courts regarding the application for setting aside the ex parte decree.

Revision accepted.

(A) Criminal P. C. (1698), Section 68 and Schedule V — Form of summons — Effect of non-observance of formalities.

Schedule V is as much a part of the Code as any other portion of it, and as such non-compliance with the requirements of the forms in that Schedule cannot be treated lightly, especially when essential features, like the nature of the offence charged, are not outlined in the summons issued. (Para 4)

(B) Criminal P. C. (1898), Sec. 204 (1B) — Issue of process — Copy of complaint to accompany process — Provision however directory.

Section 204 (1B) gives the accused a correct idea of the allegations made against him from the moment the summons is served on him. If, however, neither the summons itself contains the particulars of the offence charged, nor it is accompanied by a copy of the complaint, the person summoned is faced with difficulty. A combined reading of Section 68 (1) and Section 204 (1B) of the Code indicates that the Legislature desires that an accused should know immediately the summons is served on him the particulars of the offence with which he is charged in the complaint filed in writing. It is, therefore, desirable that the summons should be complete in all respects and it should also be accompanied by a copy of the complaint if the proceedings are instituted against him upon a complaint in writing. However, non-compliance with the provisions of Section 204 (1B) does not invalidate or nullify the issue of process because the provisions are merely directory and not mandatory. ORDER:— The present revision petition by Monoranjan Chakraborty illustrates in a telling manner that a small slip in procedural matters by a Court may furnish an occasion to a litigant to stall the proceedings for a long time and occasionally for years together. Hence, the dire necessity for the Presiding Officer of a Court and the staff attached to it to exercise eternal vigilance in carrying out their respective functions to ensure that nothing goes amiss so far as they are concerned.

2. A complaint was lodged against the present petitioner Monoranjan Chakraborty and 4 others in the Court of Shri T. L. Datta, Magistrate first class, Kamalpur, on 3-6-1968 by the Divisional Forest Officer. All the accused including Monoranjan Chakraborty were summoned in due course. The summons issued to Monoranjan Chakraborty marked "A" is on the file of the Criminal Motion No. 156 of 1968 of the Sessions Judge, Tripura. The summons was served on Monoranjan Chakraborty on 25-7-1968 by a forest guard. Monoranjan Chakraborty felt that the summons issued to him was not in the form prescribed by the Criminal Procedure Code and so he moved a revision petition in the Court of the Sessions Judge praying that the latter should recommend to this Court that the summons issued to him be quashed and his acquittal directed. A large number of objections were raised in the revision petition against the validity of the summons. The Sessions Judge dealt only with the main contentions raised before him during the course of arguments, namely, (1) that the summons had not been accompanied by a copy of the complaint as enjoined by sub-section (1-B) of Section 204 of the Code, (2) that summons did not mention the offence with which Monoranjan Chakraborty had been charged, and (3) that the summons had not been happily drafted. However, he rejected the revision petition with the observation that though it is legally necessary that the summons be accompanied by a copy of the complaint and it should mention the offence with which the accused is charged, but these omissions are curable under Section 537 of the Code. It was also observed by the Sessions Judge that such errors and omissions as had been debated before him could also be cured by subsequent compliance with the provisions of the law. In the last para of the order rejecting the revision petition, the Sessions Judge invited the attention of the Magistrate to sub-section (1-B) of Section 204 of the Code and suggested to him to issue a fresh summons to Monoranjan Chakraborty in accordance with the provisions of law.

3. The order made by the Sessions Judge could obviously have served the purpose which, according to the grounds mentioned in the revision petition, Monoranjan Chakraborty wanted to accomplish. However, it appears to me that Monoranjan Chakraborty had an objective different from that apparently set out in the revision petition moved in the Sessions Court. It was to delay, and possibly to defeat, the trial of the complaint lodged against him and others. I think he has succeeded in achieving both the objectives, one mentioned in the revision petition and the other he had in his mind, namely, to delay the trial, and which perhaps was more important from his standpoint. This view is reinforced by non-appearance of either the petitioner or his counsel when the petition came up for hearing before this Court on the 13th of this month.

4. Section 68 (1) of the Code states that every summons issued by a Court shall be in writing in duplicate, signed and sealed by the Presiding Officer of the Court, or by such Officer as the High Court may, from time to time, by rule, direct. Section 555 of the Code provides that subject to the power conferred by Section 554, and by Article 227 of the Constitution, the forms set forth in the fifth schedule, with such variation as the circumstances of each case require, may be used for the respective purposes therein mentioned, and if used shall be sufficient. Form No. 1 of Schedule V is the form of summons issued to an accused person. According to that form, the particulars of the offence charged have to be mentioned in the summons issued to the accused. Undeniably, the summons marked "A" issued to Monoranjan Chakraborty did not mention the offence charged against him. Therefore, very clearly the summons issued to him was legally defective. It may be pointed out that schedule V is as much a part of the Code as any other portion of it, and as such non-compliance with the requirements of the forms in that schedule cannot be treated lightly, specially when essential features, like the nature of the offence charged, are not outlined in the summons issued. Since in the present case the petitioner challenged the validity of the summons issued to him at the earliest stage, it is only fit and proper that a direction be issued to the trial Court that a fresh summons in conformity with the provisions of the law be sent to the petitioner.

5. However, I regret that Monoranjan Chakraborty should have come up in revision instead of putting in appearance before the trial Court and requesting it to furnish him with the necessary particulars of the charge. The summons is merely a means of procuring attendance of the accused and once Monoranjan Chakraborty had learnt through a summons that he was required to appear before the Court to answer a charge, he should have, in fairness to the Court, put in appearance. He could have then requested the Court to supply him with the requisite information to enable him to meet the charge levelled against him.

6. Another serious lacuna noticeable and pointedly mentioned in the revision petition is that the summons was not accompanied by a copy of the complaint as required by sub-section (1-B) of Section 204 of the Code. The real purport of that statutory provision unmistakably is to give the accused a correct idea of the allegations made against him right at the moment the summons is served on him. If, however, neither the summons itself contains the particulars of the offence charged, nor the summons is accompanied by a copy of the complaint, as in the instant case, the person summoned undoubtedly is faced with difficulty. A combined reading of Section 63 (1) and Section 204 (1-B) of the Code would indicate that the Legislature desires that an accused should know immediately the summons is served on him the particulars of the offence with which he is charged in the complaint filed in writing. It is, therefore, highly desirable that the summons should be complete in all respects and it should also be accompanied by a copy of the complaint if the proceedings are instituted against him upon a complaint in writing. However, there is abundant authority for the proposition that non-compliance with the provisions of sub-section (1-B) of Section 204 does not invalidate or nullify the issue of process because the provisions are merely directory and not mandatory. Reference in this connection may be made to the cases of Brahma Panda v. Chairman of Howrah Municipality, AIR 1961 Cal 648, and Ram Narain v. Bishamber Nath, AIR 1961 Punj 171. I think the view expressed in these two authorities is quite sensible if only because non-compliance with the provisions of sub-section (1-B) can be cured by a subsequent compliance therewith. When the accused puts in appearance in obedience to the summons issued, he can request the Court to supply him with a copy of the complaint and thereby get over the difficulty, if any, created for him by non-communication to him earlier of the allegations mentioned in the complaint.

7. For the reasons stated and the conclusions recorded above, I accept the revision petition and direct the Magistrate to re-issue a summons in the proper form to the petitioner accompanied by a copy of the complaint. The file should be immediately sent to the Magistrate to avoid any further loss of time in proceeding with the case.

Revision allowed.

Union of India (in all cases), Petitioner v. R. D. Gupta and another, Respondents.

Civil Misc Petns. Nos. 82, 87, 88, 92, 93 and 94 of 1968, D/- 17-11-1969, from order of this Court, D/- 23-12-1967.

(A) Constitution of India Article 133 (1) — Final order — Meaning of.

The final order under Article 133 (1) is one which finally determines the dispute thrown up by the civil proceeding filed in the Court and not the dispute which will arise out of a civil proceeding which may be filed in the Court in future.

Where the only matter in controversy was whether the Arbitrator had to be appointed in terms of the arbitration clause or that clause was vague in the matter of selection of the arbitrator and so it was for the Court to name an arbitrator and this dispute was finally determined by the High Court the order of the High Court is a final order within Article 133 (1). (Para 6)

(B) Constitution of India, Article 133 (1) — Civil Proceeding — What is.

The expression "civil proceeding" in Article 133 (1) is wide enough to cover any proceeding of a civil nature decided by the High Court, whether in its original, appellate or revisional jurisdiction. Further, if the proceeding involves the assertion or enforcement of a civil right, it is a civil proceeding. (Para 8)

(C) Civil P. C. (1909), Section 11 — Res judicata — Issue of law.

Section 11 contemplates the bar of res judicata not only respecting the suit as a whole but also concerning an issue decided in a suit, and it is well settled that an issue of law can also be barred by the principle of res judicata. (Para 3)

(D) Constitution of India, Article 133 (1) (c) — Substantial question of law.

Where a clause in an agreement regarding the appointment of Arbitrator is vague, the question whether the arbitration agreement is void and not binding on the parties or the Court can appoint an arbitrator is a point of great public importance and should be decided by the Supreme Court. There is also conflict of decisions on this point among High Courts. (Para 2)

ORDER:— This order will dispose of Civil Misc. petitions Nos. 82, 87, 88, and 92 to 94 filed by the Union of India under Article 133 of the Constitution since the points involved for decision in all of them are exactly identical and the Civil revision petitions to which they pertain were disposed of by a common judgment dated 23rd of December, 1967, by the then Judicial Commissioner Shri Jagannadhaacharyulu. The dispute between the parties centred round the interpretation of an arbitration clause contained in the various contracts of construction entered into by the Union of India with the respondents. That arbitration clause provided, in four out of the six cases we are to deal with, that if and when disputes of the nature mentioned therein arose between the parties they shall be referred to the arbitration of the Chief Engineer/Additional Chief Engineer, Central P. W. D., while in the other two cases such disputes were to be referred to the arbitration of Additional Chief Engineer, Central P. W. D. The respondents herein, after the disputes arose between the parties, moved six independent applications under Section 20 of the Arbitration Act in the Court of Subordinate Judge, Tripura, praying for appointment of an arbitrator in each case of its own choice since the arbitration clause contained in the contracts was vague in the matter of choosing the arbitrator. The vagueness pleaded qua the four contracts was that no method was provided to choose either the Chief Engineer or the Additional Chief Engineer to work as arbitrator, and respecting the other two contracts it was urged that there are large number of Additional Chief Engineers of the Central P. W. D. and so in the absence of any determining factor in the contracts it is not possible to say whom to appoint as an arbitrator. The Subordinate Judge did not accept the contention that the arbitration clause was vague in any manner and so it gave the choice to the parties either to accept the Chief Engineer of the Central P. W. D. as the arbitrator or the Additional Chief Engineer, Zone II, of the Central P. W. D. Having felt aggrieved with the order of the Subordinate Judge, the respondents filed six revision petitions in this Court.

My learned predecessor Shri Jagannadhaacharyulu accepted the revision petitions on holding that the arbitration clause was clearly vague and so it was the function of the Court to name an arbitrator in each case. He consequently appointed Shri G. N. Dutta (a retired Chief Engineer) of Gauhati as the sole arbitrator in all the six cases. It is against that order that the Union of India has moved the instant six applications seeking certificates authorising it to file appeals in the Supreme Court.

2. Shri H. C. Nath, the learned Government Advocate, raised two points to support the contention that a good case has been made out for issuing certificate under cl. (c) of Article 133 (1) of the Constitution. According to that clause, an aggrieved party can file an appeal in the Supreme Court from any judgment, decree or final order in a civil proceeding of a High Court in the Territory of India if the High Court certifies that the case is a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court. In the first place, Shri H. C. Nath submitted that the view taken by Shri Jagannadhaacharyulu is directly opposed to the opinion expressed by Shri Tirumalpad, another Judicial Commissioner of this Court, in the case of R. D. Gupta v. Union of India, AIR 1964 Tripura 27. That case, it will be noted, was also between the parties which are arrayed against each other in the present petitions. Shri H. C. Nath emphasised that in view of conflict between two judgments of this Court it is necessary that the matter should go to the Supreme Court for authoritative pronouncement to avoid embarrassment to the Subordinate Courts. He stated further that arbitration clause of the nature at anvil is incorporated in a large number of contracts made between the Union of India and the Government contractors working in this Territory and so it is necessary that the legal question involved should be decided by the highest Court in the realm.

There is no difference between the parties on the points. I may mention, that Shri Tirumalpad happened to interpret an arbitration clause which is exactly identical with that which came up for interpretation before Shri Jagannadhaacharyulu, and that the views expressed by the two Judicial Commissioners are diametrically opposed to each other and are so wholly irreconcilable. Since, indisputably, such arbitration clause finds mention in a large number of contracts entered into between the Union of India and Government contractors, it is fit and proper that the matter should be authoritatively decided. It is in order to point out that in two cases, decided by the Punjab High Court and reported in AIR 1955 Punj 172, Union of India v. New India Constructors, and AIR 1956 Punj 205, Delhi and Finance Housing and Construction Ltd. v. Brij Mohan Shah, an identical arbitration clause was incorporated in the contracts out of which the disputes arose, and that in the first mentioned case the parties did not challenge the validity of the clause on the ground of its being vague, while in the second case the clause was declared to be vague and the arbitration agreement was held not binding on the parties, being void. In face of this conflict of authorities, I agree with Shri H. G. Nath that the present case is a fit case for going in appeal to the Supreme Court. The point in controversy is clearly of great public importance.

8. The second point urged by Shri H. C. Nath was that the previous decision by Shri Tirumalpad operates as res judicata between the parties. He submitted further that the present respondent had moved the Supreme Court under Article 136 of the Constitution for special leave to appeal against the judgment of Shri Tirumalpad but that prayer was rejected. Shri R. D. Gupta, the respondent herein and who argued the case personally in this Court, admitted at the bar that he had gone to the Supreme Court against the judgment of Shri Tirumalpad seeking special leave to appeal but his prayer was not allowed. Section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, it will be noticed, contemplates the bar of res judicata not only respecting the suit as a whole but also concerning an issue decided in a suit, and it is well settled that an issue of law can also be barred by the principles of res judicata. Hence, the second point urged by Shri H. C. Nath is also quite substantial and weighty.

4. A legal question of far-reaching consequences that appears to have escaped attention so far, on all hands, is that if the arbitration agreement is vague, as contended by the respondent and as held by Shri Jagannadhacharyulu, then that agreement in terms of Section 29 of the Contract Act would be void. That section provides in unambiguous language that agreements, the meaning of which is not certain, or capable of being made certain, are void.

The Punjab High Court held in the case of Delhi and Finance Housing and Construction Ltd., AIR 1956 Punj 205 (supra) that the arbitration agreement of the nature involved in the present cases is vague because of uncertainty and as such void and not binding on the parties. It is on that finding that the High Court dismissed the application made by the defendant under Section 34 of the Arbitration Act for stay of the suit filed against it (the defendant). In support of that conclusion, the Punjab High Court placed reliance on the cases of Ganpatrai Gupta v. Moody Bros. Ltd., (1950) 85 Cal LJ 186, and Luxmi Chand v. Kishanlal, AIR 1955 Cal 588. In each of these two cases the arbitration agreement was found to be vague and uncertain and the arbitration clause in consequence was declared to be invalid. If, therefore, the arbitration agreement concluded between the parties before this Court is actually vague and uncertain respecting the choice of the arbitrator, then nothing out of it survives to be binding on the parties. In that event, the order of this Court appointing Shri G. N. Dutta as the sole arbitrator would become unsustainable, and the respondent shall be left with no alternative but to file a regular suit for appropriate relief in the Civil Court having jurisdiction in the matter.

5. Shri R. D. Gupta raised two objections against the maintainability of the petitions filed by the Union of India. In the first instance, he urged that Shri G. N. Dutta, the sole arbitrator, having died during the pendency of the present petitions, the petitions have become infructuous. To reinforce that contention, he relied on the authority of AIR 1955 Cal 257, Union of India v. Nalin Ranjan. That case is clearly distinguishable on facts. Bachawat, J., of the Calcutta High Court had by an order appointed an arbitrator between the parties in an application made under Section 8 of the Arbitration Act, and the Union of India petitioned the High Court for certificate of fitness of appeal to the Supreme Court against that order. It transpired, when that application came up for hearing, that the arbitrator appointed by Bachawat, J., had died in the meantime. A Division Bench of the High Court held that the petition for leave to appeal was not maintainable in view of clause (d) of Article 133 (1) of the Constitution which provides that no appeal shall, unless Parliament by law otherwise provides, lie to the Supreme Court from the judgment, decree or final order of one Judge of a High Court.

Das Gupta, J., one of the Judges constituting the Division Bench, observed in addition that as a result of the death of the arbitrator the parties are relegated to the same position which prevailed when the application under Section 8 of the Arbitration Act was made and that the order appointing the arbitrator had consequently become infructuous. Obviously, there the dispute did not relate to the exact scope of the arbitration agreement but the difference between the parties centered round the point as to who should be appointed an arbitrator. As against that, the dispute that arises for determination in the cases in hand is more deeper. It is whether one of the officers mentioned in the arbitration clause is to work as an arbitrator, or that clause is void because of vagueness and some arbitrator other than those officers has to be named by the Court. Therefore, with the death of Shri G. N. Dutta the parties are not relegated to their original position. Unlike the Calcutta case, the dispute between the parties is not about naming the arbitrator but the manner in which he should be named, apart from two other serious contentions which require determination, namely (1) whether the dispute is barred by res judicata, and (2) whether the arbitration agreement would survive if it is really vague as contended by the respondent in each of the six cases. Consequently, I reject the first objection raised by Shri R. D. Gupta.

6. The second point urged by Shri R. D. Gupta was that the order dated 23rd of December, 1967, of this Court is neither a judgment nor a decree nor a final order within the meaning of Article 133 (1) of the Constitution, and as such the certificate claimed by the Union of India cannot be issued. He cited the cases of Nalini Ranjan, AIR 1955 Cal 257 (supra) and Mohmood Hasan v. Government of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1956 All 457 (FB), to support that contention. The Allahabad High Court outlined the conditions which must be satisfied before an order can be described as a final order within the meaning of Article 133 (1). Those conditions are, (1) that the order should not be an interlocutory order, (2) that even though it is an order which disposes of the proceeding before a Court finally, it should not be an order which leaves the original proceeding in the Court below alive, and (3) that there should be a final determination of the rights of the parties or the order must of its own force dispose of the rights of the parties. I think all these three conditions are satisfied in the present case. Without doubt, the impugned order is not an interlocutory order. Further, that order finally disposes of the case filed before the Subordinate Judge. And, lastly, the rights of the parties which were debated firstly before the trial Court and then before this Court were finally determined. Shri R. D. Gupta argued that since only the question of appointment of an arbitrator has been decided between the parties and not the main dispute arising from the execution of the contract which the arbitrator is yet to determine, it cannot be urged by the Union of India that the disputes between the parties have been finally determined.

I regret I cannot accept that contention as valid. The final order contemplated by Article 133 (1) is an order which finally determines the dispute thrown up by the civil proceeding filed in the Court and not the dispute which will arise out of a civil proceeding which may be filed in the Court in future. In the applications moved by the respondent in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Agartala, the only matter in controversy was whether the arbitrator had to be appointed in terms of the arbitration clause or whether that clause was vague in the matter of selection of the arbitrator and so it was for the Court to name as arbitrator. That dispute between the parties was finally determined by this Court by its order dated 23rd of December, 1967. Therefore, that order, in my opinion, is a final order within the meaning of Article 133 (1).

7. The Calcutta authority is also of no help to Shri R. D. Gupta. There it was held, in a case filed under Section 8 of the Arbitration Act, that an order appointing an arbitrator decides no question of right between the parties and as such it is not a final order appealable under Article 133. As stated earlier, the dispute had arisen between the parties in that case because they could not agree on an individual to work as an arbitrator and so the Court had been approached under Section 8 of the Act to appoint an arbitrator. However, in our case the dispute is of an altogether different nature. It relates to the exact scope of arbitration agreement entered into between the parties. The respondent, I may appropriately mention, had moved the applications under Section 20 of the Arbitration Act. Such an application had to be and was registered as a suit, and that suit, it is obvious, has been finally disposed of by this Court's order. A final order, in the sense that expression is used in Article 133 (1), is an order which finally determines the points in dispute in the civil proceeding and brings it to an end. This test is fully satisfied respecting the order in dispute. Hence, I repel the second submission made by Shri R. D. Gupta as well.

8. The last point urged by Shri R. D. Gupta, though in a luke-warm manner, was that the dispute between the parties is not respecting a civil proceeding. The expression "civil proceeding" used in Article 133 (1) is wide enough to cover any proceeding of a civil nature decided by the High Court, whether in its original, appellate or revisional jurisdiction. Further, if the proceeding involves the assertion or enforcement of a civil right, it is a civil proceeding. Judged by those tests, I feel no difficulty in holding that the impugned order was made in a civil proceeding.

9. As a result, I accept all the six petitions and direct that a certificate do issue in each one of them under clause (c) of Article 133 (1) of the Constitution. However, I make no order as to costs of these petitions.

Certificates issued.

B. Chakraborty, for Petitioner; J. K. Roy, for Respondents.

ORDER: This is a revision petition by the plaintiff, Satish Chandra Ghosh, of Money Suit No. 1 of 1964 against the order dated 2-3-1967, by which Shri S. M. Ali, the Subordinate Judge, directed that that suit be consolidated with Title Suit No. 48 of 1960 pending between aforementioned Satish Chandra Ghosh and his brother Jyotish Chandra Ghosh.

2. To appreciate the controversy, the facts of the two cases may be shortly narrated. In the Title Suit No. 48 of 1960 Jyotish Chandra Ghosh happens to be the plaintiff and that suit is for partition between him and his brother Satish Chandra Ghosh of a large number of immoveable properties. One of the properties included in that partition suit is that which forms the subject of Money Suit No. 1 of 1964. In this Money Suit, the relief claimed is for payment of the arrears of rent respecting that property, and it is founded on the allegations that that property had been jointly leased out by Satish Chandra Ghosh and his brother Jyotish Chandra Ghosh to Sarba Mangala Dutta and the latter had committed default in the matter of payment of rent.

3. Shri S. M. Ali directed consolidation of the two suits on the basis that the evidence in both the cases shall be identical and "the judgment of one case will affect the other if they are tried separately". It is the contention of the petitioner's counsel that neither the evidence in the two suits shall be identical nor the judgment in one suit shall affect the decision in the other and that as such the consolidation was ordered on altogether untenable grounds.

4. It is not disputed that consolidation of suits in appropriate cases can be ordered by the Court. However, the basic principles governing consolidation of suits are that there is similarity or identity of the matter in issue in the two suits and that the suits are between the same parties. The object of consolidation is to avoid multiplicity between the same parties when the matter in issue is substantially the same in the two suits. Let us examine if these tests are satisfied respecting the two suits we are to deal with. The Title Suit is only between the two brothers and Sarba Mangala Dutta is not a party thereto. Further, that suit is for partition of a large number of immoveable properties, while the Money Suit against Sarba Mangala Dutta arises out of an alleged lease agreement between her on one hand and Satish Chandra Ghosh and Jyotish Chandra Ghosh on the other. It is not disputed that the property alleged to have been leased out to Sarba Mangala Dutta is also the subject of the partition suit and that there is no dispute between the parties that that property is equally owned by the two brothers. Hence, neither two suits are between same parties, nor the matters in issue in the two suits respecting the demised property are identical. Again, the decision in the Title Suit respecting the demised property will not determine the dispute whether the demised property had been leased out by both the brothers, as contended by Satish Chandra Ghosh, or by Jyotish Chandra Ghosh all alone, as alleged by the latter. Hence, it is not possible to sustain the consolidation order made by the trial Court, Bhopo Fakirbhai v. Bai Mani, AIR 196f Guj 92, is an authority for the proposition that where the issues in the two suits are different and the parties are not common, an order for the consolidation of the two suits for hearing evidence in common without the consent of the parties in both the suits is illegal. It was also observed in that case that an order to treat the evidence in one suit as the evidence in another suit cannot be passed without the consent of all the parties in the two suits.

5. Shri J. K. Roy, appearing for the respondents, urged vehemently that no revision against the impugned order is maintainable under Section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. This point was specifically dealt with in the case of Bhopo Fakirbhai, AIR 1961 Guj 92 (supra). It was held that an application to consolidate the two suits represents a separate and independent proceeding inasmuch as such an application has nothing to do with the matters to be decided in either of the suits. Nor, it was observed further, is such an application in the nature of an interlocutory application in a suit. I agree with these observations of the Gujarat High Court and hold that a revision petition against an order directing consolidation of two suits is maintainable under Sec. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. However, it remains to be stated that in face of para. 34 (3) of the Tripura (Courts) Order, 1950, Section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply to Tripura. Clause (b) of sub-para (1) of para 34 provides that the Court of the Judicial Commissioner may call for the record of any case which has been decided by a Civil Court subordinate to it and in which no appeal lies to it if, on an application made to it, the Court is of the opinion that there is an important question of law or custom involved and such question requires further consideration. In such a situation, it is provided further, the Court may make such order in the case as it thinks fit. I feel satisfied that determination of principles governing consolidation of suits constitutes an important question of law and that such question does require consideration at the hands of this Court. There is no authority of this court, I may add, on the point involved in this revision petition.

6. The trial Court cannot direct consolidation of suits in an arbitrary manner or in complete oblivion of the principles that govern the subject. In the instant case, the consolidation, I feel satisfied, was ordered in a purely capricious manner. Neither, as indicated above, will the evidence in the two suits be identical, nor the judgment of one suit will affect the decision in the other suit. Moreover, the principles governing the consolidation of suits, namely, (1) there should be similarity or identity of the matters in dispute in the two suits, (2) that the dispute in the two suits should be between the same parties, and (3) that the evidence recorded in one suit cannot be read as evidence in the other suit without the consent of the parties, were neither considered nor applied by the trial Court. Hence, a clear case for interference in revision is made out under Para 34 of the Tripura (Courts) Order.

7. As a result, I allow the revision petition and quash the order dated 2-3-1966 consolidating the two suits. The Court shall now proceed with the suits on their individual basis. The petitioner shall get costs from the respondents. Advocate's fee Rs. 16. Revision allowed.

ORDER : The facts relevant to this revision petition under Section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code filed by Jatindra Kr. Bhattacharjee must be set out chronologically to appreciate the point that falls for determination. In connection with defalcation of a sum, as big as Rs. 98,000 from the Sub-Treasury, Dharmanagar, the petitioner, who was the sub-Treasury Officer at the time of alleged defalcation, was charge-sheeted on 1-1-1963, along with two others, under Sections 409, 468 and 477, I. P. C. Thereafter, a civil suit, being Money Suit No. 8 of 1963, was instituted against the petitioner alone by the Government for recovery of Rs. 98,000 and odd for the loss suffered by the Government on account of alleged negligence of the petitioner in the discharge of his functions as Sub-Treasury Officer. The Magistrate's Court at Dharmanagar, in whose Court the criminal case was pending, stayed the same by order dated 7-11-1965, on the ground that since the civil suit involving identical facts was pending and since the civil suit would primarily be decided on the basis of documents, it was desirable that the civil suit should be disposed of first. That order was not challenged by the State Government. However, on 31-5-1966, the prosecution moved the Magistrate praying that the criminal case be proceeded with. That prayer was rejected on 31-5-1966. Thereafter, during the course of inspection it came to the notice of the District Magistrate, Shri S. M. Kanwar, that the criminal case against the present petitioner had been stayed. He reached the conclusion, on examination of the records, that the case being "primarily of criminal nature" and the civil suit having been filed only to recover the amount which had been misappropriated, it was 'bad and improper' that the criminal proceedings should be stayed. He, therefore, vacated the stay by an order dated 25-11-1966 and directed that the case shall be proceeded with. The consequential steps taken by the District Magistrate were that he firstly withdrew the case on to his own file and then transferred it to Shri P. Nath, the Sub-divisional Magistrate (Northern Zone) at Dharmanagar. It is against that order of the District Magistrate that the instant revision was filed by Jatindra Kr. Bhattacharjee.

2. Shri R. Ghosh, appearing for the petitioner, was highly critical of the order, dated 25-11-1966 of the District Magistrate and branded the same as improper and legally not sustainable. He pointed out that the District Magistrate could not have vacated the order on his own authority even if he was of the opinion that the trial Magistrate had gone wrong in staying the criminal case. At the best, the counsel submitted, the District Magistrate could have reported the matter to the High Court under Section 433, Cr. P. C. Another flaw about that order which was pinpointed by Shri Ghosh, was that it had been made without issuing notice to the petitioner or the Public Prosecutor. I think the criticism is completely valid and wholly justified. The District Magistrate lacked jurisdiction to vacate the stay order on his own authority. Final orders in exercise of revisional jurisdiction on examination of the records of the Subordinate Magistrate can be passed by the District Magistrate only in the cases contemplated by Sections 436 and 437 of the Code. Respecting all other cases he is bound in law to make a reference to the High Court. The facts of the case in hand fall out of the ambit of either section 436 or Section 437. Therefore, the only course open to the District Magistrate, if he felt that the case had been stayed without adequate justification, was to refer the matter to this Court for adjudication. Hence, it is not possible to uphold the validity of the order of the District Magistrate or to approve of the method adopted by him in making that order.

3. When the case came up for hearing before me on 14-11-69 I gave notice to Shri R. Ghosh that though it may not be possible to uphold the District Magistrate's order dated 25-11-1966, I would like to interfere in revision suo motu. Shri Ghosh then requested me to grant him one adjournment. I agreed and so adjourned the case to 15-11-1969.

4. In support of the contention that it is only proper that the criminal case should be stayed until the civil suit was disposed of, Shri Ghosh placed reliance, on 15-11-1969, on the authorities reported in Bishambar Das v. Emperor, AIR 1927 Lah 17, N. B. Chikkathimma Reddi v. State of Mysore, AIR 1952 Mys 37, Dharmeswar Kalita v. The State, AIR 1952 Assam 78 and Sri- kisson v. Emperor, AIR 1935 Cal 182. The question of stay was, however, thoroughly examined by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in M. S. Sheriff v. State of Madras, AIR 1954 SC 397, and the observations made therein are conclusive on the subject. I cannot do better than reproduce the principle enunciated in the language of the Supreme Court itself. The relevant observations run as under:—

"As between the civil and the criminal proceedings the criminal matters should be given precedence. No hard and fast rule can be laid down but the possibility of conflicting decisions in the civil and criminal Courts is not a relevant consideration. The law envisages such an eventuality when it expressly refrains from making the decision of one Court binding on the other or even relevant, except for certain limited purposes, such as sentence or damages. The only relevant consideration is the likelihood of embarrassment. Another factor which weighs with the Court is that a civil suit often drags on for years and it is undesirable that a criminal prosecution should wait till everybody concerned has forgotten all about the crime. The public interest demands that criminal justice should be swift and sure, that the guilty should be punished while the events are still fresh in the public mind, and that the innocent should be absolved as early as is consistent with a fair and impartial trial.

Another reason is that it is undesirable to let things slide till memories have grown too dim to trust. This however, is not a hard and fast rule. Special considerations obtaining in any particular case might make some other course more expedient and just. For example, the civil case or the other criminal proceeding may be so near its end as to make it inexpedient to stay it in order to give precedence to prosecution ordered under Section 476."

It would be evident from these observations that the trial of criminal cases cannot be stayed only for the reason that a civil suit involving identical dispute is pending between the parties. The defalcation is alleged to have been committed by the petitioner sometime in the year 1961. A period of almost 9 years has run out since then. Assuming that the civil suit shall be decided, as stated by Shri Ghosh at the bar, within a few months from now, the decree of the trial Court is likely to be challenged in an appeal, irrespective of its nature, because the amount involved is substantial. The appeal against that decree might take another few years before it can be decided by this Court. Hence, it looks inexpedient that the trial of an offence should be delayed by more than 12 years or so. That trial itself may get protracted like the civil suit. Such a long delay would neither be in public interest nor in that of the petitioner. It would in fact reflect discreditably on the administration of criminal justice. I have, therefore, decided to vacate the stay orders made by the Magistrate on 7-1-1966 and on 31-5-66. Hence, in exercise of the authority vesting in this Court under Section 439, Cr. P. C., I set aside those two orders and direct that the criminal case should be proceeded with without waiting for the decision of the civil suit.

Order accordingly.

ORDER, In a suit filed against Habibullah, a resident of Pakistan, by Nikhil Poddar and others for recovery of damages on account of malicious prosecution, he (the defendant) moved an application in the trial Court praying that he and his witnesses, who are also residents of Pakistan, should be permitted to be examined on commission. That application was rejected by the trial Court on 10-4-1967 on the basis that there was no reciprocal arrangement between India and Pakistan in regard to examination of witnesses on commission. Aggrieved by that order, Habibullah has come up in revision to this Court.

2. It was held in the case of Mohammad Azizul Rahman Khan v. Mohammad Ibrahim, AIR 1958 All 19, that the issue of a commission for examination of a witness is not the right of a party but is dependent upon the discretion of the Court. The High Court observed further that if there are no reciprocal arrangements between India and Pakistan respecting the examination of witnesses on commission, the Court is well within its rights in rejecting an application for issue of commission. The High Court agreed with the trial Court's finding that there was no reciprocal arrangement between the two countries for examination of witnesses on commission.

Likewise, the Punjab High Court held in the case of National Fire and General Insurance Co. Ltd. v. Mool Singh, AIR 1951 Punj (Simla) 227, that there was no reciprocal arrangement between India and Pakistan and as such a letter of request cannot be addressed to a Court in Pakistan in terms of Order XXVI, Rule 5, Civil Procedure Code for the examination of a witness residing there. It was held further that an officer of a Court in India, in the absence of any reciprocal arrangement regarding examination of a witness on commission, is not competent to record evidence on commission in Pakistan.

In this case Harnam Singh, J., approvingly referred to a previous judgment of the Punjab High Court in the Civil Revn. No. 58 of 1950 (Punj) decided by Khosla, J., who had held that a party cannot as of right demand the issue of a commission to a place outside India unless reciprocal arrangements exist and have been recognised by the High Court. Khosla, J., also happened to observe that it was conceded before him that there was no such arrangement existing between India and Pakistan. Harnam Singh, J., held further in the case of National Fire and General Insurance Co. Ltd., AIR 1951 Punj 227 that the order of the trial Court refusing the prayer for examining the witnesses on commission in Pakistan does not fall within the ambit of Clauses (a), (b) or (c) of Section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. Hence, he happened to dismiss the revision petition on the double finding that no revision was competent and that since there was no reciprocal arrangement between the two countries, the commission could not be issued. With respect I agree with these observations of the learned Judge and they are also in accord, I may add, with what was held in Mohammad Khan's case (supra).

3. As against the two authorities of Allahabad and Punjab High Courts cited on behalf of the respondents, Shri M. R. Choudhury, appearing for the defendant-petitioner has placed reliance on the decision in Hukumal v. Manghoomal, AIR 1953 Ajmer 27, where it was held that if "the witness lives at a considerable distance in Pakistan and cannot be compelled to attend the Court"

a commission can be issued for his examination. A perusal of the report shows that no objection was raised before the Judicial Commissioner that there being no reciprocal arrangement between India and Pakistan for examination of witnesses on commission the prayer made for the purpose was not tenable. Therefore, the decision in Hukumal's case is not much of importance because the point that has arisen for determination in the instant revision petition was not debated in that case.

Shri M. R. Choudhury, however, urges that this Court should assume that by the time the case of Hukumal was decided, reciprocal arrangements between India and Pakistan for examination of witnesses on commission had been arrived at. I regret my inability to accept that contention. Hukumal's case was decided on 27-1-1953, whereas the Allahabad High Court decided the case of Mohammad Khan on 22-3-1957. If any such arrangement had been reached between the two countries by 27-1-1953, the Allahabad High Court could not have failed to take notice of it in March, 1957.

4. Shri M. R. Choudhury also placed reliance on the decision in State Bank of India v. Mrs. J. K. Sohan Singh, AIR 1963 Punj 27. However, that judgment has no relevancy to the case in hand. The revision was allowed in that case and the commission recalled on the basis that the facts which were sought to be proved on commission issued to a witness in Pakistan at the instance of the respondent were opposed to the allegations made in the written statement by her and that, as such, there was no justification for issuing the commission. The questions whether or not a commission could be issued to a witness in Pakistan, and whether there was any reciprocal arrangement for execution of commissions for examination of witnesses between India and Pakistan, did not arise for determination in this Punjab case, nor were debated before the High Court nor decided by it. Hence, that case is of no help for the proposition canvassed by Shri M. R. Choudhury.

5. For the reasons given above, the petition fails and is rejected. However, I leave the parties to bear their own costs. I may observe here, as desired by Shri M. R. Choudhury, that if before the suit is disposed of by the trial Court it is proved that reciprocal arrangement has been arrived at between the two countries, India and Pakistan, for examination of witnesses on commission, the defendant-petitioner may move the trial Court for granting the prayer made in the present petition.

Petition dismissed.

J. K. Roy and J. C. Lodh, for Petitioner;
H. C. Nath, Govt. Advocate, for Respondents.

ORDER: In this petition filed under Article 226 of the Constitution the prayer made by Sachindra Mohan Das Gupta is that a writ of mandamus be issued directing the two respondents, the Chief Commissioner of Tripura and the Government of India, to discharge their obligations in terms of Section 29 (3) of the West Bengal Security Act (hereinafter called the Act) as extended to the territory of Tripura.

2. The facts relevant to the prayer made can be set out in a few words. By orders, dated 29-5-1951 and 22-10-1952, lands measuring 1183.4 acres and 109.98 acres belonging to the petitioner were requisitioned by the Tripura Government under the provisions of the Act. The possession of the first mentioned area of the land was taken by the Government on 11-6-1951 and of the second area on 22-10-1952. Subsequently, land measuring 398.98 acres was derequisitioned, leaving a balance of 904.98 acres under requisition. This latter area was acquired in 1955 under the provisions of the West Bengal Land Development and Planning Act of 1948. Though in the writ petition compensation was claimed respecting 902.3 acres out of a total of 904.98 acres, but in the replication the petitioner stated that he claimed compensation only respecting 882.54 acres, Shri J. K. Roy, appearing for the petitioner, stated at the bar on the date of arguments that compensation was claimed in regard to 882.54 acres from 11-6-1951, until the date this land was acquired in the year 1955. It is mentioned in the writ petition that compensation for the period of requisition was allowed to the petitioner along with the compensation which was determined for acquiring the land, but that compensation was much too short as compared to what he is entitled in law. The compensation for the requisitioned property was allowed, it is commonly agreed, at the rate of 6% per annum on the market value of the land. The precise claim of the petitioner now is that he is entitled to get the difference between the compensation to which he is entitled in law minus what he has already been paid.

3. The respondents denied that the petitioner was entitled to any further compensation. They pleaded that adequate compensation had been paid to the petitioner for the period during which the land remained under requisition.

4. The writ petition, it looks, is not only highly belated but is also misconceived. Consequently, I feel satisfied that it merits dismissal.

5. The Government had secured possession of the entire requisitioned area by 22nd of October, 1952, and the whole of that area was acquired sometime in 1955. The writ petition was filed on 23-6-1964. Obviously a civil suit for recovery of compensation was barred by the date the writ petition was filed. It is correct that no period of limitation governs writ petitions filed under Article 226. However, it is well settled that the outside limit by which an aggrieved party can come to the writ court for seeking any relief is the date by which it could have brought a suit in the civil court for grant of such relief. If the writ petition is filed after that date, it has to be rejected on the ground that it is highly belated. In support of this proposition I may cite the observations of the Supreme Court made in the case of State of Madhya Pradesh v. Bhailal Bhai, AIR 1964 SC 1006. They are as under:—

"Learned Counsel is right in his submission that the provisions of the Limitation Act do not as such apply to the granting of relief under Article 226. It appears to us however that the maximum period fixed by the legislature as the time within which the relief by a suit in a civil court must be brought may ordinarily be taken to be a reasonable standard by which delay in seeking remedy under Article 226 can be measured. This Court may consider the delay unreasonable even if it is less than the period of limitation prescribed for a civil action for the remedy but where the delay is more than this period, it will almost always be proper for the court to hold that it is unreasonable."

Since, as stated above, this writ petition was filed after the period of limitation for filing a suit had run out, the writ petition must be rejected on the ground of its being unreasonably belated.

6. The land had been requisitioned by the Government under sub-section (1) of section 29 of the Act. Sub-section (3) of that section provides that the State Government shall pay compensation for any property requisitioned by it under sub-section (1), and the principles according to which and the manner in which such compensation is to be determined and paid shall be, inter alia, as follows:—

(a) where the amount of compensation can be fixed by agreement, it shall be paid within three months in accordance with such agreement;

(b) where no such agreement can be reached, the amount of compensation shall be such as an arbitrator appointed in this behalf by the Chief Commissioner of Tripura may award.

These provisions are subject to a proviso which states that in the case of immoveable property, the arbitrator shall be a District Judge or an Additional District Judge. It may be safely assumed that no agreement had been reached in terms of Clause (a) between the petitioner and the Government in regard to the amount of compensation payable to the former. Therefore, the compensation had to be determined by a District Judge or an Additional District Judge in his capacity as an arbitrator. No step was taken by the petitioner to refer the matter to arbitration. Shri J. K. Roy contended for the petitioner that since it was the privilege of the Chief Commissioner to appoint an arbitrator and since the Chief Commissioner had not named any arbitrator, the petitioner had no right to seek the assistance of the civil court for getting an arbitrator appointed. I regret my inability to accept that argument as well founded. Section 29 (3) makes it clear that in the case of immoveable property the arbitrator shall be a District Judge or an Additional District Judge. Hence, the Chief Commissioner had no option in naming the arbitrator for determining the compensation payable to the petitioner because the property requisitioned was immoveable. Only a move had to be made by the petitioner, which, unluckily, he failed to initiate. If the petitioner had approached the Chief Commissioner to refer the dispute to arbitration and the latter had failed to respond, it would have been open to the petitioner to go to the civil court under the Arbitration Act, 1940, with the prayer to appoint an arbitrator. I may appropriately mention here that Section 45 of the Arbitration Act, en-joins that the provisions of the Arbitration Act are binding on the Government, while Section 46 of the same Act enacts that the provisions of that Act (excepting certain parts of it) shall apply to every arbitration under any other enactment for the time being in force, as if the arbitration were pursuant to an arbitration agreement and as if that other enactment were an arbitration agreement except in so far as the Arbitration Act is inconsistent with that other enactment or with any rules made thereunder. Hence, quite obviously the arbitration contemplated by Section 29 (3) of the Act is subject to the provisions of the Arbitration Act. It was, therefore, clearly open to the petitioner to move either the Chief Commissioner or the civil court for referring the matter of compensation payable to him to the arbitration of the District Judge or an Additional District Judge. He having failed to do so, he must bear the consequences.

7. The last point urged by Shri J. K. Roy was that Section 37 of the Act stands in the way of a private person to file a suit or take other proceedings against the Government respecting the rights arising out of requisitioning of property. Here, again, Shri Roy does not appear to be on sound footing. Section 37 reads as under:—

"(1) No suit, prosecution or other legal proceeding shall lie against any person for anything which is or is deemed to have been in good faith done or intended to be done in pursuance of this Act or any order made or deemed to have been made thereunder.

(2) No suit or other legal proceeding shall lie against Government for any damage caused or likely to be caused by anything which is or is deemed to have been in good faith done or intended to be done in pursuance of this Act or any order made or deemed to have been made thereunder." Its marginal heading is, "protection of action taken under the Act." It is too obvious that the object behind Section 37 is to afford protection to the various functionaries mentioned in the Act against criminal prosecutions or suits for damages for anything done by them in good faith to carry out the duties assigned to them under the Act. This section has nothing to do with the enforcement of the right to compensation by an individual whose property has been requisitioned. That right is clearly vouchsafed to him by subsection (3) of Section 29 of the Act, and if the right is there the remedy to enforce it through the courts of the country is necessarily implied unless it is abridged by some legislative measure, which clearly is not the case respecting the right we are concerned with. Consequently, I repel the point canvassed by Shri Roy.

8. In view of the only relief sought in the writ petition, namely, that the respondents be directed to proceed in the manner provided by Section 29 (3) of the Act for determining the compensation payable to the petitioner, I fail to see what function such a direction will serve. Section 29 (3) itself being available to the petitioner, I doubt if any direction given by this Court would make the provisions of that section more effective. It is not denied that writ Court cannot determine for want of data, the amount of additional compensation payable to the petitioner. The only purpose which such a direction could serve would be that the petitioner may get over the bar of limitation. However, the jurisdiction of writ court cannot be permitted to be abused in that manner. Hence, I feel clear that the present writ petition is altogether misconceived.

9. As a result, I dismiss the writ petition. However, I leave the parties to bear their own costs. It is for the reason that the compensation payable to the petitioner for the period during which his lands remained requisitioned was never determined in the manner envisaged by section 29 (3) of the Act and so the petitioner had some genuine grievance against the respondents. Advocates fee Rs. 50.
